PARISH OFFICERS. Divers persons are exempted from serving parish offices on account of their professions, viz. physicians and surgeons, apothecaries, dissenting ministers, &c. See Churchwarden, Constable.

PARK, Lat. parcus, Fr. parque, i. e. locus inclusus.] A large quantity of ground inclosed and privileged for wild beasts of chase, by the king's grant or by prescription. 1 Inst. 283.

Manwood defines a park to be a privileged place for beasts of venery, and other wild beasts of the forest and chase, tam sylvestres, quam campestres; and differs from a chase or warren, in that it must be inclosed; for if it lies open, it is good cause of seizure into the king's hands, as a thing forfeited; as a free chase is, if it be inclosed; besides, the owner cannot have an action against such as hunt in his park, if it lies open. Manw. Forest Laws; Crompt. Jurisd. 148.

To a park three things are required: 1. A grant thereof; 2. Inclosures by pale, wall, or hedge; 3. Beasts of a park, such as the buck, doe, &c. And where all the deer are destroyed, it shall no more be accounted a park; for a park consists of vert, venison, and inclosure; and if it is determined in any of them, it is a total disparking. Cro. Car. 59, 60.

No man can erect a park without licence under the broad seal; for the common law does not encourage matter of pleasure, which brings no profit to the commonwealth. But there may be a park in reputation, erected without lawful warrant; and the owner may bring his action against persons killing his deer. Wood's Inst. 207.

The king may by letters-patent dissolve his park. 2 Lit. Abr. 273.

Parks as well as chases are subject to the common law, and are not to be governed by the forest laws. 4 Inst. 314.

A park, says Blackstone, is an inclosed chase extending only over a man's own grounds. The word park, indeed, properly signifies an inclosure; but yet it is not every field or common which a gentleman pleases to surround with a wall or paling, and to stock with a herd of deer, that is thereby constituted a legal park; for the king's grant, or at least immemorial prescription, is necessary to make it so. 1 Inst. 283; 2 Inst. 199; 11 Rep. 86. Though now the difference between a real park, and such inclosed grounds, is, in many respects, not very material; only that it is unlawful at common law for any person to kill any beasts of park or chase, except such as possess the franchises of forest, chase, or park. 2 Comm. c. 3. p. 38. But this latter doctrine is strenuously combated by Mr. Christian in his Annotations on the Commentaries. See further, Game; also Chase, Forest, Warren, &c.

It is said, there are only 781 parks in England. Bro. Abr. tit. Action sur Statute, pl. 48; Co. Lit. 223; 2 Inst. 199; 11 Co. Rep. 86. Though no information or criminal proceeding can be instituted for assuming to make a new park. 2 Ld. Raym. 1409; 1 Str. 637.

The ancient statutes relating to offences committed in parks, were all repealed by the 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 27. preparatory to the new enactments of the 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 29. the provisions of which will be found under tit. Deer-Stealers.

PARK-BOTE. Signifies to be quit of inclosing a park, or any part thereof. 4 Inst. 308.

PARLE HILL. Spelman gives this description of it. Collis vallo plerumque munitus, in loco campestri, ne insidus exponatur; ubi convenire olim solebant centuriæ aut vicine incolæ ad lites inter se tractandas et terminandas Scotts reor Grith hail, q. Mons pacificationis, cui asyli privilegia concedebantur et in Hiberniâ frequenter videmus, the Parle and Parling Hills. *Spelm. PARLIAMENT.

PARLIAMENTUM. The derivation of the word is uncertain and its etymon, if we were to follow the imaginations of various authors, subject even to some degree of ridicule. It seems properly to be derived from the French parler, to speak. Freedom of speech being of the essence of representation, and without which such a national council can have no effect. The word (which was first applied to general assemblies of the states under Louis VII. in France, about A. D. 1150,) was not used in England till the reign of Henry III. and the first mention of it in our statute law is in the preamble to stat. Westm. 1. 3 Ed. 1. A. D. 1272. When therefore it is said parliaments met before that era, it is by a licence of speech considering every national assembly as a parliament. See 1 Comm. c. 2. p. 147; and the notes there. Parliament may be defined to be

THE LEGISLATIVE BRANCH of the supreme power of GREAT BRITAIN; consisting of the king, the lords spiritual and temporal; and the knights, citizens, and burgesses, representatives of the commons of the realm; in parliament assembled.

I. SOME authors say that the ancient Britons had no such assemblies, but that the Saxons had; which may be collected from the laws of King Ina, who lived about the year 712. And William the First, called the Conqueror, having divided this land among his followers, so that every one of them should hold their lands of him in capite, the chief of these were called barons, who thrice every year assembled at the king's court, viz. at Christmas, Easter, and Whitsuntide, among whom the king used to come in his royal robes, to consult about the public affairs of the kingdom. This king called several parliaments, wherein it appears that the free-men or commons of England were also there, and had a share in making laws; he, by settling the court of parliament, so established his throne, that neither Briton, Dane, nor Saxon could disturb his tranquillity. The making of his laws were by act of parliament, and the accord between Stephen and Henry II. was made by parliament; though all the times since have not kept the same form of assembling the states. Doddridge's Antiq. Parliament.

There was a parliament before there were any barons; and if the commons do not appear, there can be no parliament; for the knights, citizens, and burgesses represent the whole commons of England, but the peers only are present for themselves, and none others. Doddr.

Coke affirms that many parliaments were held before the Conquest; and produces an instance of one held in the reign of Alfred; he likewise gives us a conclusion of a parliament held by Athelstan, where mention is made that all things were enacted in the great synod, or council at Grately, whereat was Archbishop Wulfhelme, with all the noblemen or wise men, whom the king called together. 1 Inst. 110. It is apparent, (says Mr. Prynne,) from all the precedents before the time of the Conquest, that our pristine synods and councils were nothing else but parliaments; that our kings, nobles, senators, aldermen, wise men, knights and commons, were present and voting in them as members and judges; and Sir Henry Spelman, Camden, and other writers, prove the commons to be a part of the parliament in the time of the Saxons, but not by that name, or elected as consisting of knights, citizens, and burgesses. Pryn. Sovereign Pow. Parliament.

As to the origin of the present House of Commons, our authors of antiquity vary very much; many are of opinion that the commons began not to be admitted as part of the parliament, upon the footing they are now, until the 40 H. 3. because the first writ of summons of any knights, citizens, and burgesses, is of no ancients date than that time. But the great charter, in the 17th year of King John, (about which time the sanction of barones majores et minores is supposed to have been made per regem, barones, et liberos homines totius regni.)

Selden says, that the borough of St. Albans claimed by prescription in the parliament 8 Ed. 2. to send two burgesses to all parliaments, as in the reigns of Edward I. and his predecessors, which must be the time of King John; and so before the reign of King Henry III. And in the reign of Henry V. it was declared and admitted, that the commons of the land were ever a part of the parliament. Selden's Tit. Hon. 709. Poynore Virgil, Hollinshed, Speed, and others mention that the commons were first summoned at a parliament held at Salisbury, 16 H. 1.; Sir Walter Raleigh, in his treatise of the Prærogative of Parliaments, thinks it was anno 18 H. 1. And Mr. Hallam finds another beginning for them, viz. in the reign of King Henry II.

In this part of the subject Blackstone thus expresses himself: and in his commentaries will be found, as on other subjects, the summary of former opinions, illuminated by the powerful mind of that great commentator. See 1 Comm. c. 2.

The original, or first institution of parliaments, is one of those matters which lie so far hidden in the dark ages of antiquity, that the tracing of it out is a thing equally difficult and uncertain. But it is certain that long before the introduction of the Norman language into England, all matters of importance were debated and settled in the great councils of the realm; a practice which seems to have been universal among the northern nations; particularly the Germans, and carried by them into all the countries of Europe, which they overran at the dissolution of the Roman empire.

With us in England this general council hath been held immemorially, under the several names of Michel Synoth, or great council; Michel Gemote, or great meeting; and more frequently Wittena Gemote, or the meeting of wise men. It was also styled in Latin, Commune concilium regni; Magnum concilium; Regis curia magna; Conventus magnatum, vel procerum; Assisa generalis; and sometimes Communitas regni Anglorum. Glanv. l. 13. c. 32; l. 9. c. 10; Pref. 9 Rep.; 2 Inst. 526. We have instances of its meeting to order the affairs of the kingdom, to make new laws, and to mend the old; or, as Fleta, l. 2. c. 2. expresses it, "novis injuriis emeris nova constituere remedia;" so early as the reign of Ina, king of the West Saxons; Offa, king of the Mercians; and Ethelbert, king of Kent, in the several realms of the heptarchy. And, after their union, the Mirror, c. 1. § 3. informs us, that King Alfred ordained for a perpetual usage, that these councils should meet twice in the year, or oftener, if need be, to treat of the government of God's people; how they should keep themselves from sin, should live in quiet, and should receive right. Our succeeding Saxon and Danish monarchs held frequently councils of this sort, as appears from their respective codes of laws; the titles whereof usually speak them to be enacted either by the king with the advice of his Wittena-gemote, or wise men, as, "hæc sunt instituta, quæ Edgarus rex consilio sapientum suorum instituit;" or to be enacted by these sages with advice of the king, as, "hæc sunt judicia, quæ sapientes consilio regis Ethelstani instituerunt;" or lastly, to be enacted by them both together, as, "hæc sunt institutiones, quas rex Edmundus, et episcopi sui, cum sapientibus suis, instituerunt."

There is also no doubt but these great councils were occasionally held under the first princes of the Norman line. Glanvil, who wrote in the reign of Henry II. speaking of a particular amount of an amercement in the sheriff's court, says, it had never yet been ascertained by the general assizes or assembly, but was left to the custom of particular counties. Glanv. l. 9. c. 10. Here the general assize is spoken of as a meeting well known, and its statutes or decisions are put in a manifest contradistinction to custom or the common law. And in Edward III's time, an act of parliament, made in the reign of William the Conqueror, was pleaded in the case of the abbey of St. Edmund's Bury, and judicially allowed by the court. Year-Book, 21 E. 3. c. 60.

Hence it indisputably appears, that parliaments or general councils are coeval with the kingdom itself. How those parliaments were constituted and composed is another question, which has been matter of great dispute among our learned antiquaries; and particularly whether the commons were summoned at all; or if summoned, at what period they began to form a distinct assembly. It is however generally agreed, that in the main the constitution of parliament, as it now stands, was marked out so long ago as the seventeenth year of King John, A. D. 1215, in the great charter granted by that prince; wherein he promises to summon all archbishops, bishops, abbots, earls, and greater barons, personally, and all other tenants in chief under the crown, by the sheriff and bailiffs; to meet at a certain place, with forty days' notice, to assess aids and scutages, when necessary. And this constitution has subsisted, in fact, at least from the year 1266, 49 Henry III.; there being still extant writs of that date to summon knights, citizens, and burgesses to parliament; the former of which may be seen in Elysinge, c. 1. § 2. Mr. Hallam says these writs are not extant, but agrees that this is the undoubted origin of popular representation. See Hallam's Middle Ages, vol. iii. 40; and see Littleton's Hist. of Hen. II. vol. ii. p. 276; vol. iv. p. 79, 106.

In fine, parliament is the highest and most honourable, and absolute court of justice in England; consisting of the king, the lords of parliament, and the commons; the lords being divided into spiritual and temporal; and the commons divided into knights of shires or counties: citizens out of cities; and burgesses from boroughs; the words of the old Latin writ to the sheriff for the election being—Duos milites gladiis cinctos magis idoneos et discretos comitatûs tui; et de quolibet civitate comitatûs tui duos civis; et de quolibet burgo duos burgenses, de discretioribus et magis sufficientibus, &c. 1 Inst. 109.

II. The parliament is to be summoned by the king's writ or letter issued out of Chancery, by advice of the privy council, at least forty days before it begins to sit.

This is a provision of the Magna Charta of King John; Faciemus summoneri, &c. ad certum diem, scilicet ad terminum quadraginta dierum, ad minus; et ad certum locum. Black. Mag. Ch. Joh. c. 14. It is enforced by the 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 25. which enacts that there shall be forty days between the teste and the return of the writ of summons.

This time is now, by practice, generally extended to fifty days or more, in consequence of the union with Scotland and Ireland. The term of fifty days is mentioned in the act of union with Scotland (5 Ann. c. 8. art. 22.) as the period to be allowed by proclamation for assembling the first parliament of Great Britain. See 2 Hats. 235.

By the 53 Geo. 3. c. 89. for the more regular conveyance of writs for the election of members of parliament, it is enacted, that when any new parliament shall be called, as also in all cases of vacancy of seats, the messenger of the great seal shall carry the writs directed to the sheriff of London and Middlesex, to the office of such sheriff; and all other writs to the general post-office in London, for which the post-master (or his deputy) shall give receipts, and shall despatch such writs free of postage, by the first post or mail after the receipt, under cover to the officer to whom the writs shall be directed, and to no other person whatever; with directions to the post-master in the country to deliver such writs to such officer, and take receipt for the same, and transmit such receipt to the post-master general. Sheriffs, &c. shall give notice, to the post-master general, of the town or place where their office is held; and where such place is within London, Westminster, or Southwark, an account thereof shall be sent to the messenger of the great seal, who shall carry the writs to such office, as in the case of the writs to the sheriffs of London, &c. Persons neglecting to comply with the directions of the act, are declared guilty of a misdemeanor.

Before this act, several irregularities and inconveniences had occurred by the delay or corruption of the officer concerned in conveying the writs.

It is a branch of the royal prerogative that no parliament can be convened by its own authority; meaning by the authority of the lords and commons only, who in common parlance, though not in strictness of law, are considered as the parliament; or by the authority of any, except the king alone. And this prerogative is founded upon a very good reason; for supposing the lords and commons had a right to meet spontaneously without being called together, it is impossible to conceive that all the members, and each of the houses, would agree unanimously upon the proper time and place of meeting; and if half of the members met, and half absented themselves, who shall determine which is really the legislative body, the part assembled, or that which stays away? It is therefore necessary that the parliament should be called together at a determinate time and place; and highly becoming its dignity and independence that it should be called together by none but one of its own constituent parts; and of the three constituent parts, this office can only appertain to the king, as he is a single person, whose will may be uniform and steady; the first person in the nation being superior to both houses in dignity; and the only branch of the legislature that has a separate existence, and is capable of performing any act at a time when no parliament is in being. Nor is it an exception to this rule, that by some modern statutes, on the demise of a king or queen, if there be then no parliament in being, the last parliament revives, and it is to sit again for six months, unless dissolved by the successor; for this revived parliament must have been originally summoned by the crown.

It is true that by the 16 Car. 1. c. 1. it was enacted, that if the king neglected to call a parliament for three years, the peers might assemble and issue out writs for choosing one, and, in case of neglect of the peers, the constituents might meet and elect one themselves. But this, if ever put in practice, would have been liable to all the inconveniences just stated; and this act itself was deemed so highly detrimental and injurious to the royal prerogative, that it was repealed by the 16 Car. 2. c. 1. From thence therefore no precedent can be drawn; and in fact it is an exception which fully proves the rule.

It is also true that the Convention Parliament, which restored King Charles the Second, met above a month before his return; the lords by their own authority, and the commons in pursuance of writs issued in the name of the keepers of the liberty of England by authority of parliament; and that the said parliament sat till the twenty-ninth of December, full seven months after the Restoration, and enacted many laws, several of which are still in force. But this was for the necessity of the thing, which supersedes all law; for if they had not so met, it was morally impossible that the kingdom should have been settled in peace. And the first thing done after the king's return was to pass an act declaring this to be a good parliament, notwithstanding the want of the king's writs. See 12 Car. 2. c. 1. So that as the royal prerogative was chiefly wounded by their so meeting, and as the king himself, who alone had a right to object, consented to waive the objection, this cannot be drawn into an example in prejudice of the rights of the crown. Besides, we should also remember, that it was at that time a great doubt among the lawyers, whether even this healing act made it a good parliament; and held by very many in the negative; though it seems to have been too nice a scruple. 1 Sid. 1. And, perhaps out of abundant caution, it was thought necessary to confirm its acts in the next parliament, by 13 Car. 2. c. 7, 14.

It is likewise true, that at the time of the Revolution, A.D. 1688, the lords and commons, by their own authority, and upon the summons of the Prince of Orange, (afterwards King William,) met in a convention, and therein disposed of the crown and kingdom. But it must be remembered that this assembling was upon a like principle of necessity as at the Restoration; that is, upon a full conviction that King James II. had abdicated the government, and that the throne was thereby vacant; which supposition of the individual members was confirmed by their concurrent resolutions when they actually came together. And in such a case as the palpable vacancy of the throne, it follows ex necessitate rei, that the form of the royal writs must be laid aside, otherwise no parliament can ever meet again. For let us put another possible case, for the sake of argument, that the whole royal line should at any time fail and become extinct, which would indisputably vacate the throne; in this situation it seems reasonable to presume that the body of the nation, consisting of lords and commons, would have a right to meet and settle the government; otherwise there must be no government at all. And upon this, and no other principle, did the convention in 1688 assemble. The vacancy of the throne was precedent to their meeting without any royal summons, not a consequence of it. They did not assemble without writ, and then make the throne vacant by the king's abdication; but the throne being previously vacant by the king's abdication, they assembled without writ, as they must do, if they assembled at all. Had the throne been full, their meeting would not have been regular; but, as it was really empty, such meeting became absolutely necessary. And accordingly it is declared by 1 W. & M. st. 1. c. 1. that this convention was really the two houses of parliament, notwithstanding the want of writs or other defects of form. So that notwithstanding these two capital exceptions, which were justifiable only on a principle of necessity, (and each of which, by the way, induced a revolution in the government,) the rule laid down is, in general, certain, that the king only can convoke a parliament.

And this by the ancient statutes of the realm, 4 E. 3. c. 14; 36 E. 3. c. 10. he is bound to do every year, or oftener if need be. Not that he is, or ever was, obliged by these statutes to call a new parliament every year, but only to permit a parliament to sit annually for the redress of grievances, and despatch of business, if need be. These last words are so loose and vague, that such of our monarchs as were inclined to govern without parliaments, neglected the convoking them sometimes for a very considerable period, under pretence that there was no need for them.

Mr. Greenwell Sharp, in a treatise published some years ago, argued ingeniously against this construction of the 4 E. 3. c. 14, and maintained that the words if need be, referred only to the preceding word oftener: so that the true signification was, that a parliament should be held once every year at all events; and, if there should be any need to hold it oftener, then more than once. The contemporary records of parliament, in some of which it is so expressed without any ambiguity, prove beyond all controversy that this is the true construction. See Christian's note on 1 Comm. c. 2. p. 153.

To remedy the evil of discontinuing parliaments it was enacted, that the sitting and holding of them shall not be intermitted above three years at the most. And by the 1 W. & M. st. 2 c. 2. it is declared to be one of the rights of the people, that for redress of all grievances, and for the amending, strengthening, and preserving the laws, parliaments ought to be held frequently. This indefinite frequency is again reduced to a certainty by the 6 W. & M. c. 2; which enacts, as the statute of Charles the Second had done before, that a new parliament shall be called within three years after the determination of the former.

Though the 6 W. & M. c. 2. confirms the 16 Car. 2. c. 1. in declaring that there shall not be a longer interval than three years after a dissolution; yet the 16 Car. 2. seems to be more extensive in its operation, by providing that there shall not be an intermission of more than three years after any sitting of parliament, which will extend also to a prorogation. But as the mutiny-act, and the land-tax and malt-tax acts, are passed for one year only, the statutes enforcing the meeting of parliament are now of little avail; for the parliament must necessarily be summoned, for the despatch of business, once every year. In ancient times, indeed, especially before the abolition of the feudal tenures at the restoration of Charles II. our kings had such a revenue, independent of parliament, that they were enabled to reign many years together without the assistance of parliament, and in defiance of the statutes made to compel their calling it together. 1 Comm. 153. in n.

By statute, 5 R. 2. st. 2 c. 4. every person and community, having summons to parliament, shall come thither, on pain to be amerced, or otherwise punished: and if the sheriff do not summon the cities and boroughs as usual, he shall likewise be punished.

III. THE constituent parts of a parliament are, the king's majesty, sitting there in his royal political capacity; and the three estates of the realm, the lords spiritual, the lords temporal, (who sit together with the king in one house,) and the commons, who sit by themselves in another. Others however, more consonantly with the common understanding of the nature and powers of parliament, consider the three estates of the realm to be king, lords, and commons. See post. And the king, and these three estates together, form the great corporation or body politic of the kingdom, of which the king is said to be caput, principium, et finis. 4 Inst. 1, 2; Eliz. c. 3; Hale of Parl. 1. For, upon their coming together, the king meets them either in person or by representation, without which there can be no beginning of a parliament; and he also has alone the power of dissolving them. 4 Inst. 6; 1 Comm. c. 2. p. 153.

The learned commentator then proceeds to show how highly necessary it is, for preserving the balance of the constitution, that the executive power should be a branch, though not the whole, of the legislative; and how each branch of our civil polity supports and is supported, regulates and is regulated, by the rest. See 1 Comm. p. 153—155; and as to the general extent of the king's power, prerogative, &c. title King.

On holding a parliament, the king, the first day, sits in the upper house, and by himself, or the lord chancellor, shows the reason of their meeting; then the commons are commanded to choose their speaker; which done, two or three days afterwards he is presented to the king, and after some speeches is allowed and sent down to the House of Commons; when the business of parliament proceeds. 12 Rep. 115. See post, VI.

A parliament cannot begin, on return of the writs, without the king in person, or by representation; and by representation two ways, either by a guardian of England, by letters-patent under the great seal, when the king is out of the realm; or by commission, to certain lords in case of indisposition, &c. when his majesty is at home. 4 Inst. 6, 7. And if any parliament is to be holden before a guardian of the realm, there must be a special commission to begin the parliament; but the teste of the writs of summons is to be in the guardian's name: and by an ancient law, 8 Hen. 5. c. 1. if the king, being beyond sea, cause a parliament to be summoned in this kingdom, by writ under the teste of his lieutenant, and after the king returns hither, the parliament shall proceed without any new summons.

In the 5th year of Henry V. a parliament was holden before John Duke of Bedford, brother to the king, and guardian of the kingdom. Anno 3 Ed. 4. a parliament was begun in the presence of the king, and prorogued to a further day; and then William Archbishop of York, the king's commissary by letters-patent, held the same parliament, and made an adjournment, &c. And 28 Eliz. the queen by commission under the great seal, (reciting, that for urgent occasions she could not be present in her royal person,) did authorize John Whitgift, Archbishop of Canterbury, William Lord Burleigh, Lord Treasurer of England, and Henry Earl of Derby, Lord Steward, to hold a parliament, &c. Ad faciendum omnia et singula, &c. necnon ad parlamentum adjournand. et prorogand., &c. And in the upper part of the page, above the beginning of the commission, is written, Domina Regina representatur per commissionarios, viz. &c. These commissioners sat on a form before the cloth of state, and after the commission read, the parliament proceeded.

A parliament may be holden at any place the king shall assign. See 1 Comm. p. 153. in n.

The constituent parts of parliament, next in order, are the spiritual lords. These consist of two archbishops, and twenty-four bishops for England. At the dissolution of monasteries by Henry VIII. twenty-six mitred abbots, and two priors, were likewise comprised among them; Seld. Title Hon. 2. 2, 27; a very considerable body, and in those times equal to half the number of the temporal nobility; Co. Litt. 97; see 4 Inst. 1; by which it appears, that the number of the temporal nobility was then one hundred and six.

All these prelates hold, or are supposed to hold, certain ancient baronies, under the king: for William the Conqueror thought proper to change the spiritual tenure of frankalmoign or free alms, under which the bishops held their lands during the Saxon government, into the feudal or Norman tenure by barony; which subjected their estates to all civil charges and assessments, from which they were before exempt; Gillb. Hist. Exch. 55; Spelm. W. 1. 291; and in right of succession to those baronies, which were unalienable from their respective dignities, the bishops and abbots were allowed their seats in the House of Lords. Glanv. 7. 1; Co. Litt. 97; Sel. Title Hon. 2, 5, 19.

Upon the curious question of the right under which the bishops sit in the House of Peers, whether in respect of their baronies, or by usage and custom, see a learned note by Hargrave, Co. Litt. 134 b, n. 1; and also one by Hallam (Middle Ages, chap. viii.) and the authorities cited by them. Names of the greatest weight will be found on both sides of the question: upon one side it is clear that bishops sat in the Wittenagemote, under the Anglo-Saxon monarchs; and also that the bishops of the sees erected by Henry VIII. sit now in parliament, though neither did the former, nor do the latter, hold their lands by baronial tenure. Coleridge's note to 1 Comm. 156.

Four have been added to the spiritual lords since the union with Ireland, viz. one archbishop and three bishops from that country, who sit by rotation of session. See 40 Geo. 3. c. 29. § 1. (Irish); and also 3 & 4 W. 4. c. 37. § 52, 55.

But though these lords spiritual are, in the eye of the law, a distinct estate from the lords temporal, and are so distinguished in most of our acts of parliament, yet in practice they are usually blended together under the one name of the lords; they intermix in their votes, and the majority of such intermixture binds both estates. And from this want of a separate assembly, and separate negative, of the prelates, some writers have argued (Whitelocke on Parl. c. 72; Warburt. Alliance, b. 2 c. 3.) very cogently, that the lords spiritual and temporal are now in reality only one estate; Dyer, 60; which is unquestionably true in every effectual sense; though the ancient distinction between them still nominally continues. For if a bill should pass their house there is no doubt of its validity, though every lord spiritual should vote against it; of which Selden and Sir E. Coke give many instances; as on the other hand, it seems that it would be equally good, if the lords temporal present were inferior to the bishops in number, and every one of those temporal lords gave his vote to reject the bill; though Sir E. Coke seems to doubt whether this would not be an ordinance, rather than an act of parliament. 4 Inst. 25; see Selden's Barrenage, p. 1. c. 6; Gibbs. Cod. 286. See also 2 Inst. 585, 6, 7; and Keilw. 184; where it is holden by the judges, 7 Henry VIII. that the king may hold a parliament without any spiritual lords. This was also exemplified, in fact, in the first two parliaments of Charles II. wherein no bishops were summoned; till after the repeal of the 16 Car. 1. c. 27. by 13 Car. 2. st. 1. c. 2.

No rational or ancient principle can perhaps be suggested, why the bishops should not have exactly the same legislative functions as the other peers of parliament; the style of the house of lords, viz. the lords spiritual and temporal, was probably intended as a compliment to the bishops; to express the precedence that they are entitled to, before all the temporal barons; which originally was the only character that gave a claim to a seat in the house of lords. Unless precedents could be found to the contrary, there seems to be no reason to doubt, but that any act at this day would be valid, though all the temporal lords or all the spiritual lords were absent. 1 Comm. 156. n.

In the 1 Eliz. c. 2. the style of the parliament is, the lords and commons in parliament assembled; and the same style was also used in the 1 Eliz. c. 11. a revenue act.

On the 18th of February, 1641, a motion was made in the Irish house of lords, "that as all the bishops were against a representation about certain grievances, the lords spiritual should not be named;" upon which the judges were consulted; and their opinion was, that in any act or order which passed, it must be entered "by the lords spiritual and temporal." 1 Mountm. 344.

The lords temporal consist of all the peers of the realm, (the bishops not being in strictness held to be such, but merely lords of parliament, Staundf. P. C. 153,) by whatever title of nobility distinguished; dukes, marquesses, earls, viscounts, or barons; as to which dignities, see this Dictionary, under those titles, and title Peers. Some of these sit by descent, as do all ancient peers; some by creation, as do all new-made ones; others, since the union with Scotland and Ireland, by election; which is the case of the sixteen peers, who represent the body of the Scotch nobility, and are only chosen for one parliament, and the twenty-eight temporal lords, elected for life by the peers of Ireland. See Ireland.

The number of lords temporal is indefinite, and may be increased, at will, by the power of the crown; and once, in the reign of queen Anne, there was an instance of creating no less than twelve together; in contemplation of which, in the reign of George I. a bill passed the House of Lords, and was countenanced by the then ministry, for limiting the number of the peerage. This was thought by some to promise a great acquisition to the constitution; by restraining the prerogative from gaining the ascendant in that august assembly, by pouring in at pleasure an unlimited number of new-created lords. But the bill was ill relished, and miscarried in the House of Commons, whose leading members were then desirous to keep the avenues to the other house as open and as easy as possible.

This bill was twice tried in the lords in 1718 and 1719. On the first occasion, part of the measure was that Scotland should have 25 hereditary, instead of 15 elective peers; the number 25, on failure of heirs-male, to be supplied from the other members of the Scotch peerage. It excited considerable ferment; and though supported by the ministers, and even by the irregular proceeding of a direct message from the king, it was found expedient to withdraw it. On the second occasion it passed the lords, but was thrown out in the commons by a majority against the administration of 269 to 177. See the Histories of Tindal, Smollet, and Bolshan. Walpole opposed the measure very ably; see his life by Cox. It was supported by Addison in The Old Whig; and opposed by Steele in The Plebeian. See 1 Comm. 157, and Coleridge's note there.

The commons, according to the present ordinary acceptation of the term, consist of all such men of property in the kingdom as have not seats in the House of Lords: indeed, in its largest sense, the word comprehends all who are not peers of the realm, but it appears, in its original signification, to have been confined to those only who had a right to sit, or had a right to vote for representatives in the House of Commons; and in its strict parliamentary sense, in which alone it ought to be here understood, it means the knights, citizens, and burgesses who are the representatives in the House of Commons, of the various counties, cities, and boroughs in the kingdom. In a free state, every man who is supposed a free agent ought to be in some measure his own governor; and therefore a branch, at least, of the legislative power should reside in the whole body of the people. In the state of Great Britain it is wisely contrived, that the people should do that by their representatives, which it is impracticable to perform in person; representatives chosen by a number of minor and separate districts, wherein all the voters are, or easily may be, distinguished. The counties are therefore represented by knights, elected by the proprietors and occupiers of lands; the cities and boroughs are represented by citizens and burgesses, chosen by the mercantile part, or supposed traders and interest, of the nation. Previous to the Reform Act the number of English representatives was five hundred and thirteen; Scotch forty-five, and of Irish one hundred; in all, six hundred and fifty-eight. Now the English members (including those for Wales) amount to 500, the Scotch to 69, and those for Ireland to one hundred and four. See post.

Every member, though chosen by one particular district when elected and returned, serves for the whole realm, at the end of his coming thither is not particular, but general, not barely to advantage his constituents, but the commonwealth; to advise his majesty (as appears from the writ of summons) "de communi consilio, super negotiis quibusdam arduis et urgentibus, regem, statum, et defensionem regni Angliæ, et ecclesiæ Anglicanæ, concernentibus." 1 Inst. 14. And therefore (says Blackstone) he is not bound to consult with, or take the advice of, his constituents upon any particular point, unless he himself thinks it proper or prudent so to do. See 1 Comm. 157, 159.

These are the constituent parts of a parliament; the king, the lords spiritual and temporal, and the commons; parts, of which each is so necessary, that the consent of all three is required to make any new law that shall bind the subject. Whatever is enacted for law by one, or by two only of the three, is no statute; and to it no regard is due, unless in matters relating to their own privileges. For though, in times of madness and anarchy, the House of Commons once passed a vote (which, as has been well observed, was a natural prologue to the tragic drama immediately afterwards performed), "that whatsoever is enacted or declared for law, by the commons in parliament assembled, hath the force of law; and all the people of this nation are concluded thereby, although the consent and concurrence of the king or House of Peers be not had thereto," yet, when the constitution was restored in all its forms, it was particularly enacted by the 13 Car. 2. c. 1. that if any person shall maliciously or advisedly affirm, that both or either of the houses of parliament have any legislative authority, without the king, such person shall incur all the penalties of a premeditated. We must, however, remark the exceptions to this rule; arising, as has been already mentioned, from state necessity.

IV. 1. The power and jurisdiction of parliament, says Sir Edward Coke, is so transcendent and absolute, that it cannot be confined, either for causes or persons, within any bounds. 1 Inst. 86. It hath sovereign and uncontrollable authority in the making, confirming, enlarging, restraining, abrogating, repealing, reviving, and expounding of laws; concerning matters of all possible denominations, ecclesiastical or temporal, civil, military, maritime, or criminal; this being the power where that absolute despotic power, which must in all governments reside somewhere, is intrusted, by the constitution of these kingdoms. All mischiefs and grievances, operations and remedies, that transcend the ordinary course of laws, are within the reach of this extraordinary tribunal. It can regulate or new model the succession to the crown; as was done in the reign of Henry VIII. and William III. It can alter the established religion of the land; as was done, in a variety of instances, in the reigns of King Henry VIII. and his three children. It can change and create afresh even the constitution of the kingdom, and of parliaments themselves; as was done by the act of union, and the several statutes for triennial and septennial elections. It can, in short, do every thing that is not naturally impossible; and therefore some are not scrupled to call its power, by a figure rather too bold, the omnipotence of parliament; an expression, however, which in fact seems to signify nothing more than the supreme sovereign power of the state, or a power of action uncontrollable by any superior. In this sense, the king, in the exercise of his prerogatives, and the House of Lords, in the interpretation of laws, are also omnipotent; that is, free from the control of any superior provided by the constitution. It is, that what the parliament doth, no authority upon earth can undo. So that it is a matter most essential to the peace of this kingdom, that such members be delegated to this important trust as are most eminent for their probity, their fortitude, and their knowledge; for it was a known maxim of the great lord treasurer, Burleigh, "that England could never be ruined but by a parliament;" and as Mr. Matthew Hale observes, this being the highest and greatest court, over which none other can have jurisdiction in the kingdom, if by any means a misgovernment should any way fall upon it, the subjects of this kingdom are left without all manner of remedy of parliament. Hale, of Parl. 49. To the same purpose, Montesquieu (though it is earnestly to be hoped too hastily), presages, that as Rome, Sparta, and Carthage have lost their liberty, and perished, so the constitution of England will, in time, lose its liberty, will perish; it will perish whenever the legislative power shall become more corrupt than the executive. Sp. L. l. 11. c. 6.

It must be owned that Mr. Locke, and other theoretical writers have held, that "there remains still inherent in the people a supreme power to remove or alter the legislature, when they find that legislature act contrary to the trust reposed in them; for when such trust is abused, it is thereby forfeited, and devolves to those who gave it." Locke on Gov. part 2. § 149, 227. But, however just this conclusion may be in theory, we cannot practically adopt it: nor take any legal steps to carry it into execution, under any dispensation of government at present actually existing. For this devolution of power to the people at large includes in it a dissolution of the whole form of government established by that people: reduces all the members to their original state of equality; and, by annihilating the sovereign power, repeals all positive laws whatsoever, before enacted. No human laws will therefore suppose a case, which at once must destroy all law, and compel men to build afresh upon a new foundation; nor will they make provision for such a desperate event, as must render all legal provision ineffectual. So long, therefore, as the English constitution lasts, we may venture to affirm, that the power of parliament is absolute, and without control.

In order to prevent the mischiefs that might arise, by placing this extensive authority in hands, either incapable or improper to manage it, it is provided by custom and the law of parliament, that no one shall sit or vote in either house unless he be twenty-one years of age. Whitel. c. 50; 4 Inst. 47. This is also expressly declared by 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 25. § 8 with regard to the House of Commons, doubts having arisen from some contrary adjudications, whether or not a minor was incapacitated from sitting in that house. This provision has not always been strictly attended to.

By 30 Car. 2. st. 2; 1 Geo. 1. c. 13. no member shall vote or sit in either house till he hath, in presence of the house, taken the oath of allegiance, supremacy, and abjuration; (the latter now, as altered by 6 Geo. 3. c. 53. see Oaths;) and subscribed and repeated the declaration against transubstantiation, and invocation of saints, and the sacrifice of the mass. But now, by the 10 Geo. 4. c. 7. s. 2. the acts requiring the declarations against transubstantiation, and the invocation of saints, and the sacrifice of the mass, to be made or subscribed by any of his majesty's subjects, as a qualification for sitting in parliament, or for the exercise of any office or civil right, are repealed; and any person professing the Roman Catholic religion, may sit and vote in either house of parliament, on taking the oath set forth in the act.

Formerly, by the 7 Jac. 1. c. 6, and other acts, no member was permitted to enter into the House of Commons till he had taken the oaths of allegiance and supremacy before the lord steward, or his deputy; who, on the first day of the meeting of a new parliament, attended in a room adjoining to the House of Commons, and administered the oath to the members present; and he then executed a commission or deputation, empowering any one or more of a great number of members specified to administer the oath to others.

But by the 1 & 2 W. 4. c. 9. in order to put an end to the idle repetition of these oaths, the acts requiring them to be taken before the lord steward were repealed.

Aliens, unless naturalized, were likewise, by the law of parliament, incapable to serve therein; and now, by the 12 & 13 Wm. 3. c. 2. no alien, even though he be naturalized, shall be capable of being a member of either house of parliament.

There are not only these standing incapacities, but if any person is made a peer by the king, or elected to serve in the House of Commons by the people, yet may the respective houses, upon complaint of any crime in such person, and proof thereof, adjudge him disabled, and incapable to sit as a member, and this by the law and custom of parliament. 1 Comm. c. 2. p. 163; cites Whitel. of Parl. c. 102; and refers to Lords' Journ. 3 May, 1620; 13 May, 1624; 26 May, 1725; Comm. Journ. 14 Feb. 1680; 21 Ju. 1628; 9 Nov. 1; 21 Jan. 1640; 6 Mar. 1676; 6 Mar. 1711; 17 Feb. 1769.

The sentence immediately preceding was not in the first editions of the Commentaries, but was added, no doubt, with an allusion to the Middlesex election; the circumstances of which were briefly these:—On January, 19, 20, 1764, J. W. was expelled the House of Commons for being the author of a seditious libel: at the next election, in 1768, he was elected for the county of Middlesex; and on February 3, 1769, it was resolved that J. W. Esq., who had acknowledged himself to be the author and publisher of a paper which the house had previously pronounced to be an insolent, scandalous, and seditious libel, (not the same for which he was expelled in the former parliament,) and who had been convicted in the Court of K. B. of having printed and published a seditious libel, and three obscene and impious libels, and being sentenced to twenty-two months imprisonment, be expelled this house. A new writ having been ordered for the county of Middlesex, Mr. W. was re-elected, without opposition; and on February 17, 1769, it was resolved, "that J. W., Esq., having been in this session of parliament, expelled this house, was and is incapable of being elected a member to serve in this present parliament:" and the election was declared void, and a new writ ordered. He was a second time re-elected without opposition; and, on March 17, 1769, the house again declared the election void, and ordered a new writ. At the next election, Mr. Luttrell, who had vacated his seat for the purpose, by accepting the Chiltern Hundreds, offered himself a candidate against Mr. W. Mr. W. had 1,143 votes, and Mr. Luttrell 296. Mr. W. was again returned by the sheriff. On April 15, 1769, the house resolved, that Mr. Luttrell ought to have been returned, and ordered the return to be amended; allowing fourteen days for a petition against the return: one was accordingly presented on April 29, by certain freholders of Middlesex; and, on the 8th of May, the house resolved that Mr. Luttrell was duly elected. On the 3d of May, 1769, it was resolved, that the resolutions of the 17th February, 1769, should be expunged from the journals of the house, as being subversive of the rights of the whole body of electors of this kingdom. And at the same time it was ordered, that all the declarations, orders, and resolutions, respecting the election of J. W. should be expunged.

The history of England furnishes many instances of important constitutional questions that have deeply agitated the minds of the people of this country, which can raise little or no doubt in the minds of those who view them at a distance, uninfluenced by interest or passion. It has been thought by some that it was a violent measure in the House of Commons to expel a member for the libels which he had published; but that the subsequent proceedings were agreeable to the law of parliament, that is, to the law of the land, the authorities referred to, by the learned commentator, seem most unanswerably to prove. But what shall be considered to be the law with regard to the incapacities of candidates, since these proceedings were expunged, it will be difficult indeed to determine. The resolution to expunge implies the correction of an error, after mature deliberation. If it had not been declared that a former resolution was subversive of the rights of electors, it might perhaps have been supposed that it was intended only as a personal compliment to the member expelled. But it does not state in what instance the former resolution was so subversive. They who wish for a certain knowledge of their rights and liberties must lament such a want of precision; but they must wait with patience till the wisdom of the house has occasion to explain its own judgment; and which, perhaps, if it ever should arise, would be attended with the same outrageous spirit of party, which too frequently influences the decision of public questions; acting rather upon grounds and motives, which ought to be discarded with the most religious impartiality, than on the broad basis of sound constitutional doctrine, or the real interest and welfare of the subject. See 1 Comm. c. 2. p. 163, and n. More modern instances of expulsion have occurred; but being acquiesced in without contest, are not sufficient to settle the interest of such proceedings.

As every court of justice hath laws and customs for its direction, some the civil and canon, some the common law, others their own peculiar laws and customs, so the High Court of Parliament hath also its own peculiar law, called the lex et consuetudo parliamenti: a law much better to be learned out of the rolls of parliament, and other records, and by precedents and continual experience, than can be expressed by any one man. 4 Inst. 50. It will be sufficient to observe, that the whole of the law and custom of parliament has its original from this one maxim, "that whatever matter arises, concerning either house of parliament, ought to be examined, discussed, and adjudged in that house to which it relates, and not elsewhere." 4 Inst. 15. Hence, for instance, the lords will not suffer the commons to interfere in settling the election of a peer of Scotland; the commons will not allow the lords to judge of the election of a member; nor will either house permit the subordinate courts of law to examine the merits of either case. But the maxims upon which they proceed, together with the method of proceeding, rest entirely in the breast of the parliament itself, and are not defined and ascertained by any particular stated laws. See post, VI. (B.) 8.

The courts at Westminster may judge of the privilege of parliament, where it is incident to a suit the court is possessed of; and courts may proceed to execution between the session of parliament, notwithstanding appeals lodged, &c. 2 St. Tr. 66, 209.

The king cannot take notice of any thing, said to be done in the House of Commons, but by the report of the house, and every member of the house of parliament has a judicial place, and cannot be a witness. 4 Inst. 15. When Charles I. being in the House of Commons, and sitting in the speaker's chair, asked the then speaker, whether certain members (whom the king named) were then present? the speaker from a presence of mind which arose from the genius of that house, readily answered, "That he had neither eyes to see, nor tongue to speak, but as the house was pleased to direct him." Atkin's Jurisd. and Antiquity of the House of Commons, Hen. VIII., having commanded Sir Thomas Gaudy, one of the judges of the King's Bench, to attend the chief justice, and know their opinion, whether a man might be attainted of high treason by parliament, and never called to answer; the judges declared it was a dangerous question, and that the high court of parliament ought to give examples to inferior courts for proceeding according to justice, and no inferior court could do the like. Lex Constitution. 161.

The House of Lords is a distinct court from the Commons, to several purposes: they try criminal causes on impeachments of the commons; and have an original jurisdiction for the trial of peers, upon indictments found by a grand jury; they also try causes upon appeals from the Court of Chancery, or upon writs of error to reverse judgments in B. R. &c. See post, V. 2. And all their decrees are as judgments. The judgments given in parliament may be executed by the lord chancellor. 4 Inst. 21; Finch. 233; 1 Leo. 165. Also the House of Commons is a distinct court to many purposes: they examine the right of elections, expel their own members, and commit them to prison, and sometimes other persons, &c.

See post. And the book of the clerk of the House of Commons is a record. 2 Inst. 536; 4 Inst. 23. The commons, coming from all parts, are the grand inquest of the realm; to present public grievances and delinquents to the king and lords to be punished by them; and any member of the House of Commons has the privilege of impeaching the highest lord in the kingdom. Wood's Inst. 455.

The High Court of Parliament is the supreme court in the kingdom, not only for the making, but also for the execution of laws; by the trial of great and enormous offenders, whether lords or commons, in the method of parliamentary impeachment. Acts of parliament to attain particular persons of treason or felony, or to inflict pains and penalties, are new laws made pro re natâ, and by no means an execution of such as are already in being: but an impeachment before the lords, by the commons of Great Britain, in parliament, is a prosecution of the already known and established law, and has been frequently put in practice; being a presentment to the most high and supreme court of criminal jurisdiction by the most solemn grand inquest of the whole kingdom. 1 Hal. P. C. 150. A commoner, it is said, by Blackstone, who quotes authorities to prove his position, cannot be impeached before the lords for any capital offence, but only for high misdemeanors; a peer may be impeached for any crime: but it appears, that the right of impeaching a commoner, even in capital cases, has been claimed and asserted by the lords. See 4 Comm. 260, in n.

The commons usually, in case of an impeachment of a peer for treason, address the crown to appoint a lord high steward for the greater dignity and regularity of their proceedings; which high steward was formerly elected by the peers themselves, though he was generally commissioned by the king. 1 Hal. P. C. 350. But it hath been strenuously maintained, that the appointment of an high steward in such cases is not indispensably necessary, but that the house may proceed without one.

This custom of impeachment has a peculiar propriety in the English constitution; for though in general the union of the legislative and judicial powers ought to be most carefully avoided, yet it may happen that a subject, intrusted with the administration of public affairs, may infringe the rights of the people, and be guilty of such crimes as the ordinary magistrates either dares not, or cannot punish. Of these, the representatives of the people, or House of Commons, cannot properly judge; because their constituents are the parties injured, and can therefore only impeach. In the trial of such an impeachment, ordinary tribunals would naturally be swayed by the authority of so powerful an accuser. Reason, therefore, will suggest that this branch of the legislature, which represents the people, must bring its charge before the other branch, which consists of the nobility, who have neither the same interests nor the same passions as popular assemblies. It is proper that the nobility should judge, to insure justice to the accused; as it is proper that the people should accuse, to insure justice to the commonwealth. 4 Comm. c. 1, p. 264. See Impeachment.

As to the court of the lord high steward for the trial of a peer, see titles Lord High Steward, Peers, and as to the jurisdiction of the House of Lords, see further, post, V. 2.

At the reign of Henry IV. although the old form of the king's appointing receivers and tryers, or auditors, of petitions at the beginning of every parliament, (which is traceable as far back as 33 Edward I. and is still serupulously adhered to, was continued, and so ever gave the opportunity of calling the judicature of the whole parliament to action, yet in point of fact the exercise of jurisdiction in parliament over causes seems to have gradually fallen into disuse. It has been suggested, however, that though this appointment of receivers or tryers, or auditors, of petitions, at the beginning of a new parliament, has long, in point of practice, been considered as mere form, yet it seems still to be open to any person at the beginning of a new parliament, by presenting a petition to the receivers, within the time limited by the appointment of them, to call into action the duties both of receivers, and of tryers or auditors, and so to resuscitate the ancient manner of exercising parliamentary jurisdiction, or at least to put a test to its susceptibility of being so revived. It is to be considered also that there may be cases which, from the failure of other modes of relief may, at some future time, induce the trial of such an experiment. See Hargrave's Preface to Hale's Jurisdiction of the Lords' House of Parliament, p. 6, 35. See also post, V. 2.

2. The privileges of parliament are very large and indefinite; and therefore when in 31 Hen. 6. the House of Lords propounded a question to the judges concerning them, the chief justice, Sir John Fortesque, in the name of his brethren, declared, that they ought not to make answer to that question, for it hath not been used aforetime that the justices should in anywise determine the privileges of the High Court of Parliament; for it is so high and mighty in its nature, that it may make law; and that which is law, it may make no law; and the determination and knowledge of that privilege belongs to the lords of parliament, and not to the justices. Seld. Baronage, p. 1. c. 4. Privilege of parliament was principally established, in order to protect its members, not only from being molested by their fellow-subjects, but also more especially from being oppressed by the power of the crown. If therefore all the privileges of parliament were once to be set down and ascertained, and no privilege to be allowed but what was so defined and determined, it were easy for the executive power to devise some new case, not within the line of privilege, and under pretence thereof to harass any refractory member, and violate the freedom of parliament. The dignity and independence of the two houses are therefore in a great measure preserved by keeping the privileges indefinite. But in answer to this observation it has been justly remarked, that clearness and certainty are essentially necessary to the liberty of Englishmen; and that rights and privileges cannot well be claimed, unless they are ascertained and defined.

And a recent author (1 Dwarris on Statutes, 67) remarking on this passage in Blackstone, submits that there is nothing in the ancient writers upon our laws and constitution, to countenance this pernicious doctrine of later times, that the privileges of parliament are indeterminate and undefined. The dictum which is so much relied upon, of Chief Justice Fortesque, in Thorpe's case, (31 Hen. 6.) "that the determination and knowledge of the privileges of parliament, belong to the lords of parliament, and not to the justices," evidently only refers to those cases in which the privilege of parliament comes in debate in the House of Lords, where the judges have no deliberate voice. It admits, no doubt, the unquestioned right, in either house of parliament, of exclusively determining upon any violation of their acknowledged privileges. In this sense the two houses respectively are properly said to be the judges of their own privileges, that is, whether they are infringed in the particular instance; as they are also the persons to judge of their own peculiar forms and manner of proceeding, suis propriis legibus et consuetudinibus subsistit. The judges will only take cognisance of the privileges of parliament, when questions concerning those privileges are brought incidentally or collaterally before them for judgment in the way of action, when the court is obliged to determine the question, to prevent a failure of justice. They will not decide the point when it comes before them directly, because cognizance of such matters belongs ad aliud examen; but only when, as Sir Thomas Jones said in Lord Shaftesbury's case, it is an incident to the cause before them. But when privileges claimed by the House of Commons have been submitted to the examination of the courts, and have been found not to be sanctioned by law, they have, whatever votes may before have passed upon the subject, been disallowed. See Sir Orlando Bridgman's judgment in Benyon & Evelyn, T. 14 Car. 2. Rol. 2558.

No resolution of either house of parliament can make that a legal privilege which was not so before. The law of parliament may be expounded from time to time, but cannot be extended or altered without the authority of the whole legislature. 2 State Trials, 615; 1 Mod. 144. Lord Coke also chiefly relies upon Thorpe's case, but this authority entirely fails of establishing the position it is brought to maintain, that such privileges are undefined and arbitrary; and that members of either house, constituting only as part of the sovereign power in the state (which alone can make new laws) have an unlimited right of creating and extending exceptions in their own favour.

Again, when Fortesque says of parliament, "It is so high and mighty in its nature, that it may make law, and that which is law, it may make no law," he is enlarging upon the transcendent power of parliament in its collective and legislative capacity. And what is obviously true of the whole, becomes monstrous when applied to a part. "It was not their part to judge of the parliament, which may judge of the law." The reason, says Selden, to "judge of the law," signifies that they, the parliament, can judge whether a law be good or not, in order to approve it and to re-enact it, or to repeal a law, &c. Selden's Judicature, 55.

But these matters, it is then said, are governed by different rules "construed by another law." For "as every court of justice hath laws and customs for its direction, some the civil and canon, some the common law; so it is said by Lord Coke that the court of parliament has its own peculiar law, called the lex et consuetudo Parliamenti; a law, a multis ignorata, a paucis cognita. 1 Inst. 11.

Upon this well-known sentence, Lord Holt has pointedly remarked, that "if the lex Parliamenti is a multis ignorata, it is only because they will not apply themselves to learn it." But to be the subject of accurate knowledge, this peculiar law, these exclusive maxims, must be fixed and not vague, ascertained and not arbitrary; discoverable, where doubts arise, by examining the records of parliament, and inquiring what was claimed and allowed in similar instances in former times, precisely in the same manner as the common law, consisting of unwritten customs and maxims, is discovered and construed by the judges of the several courts of law, from experience and study, and familiarity with the judicial decisions of their predecessors. The records of the courts, carefully preserved and registered, furnish conclusive evidence of such customs as form part of the common law. The members of the respective houses of parliament, when called upon to declare the law of parliament, (of which the privilege of parliament will be properly insisted to form a part,) are the judges of that law, and will have recourse to the same means of ascertaining and determining what that law is.

The law of parliament, it is apprehended, is a part of the lex terræ, in other words of the common law; to be expounded indeed by that house, to which any matter that arises properly relates, and nowhere else; but definable, nevertheless, and subject to certain prescriptive limitations, as being determined by regular custom. To be as explicit as possible on so delicate a subject, it is contended that the decisions of the two houses of parliament, in cases of which they are admitted to be the sole competent judges, are fully governed by usage, and controlled by precedents; and in declaring this law they act judicially, and are under a solemn obligation jus dicere, and not jus dare.

To the objection that this customary law has not any particular stated maxims, it is answered in the words of the venerable authority already frequently referred to, (Lord Coke, 4 Inst. 1.) that the whole of it is to be sought and found "in the rolls of parliament," "in precedents and records," "and continual experience" of the "custom of parliament."

"The only method," says Hatsell, "of knowing what are the privileges of the House of Commons, is to consult the records of that house, and to search into the history of parliament for those cases in which a claim of privilege has been made, and to examine whether it has been admitted or refused." 1 Hats. 2.

"The law of parliament," says Hallam, "as determined by regular custom, is incorporated into our constitution, but not so as to warrant an indefinite uncontrollable assumption of power in any case, least of all in judicial proceedings, where the form and the essence of justice are unseparable from each other."

There are several privileges of the members of either house, which are sufficiently certain and notorious. These are privileges of speech, of person: (and before the 10 Geo. 3. c. 50. of their domestics, and of their lands and goods). As to the first, privilege of speech, see Strode's Act, 4 Hen. 8.

In the year 1667 the commons resolved that Strode's Act was a general law, "extending to indemnify all and every the members of both houses of parliament, in all parliaments for and touching any bills, speaking, naming, or declaring of any matter or matters in and concerning the parliament to be convened and treated of;" and that it was "a declaratory law of the ancient and necessary rights and privileges of parliament."

By the 1 W. & M. st. 2. c. 2. it is expressly declared as one of the liberties of the people, "that the freedom of speech, and debates, and proceedings in parliament, ought not to be impeached, or questioned, in any court or place out of parliament." And this freedom of speech (with other privileges) is particularly demanded of the king in person, by the speaker of the House of Commons, at the opening of every new parliament. See also 1 Dwarris on Stat. 73.

But though a member of parliament has privilege of speech in parliament, and may express his sentiments in his place in either house, without being questioned in any place or court out of parliament; 1 Esp. 226; yet if he publish his speech, it then becomes a subject of common law jurisdiction, and he is liable to an action for libel. 1 M. & S. 273.

If any member of either house speak words of offence in a debate, after the debate is over he is called to the bar where commonly on his knees he receives a reprimand from the speaker; and if the offence be great, he is sent to the Tower. When the bill of attainder of the Earl of Strafford, was passing the House of Commons, Mr. Taylor, a member of that house, opposed it with great violence, and being heard, to explain himself, was commanded to withdraw; whereupon it was resolved he should be expelled the house, be made incapable of ever serving as a member of parliament, and should be committed prisoner to the Tower, there to remain during the pleasure of the house: and he was called to the bar, where he kneeled down, and Mr. Speaker pronounced the sentence accordingly. And Sir John Elliot, Daniel Hollis, and another person having spoken these words, "The king's privy council, his judges and his counsel learned in the law, have conspired to trample under their feet the liberties of the subject, and of this house," an imputation was filed against them by the attorney-general; and afterwards for that the king having signified his pleasure to the House of Commons for the adjournment of the parliament, and the speaker endeavouring to get out of the chair, they violently &c. detained him in the chair, upon which there was a great tumult in the house, to the terror of the commons then assembled, and against their allegiance, in contempt of the king, his crown and dignity: the defendants pleaded to the jurisdiction of the court; and refused to answer but in parliament; but it was adjudged, that they ought to answer, the charge being for a conspiracy, and seditious acts, to prevent the adjournment of the parliament, which may be examined out of it; and not answering, judgment was given against them, that Sir John Elliot should be committed to the Tower, and fined 2000*l.*; and the other two were fined and imprisoned. Cro. Car. 130.

To an action of trespass against the speaker of the House of Commons for forcibly, and with the assistance of armed soldiers, breaking into the plaintiff's house and arresting him there, and taking him to the Tower and imprisoning him there; a justification was pleaded that a parliament was held, in which the plaintiff was a member of the House of Commons; that the House having resolved a certain letter to be a libellois paper reflecting on the rights and privileges of the House, the plaintiff had admitted that the letter was printed by his authority, and that the House had therefore resolved that plaintiff had been thereby guilty of a breach of the privileges of the house; and that the house had ordered that for his offence he should be committed to the Tower, and that the speaker should issue his warrant for that purpose, which was done accordingly; and that the serjeant-at-arms, by virtue of such warrant, went to plaintiff's house, where he then was, to execute such warrant; but because the outer door was fastened, and he could not enter, after audible publication of his purpose, and demand made of admission, he, with the assistance of the soldiers, broke and entered plaintiff's house and arrested and conveyed him to the Tower. And this justification was held a legal bar to the plaintiff. Burdett v. Abbott, 14 East, 1; 4 Taunt. 401.

Another action was brought by the same plaintiff against the serjeant-at-arms for excess of authority in executing the same warrant by employing the military to assist him; when a verdict was found for the defendant. Burdett v. Colman, 14 East, 168.

Since the Revolution it has not been unusual for the House of Commons, in cases of libel and some other offences which may be thought to deserve a punishment different from what the house has power to inflict, to order the attorney-general to prosecute the offenders, or to address the king praying he will give directions for that purpose.

The other privileges of persons, (and heretofore of servants, lands, and goods,) are immunities as ancient as Edward the Confessor, in whose laws we find this precept, "Ad signatos venientibus sive summoniti sint, sive per se quid agendum habuerint sit simonia pœna." 1 Edw. Conf. c. 1. This enacted formerly not only privilege from illegal violence, but also from legal arrests and seizures by process from the courts of law.

To assault by violence a member of either house (or formerly his menial servants), is a high contempt of parliament, and there punished with the utmost severity. It has likewise peculiar penalties annexed to it in the courts of law by the 4 Hen. 4. c. 8. and 11 Hen. 6. c. 11. By this latter statute assaulting a member coming to or attending in parliament incurs the penalty of double damages, and the offender shall make fine and ransom.

Sir Robert Brandling made an assault upon Mr. Witherington, a member of the House of Commons, in the country, before his coming up to parliament; and Sir Robert was sent for to the house and committed to the Tower. And anno 15 Jas. 1. some speeches passed privately in the house between two of the members, and one of them going down the parliament stairs struck the other, who catching at a sword in his man's hand, endeavoured to return the stroke: and complaint to the House of Commons they were both ordered to attend, where he who gave the blow was committed to the Tower during the pleasure of the house. Dict.

Neither can any member of either house be arrested and taken into custody, unless for some indictable offence, without a breach of the privilege of parliament. See post.

But all other privileges which derogate from the common law in matters of civil right are now at an end, save only as to the freedom of the member's person, which in a peer (by the privilege of peerage) is for ever sacred and inviolable; and in a commoner (by the privilege of parliament) for forty days after every prorogation, and forty days before the next appointed meeting; which is now in effect as long as the parliament subsists, it seldom being prorogued for more than fourscore days at a time. 2 Lea. 72. It does not appear that the privilege from arrest is limited to any precise time after a dissolution; but it has been determined by all the judges that it extends to a convenient time. Col. Pitt's case, 2 Str. 988. Prynne is of opinion that it continued for the number of days the member received wages after a dissolution, which were in proportion to the distance between his home and the place where the parliament was held. 4 Parl. Writs, 68.

As to all other privileges which obstruct the ordinary course of justice, they were restrained by 12 Will. 3. c. 3; 2 & 3 Ann. c. 18; 11 Geo. 2. c. 24; and are now totally abolished by 10 Geo. 3. c. 50, which enacts that any suit may at any time be brought against any peer or member of parliament, their servants, or any other person entitled to privilege of parliament; which shall not be impeached or delayed by pretence of any such privilege, except that the person of a member of the House of Commons shall not thereby be subject to any arrest or imprisonment. Likewise, for the benefit of commerce, it is provided by the 6 Geo. 4. c. 16. § 9. that any trader, having privilege of parliament, may be served with legal process for any just debt to such amount as will support a commission; and unless he makes satisfaction within one month, it shall be deemed an act of bankruptcy, and that a commission of bankrupt may be issued against such privileged traders in like manner as against any other. And by § 11. any trader disobeying any decree or order in equity, or order in bankruptcy or lunacy, or denying the payment of money, shall, after being served with a peremptory order, be deemed to have committed an act of bankruptcy. And now by the act for uniformity of process, 2 Will. 4. c. 39, the process for proceeding against a member of parliament according to the 6 Geo. 4. c. 16. shall be in the form prescribed by that act, schedule No. 6, instead of the summons or original bill of summons and copy thereof mentioned in the statute; and see 1 Deacon's B. Law, 809. See Bankrupt.

The 52 Geo. 3. c. 144. enacts, that whenever a commission of bankruptcy shall issue against a member of the House of Commons, under which he is declared a bankrupt, he shall, during twelve months from the issuing thereof, be incapable of sitting and voting, unless within that period the commission shall be superseded, or the debts paid to the creditors in full, (or, in case of dispute, be secured by the bond of the bankrupt, with two sureties.) If the commission is not superseded, or the debts satisfied within the above-mentioned time, the speaker shall issue his warrant for the electing a new member.

The 12 Will. 3. c. 3. enacted, that actions might be prosecuted against persons entitled to privilege of parliament after a dissolution or prorogation, until a new parliament was called, or the same was re-assembled; and after adjournment for above fourteen days the respective courts might proceed to judgment, &c. Proceedings were to be by summons and distress infinite, &c. until the parties should enter a common appearance; and the real or personal estates of the defendants to be sequestered for default of appearance; but the plaintiff not to arrest their bodies; and where any plaintiff should be staid or prevented from proceeding by privilege of parliament, he should not be barred by any statute of limitation, or nonsuited, dismissed, or his suit discontinued for want of prosecution; but at the rising of the parliament should be at liberty to proceed to judgment and execution. This act was by 10 Geo. 3. c. 50. extended to Scotland. See Privilege.

By the 2 & 3 Ann. c. 18. actions may be prosecuted against officers of the revenue, or in any place of public trust, for any forfeiture or breach of trust, &c. and shall not be staid by colour of privilege; but such officer, being a member of parliament, is not subject to arrest during time of privilege, but summons, attachment, &c.

The 11 Geo. 2. c. 24. enacted, that any person might prosecute a suit in any court of record, &c. in Great Britain or Ireland, against any peer or member of the House of Commons, or other person entitled to privilege, in the intervals of parliaments or of sessions, if above fourteen days; and the said courts, after dissolutions or prorogations, were to give judgment and award execution; and no proceedings in law against the king's immediate debtor, as such, &c. to be delayed under colour of such privilege; only the person of a member of parliament, &c. shall not be arrested or imprisoned.

The 10 Geo. 3. c. 50. already mentioned, provides, that suits may at any time be prosecuted in courts of record, equity, or admiralty, and courts having cognizance of causes matrimonial and testamentary against peers and members of the House of Commons, and their servants, &c. Process by distringas being found dilatory, the court out of which the writ proceeds may order the issues to be sold, and the money arising thereby to be applied to pay the costs to the plaintiff, and the surplus to be retained till the appearance of the defendant, &c. When the purpose of the writ is answered the issues are to be returned; or if sold, the money remaining is to be repaid. Obedience to the rule of the court of King's Bench, Common Pleas, or Exchequer, may be enforced by distress infinite.

In equity privilege of parliament is allowed to members of the House of Commons, on whose neglect to appear, after being served with the subpoena, the first process of contempt to enforce appearance is sequestration, not attachment; and the rules of practice for compelling appearance are the same as regards them and peers, except that it is not necessary to leave with them a copy of the bill with the subpoena, as in the case of peers.

The 47 Geo. 3. st. 2. c. 40. enacts, that when any bill of complaint, &c. shall be exhibited in any court of equity against any member of the House of Commons, it shall not be necessary to leave a copy of the bill with the defendant, or at his place of abode, as formerly practised; but the person exhibiting such bill may proceed for want of appearance or answer, to sequester the real and personal estate of such member, as before he might have done, after leaving the copy of the bill with the defendant.

Under the 45 Geo. 3. c. 124. § 3. if a member of parliament refuse to appear after the whole course of process has been used, the court may order an appearance to be entered for him, and the bill to be taken pro confesso. See 16 Ves. 436. And by the fifth section of the above act bills for discovery may after such default as therein mentioned be also taken pro confesso. See 17 Ves. 368.

To show what the subject has gained by the provisions of the several acts of parliament, which have restrained the privileges of members, so far as they could be used as exceptions to, or infringements on, public justice, we need only recur to the cases in our books treating of the privileges of parliament, relating to arrests of members of the House of Commons, and their servants, and the manner of their confinement, release, &c. In the first year of King James I., Sir Thomas Shirley, a member of parliament, was arrested four days before the sitting of the parliament, and carried prisoner to the Fleet; on which a warrant issued to the clerk of the crown for a habeas corpus to bring him to the house, and the serjeant was sent for in custody, who being brought to the bar, and confessing his fault, was excused for that time: but on hearing counsel at the bar for Sir Thomas Shirley, and the warden of the Fleet, and upon producing precedent, Simpson the prosecutor, who caused the arrest to be made, was ordered to be committed to the Tower; and afterwards the warden refusing to execute the writ of habeas corpus, and the delivery of Sir Thomas being denied, was likewise committed to the Tower; though on his agreeing to deliver up Sir Thomas, upon a new warrant for a new writ of habeas corpus, and making submission to the house, he was discharged; this affair taking up some time, the house entered into several debates touching their privilege, and how the debt of the party might be satisfied; which produced three questions: First, Whether Sir Thomas Shirley should have privilege? Secondly, Whether presently, or to be deferred? And, Thirdly, Whether the house should petition the king for some course for securing the debt of the party, according to former precedents, and saving harmless the warden of the Fleet? All which questions were resolved; and a bill was brought in to secure Simpson's debt, &c. which also occasioned the statute 1 Jac. 1. c. 13. for relief of plaintiffs in writs of execution, where the defendants in such writs are arrested, and set at liberty by privilege of parliament: by which a fresh prosecution and new execution may be had against them when that privilege ceases. Lex Constitution. 141. And anno 19 Jan 1 one Johnson, a servant to Sir James Whitlock, a member of the House of Commons, was arrested by two bailiffs; who being told Sir James Whitlock was a parliament-man, answered, that they had known greater men's servants than his taken from their masters in time of parliament: and this appearing, the two bailiffs were sentenced to ask pardon of the house and Sir James Whitlock, on their knees; that they should both ride on one horse bare backed, back to back, from Westminster to the Exchange, with papers on their breasts signifying their offence; all which was to be executed presently, sedente curia. Lex Const. 141.

In action of debt on a bond, conditioned that B. B. should render himself at such a day and place to an arrest; defendant pleaded, that by privilege of parliament, the members &c. and their servants ought not to be arrested by the space of forty days before the sitting of the parliament, nor during the session, nor forty days afterwards; and that B. B. was at that time servant to such a member of parliament, so as he could not render himself to be arrested; upon demurrer to this plea, it was adjudged ill, because he might have rendered himself at the time and place; but then it would be at their peril if he was arrested. 1 Brownl. 81.

The only way by which courts of justice could anciently take cognizance of privilege of parliament was by writ of privilege, in the nature of a supersedeas, to deliver the party out of custody when arrested in a civil suit. Dyer, 59; 4 Pryn out of custody when arrested in a civil suit. Dyer, 59; 4 Pryn out of custody when arrested in a civil suit. Brev. Parl. 757. For when a letter was written by the speaker to the judges to stay proceedings against a privileged person, they rejected it as contrary to their oath of office. Latch. 58, 150; Noy, 83. But since the 12 W. 3. c. 3 which enacts, that no privileged person shall be subject to arrest or imprisonment, it hath been held, that such arrest is irregular ab initio, and that the party may be discharged upon motion. Stra. 989. It is to be observed, that there is no precedent of any such writ of privilege, but only in civil suits and that the 1 Jac. 1. c. 13. and that of King William (which remedy some inconveniences arising from privilege of parliament) speak only of civil actions. And therefore the claim of privilege hath been usually guarded with an exception as to the case of indictable crimes; or, as it hath been frequently expressed, of treason, felony, and breach (or surety) of the peace. See 4 Inst. 25. Whereby it seems to have been understood, that no privilege was allowable to the members, their families, or servants, in any crime whatsoever; for all crimes are treated by the law as being contra pacem domini regis: and instances have not been wanting wherein privileged persons have been convicted of misdemeanors, and committed or prosecuted to outlawry, even in the middle of a session; which proceeding has afterwards received the sanction and approbation of parliament. Mic. 16 E. 4. Sac. Ld. Raym. 1461; Comm. Journ. 1726.

To which may be added, that in the year 1763, the case of writing and publishing seditious libels was resolved, by the houses, not to be entitled to privilege; and that the reasons upon which that case proceeded extended equally to every indetenable offence. It is not a little remarkable, that the contrary position had been determined, a short time before, in the case of the King v. Wilkes, by the Court of Common Pleas. A circumstance which serves to show that the house, where the case of one of their own members and the dignity of the house were concerned, made a determination more consonant to the rules of general municipal justice, and more favourable to political subordination, than one of the courts of law in Westminster-Hall. See 2 Wils. 159, 251; Comm. Journ. 24 Nov.; Lords' Journ. & Protest, 29 Nov. 1763; Case of the Seven Bishops, Philipp's State Trials.

The chief, therefore, if not the only, privilege of parliament in criminal cases, seems to be the right of each house to receive immediate information of the imprisonment or detention of any member, with the reason for which he is detained; a practice that is daily used upon the slightest military accusations, preparatory to a trial by a court martial; and which is recognized by the several temporary statutes for suspending the habeas corpus act (particularly 31 Geo. 3. c. 54), whereby it is provided, that no member of either house shall be detained, till the matter of which he stands suspected be first communicated to the house of which he is a member, and the consent of the said house obtained for his commitment or detaining. But yet the usage has uniformly been, ever since the Revolution, that the communication has been subsequent to the arrest. 1 Comm. c. 2.

The privilege of franking letters, which was claimed by the House of Commons when the post-office was first established, is regulated by the 1 Geo. 1. c. 24; 21 Geo. 3. c. 2. § 57, & 35 Geo. 3. c. 53; by which acts many abuses that had crept into the practice were restrained. By the latter statute, no letter exceeding an ounce in weight shall go free, or any letter directed by a member, unless he be within twenty miles of the post town from which it is sent on the day, or the day before, it is put into the office. No member can send more than ten, or receive above fifteen letters free from postage in one day.

V. 1. ONE very ancient privilege of peers, considered as members of parliament, is that declared by the Charter of the Forest, (cap. 11.) confirmed in parliament, 9 Hen. 3; viz. That every lord, spiritual or temporal, summoned to parliament, and passing through the king's forests, may, both in going and returning, kill one or two of the king's deer without warrant; in view of the forester, if he be present, or on blowing a horn, if he be absent; that he may not seem to take the king's venison by stealth. 1 Comm. c. 2.

In the next place they have a right to be attended, and constantly are, by the judges of the Courts of K. B. and C. P. and such barons of the Exchequer as are of the degree of baron, or have been made serjeants at law; as likewise by the king's learned counsel being serjeants, and by the Masters of the Court of Chancery; for their advice in point of law, and for the greater dignity of their proceedings. (The lord chancellor is usually the speaker of the House.)

The secretaries of state, with the attorney and solicitor-general, were also used to attend the House of Peers, and now to this day (together with the judges, &c.) their regular writs of summons, issued out at the beginning of every parliament, ad tractandum et consilium impendendum, though not ad consentiendum; but whenever, of late years, they have been members of the House of Commons, their attendance here hath fallen into disuse. See 31 Hen. 8. c. 10; 3 Ann. 551; 4 Inst. 4, 48; Hale of Parl. 140. On account of this attendance there are several resolutions, before the restoration, declaring the attorney general incapable of sitting in the commons. See post, VI. (B.) 2. Sir Henry E. 1. member for the University of Oxford, afterwards

Lord Nottingham, and chancellor, was the first attorney general who enjoyed that privilege. Sim. 28.

Another privilege is, that every peer, by licence obtained from the king, may make another lord of parliament his proxy, to vote for him in his absence. Seld. Baronage, p. 1. c. 1. A privilege which a member of the other house can by no means have; as he is himself but a proxy for a multitude of other people. 4 Inst. 12. This licence had long ceased in Ireland: but the proxies in the House of Lords were still entered, in Latin, ex licentiâ regis. This created a doubt in Nov. 1788, whether the proxies in that parliament were legal, on account of the king's illness. 1 Ld. Mountm. 342. But it seems now to be so much a mere form, that the licence may be presumed, though instances are on record where they have been denied by the king, particularly an. 6, 27 & 29 E. 3. Proxies cannot be used in a committee. Ib. 106. Nor can a proxy sign a protest in England; but he could in Ireland. 2 Ld. Mountm. 191. If a peer, after appointing a proxy, appears personally in parliament, his proxy is revoked and annulled. 4 Inst. 13. And by the orders of the house no proxy shall vote upon a question of "guilty or not guilty." The order that no lord should have more than two proxies, (i. e. be a proxy for more than two absent lords,) was made anno 2 Car. 1. because the Duke of Buckingham had no less than fourteen. 1 Rushm. 269. Two or more peers may be proxy for one absent peer; but Coke is of opinion, that they cannot vote, unless they all concur. 4 Inst. 12; 1 Wood. 41.

There is an instance, in Wight. 50, where a proxy is called litera attornatus ad Parliamentum; which it is in effect. The peer who has the proxy is always called, in Latin, procurator. And anciently a commoner was allowed to act as a proxy of a peer in the House of Lords, of which Elsyne has given several instances; but now a spiritual lord shall only be proxy for a spiritual lord, and a temporal lord for a temporal.

Each peer has also a right, by leave of the house, when a vote passes contrary to his sentiments, to enter his dissent on the journals of the house with the reasons for such dissent, which is usually styled his protest. 1 Comm. c. 2. Lord Clarendon relates, that the first instances of protests, with reasons, in England, were in 1641; before which time they usually only set down their names as dissentient to the vote. The first regular protest in Ireland was in 1662. 1 Ld. Mountm. 402.

All bills likewise that may, in their consequences, any way affect the right of the peerage, are by the custom of parliament to have their first rise and beginning in the House of Peers; and to suffer no changes or amendments in the House of Commons.

There is also one statute peculiarly relative to the House of Lords, which regulates the election of the sixteen representative peers of North Britain, in consequence of the twenty-second and twenty-third articles of the Union; and for that purpose prescribes the oaths, &c. to be taken by the electors; directs the mode of balloting; prohibits the peers electing from being attended in an unusual manner; and expressly provides, that no other matter shall be treated of in that assembly, save only the election, on pain of incurring a præmunire. 6 Ann. c. 23.

Most of the other privileges of peers belong to them in their judicial capacity, and not as members of parliament. See further Peers.

2 Considered in its judicial capacity, the House of Peers is the supreme court of judicature in the kingdom; having at present no original jurisdiction over causes, but only upon appeals and writs of error to rectify any injustice or mistake of the law committed by the courts below. But this house has original criminal jurisdiction in the cases of impeachment by the commons, and of the trial of peers. See those titles: and see ante, IV. 1.

To this authority, this august tribunal succeeded of course upon the dissolution of the Aula Regia: for as the barons of parliament were constituent members of that court, and the rest of its jurisdiction was dealt out to other tribunals, over which the great officers who accompanied those barons were respectively delegated to preside; it followed that the right of receiving appeals, and superintending all other jurisdictions, still remained in the residue of that noble assembly, from which every other great court was derived. They are, therefore, in all causes the last resort, from whose judgment no further appeal is permitted; but every subordinate tribunal must conform to their determinations; the law reposing an entire confidence in the honour and conscience of the noble persons who compose this important assembly, that (if possible) they will make themselves masters of those questions, upon which they undertake to decide; and in all dubious cases refer themselves to the opinions of the judges, who are summoned by writ to advise them; since upon their decision all property must finally depend. 3 Comm. c. 4. p. 57. See also 27 Eliz. c. 8; & 31 Eliz. c. 1.

To this judicial capacity Blackstone refers the tribunal established by 14 E. 3. c. 5. consisting (though now out of use) of one prelate, two earls, and two barons, who are to be chosen at every new parliament, to hear complaints of grievances and delays of justice in the king's courts; and (with the advice of the chancellor, treasurer and justices of both benches) to give directions for remedying those inconveniences in the courts below. See also 27 Eliz. c. 8; & 31 Eliz. c. 1. This committee seems to have been established, lest there should be a defect of justice, for want of a supreme court of appeal, during any long intermission or recess of parliament; for the statute further directs, "that if the difficulty be so great that it may not well be determined, without assent of parliament, it shall be brought by the said prelate, earls, and barons unto the next parliament, who shall finally determine the same." 3 Comm. 58.

It has been well hinted, to all the members of this super-eminent judicature, that when they are declaring what is the law of parliament, their character is totally different from that with which, as legislators, they are invested, when they are framing new laws; and that they ought never to forget the admonition of that great and patriotic chief justice Lord Holt, viz. "That the authority of parliament is from the law, and as it is circumscribed by law, so it may be exceeded; and if they do exceed those legal bounds and authority, their acts are wrongful, and cannot be justified any more than the acts of private men." 1 Salk. 505. And for the position, that parliaments, in their judicial capacity, are governed by the common and statute laws, as well as the courts in Westminster-Hall, see 4 Inst. 14, 15; 2 St. Tr. 735.

In the case of the Bishop of London v. Ffytche it was determined, that a general bond of resignation (given by the clergyman to the patron on his being presented to a living) is simoniacal and illegal: and the House of Lords reversed the judgments of the Courts of C. P. and K. B. to the contrary, though founded on a series of judicial decisions, by which these courts held themselves bound to decide that such bond was not illegal. The question arose on the words of the 31 Eliz. c. 6. Some dissatisfaction has been expressed at this determination of the lords: and it has been supposed, that a different judgment might be given on a future occasion. See Cases in Parliament, 8vo. title Clergy, Ca. 3. But it is generally understood that the lords, to prevent inconsistencies in their judgments, will never permit a question of law, once decided in that house, to be debated again. With respect to the influence which the judgments of the inferior courts ought to have upon the House of Lords, it has been suggested that a distinction may be made between cases arising merely on the common law, and cases which depend on the construction of a statute. A series of decisions in the courts are the best evidence of a common law: and the lords cannot find any adequate authority to oppose to these decisions in justification of their reversal: but upon the construction of a statute, where there is no reason to suspect any variation from the original, they seem as fully competent to determine a question, after any number of decisions in the courts below, as after the first; and the length of the series can operate no farther than as an object of general convenience. See 2 Comm. c. 18. and the note there; and title Simony.

On the general question of the jurisdiction of the Lord's House of Parliament; see Lord Hale's treatise on that subject, and Mr. Hargrave's learned preface prefixed. Mr. Hargrave, after recounting the various contests between the two houses of parliament on this subject, states the result in the following terms.

From the year 1717 there has been an absolute cessation of hostility between the lords and commons on the right of judicature in parliament. The lords have ceased to encourage interference with the judicature of the commons over the rights of election—ceased to meddle with original jurisdiction—ceased to countenance attempts to introduce original causes under the disguise of being appellants—ceased to extend their exercise of appellate jurisdiction beyond examining judgments at law under writs of error, and decrees of Courts of Equity upon petition of appeal—ceased to meddle with appeals from sentences of Ecclesiastical Courts, and other courts of special jurisdiction—ceased to advance claims of universal jurisdiction, both original and appellate—ceased to state themselves as being the virtual, absorbing, and inherent representatives of the king and commons in matter of judicature, and in effect for that purpose the full and whole parliament; and as such the supreme and last resort. On the other hand, the commons have ceased to interrupt the exercise of appellate jurisdiction by the lords over decrees of Courts of Equity—nay, they have even forbore to revive considering the rights of the lords to fine the commons of England for breach of privilege, and to imprison them on that account beyond the sitting of parliament; notwithstanding the objections heretofore so strongly urged against but not these practices; and notwithstanding the laudible abstinence of the commons themselves from attempting to vindicate the breach of their own privileges, otherwise than by an imprisonment, which, if not sooner determined by their own act, of course ceases when parliament is either dissolved or prorogued. Thus at length the lords have so long acquiesced in the condemnation of their exercise of original jurisdiction, that it seems as if they had never claimed it: and the commons have so long acquiesced in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction by the lords, that it now seems as if it had never been disputed; and however irregular that appellate judicature might be in its origin, it has obtained sanction from long practice.

By the writ of error as now in use, and which appears to have continued, in the same form, from at least the year 1624, after mentioning the king's being informed of error, the king commands the record and process to be sent into parliament "that inspecting the record and process aforesaid, we may cause further to be done thereupon by the assent of the lords spiritual and temporal, in the same parliament assembled, for amending the said error, as of right, and according to the law and custom of England shall be meet to be done."

On the whole it is probable that the great trust of becoming the Court of Judicature in the last appeal, could now were more properly reposed than, as by law it is, in the House of Peers. It is not that the lords are presumed by the constitution to be better acquainted with the law than the judges, whose decisions they are called upon to review: on the contrary, the constitution makes the judges the dignified attendants on the peers for the purpose of informing them in the law. But, when questions have been thoroughly discussed before tribunals, in which the best talents, the longest experience, and the soundest knowledge are allowed to preside, it is felt that for settling the law definitively authority is wanted, more than new lights. In difficult cases the lords usually pronounce such judgments as the twelve judges in fact dictate to them. Yet every one must be sensible that judgments so pronounced are far more weighty as the decree of that august tribunal, than as the mere decision of twelve judges overruling, or even affirming, a previous judgment of other judges. See 1 Comm. 12. and Coleridge's note there.

VI. (A.) As the House of Lords seem to be politically constituted for the support of the rights of the crown; so the province of the House of Commons is to stand for the preservation of the people's liberties. The commons, in making and repealing laws, have equal power with the lords; and for laying taxes on the subject, the bill is to begin in the House of Commons. And as formerly the laying and levying of new taxes have caused rebellions and commotions, this has occasioned, (particularly anno 9 L. 3.) when a motion has been made for a subsidy of a new kind, that the commons have desired a conference with those of their several counties and places, whom they have represented, before they have treated of any such matters. 4 Inst. 34.

It is the ancient indisputable privilege and right of the House of Commons, that all grants of subsidies or parliamentary aids, do begin in their house, and are first bestowed by them; although their grants are not effectual, to all intents and purposes, until they have the assent of the other two branches of the legislature. 4 Inst. 29. The general reason given, for this exclusive privilege of the House of Commons, is, that the supplies are raised upon the body of the people, and therefore it is proper that they alone should have the right of taxing themselves. This reason would be answerable if the commons taxed none but themselves; but it is notorious, that a very large share of property is in the possession of the House of Lords; that this property is equally taxable and taxed as that of the commons; and therefore the commons not being the sole persons taxed, this cannot be the reason of their having the sole right of raising and modelling the supply. The true reason, arising from the spirit of our constitution, seems to be this; the lords being a permanent hereditary body, created at pleasure by the king, are supposed more liable to be influenced by the crown, and when once influenced, to continue so, than the commons, who are a temporary elective body, freely chosen by the people; it would therefore be extremely dangerous to give the lords any power of framing new taxes for the subject; it is sufficient that they have a power of assenting, if they think the commons too lavish or improvident in their grants. But, so reasonably jealous are the commons of this valuable privilege, that herein they will not suffer the other house to exert any power, except that of rejecting. They will not permit the least alteration or amendment to be made by the lords to the mode of taxing the people by a money bill; under which appellation are included all bills by which money is directed to be raised upon the subject, for any purpose, or in any shape whatsoever; for the exigencies of government, and collected from such rates, and the like. This rule is even extended to all taxes for canals, paving, provision for the poor, and to every tax in which tolls, rates, or duties are ordered to be collected, and also to all bills in which pecuniary penalties and fines are imposed for offences. 3 Hatts. 110. But perhaps it is carried beyond its original spirit and intent, when the money raised is not granted to the crown. Yet Sir Matthew Hale mentions one case, founded on the practice of parliament in the reign of Henry VI. wherein he thinks the lords may alter a money bill; and that is, if the commons grant a tax, as that of tonnage and poundage, for four years; and the lords alter it to a less time, as for two years; here, he says, the bill need not be sent back to the commons for their concurrence, but may receive the royal assent without farther ceremony; for the alteration of the lords is consistent with the grant of the commons. See Hale on Parliaments, 65, 66; Year-Book, 33 Hen. 6. 17. But such an experiment will hardly be repeated by the lords, under the present improved idea of the privilege of the House of Commons; and, in any case where a money bill is remanded to the commons, all amendments in the mode of taxation are sure to be rejected. And, even if the commons desire to agree with the amendment, the form is to reject the bill so amended by the lords, and to bring in a new bill containing those amendments, solely for the purpose of preserving the privileges of the commons. See post, VII. Upon the application of this rule, there have been many warm contests between the lords and commons, in which the latter seem always to have prevailed. See many conferences collected by Mr. Hatsell, in his appendix to the third volume, and particularly in appendix D.; the conference of 20th and 22nd April, 1671: the general question is debated with infinite ability on both sides, but particularly on the part of the commons, in an argument, drawn up by Sir Henenge Finch, then attorney general; and who there answers the case alluded to by Hale from the Year-Book.

The following observations upon the power claimed by the House of Commons with respect to money bills, are (with some slight alteration in phraseology) from Hallam's Constitutional History of England, from Henry VII. to George II. c. 13.

In our earliest parliamentary records the lords and commons summoned, in a great measure, for the sake of relieving the king's necessities, appear to have made their several grants of supply without a mutual communication, and the latter generally in a higher proportion than the former. These were not in the form of laws, nor did they obtain any formal assent from the king to whom they were tendered in written indentures, entered afterwards on the roll of parliament. The latest instance of such distinct grants from the two houses, so far as can be judged from the rolls, is in the 18th of Edw. III. Parl. Hist. 2. 148, 149. But in the 22nd year of that reign, the commons alone granted three fifteenths of their goods in such a manner, as to show beyond a doubt, that the tax was to be levied solely upon themselves. Parl. Hist. 2. 200.

After this time the lords and commons are jointly recited in the rolls to have granted them sometimes, as it is expressed upon deliberation had together. In one case it is said that the lords with one assent, and afterwards the commons, granted a subsidy on exported wool. Parl. Hist. 2. 300.

A change of language is observable in the reign of Richard II. when the commons are recited to grant, with the assent of the lords; and this seems to indicate not only that in practice the vote used to originate with the commons, but that their proportion of the tax being far greater than that of the lords, especially in the usual imposition on wool and skins, which ostensibly fell on the exporting merchants, the grant was to be deemed mainly theirs, subject only to the assent of the lords. This is, however, so explicitly asserted in a passage on the roll of 9 Henry IV. without any apparent denial, that it cannot be called in question.

The language of the rolls continues to be the same in the following reigns; the commons have the granting, the lords the consenting power. It is even said by the Court of K. B. in a year-book of Edw. IV. that a grant of money by the commons would be binding without the consent of the lords, meaning of course as to commoners only, though the position seems questionable even with that limitation. It might be almost suspected by considering this remarkably exclusive privilege, of originating grants of money to the crown, as well as by the language of some passages in the rolls of parliament relating to them, that no part of the direct taxes (the tenths or fifteenths of goods), were assessed upon the lords temporal or spiritual, except where they are positively mentioned, as is frequently the case; but this may be an unfounded surmise, or at least only applicable to the earlier period of our parliamentary records, not having, as it appears, been asserted by any who have heretofore turned their attention to the antiquities of our constitution.

These grants continued to be made as before, by the consent indeed of the two houses of parliament, but not as legislative enactments—most of the few instances where they appear among the statutes, are where some condition is annexed, or some relief of grievances so interwoven with them, that they may make part of a new law. See 14 Edw. 3. st. 1. c. 21. containing a proviso of the lords not to assent in future to any charge beyond the old custom, without assent of the commons in full parliament. Stat. 2. of the same year, the king promises to lay on no charge but by assent of the lords and commons. See also 18 Edw. 3. st. 2. c. 1. The commons grant two fifteenths of the commonalty, and two tenths of the cities and boroughs, with a remarkable precedent of appropriation. In two or three instances are found grants of tenths and fifteenths in the statutes, without any other matter. See 14 Edw. 3. st. 1. c. 20; 27 Edw. 3. st. 1. c. 4.

In the reign of Henry VII. the grants are occasionally inserted among the statutes, but still without any enacting words. See 7 Hen. 7. c. 11; 12 Hen. 7. c. 12. It is to be remarked that the regular form of separate acts did not commence till after 4 Henry VII.

In the reign of Henry VIII. the form is rather more legislative, and the grants are said to be enacted by the authority of parliament, though the king's name is not mentioned (except in 5 Hen. 8. c. 17.) till about the conclusion of his reign, after which a sense of the necessity of expressing his legislative authority seems to have led to its introduction in some part or other of the bill. See 37 Hen. 8. c. 25. The lords and commons are sometimes both said to grant, but more frequently the commons with the assent of the lords, as continued to be the case through the reigns of Elizabeth and James I. In the first parliament of Charles I. the commons began to insert the name of the lords in the preamble of bills of supply, reciting the grant as if wholly their own; but in the enacting words adopted the customary form of statutes: this, though once remonstrated against by the Upper House, has continued ever since to be the practice.

The originating power as to taxation was thus indubitably placed in the House of Commons; nor did any controversy arise on that ground. But they maintained also that the lords could not make any amendment whatever in bills sent up to them, for imposing directly or indirectly a charge upon the people. There seems no proof that any difference between the two houses on this score had arisen before the Restoration; and in the convention parliament the lords made several alterations in undoubted money bills, to which the commons did not object. But in 1661 the lords having sent down a bill for paving the streets of Westminster, to which they desired the concurrence of the commons; the latter on reading the bill a first time "observing that it went to lay a charge upon the people, and conceiving that it was a privilege inherent in the Commons' House, that bills of that nature should first be considered there," laid it aside, and caused another to be brought in. Com. J. 24-29 July, Lords' J. 30 July, 1661. When this bill was sent up to the lords they inserted a clause to which the commons disagreed, as contrary to their privileges; because the people cannot have any tax imposed upon them, but originally by the House of Commons. The lords resolved this assertion of the commons to be against the inherent privileges of the House of Peers, and mentioned one precedent of a similar bill in the reign of Mary, and two in that of Elizabeth, which had begun with them. The bill in question was defeated by the unwillingness of either party to recede; but for a few years after, though the point in question was still agitated, instances occur where the commons suffered amendments, and what were now considered as money bills to pass, and others where the lords receded from such amendments, rather than defeat the proposed measure. In April 1671 however, the lords having reduced the amount of an imposition on sugar, it was resolved by the commons, that "in all aids given to the king by the commons, the rate or tax ought not to be altered by the lords." This brought on several conferences between the houses, wherein the limits of the exclusive privilege claimed by the commons were discussed with considerable ability; (and less zeal than in certain disputes concerning judicature;) but (in the opinion of the writer of the History) with a decided advantage, as to precedent and constitutional authority, on the side of the peers. See Lords & Commons' Journals, Ap. 17—22. 1679; Parl. Hist. iv. 480; and Hatsell's Precedents, 109, 368, 409, and see Lord Anglessea's "Case stated of the Jurisdiction of the House of Lords in point of Impositions (1656), Year-Book, 33 H. 6. 17, that the lords might reduce taxes at least as to the period of their duration."

If the commons, as in early times, had merely granted their own money, it would be reasonable that the house should have, as it claimed, "a fundamental right as to the matter, the measure, and the time." But that the peers, subject to the same burdens as the rest of the community, and possessing no trifling proportion of the general wealth, should have no other alternative than to refuse the necessary supplies of the crown, or to bear their exact proportion with all qualifications and circumstances attending the grant presented or prescribed to them unalterably by the other house, appears an anomaly which could hardly rest on any other ground of defence than such a series of precedents as constitute a constitutional usage; while in fact it could be made out that such a pretension was ever advanced by the commons before that present parliament. In the short parliament of 1840, the lords having sent down a message requesting the other house to give precedence on a certain business to matter of supply, it had been highly resented as an infringement of their privilege, and Mr. Pym was appointed to represent their complaint at a conference. He even then, in the fervour of that critical period, the bold advocate of popular privileges who could have been selected, was content to assert that the matter of subsidy and supply ought to begin in the House of Commons.

There seems to be still less pretext for the great extension given by the commons to their acknowledged privilege of originating bills of supply. The principle was well admitted to that earlier period, when security against misgovernment could only be obtained by the vigilant jealousy and uncompromising firmness of the commons. They came to the grant of subsidy with real or feigned reluctance, as the stated price of redress of grievances. They considered the lords, generally speaking, as too intimately united with the king's ordinary council, which indeed sat with them, and had perhaps, as late as Edward III. a deliberative voice. They knew the influence or intimidating ascendancy of the peers over many of their own members. It may in fact be doubted whether the lower house shook off, absolutely and permanently, all sense of subordination, or at least dependence, to the upper till about the close of the reign of Elizabeth. But in applying the wise and ancient maxim, that the commons alone can empower the king to levy the people's money, to a private bill for lighting and cleansing a certain town, or cutting dykes in a fen, or to any local or limited assessment for local benefits, as to which the crown has no manner of interest, nor any thing to do with the collection; there may be thought to be more disposition shown to make encroachments, than to guard against those of others. Soon after the Revolution the commons began to introduce a still more extraordinary construction of their privilege, not receiving from the House of Lords any bill imposing a pecuniary penalty on offenders, nor permitting them to alter the application of such as had been imposed by the commons. The principles laid down on this subject, by an authority now much deferred to, are—1. That in bills of supply the lords can make no alteration, but to correct verbal mistakes. 2. That in bills, not of absolute supply, yet imposing burdens, as turnpike acts, &c. the lords cannot alter the quantum of the toll, or the persons to manage it, &c.; but in the other clauses they may make amendments. 3. That where a charge may indirectly be thrown on the people by a bill, the commons object to the lords making amendments. 4. That the lords cannot insert pecuniary penalties in a bill, or alter those inserted by the commons. Hatsell's Precedents, vol. iii. 137. Contests of this nature have now for a long time been avoided by a practice which may be called evasion: where a money bill, or what the House of Commons deem such, has been amended by the lords; the commons, to satisfy their dignity, move on it the bill, but immediately bring in another, with the amendments inserted. The lords have never acknowledged any privilege in the commons on this question, beyond that of originating bills of supply.

VI. (B.) In the election of knights, citizens, and burgesses, to represent the counties, cities, and boroughs of the kingdom, consists the exercise of the democratical part of the British constitution: the only true sovereignty of the people being shown in their choice of their representatives. This exercise is, therefore, a matter of such high importance, to the preservation of rational freedom, that the laws have very carefully guarded against any usurpation or abuse of this power by many salutary provisions; which shall be here considered according to the division of the subject made at the beginning of this article.

The true reason of requiring any qualification, with regard to property in voters, is, to exclude such persons as are in so disadvantageous a situation, that they are esteemed to have no will of their own. If these persons had votes, they would be tempted to dispose of them under some undue influence or other. This would give a great, an artful, or wealthy man a larger share in elections than is consistent with general liberty. If it were probable that every man would give his vote freely, and without influence of any kind, then, upon the true theory and genuine principles of liberty, every member of the community, however poor, should have a share in electing those delegates to whose charge is committed the disposal of his property, his liberty, his life. But since that can hardly be expected in persons of indigent fortunes, or such as are under the immediate dominion of others, popular states have been obliged to establish certain qualifications, whereby some who are suspected to have no will of their own, are excluded from voting; in order to set free individuals, whose wills may be supposed independent, more thoroughly upon a level with each other. 1 Comm. c. p. 171.

The constitution of suffrages is framed upon the wisest principle; steering between the two extremes of too much regard to property on the one hand, or to mere numbers on the other, only such persons are entirely excluded from the electors as can have no will of their own: there is still, a free agent to be found who is not, (or may not if reason is attended to) a slave in some place or other of the kingdom. Nor is comparative wealth or property entirely disregarded in elections; for though the richest man has only one vote at one place, yet if his property be at different places, he has probably a right to vote at more places than one, and therefore has many representatives. This, says Blackstone, is the spirit of our constitution; not that it is, in fact, quite so perfect as described; for he candidly adds, if any alteration might be wished or suggested in the present frame of parliaments, it should be in favour of a more complete representation of the people. 1 Comm. c. 2. p. 171.

The amendment in the elective franchise, suggested by Blackstone, giving to the people a more complete representation in the House of Commons, has at length been accomplished by the Reform Act (2 W. 4. c. 45.), a measure wrung from a reluctant House of Lords by the determination of the nation; and for which, next to its own exertions, it is indebted to Lord Grey and the other members of his ministry.

1. By the Reform Act the number of county members is much increased. By § 12. Yorkshire is to send six members, two for each Riding. § 13. Lincolnshire sends four members, two for the parts of Lindsey, and two for the parts of Kesteven and Holland. By § 14. the following counties are divided into two districts, each of which sends two members, viz., Cheshire, Cornwall, Cumberland, Derbyshire, Devonshire, Durham, Essex, Gloucestershire, Kent, Hants, Lancashire, Leicestershire, Norfolk, Northumberland, Nottingham, Shropshire, Somersetshire, Staffordshire, Suffolk, Surrey, Sussex, Warwickshire, Wiltshire, Worcestershire. By § 15. the following counties shall send two members instead of one, Carmarthen, Denbigh, Glamorgan—and the following counties shall send three members instead of two, viz., Berkshire, Buckinghamshire, Cambridgeshire, Dorsetshire, Herefordshire, Hertfordshire, Oxfordshire. By § 16. the Isle of Wight returns one knight of the shire. By § 17. various towns which are counties in themselves are, for the purpose of elections, included in the adjoining counties, viz., Carmarthen in Carmarthenshire; Canterbury in Kent; Chester in Cheshire; Coventry in Warwickshire; Gloucester in Gloucestershire; Kingston-upon-Hull into the East Riding of Yorkshire; Litch in the parts of Lindsey, in Lincolnshire; London in Middlesex; Newcastle-upon-Tyne in Northumberland; Poole in Dorsetshire; Worcester in Worcestershire; York and the Ainsty in the North Riding of Yorkshire; Southampton in Hampshire.

Previous to the Reform Act the elective franchise for counties was confined to freeholders.

By the 8 H. 6. c. 7; 10 H. 6. c. 2; (amended by stat. 14 Geo. 3. c. 58, which made the residence of the electors and the elected in their respective counties, cities, and boroughs no longer necessary;) the knights of the shire should be chosen by people, whereof every man should have freehold, to the value of 40s. by the year within the county; which, by subsequent statutes, was to be clear of all charges, and deductions, except parliamentary and parochial taxes.

By the Reform Act the electors for counties now consist of five classes, viz. freeholders, copyholders, and tenants in ancient demesne, leaseholders and tenants or occupiers of land.

1. Freeholders.—No alteration is made with respect to freeholders of inheritance, who are still entitled to vote when of the value of 40s. a year above all charges. 8 Hen. 6. c. 7; 18 Geo. 2. c. 18, § 1.

But as regards freeholders for life the franchise is narrowed, for by § 18. no freeholder for life (except when he is in actual or bonâ fide occupation, or where the lands or tenements come to him by marriage, marriage-settlement, devise, or promotion to a benefice or office,) shall have a right of voting unless the property be worth 10l. per annum free from all rents and charges, which words in the act do not include any public or parliamentary tax, or any church rate, county rate, or parochial rate. § 21. This provision however is prospective, as the rights of existing freeholders for life are preserved.

Formerly in cities and towns that were counties of themselves freeholders had no vote; but, as already mentioned, by § 17. such cities and towns are included in the adjoining counties. See ante.

Where however a freeholder is in the occupation of property which would give him a vote for a city or borough, as, for instance, a house worth 10*l*. a year, such property will not confer a right to vote for the county, even although he should not register himself for such city, &c. § 24.

And the same is declared, in the following section, of any copyholder or other elector whose property gives him a vote for a city or borough.

2. Copyholders and tenants in ancient demesne.—Every male person of full age, and not subject to any legal incapacity, who shall be seised at law or in equity of lands or tenements of copyhold, or any other tenure, except freehold for life, or any larger estate of not less than 10*l*. clear yearly value, are entitled to vote for knights of the shire. § 19.

3. Leaseholders.—A right of voting for county members is also given to leaseholders entitled for any term originally created for at least sixty years, (whether determinable on lives or not,) where the lands are worth 10*l*. a year, or for any term originally created for twenty years, (whether determinable on lives or not,) of the yearly value of 50*l*. A sub-lessee or an assignee of a sub-lessee of terms of sixty or twenty years must be in actual occupation of the premises to entitle him to vote.

4. Tenants or occupiers.—Persons occupying lands for which they are liable to a bond fide rent of 50*l*. a year are likewise invested with the elective franchise for counties.

The act imposes on all persons the necessity of registering their votes. County electors, with the exception of leaseholders and tenants or occupiers, must have been in possession of the property for which they claim to vote six calendar months, and leaseholders, &c. twelve calendar months before the last day of July in the year in which they seek to be registered. There is however an exception with respect to both classes, in case the property comes to them within the six or twelve months by descent, succession, marriage, marriage-settlement, devise, or promotion to any office or benefice.

County voters formerly must have been assessed to the land tax, but this by § 22. is no longer necessary in any case.

The other less important qualifications of the electors for counties in England and Wales may be collected from the following statutes, viz. 7 & 8 Will. 3. c. 25; 10 Ann. c. 23; 2 Geo. 2. c. 24; 18 Geo. 2. c. 18; 19 Geo. 2. c. 28; 31 Geo. 2. c. 14; 3 Geo. 3. c. 24; 20 Geo. 3. c. 17; and 30 Geo. 3. c. 35. These statutes direct—

That no person under twenty-one years of age shall be capable of voting for any member. This extends to all sorts of members, as well for boroughs as counties, as does also the next; viz.—

That no person convicted of perjury, or subornation of perjury, or of having asked or received any bribe, shall be capable of voting at any election. 2 Geo. 2. c. 24. § 6, 7.

That no person shall vote in right of any freehold, granted to him fraudulently, to qualify him to vote. Fraudulent grants are such as contain an agreement to re-convey, or to defeat the estate granted; which agreements are made void, and the estate is absolutely vested in the person to whom it is so granted. And every person who shall prepare or execute such conveyance, or who shall give his vote under it, shall forfeit 40*l*. 10 Ann. c. 23. § 1.

That no person shall vote in respect of an annuity or rent-charge, unless registered with the clerk of the peace twelve calendar months before. Such annuity or rent-charge to be issuing out of a freehold estate; and if it accrues or devolves, by operation of law, within a year before the election, a certificate of it to be entered with the clerk of the peace before the first day of the election. 3 Geo. 3. c. 24; Heyw. 145.

But by 51 Geo. 3. c. 99, to entitle any person to vote in respect of land-tax purchased under the act for redemption of that tax (by which act such purchasers are declared to be possessed of the same as fee-farm rents), no memorial of the contract need be registered, as in the case of other fee-farm rents.

That in mortgaged or trust estates, the person in possession, under the above-mentioned restrictions, shall have the vote. See also 2 Will. 4. c. 45. § 23.

That only one person shall be admitted to vote for any one house or tenement; to prevent the splitting of freeholds, and multiplying votes for election purposes. But this does not extend to cases which arise from operation of law, as devises, descents, &c. As if an estate should descend to any number of females, the husband of each would have a right to vote, if his interest amounted to 40*s*. a year.

By 53 Geo. 3. c. 49, it is declared that all devises by will made in order to split or multiply votes, shall be considered as conveyances within the meaning of the act 7 & 8 Will. 3. c. 25. But for quieting possession this provision is not extended to devises by testators having died twenty years before the act.

See post, 2. as to the right of joint occupiers of houses to vote in the election of members for boroughs under the Reform Act.

By the 20 Geo. 3. c. 17. § 12, a husband may vote for his wife's right of dower, without an actual assignment of it by metes and bounds.

By 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 87, persons employed as counsellor, agent, attorney, poll-clerk, &c. for any candidate for peer or reward, within six days before the election, or within fourteen days after, shall be incapable of voting, and his vote, if given, shall be void.

Individuals holding places in the excise or customs, or in the post-office, or engaged in the collection of the stamp duties, &c. are by statute incapacitated from voting.

The lists of electors for both counties and boroughs are revised annually by barristers appointed for that purpose, who hear the objections urged against them.

With respect to the registration of county voters the overseers of parishes are every year to make out an alphabetical list of persons entitled to vote in respect of property within their parishes. In order to obtain the means of making out such lists correctly they are at a stated time in each year to give a public notice requiring persons claiming to vote to notify their claims by a certain day. Where, however, a person has once been registered, he need not make a fresh claim. The lists thus made out, and which are to contain the christian and surname and abode of every claimant, with the nature of his qualification, &c. are, after having been published the two next Sundays after the last day of July in each year on the doors of the churches and chapels within the parish, to be delivered to the high constable of the hundred or district in which the parish is situate, by whom they are to be transmitted to the clerk of the peace. With regard to objections to votes, the overseers may mark any as doubtful, which will compel the party to prove their qualification before the revising barrister. Persons who are in the lists of electors, or who claim to be inserted therein for the current year, may object, by sending before the 25th of August in every year a notice in writing to the overseers, as well as to the individual objected to. The overseers are to make out lists of parties objected to, which are to be affixed for the two Sundays preceding the 15th of September on the doors of the churches and chapels within their parish. A written statement of the number of persons objected to, either by the overseers or other parties, is also to be delivered by the former to the high constable, and by him to the clerk of the peace, who is to make an abstract of the number of persons objected to in each parish, and transmit it to the revising barrister. The barristers are annually to be appointed to revise the lists, who are to make a circuit of the county, &c. for which they are named, between the 15th of September and the 25th of October in every year, and to give three days' notice by advertisement, &c. of the times and places where they intend to hold their courts.

The barrister's court is to be an open court, but he is not to be attended by counsel. The clerk of the peace is to produce the lists of voters, and overseers are to attend and deliver to the barrister copies of the lists of persons objected to in each parish, and to furnish him on oath with all the information in their power, to enable him to revise the lists. And for the like purpose collectors and officers having the custody of tax assessments and rate books are, on being required, to produce them before him.

The barrister is to retain on the lists all names to which no objection is made by the overseers or others, as well as the names of persons objected to by others than overseers, who do not appear by themselves or agents to support their objections.

Where a person objected to fails to prove he was entitled to be inserted in the list on the last day of July preceding, his name is to be expunged.

The barrister has power to rectify mistakes and supply omissions in the lists, and may insert the names of claimants omitted by overseers, on proof of due notice having been given of their claims, and that they possessed the necessary qualification.

The barrister, having decided the claims and objections, is to open court to write his initials against all names he has struck out or inserted, and against all alterations he has made; and having settled the lists of voters, he is to sign his name to every page of them.

The lists, when settled, are to be transmitted to the clerk of the peace, and kept by him among the records of the session, while a copy of them is to be made into a book which is to be delivered to the sheriff or under-sheriff, and is to be the register of the electors at any election subsequent to the last day of October, against which it is to be completed, and the first of November in the following year.

By the Scotch Reform Act, 2 & 3 Will. 4. c. 65, the members for Scotland are increased to fifty-three, whereof thirty are county members; viz. twenty-seven for the counties following, each returning one member, viz. Aberdeen, Argyle, Arran, Bute, Berwick, Caithness, Dumbarton, Dumfries, Edinburgh, Fife, Forfar, Haddington, Inverness, Kincardine, Kirkcubright, Linlithgow, Orkney and Shetland, Perth, Renfrew, Roxburgh, Selkirk, Stirling, Sutherland, Wigton; and three for the following counties,—viz. Elgin and Nairn one jointly, Ross and Cromarty one jointly, Caithness and Kinross one jointly.

They are elected by the old enrolled freeholders, who are to retain their votes for their lives; the owners of heritable property of the yearly value of 10*l.*; by tenants holding under leases for not less than fifty-seven years, at the option of the landlord, or for their lifetimes, where their interest is of the yearly value of 10*l.*, or for not less than nineteen years where the value is 50*l.* a year; or where the tenants, whatever the rent may be, have paid a grassum or consideration of 5*l.*, 6*l.*, 7*l.*, 8*l.*, 9*l.*

The electors are required to register their votes as in England. See also 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 88.

The Irish Reform Act, 2 Will. 4. c. 88, has made no addition to the county members of that country, who consist now, as before, of sixty-four, being two for each county. They are elected by freeholders of 10*l.* a year (the forty-shilling freeholders having been disfranchised, and the qualification raised to the above amount by the 10 Geo. 4. c. 8.); by copyholders of 10*l.* a year; and by leaseholders of terms not less than sixty years, whether determinable on lives or not, of the yearly value of 10*l.*; or for fourteen years, whether determinable on lives or not, of the yearly value of 20*l.*; or for twenty years, having a beneficial interest of the clear yearly value of 10*l.* 2 Will. 4. c. 88 § 1, 2.

All voters are to be registered. § 13.

2. The electors of citizens and burgesses are supposed to be the mercantile part or trading interest of the kingdom. But as trade is of a fluctuating nature, and seldom long fixed in a place, it was formerly left to the crown to summon, pro re nata, (but this has been questioned,) the most flourishing towns to send representatives to parliament. So that as towns increased in trade, and grew populous, they were admitted to a share in the legislature. But the deserted boroughs continued to be summoned as well as those to whom their trade and inhabitants were transferred; except a few, which petitioned to be eased of the expense, then usual, of maintaining their members; 4*s.* a day being allowed for a knight of the shire, and 2*s.* for a citizen or burgess; which was the rate of wages established in the reign of Edward III. 4 Inst. 16.

The universities were in general not empowered to send burgesses to parliament; though once, in 28 Edw. 1. when a parliament was summoned to consider the king's right to Scotland, there were issued writs which required the university of Oxford to send up four or five, and that of Cambridge two or three, of their most discreet and learned lawyers for that purpose. Prynne, Parl. Writs, i. 345. But it was King James I. who indulged them with the permanent privilege to send constantly two of their own body to serve for those students who, though useful members of the community, were neither concerned in the landed nor the trading interest; and to protect in the legislature the rights of the republic of letters. 1 Comm. c. 2. p. 174.

Mr. Christian, in his note on the above passage, quotes Prynne, to show that the wages formerly given to members of parliament had no other origin than that principle of natural equity and justice, qui sentit commodum sentire debet et onus. Mr. Christian suggests, that representation, at the first, was nothing more than the attendance of part of a number who were all individually bound to attend, and where the attendance of the rest was dispensed with; and as all were under the same obligation to render this service, and it was left to themselves to determine which of them should undertake it, it became equitable that all should contribute to the expense and inconvenience incurred. Prynne says, the first writs de expensis militum, &c. are coeval with our kings' first writs of summons to elect and send knights, citizens, and burgesses to parliament, viz. anno 49 Hen. 3; before which there are no memorials of either of those writs. These expenses were reduced to the certainty abovementioned, of 2*s.* and 4*s.* per day, in the 16th of Edward II., though there are some instances where a less sum was allowed; and even one in 3 Edw. 4. 1463, where Sir John Strange, the member for Dunwich, agreed to take a cade and half a barrel of herrings as a composition for his wages. Glanv. Rep. Pref. p. 23.

Andrew Marvell, member for Hull, in the parliament after the Restoration, was, it is said, the last member who received these wages; and they were formerly of so much consequence that many boroughs petitioned to be excused from sending members to parliament, on account of the expense. Prynne on 4 Inst. 32. And from 33 Edw. 3. uniformly through the five succeeding reigns, the sheriff of Lancashire returned that there were no cities or boroughs in his county that ought or were used, or could, on account of their poverty, send any citizens or burgesses to parliament. 1 Comm. c. 174, in n.

By reason of these exemptions, and new creations by royal charter, which commenced in the reign of Edward IV., who in the 17th year of his reign granted to the borough of Wenlock the right of sending one burgess to parliament, (Sim. 97.) the number of the members of the House of Commons perpetually varied. Charles II., in the 29th year of his reign, granted by his charter to Newark the privilege of sending representatives to parliament; and this was the last time that this prerogative of the crown was exercised. 1 Dougl. El. 69. Since the beginning of the reign of Henry VIII. down to the union with Ireland, the number of the representatives of the Commons has been more than doubled; for in his first parliament the house consisted only of 298 members; 360 were subsequently added by acts of parliament, or by the king's charter, either creating new or reviving old boroughs. Under the provision of the 27 Hen. 8. c. 26. § 29. and 34 & 35 Hen. 8. c. 26. § 27. there were added twenty-four for Wales; twelve precisely by the first act for the counties, and twelve under the provision of the latter act for the boroughs. Two for the county and two for the city of Chester were added by 34 & 35 Hen. 8. c. 13; two for the county and two for the city of Durham by 25 Car. 2. c. 9; forty-five for Scotland, by the acts of union with that kingdom; and one hundred for Ireland, by the acts of union with that kingdom; and the remainder by charter.

By the Reform Act an extensive alteration has been made in the borough representation. Fifty-six boroughs have been most justly deprived of the right of sending members. (See Schedule A.) Thirty other boroughs have had one of their two members taken away. (See Schedule B.) Twenty-two new boroughs have been created with the right of sending two members; viz. Manchester, Birmingham, Leeds, Greenwich, Sheffield, Sunderland, Devonport, Wolverhampton, the Tower Hamlets, Finsbury, Mary-le-bone, Lambeth, Bolton, Bradford, Blackburn, Brighton, Halifax, Macclesfield, Oldham, Stockport, Stoke-upon-Trent, Stroud. Twenty other new boroughs have been invested with the right of sending one member; viz. Ashton-under-Line, Bury (Lancashire), Chatham, Cheltenham, Dudley, Frome, Gateshead, Huddersfield, Kidderminster, Kendal, Rochdale, Salford, South Shields, Tynemouth, Wakefield, Walsall, Warrington, Whitby, Whitehaven, Merthyr Tydvil. By § 6. Weymouth and Melcombe Regis are to send two members only instead of four. By § 10. the towns of Swansea, Loughor, Neath, Aberavon, and Kenfig, are to form one borough, returning one member.

The electors for cities and boroughs now consist partly of the old voters, some of whose rights are preserved to them in perpetuity, and others for a limited time, and partly of a new class of householders created by the Reform Act.

By § 31. in cities or towns, being counties of themselves, all freeholders and burgage tenants who possessed the right of voting still retain it, subject to the condition of registration.

The places to which this section applies are Bristol, Exeter, Haverfordwest, Lichfield, Norwich, and Nottingham.

Freeholders for lives, however, are disqualified unless in the actual occupation of the property giving the right to vote, or unless it shall come to them by marriage-settlement, devise, or promotion to some benefice or office; or it is worth 10*l.* a year above all rents and charges. An exception is made of all existing freeholders for life, who have, or but for the act might acquire, (as, for instance, minors coming of age,) a right to vote for such cities or towns. § 18.

All burgesses or freemen of cities or boroughs not included in Schedule A., and the freemen and liverymen of London, have their right of voting preserved to them if they are duly registered, and previous to such registration have resided six calendar months within such cities or boroughs, or within seven miles from the place where the poll for the same has heretofore been taken. There is an exception of persons becoming burgesses or freemen after the 1st of March, 1831, otherwise than by birth or servitude; and those claiming by birth must derive their right from persons admitted or entitled to be admitted burgesses or freemen previous to that day, or becoming so since that time in respect of servitude. § 32.

By § 33. the right of voting for any city or borough by virtue of any other qualification than as burgesses or freemen, or as freeholders in the case of cities being counties of themselves, is continued to every person having such right so long as he shall be qualified as an elector according to the usages of such city or borough, provided he is duly registered, and shall have resided six calendar months in or within seven miles of such city, &c. previous to the last day of July in the year when he is so registered. The right, however, of any individual is to cease if his name be omitted for two successive years from the register, unless it be in consequence of receiving parochial relief, or of absence on his majesty's service.

The persons whose rights are reserved by the above section are inhabitants paying scot and lot, who are termed potwallopers, and freeholders and burgage tenants in cities and boroughs not being counties of themselves; but by § 33 such freeholders and burgage tenants are not entitled to vote in respect of property acquired subsequently to the 1st of March, 1831, unless it come to them between that day and the passing of the act, (7th June, 1832,) by descent, succession, marriage, marriage-settlement, devise, or promotion to a benefice or office.

The 34th section preserves to all persons the right to vote for New Shoreham, Cricklade, Aylesbury, or East Retford, in respect of freeholds in the adjacent hundred, if duly registered, and if previous to such registration they have resided six calendar months in the borough for which they claim to vote, as defined by the fifth section of the act, or within seven miles from any part thereof.

The most important class of electors for boroughs are those created by the 27th section of the act, which enacts that in every city or borough returning members to parliament, every male of full age, and not subject to legal incapacity, who shall occupy within such city, &c., or within any place sharing in the election for such city, &c. as owner or tenant of any house, &c., or other building, either separately or jointly with land, within such city, &c., occupied therein as owner or as tenant under the same landlord, of the clear yearly value of 10*l.*, shall, if duly registered, be entitled to vote for such city, &c. No person can be registered unless he has occupied such premises for twelve calendar months previous to the last day of July in any year, or unless he has paid on or before the 20th of July in such year all poor-rates and assessed taxes due previous to the preceding 6th of April. Neither can he be registered unless he has resided for six calendar months, previous to the last day of July in the year in which he is registered, within the city, &c. or within seven miles of some part thereof.

By § 28. the premises occupied during the twelve months previous to registration need not be the same premises if they are only occupied in immediate succession, and all poor-rates and assessed taxes due in respect thereof prior to the preceding sixth of April are paid.

By § 29. joint occupiers, as owners or tenants of premises, are all entitled to vote in case the clear yearly value of such premises, if divided by the number of occupiers, shall give for each a sum of 10*l.*

The registration for cities and boroughs is in some respects different to that for counties. The lists of the ten-poll householders are to be made out by the overseers of the poor, those of the freemen by the town clerk.

The proceedings before the revising barristers are nearly similar to those which have been shortly stated with regard to the revision of the county lists of electors.

All laws in force respecting elections in England and Wales are to continue in force, except so far as they are altered or are inconsistent with the act. § 75.

The act does not extend to the universities. § 78. The right of election in boroughs being various, depending entirely on the several charters, customs, and constitutions of the respective places, occasioned infinite disputes. It some measure to prevent this evil the 7 & 8 Will. 3. c. 7. enacted, that the determination of the House of Commons, the old judicature in cases of contested elections,) as to the right of election, should bind the returning officer in taking the poll. That statute was enlarged by 2 Geo. 2. c. 24. by the 4th section of which the last determination of the House of Commons was declared to be final. The statutes which established the modern judicature of election committees did not transfer to them the same power of specially determining on the right of election; but by 28 Geo. 3. c. 52. § 25—26. and 34 Geo. 3. c. 83. such committees are invested with the power of finding by their decision the right of election, and of appointing a returning officer where the right is litigated, subject to an appeal by petition to the house within fourteen days after the commencement of the next sessions, and not otherwise. Such petition to be referred to another committee of the house, to be chosen according to the regulations of the said statutes. The determination of such appellate committee (or of the first committee, if not appealed against,) is now, therefore, conclusive in all subsequent elections. See post, VI. (B.) 3.

Previous to the Reform Act no length of possession was required from voters in burgage-tenure boroughs. In these the right of voting was annexed to some tenement, house, or part of ground upon which a house in ancient times has stood. Any number of these burgage-tenure estates might have been purchased by one person, which, at any time before a contested election, might be conveyed to so many of his friends, who would each in consequence have a right to vote.

Now burgage tenants, in the few places where they still exist, must comply with the requisitions of the Reform Act. See ante.

By the Scotch Reform Act Scotland now sends twenty-three members for cities, towns, and burghs; viz. Edinburgh and Glasgow two members each, and one for each of the following towns: Aberdeen, Paisley, Dundee, Greenock, Perth, and fourteen members for fourteen districts of burghs, each district returning one. See Schedule E.

By the Irish Reform Act 2 & 3 Will. 4. c. 88. § 11. one member is given to the cities of Liverpool and Belfast, the borough of Belfast, the county of the town of Drogheda, and the university of Dublin.

The Reform Act has left the aggregate number of members of the house as it was, viz. 65; but it has increased the number for Ireland by five, and for Scotland by eight, for Wales by four, and reduced the number for England by six.

The number of the house may now therefore be stated as,—

ENGLAND.

Twenty-six counties returning four members each.	104
Seven counties returning three members each.	21
Six counties returning two members each.	12
One county (York) returning six members.	6
One county (Isle of Wight) returning one member.	1

Twenty-two new boroughs with two members each.	44
Nineteen new boroughs with one member each.	19
Forty-four old boroughs with one member each.	44
One hundred and eleven old boroughs and two universities with two members each.	226
London four members.	4

WALES.

Five counties with one member each.	5
Three counties with two members each.	6
One new borough (Merthyr Tydvil) one member.	1
Eleven districts of boroughs one member each.	11

One borough two members.	2
--------------------------	---

SCOTLAND.

Twenty-seven counties one member each.	27
Six counties returning three members.	3
Two cities returning two members each.	4
Five towns returning one member each.	5
Fourteen districts of burghs returning each one member.	14

IRELAND.

Thirty-two counties two members each.	64
Six cities and boroughs and one university two members each.	12
Twenty-nine cities and boroughs one member each.	29

From the foregoing statements it appears that England now sends 144 county members, and 327 members for cities and boroughs; Wales, 15 county members, and 14 members for cities and boroughs; Scotland, 30 county members, and 23 members for cities and boroughs; and Ireland 64 county members, and 41 members for cities and boroughs. The total number of county members is therefore now 259, and of members for cities and boroughs, including the English and Irish universities, 415.

Previous to the Reform Act the number of county members amounted only to 188.

The various boundaries of the districts of the counties divided by the Reform Act, and of the cities and boroughs, as well old as new, were settled and described by the 2 & 3 Will. 4. c. 64. generally called the Boundary Act.

VI. (B.) 2. As to the qualifications of persons to be elected members of the House of Commons, some of these depend upon the law and custom of parliament, declared by the House of Commons; 4 Inst. 47, 48; others upon certain statutes. And from these it appears,

That they must not be aliens born, 12 & 13 Will. 3. c. 2. § 3.—nor minors, 7 & 8 Will. 3. c. 25. § 8.

They must not be any of the peers, nor of the twelve judges, because they sit in the Lords' House. But persons who have judicial places in the other courts, ecclesiastical or civil, are eligible. 4 Inst. 47. Unless excluded by act of parliament, as is the case with the vice-chancellor, and the judges and commissioners of the Bankrupt Court. Nor of the clergy; the reason assigned for which was, that they might sit in the convocation. Nor persons attainted of treason or felony, for they are unfit to sit any where. 4 Inst. 47. 1 Comm. 175.

With respect to the clergy, their right or capacity of sitting in parliament was for a long time contested; but at length, by 41 Geo. 3. (U. K.) c. 63. it was enacted, that no person, having been ordained to the office of priest or deacon, or being a minister of the church of Scotland, shall be capable of being elected to serve in parliament as a member of the House of Commons. The election of such persons is declared void; and if any person after his election is ordained, he must vacate his seat. The penalty for any person sitting as a member, contrary to this act, is 500l. a day; and proof of having celebrated divine service is declared prima facie evidence of the party's being ordained, &c.

As attendance of this nature is for the service of the public, the whole nation has such an interest therein, that the king cannot grant an exemption to any person from being elected as a knight, citizen, or Burgess in parliament; and for that elections ought to be free. 29 Hen. 6. And persons who are eligible might formerly in all cases, and may still in some, be compelled to serve in parliament against their consent. See 1 Dougl. El. Ca. 284.

Sheriffs of counties, and mayors and bailiffs of boroughs, are not eligible in their respective jurisdictions, as being returning officers. Bro. Abr. tit. Parliament, 7; Hal. of Parl. 114. But sheriffs of one county are eligible to be knights of another. 4 Inst. 48; Whitelocke on Parl. ch. 99, 100, 101.

Thus it has been decided that the sheriff of Berkshire could not be elected for Abingdon, a borough within that county. 1 Dougl. El. Ca. 419. But a sheriff of Hampshire may be elected for the town of Southampton within that county, because Southampton is a county of itself, and is as independent of Hampshire as of any other county. 4 Dougl. 87. It seems that the expression, that sheriffs of one county are eligible to be knights of another, is too confined, as they may be also members for any city or borough not in the county for which they are sheriffs.

Until recently the eldest son of a peer of Scotland was incapacitated from being elected to represent a Scotch county. Lord Daer's Case, 26 Mar. 1793, Parliament Cases, 8vo. But by the Scotch Reform Act this restriction has been removed.

No persons concerned in the management of any duties or taxes, created since 1602 (except the commissioners of the treasury, 5 W. & M. c. 7. § 57); nor any of the officers following: viz. commissioners of prizes, transports, sick and wounded, wine licences, navy and victualling; secretaries, or receivers of prizes; comptrollers of the army accounts; agents for regiments; governors of plantations, and their deputies; officers of Minorca or Gibraltar; officers of the excise and customs; clerks or deputies in the several offices of the treasury, exchequer, navy, victualling, admiralty, pay of the army or navy, secretary of state, salt, stamps, appeals, wine-licences, hackney-coaches, hawkers and pedlars; nor any persons that hold any new office or place of profit under the crown since 1705; are capable of being elected or of sitting as members. See 11 & 12 Will. 3. c. 2. § 150, 151, 152; 12 & 13 Will. 3. c. 10. § 89, 90; 6 Ann. c. 7. § 25—31; 15 Geo. 2. c. 22.

If any member accepts an office of profit under the crown, which was in existence prior to 1705, except an officer in the army or navy accepting a new commission, his seat is vacated; but such member is capable of being re-elected. 6 Ann. c. 7. § 26.

No person having a pension under the crown during pleasure, or for any term of years, is capable of being elected or of sitting. 6 Ann. c. 7. § 25; 1 Geo. 1. st. 2. c. 56.

All the persons thus enumerated are utterly incapable of sitting in the House of Commons whilst they continue in their respective situations. But by 15 Geo. 2. c. 22. § 3, the treasurer or comptroller of the navy, the secretaries of the treasury, the secretary to the chancellor of the exchequer, secretaries of the admiralty, under-secretary to any of the secretaries of state, deputy-paymaster of the army, and persons having an office or employment for life, or during good behaviour, are expressly excepted from the prohibition, and are therefore eligible.

So by 41 Geo. 3. (U. K.) c. 52, a member accepting any office under the king, or the lord lieutenant of Ireland, shall vacate his seat.

But by 54 Geo. 3. c. 16, it is provided, that on the removal of a lord lieutenant of Ireland, a member remaining in office under the succeeding lord lieutenant shall not vacate his seat.

By 56 Geo. 3. c. 98, (for consolidating the revenues of Great Britain and Ireland,) the vice-treasurer of Ireland, and the commissioners of the treasury of the United Kingdom, are expressly declared capable of sitting in parliament. § 16.

By 22 Geo. 3. c. 45, no contractor with the officers of government, or with any other person for the service of the public, shall be capable of being elected, or of sitting in the house, as long as he holds any such contract, or derives any benefit from it. But this does not extend to contracts with corporations, or with companies, which then consisted of ten partners, or to any person to whom the interest of such a contract shall accrue by marriage or operation of law, for the first twelve months. And if any person disqualified by such a contract shall sit in the house, he shall forfeit 500*l.* for every day; and if any person who engages in a contract with government admits any member of parliament to a share of it, he shall forfeit 500*l.* to the prosecutor. By 39 Geo. 3. c. 94, the master of the mint is declared not to be a contractor within the meaning of 22 Geo. 3.

By the Irish acts, 33 Geo. 3. c. 41, and 38 Geo. 3. c. 36, persons are incapacitated from being elected members of parliament, if holding places, pensions, &c. under his majesty, or the lord lieutenant, upon principles partly similar to those hereinbefore stated as imposed by the British acts, but not to so great an extent. By 41 Geo. 3. (U. K.) c. 52 it is expressly enacted, that all persons disabled from sitting in the British parliaments, shall in future be disabled from sitting in the parliaments of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland as members for any place in Great Britain, and that all persons disabled from sitting in Irish parliaments should be disabled from sitting in the united parliament for any place in Ireland. And the several other incapacities imposed by the British acts on British members, are enumerated and extended to the members for Ireland, with certain modifications.

By 52 Geo. 3. c. 51. § 3, and c. 52. § 4, commissioners for auditing the public and military accounts in Ireland, are disabled from sitting in parliament. By 57 Geo. 3. c. 62, by which the offices of clerk of the council, muster-master-general, pratique master of the port of Dublin, and store-keeper of the customs in that port, are regulated, and the duties directed to be performed by the officer in person, the persons holding any such offices, or in any part of the establishment thereof, are declared incapable of sitting in parliament. § 10.

By § 5. of 57 Geo. 3. c. 68, the clerk of the signet, and clerk of the privy seal, and all in those offices, are declared incapable; and by § 5. of c. 84, of the same session auditors, tellers, and clerks of the pells in the exchequers of England or Ireland, and in all those offices, are declared incapable.

The office or trust of a member of parliament cannot be resigned; and every member is compellable to discharge the duties of it, unless he can show such cause as the house in its discretion will think a sufficient excuse for his non-attendance, upon a call of the house; the only way, therefore, of vacating a seat is by accepting a situation, in consequence of which the law declares his seat vacant. So where members wish to vacate their seats and retire from parliament, it is now usual for the crown to grant them the office of the stewardship of the Chiltern Hundreds. Mr. Hatsell observes, "that the practice of accepting this nominal office, which began (he believes) only about the year 1750, has been now so long acquiesced in, from its convenience to all parties, that it would be ridiculous to state any doubt about the legality of such a proceeding; otherwise (he believes) it would be found very difficult, from the form of these appointments, to show that it is an office of profit under the crown." 2 Hat. 41. It is observable that the words of the act are, "office or place of profit;" perhaps, therefore, it is sufficient if the office is new, though not of profit, for in another part of the act the words office of profit are used; the distinction may seem trifling, but for a good purpose it may be applicable. This mode of vacating a seat has been repeatedly denied to such members as, for any offences, are liable to expulsion from parliament, and would thus wish to avoid the disgrace of such expulsion.

All knights of the shire shall be actual knights, or such notable esquires and gentlemen as have estates sufficient to be knights, and by no means of the degree of yeomen. 23 Hen. 6. c. 15. Thus by the stat. de militibus, 1 E. 2, was 20*l.* a year, and put in force against those who had 40*l.* a year till 16 Car. 1. c. 16. But it is now reduced to a certainty, by ordaining—

That every knight of a shire shall have a clear estate of freehold or copyhold, or mortgage, if the mortgagee has been seven years in possession, to the value of 600*l.* per annum; and every citizen and burgess to the value of 500*l.*; except the eldest sons of peers, and of persons qualified to be knights of shires, and except the members for the two universities. 6 Ann. c. 5. This somewhat balances the ascendant which the boroughs have gained over the counties, by obliging the trading interest to make choice of landed men; and of this qualification the member must make oath, and give in the particulars in writing, at the time of his taking his seat. But this act does not extend to Scotland.

This qualification, which now extends to members for Ireland, may be situate in any part of the United Kingdom without reference to the place for which the member is elected. See 33 Geo. 2. c. 20; 41 Geo. 3. c. 101. § 23.

There is no restriction in this respect imposed on the choice of members of parliament elected for Scotland. A clause was originally inserted in the Scotch Reform Act, whereby the representatives for that country were to possess a certain qualification, but the public feeling being strongly expressed against it, the clause was withdrawn.

With the exception of these standing restrictions and disqualifications, and some others created by the acts already recited, excluding certain public officers, every subject of the realm is eligible of common right; though there are instances wherein persons in particular circumstances have forfeited that common right, and have been declared ineligible for that parliament, by a vote of the House of Commons, (see ante;) or for ever, by an act of the legislature. 7 Geo. 1. c. 28. But it was an unconstitutional prohibition, which was grounded on an ordinance of the House of Lords, and inserted in the king's writs, for the parliaments holden at Coventry, 6 Hen. 4. that no apprentice or other man of the law should be elected a knight of the shire therein. 4 Inst. 19. 48; Prynne's Plea for Lords, 379; 2 Whitlocke, 359, 360. Prynne on 4 Inst. 13. In return for which our law books and historians have branded this parliament with the name of parliamentum indoctum, or the lack-learning parliament. And Sir E. Coke observes, with some spleen, that there was never a good law made thereat. Watlingh. A. D. 1405; 4 Inst. 48.

It is said by some writers, that in ancient times the king hath nominated the very persons to be returned, and did not leave it to the election of the people; for which an instance is given in the 45th year of Edward III. And among the parliament writs 14 Eliz. there appears to be an appointment and return of burgesses by the lord of a town, &c. But these are single instances in their kind. Duct.

In strictness, all members ought to have been inhabitants of the places for which they are chosen; 1 Hen. 5. c. 1; 23 Hen. 6. c. 15; but this having been long disregarded, was at length entirely repealed, as has already been mentioned, by 14 Geo. 3. c. 58.

VI (B.) 3. The method of proceeding in elections is regulated, from first to last, by the law of parliament, and a vast variety of statutes; the effect of which is given in the ensuing tables, the provisions of the several statutes being blended together. The following are the British statutes on which this abridgment is founded, viz. 7 H. 4. c. 15; 8 H. 6. c. 7; 23 H. 6. c. 14; 2 W. & M. st. 1. c. 7; 5 & 6 W. & M. c. 20. § 48; 7 W. 3. c. 4; 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 7, 25; 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 7; 12 & 13 W. 3. c. 10, § 89, 91; 6 Ann. c. 23; 9 Ann. c. 5; 10 Ann. c. 19, 33; 2 Geo. 2. c. 24; 3 Geo. 2. c. 30; 4 Geo. 2. c. 18; 19 Geo. 2. c. 28; 10 Geo. 3. c. 16; 11 Geo.

3. c. 42; 28 Geo. 3. c. 52; and several others, which are occasionally particularized.

The provisions of some of these statutes are however now superseded or repealed by the Reform Act.

In case of a new parliament, as soon as it is summoned by the king, the lord chancellor sends his warrant to the clerk of the crown in chancery; who thereupon issues out writs to the sheriff of every county, for the election of all the members to serve for that county, and every city and borough therein. See 53 Geo. 3. c. 89; as to conveying these writs, ante, II.

If a vacancy happens by the death, &c. of any member during the sitting of parliament, the speaker may, by order of the house, send his warrant to the clerk of the crown; who thereupon proceeds as in other cases where the warrant is sent by the lord chancellor. And with regard to a vacancy happening by death, or peerage, during the prorogation or recess of parliament, the 24 Geo. 3. st. 2. c. 26, which repeals the former statutes upon this subject, provides, that if, during any recess, any two members give notice to the speaker, by a certificate under their hands, that there is a vacancy by death, or that a writ of summons has issued under the great seal, to call up any member to the House of Lords, the speaker shall forthwith give notice of it to be inserted in the Gazette; and at the end of fourteen days after such insertion he shall issue his warrant to the clerk of the crown, commanding him to make out a new writ for the election of another member; but this shall not extend to any case where there is a petition depending for such vacant seat; or where the writ, for the election of the member so vacating, had not been returned fifteen days before the end of the last sitting of the house; or where the new writ cannot issue before the next meeting of the house for the despatch of business. And to prevent any impediment in the execution of this act, by the speaker's absence from the kingdom, or by the vacancy of his seat, at the beginning of every parliament he shall appoint any number of members from three to seven inclusive, and shall publish the appointment in the Gazette; these members, in the absence of the speaker, shall have the same authority as is given to him by the statute; these are the only cases provided for by act of parliament; for any other species of vacancy, therefore, no writ can issue during a recess of parliament.

In the event of any mistake in issuing the writ, or of misdirection, or for any other adequate cause, such as a place by its corruption having incurred the displeasure of the house, (as in the Hindon and Shaftesbury cases, 2 Hats. 310, and of which there are several more recent instances,) the house has authority to supersede a writ when issued, or to suspend its execution.

Within three days (or in the cinque ports, some of which however are now wholly or partially disfranchised, within six days, 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 7.) after the receipt of this writ out of chancery, the sheriff is to send his precept, under his seal, to the proper returning officers of the cities and boroughs, commanding them to elect their members; and those returning officers are to proceed to election within eight days from the receipt of the precept, giving four days' notice of the same, and to return the person chosen, together with the precept, to the sheriff. In the borough of New Shoreham, in Sussex, wherein certain freeholders of the county are entitled to vote by the 11 Geo. 3. c. 55, the election must be within twelve days, with eight days' notice of the same.

But elections of knights of the shire must be proceeded to by the sheriffs themselves in person; and, according to former laws, at the next county court after the delivery of the writ, to be holden at the most usual place in the county. If the county court fell upon the day of delivering the writ, or within six days after, the sheriff might have adjourned the court, and election, to some other convenient time, not longer than sixteen days, or shorter than ten; but he cannot alter the place without the consent of all the candidates. Now, by 25 Geo. 3. c. 84. it is enacted, that the sheriff having indorsed on the back of the writ the day on which he received it, shall, within two days after the receipt thereof, cause proclamation to be made at the place where the ensuing election ought by law to be held, of a special county court, to be there held for the purpose of such election only; on any day, Sunday excepted, not later from the day of making such proclamation than the sixteenth day, nor sooner than the tenth; and that he shall proceed on such election, at such special county court, in the same manner as if the said election had been held at a county court, or at an adjourned county court, according to the former laws. And by the 33 Geo. 3. c. 64. all notices of the time and place of election of members of parliament shall be publicly given, at the usual place, between eight in the morning and four in the afternoon, from October 25th to March 25th; and, during the other half year, between eight in the morning and six in the afternoon.

And as it is essential to the very being of parliament, that elections should be absolutely free, all undue influence whatever upon the electors is illegal, and strongly prohibited. As soon, therefore, as the time and place of election within counties or boroughs are fixed, all soldiers quartered in the place are to remove, at least one day before the election, to the distance of two miles or more, and not to return till one day after the poll is ended, except in the liberty of Westminster, or other residence of the royal family, in respect of his majesty's guards, and in fortified places; 8 Geo. 2. c. 30. § 3. Riots likewise have been frequently determined to make an election void. By vote also of the House of Commons, no lord of parliament, or lord lieutenant of a county, hath any right to interfere in the election of commoners; and, by statute, the lord warden of the cinque ports shall not recommend any members there. If any officer of the excise, customs, stamps, or certain other branches of the revenue, presume to intermeddle in elections, by persuading any voter, or dissuading him, he forfeits 100*l.* and is disabled to hold any office. Consistently with the same principle also, it has been decided, that a wager between two electors, upon the success of their respective candidates, is illegal and void; for were it permitted, it would manifestly corrupt the freedom of elections. 1 T. R. 55.

Indeed, however the electors of one branch of the legislature may be secured from any undue influence from either of the other two, and from all external violence and compulsion; the greatest danger is that, in which themselves co-operate, by the infamous practice of bribery and corruption; to prevent which it is enacted, that no candidate shall, after the date (usually called the teste) of the writs; or after the ordering of the writs, that is, after the signing of the warrant of the chancellor for issuing the writs (Sim. 165), or after any vacancy, give any money or entertainment to his electors, or promise to give any, either to particular persons, or to the place in general, in order to his being elected, on pain of being incapable to serve for that place in parliament; that is, incapable of serving upon that election. This is provided by 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 4. commonly called the Treating Act. It was decided by one committee, that treating vacates the election only; and that the candidate is no way disqualified from being re-elected, and sitting upon a second return. 3 Lud. 455. But a contrary determination was made by the Southwark committee in the first session of the parliament called in 1786; who declared a candidate disqualified on the ground of his having treated at a former election which was declared void for such treating. It has been supposed that the payment of travelling expenses, and a compensation for loss of time, were not treating, or bribery, within this or any other statute; and a bill passed the House of Commons to subject such case to the penalties imposed by 2 Geo. 2. c. 24. upon persons guilty of bribery. But this bill was rejected in the House of Lords, by the opposition of Lord Mansfield, who strenuously maintained that the bill was superfluous: that such conduct by the laws in being was clearly illegal; and subject, in a court of law, to the penalty of bribery. 2 Lud. 67.

To guard against gross and flagrant acts of bribery, it is enacted by the 2 Geo. 2. c. 24. (explained and enlarged by the 9 Geo. 2. c. 38. and 16 Geo. 3. c. 11.) that if any money, gift, office, employment, or reward, be given, or promised, to be given, to any voter, at any time, in order to influence him to give or withhold his vote, as well he that takes as he that offers such a bribe, forfeits 500*l.* and is for ever disabled from voting at any election for a member of parliament, and holding any office in any corporation; unless, before conviction, he will discover some other offender of the same kind, and then he is indemnified for his own offence. But these statutes do not create any incapacity of sitting in the house; that depends solely upon the Treating Act already mentioned.

It has been held that it is bribery if a candidate gives an elector money to vote for him, though he afterwards votes for another. 3 Burr. 1235. And there can be no doubt but it would also be bribery in the voter; for the words of the statute clearly make the offence mutual. And it has been decided, that such vote will not be available to the person to whom it may afterwards be given gratuitously; though the propriety of this decision has been questioned by respectable authority. 2 Doug. 416. An instance is given in 4 Jong 366. of an action in which twenty-two penalties, to the amount of 11,000*l.* were recovered against one defendant.

By the 49 Geo. 3. c. 118. for better securing the independence and purity of parliament, by preventing the procuring, or obtaining seats in parliament by corrupt practices, after reciting that the giving or promising any gift, office, place, or gratuity, to procure the return of a member, if not made for the use of a returning officer, or voter, is not bribery, within the meaning of the act 2 Geo. 2. c. 24; but that such gifts or promises are contrary to the ancient usage, right, and freedom of elections, and contrary to the laws and constitution. The following penalties are imposed on all persons giving or promising, and on all persons accepting or receiving any sum of money, gift, or reward, upon any engagement to procure, or endeavour to procure, the election or return of a member of parliament, viz. on the party giving or promising, if not returned as a member, 1000*l.*; and on the party giving or promising, or privy, if returned a member, forfeiture of his seat; and on the party receiving, forfeiture of the money received, and also 500*l.* to be recovered by any party suing for the same in the superior Courts of Record in Great Britain or Ireland, § 1. The act contains a proviso for "any legal expense bond fide incurred at or concerning such election." § 2. Penalties are also imposed on all persons who shall give, or procure, or promise to give or procure any office, place, or employment, to any person, upon any express contract to procure a seat in parliament, viz. on the member returned (so giving, or procuring, or promising, or privy,) loss of his seat; on the receiver of the office, forfeiture, incapacity, and 500*l.*; and on any person (holding any office under the crown) who shall give any office, &c. upon any such account, 1000*l.* § 3. Actions on this statute must be brought within two years. § 4.

Besides the penalties thus imposed by the legislature, bribery is a crime at common law, and punishable by indictment or information; though the Court of King's Bench will not in ordinary cases grant an information within two years, the time within which an action may be brought for the penalties under the statute. 3 Burr. 1335, 1359. But this rule does not affect a prosecution by indictment, or information by the attorney-general; who in one case was ordered by the house to prosecute two persons who had procured themselves to be returned by bribery. They were convicted and sentenced by the Court of King's Bench to pay each a fine of 1000 marks, and to be imprisoned six months. 4 Doug. 292.

In order to diminish the expenses of elections, it is enacted by 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 37. that no person elected to serve in parliament shall, after the taste of the writ of summons, or after the place becomes vacant before his election, by himself or his agent, give or allow to any voter, or to any inhabitant of the county, city, town, &c. any cockade, ribbon, or other mark of distinction.

Great abuses having existed in several corporations by the application of the corporate property for electioneering purposes, and towards the expenses of the favoured candidates, the 2 & 3 W. 4. c. 69. was passed to restrain such application in future, and a variety of provisions are enacted for that purpose; and members of corporations offending against the act are declared guilty of a misdemeanor.

Undue influence being thus endeavoured to be effectually guarded against, the election is to be proceeded to on the day appointed; the sheriff or other returning officer first taking an oath against bribery, and for the due execution of his office. As soon as the returning officer has taken this oath, he must read or cause to be read the Bribery Act, under the penalty of 50*l*. The candidates, likewise, if required, must swear to their qualification, or their election shall be void.

The case of Malden decides, that where a candidate wilfully refuses to take the qualification oath, though duly required so to do, and not having done so any time before the meeting of parliament, his election is void. 18 Journ. 129; Commons, C. & D. 1.

By the Reform Act, the sheriffs of counties in person, or by deputy, are to preside at the election of knights of the shire, and the counties and divisions of counties established by the act are to be divided into convenient districts for polling, and places appointed, not exceeding fifteen in each district, for taking the poll. These districts and places were subsequently specified by the Boundary Act. Sheriffs, on being required by any candidate, or of their own accord, are to cause a reasonable number of booths to be erected at the principal place of election, and also at each of the other polling places; and no voter is to vote out of the district where his property lies. The polling at a contested election is to commence at nine in the forenoon of the next day but two after the day fixed for the election, unless such next day be a Saturday or Sunday, and then on the Monday following, and is to continue only for two successive days, viz. for seven hours on the first and eight hours on the second day, and is not to be kept open later than four in the afternoon of the second day. The poll clerks, at the close of each day's poll, are to enclose and seal their books, and deliver them to the sheriff or deputy presiding at each poll, who on the commencement of the second day's poll are to re-deliver them so sealed to the persons from whom they were received. On the final close of the poll the deputies are to transmit the books sealed to the sheriff or his under-sheriff, who on the reassembling of the court on the day next but one after the close of the poll, (unless that day be Sunday, and then on the following Monday,) is to openly break the seals thereon, and cast up the number of votes appearing on such books, and declare the state of the poll, and make proclamation of the members chosen, not later than two in the afternoon.

The polling at contested elections for cities and boroughs, except for Monmouth, is to commence on the day fixed for the election, or the following day, or at the latest on the third day, unless any of those days shall be Saturday or Sunday, and then on the Monday following; the particular day for the commencement of the poll to be fixed by the returning officer, and such polling is to continue for two successive days only, seven hours the first and eight hours the second day, and to be finally closed at four o'clock in the afternoon of the second day. Polling booths are to be erected if required by any candidate, or at the discretion of the returning officers for the different parishes, &c. of such cities, &c., and may be divided into compartments; but no greater number than six hundred are to poll at any one compartment. Each person is to vote at the booth appointed for his parish, &c. A deputy of the returning officer is to preside at each booth; and the act contains provisions for the custody of the poll-books, and the declaration of the poll, nearly similar to those enacted in respect of counties, except that such declaration is to be made on the day following the final close of the poll, and except that the returning officer may, if he thinks proper, make the declaration and the return immediately after the termination of the polling.

Sheriffs or other returning officers may still close the poll previous to the time fixed, in all cases where it might have been closed before the passing of the act, and may adjourn it in case of riot.

Formerly electors might have been required to take the oaths of allegiance, supremacy, and abjuration, and make the declaration of fidelity, besides the bribery oath; and might also be sworn and questioned as to their qualifications; but by the Reform Act only three inquiries can now be made of the voter, viz. his identity with the person registered—whether he has already voted—and if his qualification continues; and the only oath, with the exception of the bribery oath, which may still be tendered as enacted by the 2 Geo. 2. c. 24. is an oath affirming the above three points.

No scrutiny is to take place before any returning officer with respect to votes given or tendered at elections; but persons excluded from the register by the revising barrister may tender their votes, which shall be entered in the poll-books and distinguished from the others.

The election being closed, the returning officer in borough returns his precept to the sheriff; with the names of the persons elected by the majority; and the sheriff returns the whole, together with the writ for the county, and the names of the knights elected thereupon, to the clerk of the crown in chancery, before the day of meeting, if it be a new parliament; or within fourteen days after the election, if it be an occasional vacancy; and this under penalty of 500*l*. If the sheriff does not return such knights only as are duly elected, he forfeits, by the old statutes of Henry VI. 100*l*. and the returning officer in boroughs, for a like false return, 40*l*. and they are besides liable to an action, in which double damages shall be recovered, by the latter statutes of King William; and any person bribing the returning officer shall also forfeit 300*l*; but the members returned by him are the sitting members, until upon petition the return shall be adjudged to be false and illegal.

By the 10 Ann. c. 23. the returning officer, within twenty days after the election, is to deliver over to the clerk of the peace, all the poll books on oath made before two justices; to be preserved among the records of the sessions of the peace, &c.

By the 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 7. which gives the action for double damages in case of a false return, all false returns, wilfully made, are declared to be illegal; and over and above the remedy which the party grieved has, by action under this statute, the returning officer or other person offending is punishable by the house; which in such cases has generally committed him to custody, and sometimes to Newgate. And the accepting and returning of indentures of return, not signed by the proper returning officer in Scotland, has been held a false return, and the under-sheriff offending committed. Sim. 181, 182.

And in order to prevent the evil of double returns, it was by the same statute enacted, that if the returning officer return more persons than are required to be chosen by the writ or precept, the same remedy may be had by the party grieved, as in case of a false return. And by § 10 of the 25 Geo. 3. c. 81. it is provided that if no return shall be made to a general writ on or before the return day, or upon a new writ within fifty-two days after the teste, or if a special return be made, the party grieved may petition the house against the same; and a committee shall determine whether any, and which of the persons named in such petition, ought to have been returned, or whether a new writ ought to issue; and the house shall give the necessary orders. And for any offence against this statute, the returning officer is made liable to a prosecution by information or indictment. And if any returning officer shall wilfully delay, neglect, or refuse duly to return a person elected, such person, on the determination of a committee in his favour, may sue the returning officer, and recover double damages. See 25 Geo. 3. c. 84. §§ 11, 14.

Where the right of election is doubtful, and consequently it is uncertain what candidates are duly elected, the returning officer may, and for his own safety ought to, make a double return. But this must be done upon the returning officer's own judgment, not upon the agreement of the parties. If two or more sets of electors make each a return of a different member, (which is called a double election,) that return only which the returning officer, to whom the sheriff's precept was directed, has signed and sealed, is good. And the members by him returned shall sit until displaced on petition. Sim. 184. By the Irish Act, 35 Geo. 3. c. 29, the returning officer (even though not otherwise qualified to vote) must in case of an equality of votes at the poll give his casting vote, and make a return.

Where a false return, or a double return, is made, it may be amended at the bar of the house. The former either by taking the return off the file, if made by an illegal returning officer, and annexing to the writ the real return delivered by the legal officer to the clerk of the crown. Where the christian name of the party returned is mistaken, it may be rectified; sometimes the amendment is made by erasure of the endorsement of the wrong name, and every thing belonging to it, and by a substitution of the right name. Formerly the returning officer himself used to amend the return; but now it is usually done by the clerk of the crown. The double return is amended by taking one off the file. When the return is made, in order to preserve it free from dispute, the clerk of the crown is directed to enter it, whether a single or double return, in a book to be kept for that purpose in his office, within six days after the return: and no amendment or alteration must be made by him or his deputy, or other, of the return, except by order of the house; and such book, or a copy thereof, is directed to be sufficient evidence of the return, in any action to be brought upon that statute; and for any default or omission in such particulars, or for certifying any person returned who was not returned, the clerk of the crown is liable to a penalty of 500*l.* to the party grieved, and forfeiture of his office. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 7. made perpetual by 12 Ann. st. 1. c. 15.

In double returns, it has been formerly a general practice in the House of Commons, that neither one nor the other should sit in the house until it be decided. In the year 1640 two returns were made for Great Marlow, and in both indentures one person was returned, and he was admitted to sit, but the others ordered to withdraw until the question was determined. And in the same year, it was ordered, that where some are returned by the sheriff, or such other officer as by law hath power to return, and others returned by private hands; in such case, those returned by the sheriff, or other officer, shall sit until the election is quashed by the house. Ordinan. 1640. If one be duly elected, and the sheriff, &c. return another, the return must be reformed and amended; and he who is duly elected is to be inserted, for the election is the foundation, and not the return. 4 Inst. 49.

Double returns are to be determined before double elections; and the return immediately annexed to the writ must be first heard. Sim. 184, n.

In an action on the case, the plaintiff declared that he was duly elected a member of parliament for such a borough, and that the defendant returned two other persons; and that he petitioned the House of Commons, and was adjudged to be duly elected, and his name ordered to be inserted in the roll, and the name of the other to be razed out: the plaintiff had a verdict; but it was adjudged, in arrest of judgment, that this declaration was not founded on the 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 7. because that statute gave an action where there was none before; therefore the fact must be made agreeable to it, which not being done, defendant had judgment. 2 Salk. 504. The court will not meddle in an action upon a double return until it is determined in parliament. Lutw. 88. And it hath been holden, that for a double return, no action lay, before the statute 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 7. because it is the only method the sheriff had to secure himself; and when the right was decided in parliament, then one indenture was taken off the file, so that it is not then a double return; neither can the party have an action for a false return, for the matter may be determined in the house whether true or false; and if so, there will be an inconvenience in contrary resolutions, if they should determine one way, and the courts at law another: but after a dissolution the action may lie for a false return, for then the right cannot be determined in parliament. 2 Salk. 502.

A double return is the same as a false return, as to action on the case; in both it is grounded on the falsity; but there is another reason why this action will not lie for a double return, viz. because the law doth not take notice of such a return; it is only allowed by the usage of parliament, and in case wherein the proper officer cannot determine who is chosen; therefore, when he doubts, he makes a double return, and submits the choice to the determination of the House of Commons, and if that house admit such returns, and make determinations on them, it will be hard for the law to subject a man to an action only for submitting a fact to be determined by a court, which hath a proper jurisdiction to determine it. 2 Lev. 114.

A member elected and returned for several places, is to make his choice for which place he will serve; and if he doth not, by the time which the house shall appoint, the house may determine for what place he shall continue a member, and writs shall go out for the other places.

The proceedings on elections in Ireland are regulated by the Irish acts 35 Geo. 3. c. 29; 37 Geo. 3. c. 47; amended by 45 Geo. 3. c. 59; 51 Geo. 3. c. 77; 60 Geo. 3. and 1 Geo. 4. st. 1. c. 11, and the Irish Reform Act.

An action on the case lies, by a burgess against the returning officer of a borough, for refusing his vote at an election for members to serve in parliament. This was decided in an action brought by one Ashby, a burgess of Aylesbury against White & al. constables of the said borough, for refusing to receive the plaintiff's vote in the election of a member of parliament; the plaintiff had a verdict, with 4*l.* damages; but the judgment was arrested by the opinion of three judges, against Holt, C. J. viz. that the action is not maintainable, because the constables acted as judges, and the plaintiff's vote is damnum sine injuria; for when the matter comes before the house, his vote will be received; that the right of electing members to serve in parliament is to be decided in parliament, and the plaintiff may petition the house for that purpose; and after it is determined there, he may then bring his action and not before; Holt, C. J. contra; That the plaintiff had a right to vote; and a freeholder has a right to vote by reason of his freehold; and it is a real right, and the value of his freehold was not material till the 8 Hen. 6, which requires it to be 40*s.* per annum; that as it is ratione liberi tenementi in counties burgii; and in cities and corporations, it is ratione franchise, and a personal inheritance, vested in the whole corporation but to be used by the particular members; that this is a noble privilege, which entitles the subject to a share in the government and legislature; and that if the plaintiff hath a right, he must have a remedy to assert that right, for want of right and want of remedy is the same thing; that refusing to take the plaintiff's vote is an injury, and every injury imports a damage; and that where a parliamentary matter comes in, incidentally, to an action of property in the King's Court, it must be determined there and not in parliament; the parliament cannot judge of the injury, nor give damages to the plaintiff, and he hath no remedy by way of petition; and, according to this opinion of Holt, the judgment of the other three judges was reversed, upon a writ of error brought in the House of Lords; who ordered that the plaintiff should recover his damages assessed by the jury. See Bro. P. C. and also 1 Salk. 19; 6 Mod. 45; 3 Salk. 17; 8 St. Tri. 89; Holt, 524; Ld. Raym. 938; Raym. Ent. 479.

This determination occasioned much disturbance in both houses of parliament; and on the 25th of January, 1704, the House of Commons resolved itself into a committee on the business; and, after a very long and animated debate, came to five resolutions; importing, that the Commons of England, in parliament assembled, had the sole right to examine and determine all matters relating to the right of election of their own members; and that the right was not determinable elsewhere. That the practice of determining the qualifications of electors, in any court of law, would expose all returning officers to a multiplicity of vexatious suits and insupportable expenses; and subject them to different and independent jurisdictions, as well as to inconsistent determinations in the same case, without relief. That Ashby was guilty of a breach of privilege, as were all persons bringing actions, and all attorneys, solicitors, counsellors, and sergeants at law, soliciting, prosecuting, or pleading in any case of the same nature. These resolutions, signed by the clerk, were fixed upon the gate of Westminster Hall. The lords, on their part, passed resolutions in support of their judgment, copies of which and the case itself were sent by the lord keeper to all the sheriffs of England, to be circulated through all the boroughs of their respective counties. See Bro. P. C. title Action. Smollett's Hist. Eng. l. 1. c. 8.

Several persons were, in the next session, committed to Newgate, under a warrant signed by Robert Harley, speaker of the House of Commons, for prosecuting actions at law against the constables of the borough of Aylesbury, who refused to take their votes at the election of members of parliament, &c. in contempt of the jurisdiction and privileges of the house; and this matter being returned to several writs of habeas corpus, and the several persons defendants brought into court, counsel moved that they might be discharged; for that the prosecution of a suit at law could be no unlawful act, nor a breach of the privilege of the House of Commons. three judges were of opinion, that the house were the proper judges of their own privileges; and the parties were accordingly remanded, on the ground that the Court of K. B. had not jurisdiction. Holt, chief justice, however, held, that the authority of the commons was circumscribed by law; and if they should exceed that authority, then to say they were judges of their own privileges, is to make their privileges to be what they would have them to be, and that if they should wrongfully imprison, there could be no redress, so that the courts at Westminster could not execute the laws upon which the liberties of the subject subsist. 2 Salk. 503; 2 Ld. Raym. 1105. See ante, IV. 1; V. 2.

The question as to this right of action against a returning officer for refusing a vote, was intended to have been decided on a writ of error, to review the judgment of the Court of K. B.; but some doubt was entertained whether such writ of error lay. 3 Salk. 504.

The lords addressed the queen, requesting her to issue the writs of error demanded, upon the refusal of the K. B. to discharge the parties committed by the House of Commons. The queen answered that she should have granted the writs of error desired by them, but finding an absolute necessity of putting an immediate end to the session, she was sensible there could be no further proceeding upon them. The meaning of this could only be, that as by a prorogation of parliament all commitments by order of the House of Commons are determined, the parties would stand in no need of a habeas corpus. But the decision of a great constitutional question was thus prevented.

The determination in Ashby and White has never since been disputed.

The question, as to the power of the House of Commons to commit for a contempt, was again brought before the Court of King's Bench in the Honourable Alex. Murray's Case, 1 Wils. 299; and before the Court of Common Pleas in the case of Brass Crosby. 3 Wils. 188; Black. Rep. 754. In both which it was ruled, according to the decision in Salkeld, that a person committed by the House of Commons for a contempt, cannot be discharged by a court of common law. See Hobhouse's Case, 3 Barn. & Ald. 420; and see title Bail, II.

The form and manner of proceeding upon petitions to the House of Commons, in cases of controverted elections, was regulated by 10 Geo. 3. c. 16; (made perpetual by 14 Geo. 3. c. 15.) An excellent law best known by the name of Grenville's Act; and it has been much improved by the 11 Geo. 3. c. 42; 25 Geo. 3. c. 84. § 10—12; 28 Geo. 3. c. 52; 32 Geo. 3. c. 1; 36 Geo. 3. c. 59; 42 Geo. 3. c. 84; (made perpetual, 47 Geo. 3. st. 1. c. 1;) 53 Geo. 3. c. 71. These statutes are now consolidated into one act with considerable amendments, 9 Geo. 4. c. 2.

By this statute any person claiming to vote, or claims to be returned, or being a candidate, may present a petition, complaining of an undue election: but one subscriber to the petition must within fourteen days enter into a recognizance himself in 1000*l.* with two sureties in 500*l.* or four in 250*l.* to pay the costs of witnesses, clerks, officers of the house, clerks, &c. which costs are to be taxed under direction of the speaker. The house shall appoint some day and hour for the consideration of the petition, and shall give notice to the petitioners, and the sitting members, &c. to attend the bar of the house on that day by themselves, their counsel or agents; this day, however, may be altered, but notice shall be given of the new day appointed, and if the petitioners do not attend, the petition shall not be proceeded in. On the day fixed, if 100 members do not attend, the house shall adjourn from day to day, (except Sundays, Christmas-day, and Good Friday,) till there shall be 100 members present to take the petition into consideration; and on such day the house shall not proceed to any other business, previous to reading the order of the day for taking the petition into consideration, except swearing in members; receiving reports from committees; amending a return; attending his majesty, or a commission, in the House of Lords; receiving messages from the lords; proceeding in the prosecution of an impeachment before that house; or proceeding upon the order of the day for the call of the house; and making other orders for enforcing the attendance of members.

If on summoning and counting the members, 100 are present, the parties, their counsel or agents attend the bar, and the door is locked. The order of the day is then read.

The names of all the members belonging to the house are then put into six boxes or glasses in equal numbers, (such names having been previously written on slips of paper by the clerk, and put into a box by him in the presence of the speaker, and the speaker having sealed the box, and affixed his written attestation,) and the clerk shall draw a name from each of the glasses in rotation, which name shall be read by the speaker, and in this manner they proceed till thirty-three such names of members present are collected. Members who have voted at the election in question, or who are petitioners or petitioned against, or who have served on a committee, which has reported on a right of election petitioned against, cannot serve: and persons who are sixty years of age, or who have served before, are excused, if they require it; and others, who can show any material reason, may also be excused by the indulgence of the house. After thirty-three names are so drawn, lists of them shall be given to the respective parties; who shall withdraw, and shall alternately strike off one (the petitioners beginning) till they are reduced to eleven, and these eleven constitute the select committee. If there are three parties they shall alternately strike off one, the order in which the parties shall strike off to be determined by lot. The members of the committee shall then be ordered by the house to meet within twenty-four hours; and they cannot adjourn for more than twenty-four hours, except over Sunday, Christmas-day, and Good Friday, without leave of the house; and no member of the commons shall absent himself without the permission of the house. And the committee shall not sit till all the members to whom leave has not been granted have met, and if all do not meet within one hour of the time appointed, a further adjournment shall be made, and the cause reported to the house. If more than two members are absent on any account, the committee are to adjourn. If committee reduced by death or otherwise to less than nine, for three sitting days, it is dissolved, and another must be appointed, unless they have sat for business fourteen days, in which case they may proceed with eight members. All the fifteen members of the committee take a solemn oath, in the house, that they will give a true judgment according to the evidence; and every question is determined by a majority. The committee may send for witnesses, papers, and records, and examine witnesses upon oath, a power which the House of Commons does not possess; and if they report that the petition or defence is frivolous or vexatious, the party aggrieved shall recover costs. On the close of the whole business, the committee report their determination to the house; who order the return to the writ to be amended accordingly, if necessary, or a new writ to be issued, and the determination to be carried into execution, and thus the election is definitively decided.

When the committee's decision has turned on the right of election in any place, any person, within six months after the report, may petition to be admitted to oppose the right declared valid; and within twenty-one days after the expiration of the six months, a day and hour shall be appointed for considering the same, and notice given to all the parties; but if no such petition presented within such time, the judgment of the committee shall be final and conclusive. § 51. Notice of the day and hour appointed is to be inserted by the speaker in the Gazette. § 52. At the time appointed for considering the petition, the house shall appoint a committee in the same manner as the committees before mentioned; and the determination of the committee of appeal shall be final, and entered on the journals. All the regulations, powers, and authorities, applying to election committees, are to apply to the committees of appeal.

By the Reform Act, § 70. upon any petition complaining of an undue election or return, any petitioner or person defending such election or return, may impeach the correctness of the register of votes, by proving that the name of any person who voted at the election was improperly inserted or retained therein by the revising barrister; or the name of any person who tendered his vote at such election was improperly omitted; and the select committee appointed for the trial of such petition shall alter the poll taken at such election according to the truth of the case, and report their decision to the house, who shall carry such determination into effect, and the return be amended, or the election declared void, and the register corrected, or such other order made as the house shall deem fit.

By 42 G. 3. c. 106. amended by 47 G. 3. st. 1. c. 14. for regulating the trial of controverted elections of members elected for Ireland, &c. the regulation of the existing British acts are extended to petitions on Irish elections, with such amendments as the circumstances of the place and distance of such elections required. Among these the most important are, that the committee are empowered, on application of either of the parties, to make an order for appointing commissioners in Ireland, to take evidence there as to any matter which may be assigned and limited by the committee on such appointment. The chairman of the committee shall issue his warrant to the commissioners to proceed accordingly; and then the committee shall adjourn.—Directions are given, as to the mode in which the commissioners shall proceed in taking the evidence; and when that is done, the commissioners are to transmit one copy thereof to the clerk of the crown in Ireland, and another to the speaker of the House of Commons, who thereupon shall issue his warrant for the committee to re-assemble within one month, or (by the 60 Geo. 3. c. 7.) if the house are at that time adjourned, then within one month after the day to which they are adjourned; which committee shall proceed to decide on the merits of the petition, determining all matters referred to the commissioners, according to the evidence taken and transmitted by them. The committee may send for papers produced before the commissioners; but cannot enter into any new evidence on the facts referred to the commissioners.

In the case of a petition on an election for Downpatrick, where a warrant for a commission had issued, and the petitioner was desirous of withdrawing his petition, a special act was found necessary to avoid the warrant, and enable the committee to proceed to a decision. See 55 G. 3. c. 98.

VII. THE mode of making laws is much the same in both houses. It is proper previously to premise that for despatch of business each house of parliament has its speaker. The speaker of the House of Lords, whose office it is to preside there, and manage the formality of business, is the lord chancellor, or keeper of the king's great seal, or any other appointed by the king's commission: and, if none be so appointed, the House of Lords (it is said) may elect; and an instance of that nature has occurred in the Irish House of Lords.

The speaker of the House of Commons is chosen by the house; but must be approved by the king. This point seems not to have been settled till A. D. 1679, when the house elected Sir Edward Seymour, after the nomination of another person by the court. This produced a conflict, which terminated, after a short prorogation, by the election of a third person; with an understanding that the virtual election was in the house, and only a nominal approval in the crown. See Burnett's History, Oxford Edition, 1823; ii. 195; and 1 Dugdale on Stat. 50.

The speaker of the House of Commons cannot give his opinion or argue any question in the house; but the speaker of the House of Lords, if a lord of parliament, may.

The commons anciently had no continual speaker, but after consultation, their manner of proceeding was to agree upon some person of great abilities, to deliver their resolutions. In the reign of William Rufus, at a great parliament held at Rockingham, a certain knight came forth, and stood before the people, and spake in the name and behalf of them all; who was undoubtedly the speaker of the House of Commons at that time. The first speaker certainly known was Peter de Montford, 44 H. 3, when the lords and commons sat in several houses, or at least gave their assents severally. See Constitutionis, 162.

Hume is mistaken, who says that Peter de la Mere, chosen in the first parliament of Ric. II. was the first speaker of the commons. Vol. 3. p. 3. And in the rolls of parliament, 51 Ed. 3. No. 87. it appears, that Sir Thomas Hungerford, chevalier, qui avoit les parolles des communes en cest parlement, addressed the king, in the name of the commons, in that justice year, to pray that he would pardon several persons who had been convicted on impeachments. And there he is not mentioned as if his office was a novelty. 1 Comm. 181. in n.

Sir Richard Walgrave, 5 R. 2. was the first speaker who made any formal apology for inability, as now practised: Richard Rich, Esq. an. 25 H. 8. was the first speaker who is recorded to have made request for access to the king. Thomas Moyle, Esq. an. 31 H. 8. is said to be the first speaker who petitioned for freedom of speech; and Sir Thomas Cargrave, an. 1 Eliz. was the first who made the request for privilege from arrests, &c. Sir John Busby, an. 17 R. 2. was the first speaker presented to the king, in full parliament, by the commons. And when Sir Arnold Savage was speaker, an. 2 H. 4. it was the first time that the commons were required by the king to choose a speaker. Det.

The salary of the speaker was settled at 1500*l.* a quarter, or 6000*l.* a year, by the 20 Geo. 3. c. 10; and by the 2 & 3 W. 4. c. 105. his salary is to be in future payable out of the consolidated fund, and the fees previously received by him are to be paid to the fee fund of the House of Commons. Both acts prohibit him from holding any office under the crown during pleasure.

By the 4 & 5 W. 4. c. 70. the salary of the speaker of the House of Commons is in future to be reduced to 5000*l.* a year; but the act does not extend to the present speaker.

Each house the act of the majority binds the whole; and this majority is declared by votes openly and publicly given.

In the House of Commons the speaker never votes (unless in committee) except when there is an equality without his casting vote, which in that case creates a majority of the house: but the speaker of the House of Lords has no casting vote, his vote being connected with the rest of the house, and in the case of an equality, the non contents, or negative voices, have the same effect and operation as if they were a fact a majority. Lords' Journ. 25 June, 1661.

The House of Lords in Ireland observed the same rule, and in cases of equality semper præsumitur pro negante. Id. Mountin, i. 107. Hence the order in putting the question, on appeals and writs of error, was this; "Is it your lordships' pleasure, that this decree or judgment should be reversed?" for if the votes were equal, the judgment of the court below was affirmed. Id. ii. 81.

Here it may not be improper to remark, that there is no casting voice in courts of justice; but in the superior courts, if the judges are equally divided, there is no decision; and the cause is continued in court till a majority concur; which they frequently do by consent merely for the purpose of sending the cause, by appeal, to a higher jurisdiction. At the sessions, the justices, in case of equality, ought to respite the matter till the next session; but if they are equal one day, and the matter is duly brought before them on another day in the same sessions, and there is then an inequality, it will amount to a judgment: for all the time of the session is considered but as one day. A casting vote sometimes signifies the single vote of a person who never votes but in the case of an equality; sometimes the double vote of a person who first votes with the rest, and then, upon an equality, creates a majority by giving a second vote. A casting vote neither exists in corporations nor elsewhere, unless it is expressly given by statute or charter; or what is equivalent, exists by immemorial usage. 1 Comm. 181. in n.

With respect to other formalities in the two houses it may be observed, there are no places of precedency in the House of Commons as there are in the House of Lords; only the speaker has a chair or seat fixed towards the upper end, in the middle of the house; and the clerk, with his assistant, sits near him at the table, just below the chair. The members of the House of Commons never had any robes, as the Lords ever had, except the speaker and clerks, who in the house wear gowns, as professors of the law do during term time.

No knight, citizen, or burgess of the House of Commons, shall depart from the parliament without leave of the speaker and commons assembled; and the same is to be entered in the book of the clerk of the parliament. 6 Hen. 8. c. 16. And in the 1 & 2 Phil. & Mar. informations were preferred by the attorney-general against thirty-nine of the House of Commons for departing without licence, whereof six submitted to fines; but it is uncertain whether any of them were paid.

Calling the house is to discover what members are absent without leave of the house, or just cause; in which cases fines have been often imposed. On the calling over, such of the members as are present are marked; and the defaulters being called over again the same day, or the day after, and not appearing, are summoned or sent for by the serjeant-at-arms. Lex Constitutionis, 159.

Forty members are requisite to make a House of Commons for despatch of business; and the business of the house is to be kept secret among themselves. In the 23d year of Queen Elizabeth, Arthur Hall, Esq. member of parliament, for publishing the conferences of the house, and writing a book which contained matters of reproach against some particular members, derogatory to the general authority, power, and state of the house, and prejudicial to the validity of the proceedings, was adjudged by the commons to be committed to the Tower for six months, fined 500*l.* and expelled the house. But the speaker of the House of Commons, according to the duty of his office, as a servant to the house, may publish such proceedings as he shall be ordered by the commons assembled; and he cannot be liable for what he does that way by the command of others, unless those other persons are liable.

All bills, motions, and petitions, are by order of parliament to be entered on the parliament rolls, although they are denied, and never proceed to the establishment of the statute, together with the answers. Lex Constitutionis, 154.

The speaker of the House of Commons is not allowed to persuade or dissuade in passing a bill, only to make a short narrative of it; opening the parts of the bill, so that all may understand it; if any question be upon the bill, he is to explain, but not enter into a argument or dispute. When Mr. Speaker desires to speak, he ought to be heard without interruption; and when the speaker stands up, the member standing up is to sit down; if two stand up to speak to a bill, he who would speak against the bill, if it be known, is to be first heard; otherwise he who was first up, which is to be determined by the speaker; no member is to be taken down unless by Mr. Speaker, in such cases as the house do not think fit to admit; and if any person speak impertinently, or besides the question, the speaker is to interrupt him, and know the pleasure of the house whether he shall be further heard; but if he speaks not to the matter, it may be moderated; and whosoever hisses or disturbs any person in his speech, shall answer it at the bar of the house.

In enacting laws and other proceedings in parliament the lords give their voices in their house, from the puisne lord seriatim, by the word Content, or Not Content: the manner of voting in the House of Commons is by Yea and No; and if it be difficult to determine which are the greater number, the house divides, and four tellers are appointed by the speaker, two of each side, to number them, the Ay's going out, and the No's staying in; and thereof report is made to the house. When the members of the house go forth, none is to stir until Mr. Speaker rises from his seat, and then all the rest are to follow after.

To bring a bill into the house, if the relief sought by it is of a private nature, it is first necessary to prefer a petition, which must be presented by a member, and usually sets forth the grievance desired to be remedied. This petition (when founded on facts that may be in their nature disputed) is referred to a committee of members, who examine the matter alleged, and accordingly report it to the house; and then (or otherwise upon the mere petition) leave is given to bring in the bill. In public matters the bill is brought in upon motion made to the house, without any petition at all. Formerly all bills were drawn in the form of petitions, which were entered upon the parliament rolls, with the king's answer thereunto subjoined, not in any settled form of words, but as the circumstances of the case required; and at the end of each parliament the judges drew them into the form of a statute, which was entered on the statute rolls. (See, among numberless other instances, the articuli cleri, 9 Edw. 2.) In the reign of Henry V. to prevent mistakes and abuses, the statutes were drawn up by the judges before the end of the parliament; and in the reign of Henry VI. bills in the form of acts, according to the modern custom, were first introduced.

It appears that prior to the reign of Henry V. it had been the practice of the kings to add and enact more than the commons petitioned for. In consequence of this there is a very memorable petition from the commons, an. 2 Hen. 5. which states, that it is the liberty and freedom of the commons that there should be no statute without their assent, considering that they have ever been assenters as well as petitioners; and therefore they pray that for the future there may be no additions to, or diminutions from their petitions. And in answer to this the king granted that from thenceforth they should be bound in no instance without their assent, saving his royal prerogative to grant and deny what he pleases of their petitions. Ruff. Pref. xv. Rot. Parl. 2 Hen. 5. No. 22.

Any member may move for a bill to be brought in, except it be for imposing a tax, which is to be done on a report from a committee of the whole house; and leave being granted, the person making the motion, and those who second it, are ordered to prepare and bring in the same.

Public bills or acts of parliaments are commonly drawn, such as relate to taxes, or other matters of government, by the several public boards, according to their respective jurisdictions; others by such members of the House of Commons as are most inclined to effect the good of the public, particularly in relation to the bill designed, taking advice thereupon; and acts for the revival, repeal, or continuance of statutes, or other legal matters, are penned by lawyers, members of the house, appointed for that purpose.

The persons directed to bring in the bill present it in a competent time to the house, drawn out on paper, with a multitude of blanks, or void spaces, where any thing occurs that is dubious, or necessary to be settled by the parliament itself, (such, especially, as the precise date of times, the nature and quantity of penalties, or of any sums of money to be raised,) being indeed only the skeleton of the bill. In the House of Lords if the bill begins there, it is (when of a private nature) referred to two of the judges, to examine and report the state of the facts alleged, to see that all necessary parties consent, and to settle all points of technical propriety. This is read a first time, and at a convenient distance a second time; and after each reading the speaker opens to the house the substance of the bill, and puts the question whether it shall proceed any farther. The introducing of the bill may be originally opposed, as the bill itself may at either of the readings; and if the opposition succeeds the bill must be dropped for that session, as it must also, if opposed with success, in any of the subsequent stages. But it is not unusual to introduce a rejected bill under a new form and title.

After the second reading it is committed, that is, referred to a committee, which is either selected by the house in matters of small importance, or else upon a bill of consequence the house resolves itself into a committee of the whole house. A committee of the whole house is composed of every member; and to form it the speaker quits the chair, (another member being appointed chairman,) and may sit and debate as a private member. In these committees the bill is debated clause by clause, amendments made, the blanks filled up, and sometimes the bill entirely new modelled. After it has gone through the committee the chairman reports it to the house with such amendments as the committee have made; and then the house reconsiders the whole bill again, and the question is repeatedly put upon every clause and amendment. When the house hath agreed or disagreed to the amendments of the committee, and sometimes added new amendments of its own, the bill is then ordered to be engrossed, or written in a strong gross hand, on one or more long rolls or presses of parchment sewed together. When this is finished it is read a third time, and amendments are sometimes then made to it; and if a new clause be added it is done by tacking a separate piece of parchment on the bill, which is called a rider. The speaker then again opens the contents, and, holding it up in his hands, puts the question, whether the bill shall pass. If this is agreed to, the title to it is then settled, which used in ancient times to be a general one for all the acts passed in the session; distinct titles for each chapter were not introduced with much regularity before the time of Henry VII. One of the members is directed to carry the bill to the lords, and desire their concurrence, who, attended by several more, carries it to the bar of the house of peers, and there delivers it to their speaker, who comes down from his woosack to receive it.

If there passes through the same forms as in the other house, (except engrossing, which is already done,) and if rejected, no more notice is taken, but it passes sub silentio, to prevent unbecoming alterations. But if it is agreed to, the lords send a message by two masters in chancery, (or upon matters of high dignity or importance, by two of the judges,) that they have agreed to the same; and the bill remains with the lords, if they have made no amendment to it. But if any amendments are made, such amendments are sent down with the bill to receive the concurrence of the commons. If the commons disagree to the amendments, a conference usually follows between members deputed from each house; these meet in the painted chamber, and debate the matter, and for the most part settle and adjust the difference; but if both houses remain inflexible, the bill is dropped. If the commons agree to the amendments, the bill is sent back to the lords by one of the members, with a message to acquaint them therewith. The same forms are observed mutatis mutandis, when the bill begins in the House of Lords. But when an act of grace or pardon is passed, it is first signed by his majesty, and then read once only in each of the houses, without any new engrossing or amendment. D'Enc's Journ. 20, 73; Com. Journ. 17th June, 1747. And when both houses have done with any bill, it is always deposited in the house of peers to wait the royal assent; except in the case of a bill of supply, which, after receiving the concurrence of the lords, is sent back to the House of Commons. Com. Journ. 24th July, 1660.

If any debate happens on the first reading of a bill, the speaker puts the question whether the same shall have a second reading, and sometimes upon motion appoints a day for it; for public bills, unless upon extraordinary occasions, are seldom read more than once a day, the members being allowed convenient time to consider of them: if nothing be said against a bill, the ordinary course is to proceed without a question; but if the bill be generally disliked, a question is sometimes put, whether the bill shall be rejected? If it be rejected, it cannot be proposed any more that session; when a bill hath been read a second time, any member may move to have the same amended; but no member of the house is admitted to speak more than once in a debate, except the bill be read more than once that day, or the whole house is turned into a committee; and after some time spent in debates, the speaker, collecting the sense of the house, reduces the same to a question, which he submits to the house, and is put to the vote; and a question is to be put, after the bill is so read a second time, whether it shall be committed? The chairman of the committee makes his report of a bill at the side bar of the house, reading all the alterations made, and then delivers the same to the clerk of the parliament, who likewise reads all the amendments, and the speaker puts the question, whether they shall be read a second time? And if that be agreed unto, he reads the amendments himself, and puts the question, whether the bill so amended shall be engrossed, and read a third time some other day? In the House of Lords, if a bill be not committed, then it is to be read a third time, and the next question to be for its passing; and on the third reading of the bill, any member may speak against the whole bill to throw out the same, or for amendment of any clause. Prac. Solic. in Par. 397, 398.

In cases of private bills, when the petition is read, and leave given to bring in the bill, the persons concerned and affected by it may be heard by themselves or counsel at the bar, or before the committee, to whom such bill is referred; and in case of a peer, he shall be admitted to come within the bar of the House of Commons, and sit covered on a stool whilst the same is debating. And after counsel are heard on both sides, and the house is satisfied with the contents of the bill, it goes through the several forms.

For full information as to the manner of passing public and private bills, see 1 Dwarris on Statutes, 112.

The royal assent may be given two ways: 1. In person when the king comes to the House of Peers in his crown and royal robes, and sending for the commons to the bar, the titles of all the bills that have passed both houses are read, and the king's answer is declared by the clerk of the parliament in Norman-French; a badge, it must be owned, (now the only one remaining,) of conquest, and which one could wish to see fall into total oblivion, unless it be reserved as a solemn memento to remind us that our liberties are mortal, having been once destroyed by a foreign force. If the king consents to a public bill, the clerk usually declares, "Le roy le veut—The king wills it so to be." if to a private bill, "Soit fait comme il est desire," Be it as it is desired. If the king refuses his assent, it is in the gentle language of "Le roy s'avisera—The king will advise upon it." When a bill is passed, it is carried up and presented to the king by the speaker of the House of Commons; and the royal assent is thus expressed, "Le roy remercie ses loyals subjects, accepte leur benevolence, et ainsi le veut." The king thanks his subjects, accepts their benevolence, and wills it so to be. Rot. Parl. 9 Hen. 4. in Pryn. 4 Inst. 30, 31. In case of an act of grace, which originally proceeds from the crown, and has the royal assent in the first stage of it, the clerk of the parliament thus pronounces the gratitude of the subject: "Les prelates, seigneurs, et commons, en ce present parlement assemblez, au nom de tous vos autres subjects, remercient tres humblement votre majeste, et prient a Dieu vous donner en saute loing vie et loing." The prelates, lords, and commons, in this present parliament assembled, in the name of all your other subjects, most humbly thank your majesty, and pray to God to grant you in health and wealth long to live." D'Elwes's Journ. 31.

The words Le roy s'avisera correspond to the phrase formerly used by courts of justice, when they required time to consider of their judgment; viz. Curia advisare vult. And there can be little doubt but originally these words implied a serious intent in the king to take the subject under consideration; and they only became in effect a negative when the bill or petition was annulled by a dissolution before the king communicated the result of his deliberation; for in the rolls of parliament the king sometimes answers that the petition is unreasonable, and cannot be granted; sometimes he answers, that he and his council will consider of it; as in Rot. Parl. 37 Edw. 3. No. 33.

This prerogative of rejecting bills was exercised to such an extent in ancient times, that D'Elwes informs us that Queen Elizabeth, at the close of one session, gave her assent to twenty-four public and nineteen private bills; and at the same time rejected forty-eight, which had passed the two houses of parliament. Journ. 596. The last time it was exerted was in the year 1692, by King William III. who at first refused his assent to the bill for triennial parliaments; but was prevailed upon to permit it to be enacted two years afterwards. De Lolme, 404.

By § 3, 4. of 33 Hen. 8. c. 21. which was passed to attain Queen Katherine of treason, it was enacted that the king's assent by letters-patent under his great seal, signed with his hand, and notified in his absence to both houses assembled together in the Lords' House, ever was and should be of like force as if given by the king in person.

When the bill has received the royal assent in either of these ways, it is then, and not before, a statute or act of parliament, and is placed among the records of the kingdom; there needing no formal promulgation to give it the force of a law, as was necessary by the civil law with regard to the emperor's edicts; because every man in England is, in judgment of law, party to the making of an act of parliament, being present thereat by his representatives. However, a copy thereof is usually printed at the king's press for the information of the whole land. And formerly, before the invention of printing, it was used to be published by the sheriff of every county; the king's writ being sent to him at the end of every session, together with a transcript of all the acts made at that session, commanding him, "ut statuta illa, et omnes articulos in eisdem contentos, in singulis locis ubi expedire viderit, publice proclamari, et firmiter teneri et observari faciat." And the usage was to proclaim them at his county-court, and there to keep them, that whoever would might read or take copies thereof; which custom continued till the reign of Henry VII. 3 Inst. 41; 4 Inst. 26. See further, tit. Statute.

An act of parliament, thus made, is the exercise of the highest authority that this kingdom acknowledges upon earth. It hath power to bind every subject in the land, and the dominions thereunto belonging; nay, even the king himself, if particularly named therein. And it cannot be altered, amended, dispensed with, suspended, or repealed, but in the same forms and by the same authority of parliament; for it is a maxim in law, that it requires the same strength to dissolve as to create an obligation. It is true it was formerly held, that the king might in many cases dispense with penal statutes. Finch. L. 81, 234; Bacon. Elem. c. 19. But now, by 1 W. & M. st. 2. c. 2. it is declared, that the suspending or dispensing with laws by regal authority, without consent of parliament, is illegal; as has already been repeatedly noticed. See King.

VIII. An adjournment is no more than a continuance of the session from one day to another, as the word itself signifies; and this is done by the authority of each house separately every day; and sometimes for a fortnight or month together, as at Christmas or Easter, or upon other particular occasions. But the adjournment of one house is no adjournment of the other. 4 Inst. 28. It hath also been usual, when his majesty hath signified his pleasure that both or either of the houses should adjourn themselves to a certain day, to obey the king's pleasure so signified, and to adjourn accordingly. Com. Journ. passim. Otherwise, besides the indecorum of a refusal, a prorogation would assuredly follow, which would often be very inconvenient to both public and private business. For prorogation puts an end to the session; and then such bills as are only begun, and not perfected, must be resumed de novo (if at all) in a subsequent session; whereas, after an adjournment, all things continue in the same state as at the time of the adjournment made, and may be proceeded on without any fresh commencement.

A prorogation is the continuance of the parliament from one session to another, as an adjournment is a continuation of the session from day to day. This is done by the royal authority, expressed either by the lord chancellor in his majesty's presence, or by commission from the crown, or frequently by proclamation.

At the beginning of a new parliament, when it is not intended that the parliament should meet, at the return of the writ of summons, for despatch of business, the practice is to prorogue it by a writ of prorogation; as the parliament called in 1790 was prorogued twice by writ; and the first parliament in the reign of Geo. III. was prorogued by four writs. On the day upon which the writ of summons is returnable, the members of the House of Commons who attend do not enter their own house, or wait for a message from the lords, but go immediately up to the House of Lords, where the chancellor reads the writ of prorogation; and when it is intended that they should meet upon the day to which the parliament is prorogued for despatch of business, notice is given by a proclamation. 1 Comm. c. 2. p. 187. in n. See post.

Both houses are necessarily prorogued at the same time, it not being a prorogation of the House of Lords or Commons, but of the parliament. The session is never understood to be at an end until a prorogation; though, unless some act be passed, or some judgment given in parliament, it is in truth no session at all. 4 Inst. 28; Hale of Parl. 38; Hut. 61. And formerly the usage was for the king to give the royal assent to all such bills as he approved at the end of every session, and then to prorogue the parliament, though sometimes only for a day or two; after which all business then depending in the houses was to be begun again. Which custom obtained so strongly, that it once became a question, whether giving the royal assent to a single bill did not, of course, put an end to the session. And, though it was then resolved in the negative, yet the notion was so deeply rooted, that the 1 Car. 1. c. 7. was passed to declare, that the king's assent to that and some other acts should not put an end to the session; and even so late as the reign of Charles II. we find a proviso frequently tacked to a bill, that his majesty's assent thereto should not determine the session of parliament. 12 Car. 2. c. 1; 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 1. But it now seems to be allowed that a prorogation must be expressly made in order to determine the session.

All orders of parliament determine by prorogation; and one taken by order of the parliament, after their prorogation, may be discharged on an habeas corpus, as well as after a dissolution; but it was long since determined that the dissolution of a parliament did not alter the state of impeachments brought by the commons in a preceding parliament. Raym. 120; 1 Lev. 384. See Impeachment. Cases of appeals and writs of error shall continue, and are to be proceeded on, in statu quo, &c. as they stood at the dissolution of the last parliament. Raym. 381.

A prorogation of parliament is always by the king; and in this case the sessions must begin de novo. An adjournment is by each house, and the sessions continues, notwithstanding such adjournment. 1 Mod. 242. By a prorogation of parliament there is a session; and every several session of parliament is in law a several parliament; though if it be only an adjournment, there is no session; and when a parliament is called, and doth sit, but is dissolved without any act passed or judgment given, it is no session of parliament, but a convention. 4 Inst. 27. If a parliament is assembled, and orders made, and writs of error brought in the House of Peers, and several bills agreed on, but none signed; this is but a convention, and no parliament, or session of parliament; but every session in which the king signs a bill is a parliament; and so every parliament is a session. 1 Rol. Rep. 29; Hut. 61.

The parliament from the first day of sitting is called the first session of parliament, &c. Raym. 120. And the courts of justice ex officio are to take notice of the beginning, prorogation, and ending of every parliament; also of all general statutes. 1 Lev. 296; Hob. 111.

On prorogation, such bills as have passed, not having received the royal assent, must fall; for there can be no act of parliament, without consent of the lords and commons, and the royal fiat of the king, giving his consent personally, or by commission. Special acts have occasionally been passed to prevent the effect of prorogation of parliament, in cases of impeachment, &c. See 45 Geo. 3. c. 117 and 125.

It was held generally, that the king could not summon a parliament before the day to which it was last prorogued; and that when a parliament was prorogued to a certain day, they did not meet on that day, unless it were particularly declared, by the proclamation giving notice of the prorogation, that they should meet for the despatch of business, and when it had not been prorogued by such a proclamation, and it was intended that parliament should actually sit, it was the established practice to issue a proclamation to give notice that it was for the despatch of business; and this proclamation, unless upon some urgent occasion, bore date at least forty days before the meeting. 2 Hats. 237. Provisions for the meeting of parliament within fourteen days have been from time to time made by the several militia acts. By the existing acts, 42 Geo. 3. c. 90. for England; c. 91. for Scotland; in all cases of actual invasion, or imminent danger of it, and in cases of rebellion or insurrection, the king having first communicated the occasion to parliament, if sitting, and if no parliament be sitting, having notified the occasion by proclamation, may order the militia to be called out and embodied. And wherever this is done, if the parliament be adjourned or prorogued, he shall convene them within fourteen days. See 42 Geo. 3. c. 90. § 111—113. 146. 147. and c. 91. § 139. 142.

By the 37 Geo. 3. c. 127. a permanent provision was introduced, that whenever the king shall be pleased, by advice of the privy council, to issue a proclamation that parliament shall meet and be holden for despatch of business, on any day not less than fourteen days from the date of such proclamation, the same shall be sufficient notice to all persons, and the parliament shall stand prorogued to the day and place there declared, notwithstanding any former prorogation, or any law or usage to the contrary. And by 39 & 40 Geo. 3. c. 11. this provision is extended to the case of an adjournment of parliament, as well as a prorogation.

A dissolution is the civil death of the parliament; and this may be effected three ways; first, by the king's will, expressed either in person or by representation. For, as the king has the sole right of convening the parliament, so also it is a branch of the royal prerogative, that he may (whenever he pleases) prorogue the parliament for a time, or put a final period to its existence. If nothing had a right to prorogue or dissolve a parliament but itself, it might happen to become perpetual. And this would be extremely dangerous, if at any time it should attempt to encroach upon the executive power: as was fatally experienced by the unfortunate King Charles the First; who having unadvisedly passed an act to continue the parliament then in being, till such time as it should please to dissolve itself, at last fell a sacrifice to that inordinate power which he himself had consented to give them. It is, therefore, extremely necessary that the crown should be empowered to regulate the duration of these assembles, under the limitations which the English constitution has prescribed; so that, on the one hand, they may frequently and regularly come together for the despatch of business and redress of grievances; and may not, on the other, even with the consent of the crown, be continued to an inconvenient or unconstitutional length.

A parliament, it hath been said, ought not to be dissolved as long as any bill remains undischarged; and proclamation must be made in the parliament, that if any person have any petition, he shall come in and be heard, and if no answer be given, it is intended the public are satisfied.

Secondly, a parliament may be dissolved by the demise of the crown. This dissolution formerly happened immediately upon the death of the reigning sovereign; for he being considered in law as the head of the parliament, that failing, the whole body was held to be extinct. But the calling a new parliament immediately on the inauguration of the successor being found inconvenient, and dangers being apprehended from having no parliament in being in case of a disputed succession, it was enacted by 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 15. that the parliament in being should, if sitting, continue for six months after the demise of the crown, unless sooner dissolved, &c. by the successor; and if not sitting, should meet on the day of prorogation; and that in case no parliament was in being, the last preceding parliament should convene and sit. By 1 Ann. c. 7. § 1. it is more explicitly enacted, that parliament shall not be determined or dissolved by demise of the crown; but shall continue, and if sitting at the time of such demise, immediately proceed to act for six months, and no longer, unless sooner prorogued or dissolved by the successor; and if prorogued, shall meet on the day of the prorogation, and sit for the remainder of the said six months, unless sooner dissolved, &c. By § 5. if there be a parliament in being at the time of the demise of the crown, but the same happens to be then separated by a adjournment or prorogation, such parliament shall immediately after such demise meet, convene, and act, and shall act, notwithstanding such demise, for six months, unless sooner dissolved, &c. By § 6. repeated by 37 Geo. 3. c. 127. it was provided, that in case at the time of such demise there were no parliament in being that had met and acted, the last preceding parliament should immediately convene.

The said act, 37 Geo. 3. c. 127. enacts, (§ 3.) that in case of the demise of the crown, subsequent to the dissolution or expiration of a parliament, and before the day appointed by the writs of summons for assembling a new parliament, in such case the last preceding parliament shall immediately convene and sit at Westminster, and be a parliament for six months, and no longer, as if the said parliament had not been dissolved or expired; subject to be dissolved or prorogued by the successor. By § 4. this proviso is extended to the case of the demise of a successor to the crown, within six months after his accession, without his having dissolved the parliament, or after it shall have been dissolved, and before a new parliament shall have met. By § 5. in case of the demise of the crown, on or after the day appointed by the writs of summons for assembling a new parliament, and before such new parliament shall have actually met, such new parliament shall immediately after such demise convene and sit at Westminster, and be a parliament for six months, and no longer, subject to be dissolved, &c.

Lastly, a parliament may be dissolved or expire by length of time. For if either the legislative body were perpetual; or might last for the life of the prince who convened them as members; and were so to be supplied, by occasionally filling the vacancies with new representatives; in these cases, if it were once corrupted, the evil would be past all remedy; but when different bodies succeed each other, if the people see cause to disapprove of the present, they may rectify its faults in the next. A legislative assembly also, which is sure to be separated again, (whereby its members will themselves become private men, and subject to the full extent of the laws which they have enacted for others,) will think themselves bound, in interest as well as duty, to make only such laws as are good. The utmost extent of time that the same parliament was allowed to sit, by the 6 W. & M. c. 2. was three years; after the expiration of which, reckoning from the return of the first summons, the parliament was to have no longer continued. But by the 1 Geo. 1. st. 2. c. 38. (in order, professedly, to prevent the great and continued expenses of frequent elections, and the violent heats and animosities consequent thereupon, and for the peace and security of the government then just recovering from the late rebellion,) this term was prolonged to seven years; and, what alone is an instance of the vast authority of parliament, the very same house, that was chosen for three years, enacted its own continuance for seven. So that, as our constitution now stands, the parliament must expire, or die a natural death, at the end of every seventh year, if not sooner dissolved by the royal prerogative; as it generally is, in the course of every five or six years.

This Septennial Act has been termed an unconstitutional exertion of the authority of parliament; and the reason alleged is, that those who had a power delegated to them for three years only, could have no right to extend that term to seven years. But on this it has been observed, that it is not true in fact, as the argument is usually put, that a parliament chosen for three years continued themselves for seven, since it was only one part of the parliament, the House of Commons, which was chosen for any limited time; and the Septennial Act was the act of the whole legislature.

When a parliament is dissolved, impeachments by the commons, appeals, or writs pending in parliament, do not abate by the dissolution, but the next parliament shall proceed upon them in the state in which they were left at the dissolution. Raym. 383.

PARLIAMENTUM DIABOLICUM. A parliament held at Coventry, 38 Hen. 6. wherein Edward Earl of March (afterwards King Edward IV.) and many of the chief nobility were attainted, was so called; but the acts then made were annulled by the succeeding parliament. Holingshed's Chron.

PARLIAMENTUM INDOCTORUM, the Lacklearning Parliament. A parliament held 6 Hen. 4. whereunto by special precept to the sheriffs in their several counties, no lawyer, or person skilled in the law, was to come. See tit. Parliament, VI. 2.

PARLIAMENTUM INSANUM. A parliament assembled at Oxford, anno 41 Hen. 3. so styled from the madness of their proceedings; and because the lords came with armed men to it, and contentions grew very high between the king, lords, and commons, whereby many extraordinary things were done. 4 Inst.

PARLIAMENTUM RELIGIOSORUM. In most convents they had a common room into which the brethren withdrew for conversation; and the conference there had was termed Parliamentum. Mat. Paris. The abbot of Croyland used to call a parliament of his monks, to consult about the affairs of his monastery; and, at this day, the societies of the two Temples, or Inns of Court, call that assembly of the benchers or governors, a parliament; wherein they confer upon the common affairs of their several houses. *Crompt. PAROL. Word of mouth. See Agreement, Assumpsit, Fraud, Trust, Will.

As to what things may be done by parol without deed, the following determinations may deserve notice.

An use will not pass by parol without deed; but Chief Justice Pemberton said it would be a good trust or chancery use, if for money. 2 Show. 156. A parol release is good to discharge a debt by simple contract. Arg. 2 Show. 417.

A promise merely executory on both parts; as if I promise B. 5s. if he goes to Paul's, before B. goes, I may discharge him, and so shall discharge myself of payment of the 5s., for no debt was yet due, nor any thing executed on either side. 3 Lev. 238. An agreement in writing, since the statute of frauds and perjuries, may be discharged by parol. Vern. 240. A rent assigned in lieu of dower may be by parol without deed, though it be a freehold created de novo; and though a rent lies in grant; because this is not properly a grant, but an appointment. 12 Mod. 201. Lessee for years surrendered to the lessor by parol reserving rent; adjudged this was a good reservation upon the contract, and that an action of debt would lie for the rent after the first day of payment incurred, though the reservation was by way of contract, and without any deed. 3 Salk. 312. pl. 7.

If one has a bill of exchange, he may authorize another to indorse his name upon it, by parol; and when that is done, it is all one as if he had done it himself. 12 Mod. 564. See Bill of Exchange.

An insurance was made from Archangel to the Downs, and from the Downs to Leghorn, but there was a parol agreement at the same time that the policy should not commence till the ship came to such a place, and it was held that the parol agreement should avoid (or defeat) the writing; cited per Holt, C. J. as adjudged in Pemberton's time. 2 Salk. 444, 445. See Insurance.

If a thing is granted by a writing, which is grantable by parol, it may be revoked by parol. Vide 10 Mod. 74.

Deputation of an office is in its own nature grantable by parol; and therefore though it should happen to be granted by writing, yet since it is in itself grantable by parol, it may be revoked by parol. 10 Mod. 74.

PAROLS, or pleadings, are the mutual altercations between the plaintiff and defendant; which at present are set down and delivered into the proper office in writing, though formerly they were usually put in by their counsel ore tenus, or viva voce, in court, and then minuted down by the chief clerks, or prothonotaries; whence in our old law French, the pleadings are frequently denominated the parol. 3 Comm. 293. See Pleadings.

Parol is sometimes joined with lease, as lease parol, i. e. lease per parol, a lease by word of mouth, to distinguish it from a lease in writing. Cowell.

PAROL ARREST. Any justice of peace may, by word of mouth, authorize any one to arrest another who is guilty of a breach of the peace in his presence, &c. Dalt. 117. See Arrest.

PAROL DEMURRER. A plea or privilege formerly allowed an infant sued concerning lands which came to him by descent; whereon the court gave judgment quod loquela predicta remaneat, quousque the infant attained the age of twenty-one years. And where the age was granted on parol demurrer, (which might happen on the suggestion of either party, 3 Comm. 300,) the writ did not abate, but the plea was put sine die, until the infant was of full age; and then there was a re-summons. 2 Lill. Abr. 283; 2 Inst. 258; Rast. Entr. 383.

Parol demurrer was allowed in some real actions, and might be founded on the non-age of either party, but since they have been abolished, with the exception of dower and quare impedit, there is now no real action in which, if still existing, it could be pleaded; for in a writ of dower the heir never was allowed his age; for it was necessary that the widow's claim should be immediately determined, else she might want a present subsistence. 1 Roll. Abr. 137. Neither was it permitted an infant patron in a quare impedit, since the law held it necessary and expedient that the church should be immediately filled. 1 Roll. Abr. 138.

In personal actions the privilege extended to the defendant only, and that in very few instances; and it appears to be altogether taken away by the 1 H. 4 c. 47. § 10 which enacts that the parol shall not demur where any action, suit, or other proceeding for the payment of debts, or any other purpose, shall be commenced by or against an infant, either alone or with any other person.

PAROL EVIDENCE. See Evidence, II.

PARRICIDE, Patricida.] He who kills his father or mother. Law Lat. Dict. It is also used for the crime of killing.

By the Roman law, parricide, or the murder of one's parents or children, was punished in a much severer manner than any other kind of homicide. After being scourged, the delinquents were sewed up in a leather sack, with a live dog, a cock, a viper, and an ape, and so cast into the sea. Solon, it is true, in his laws, made none against parricide; apprehending it impossible that any one should be guilty of so unnatural a barbarity. And the Persians, according to Herodotus, entertained the same notion when they adjudged all persons who killed their reputed parents to be bastards. And, upon some such reason as this, must we account for the omission of an exemplary punishment for this crime in our English laws; which treat it no otherwise than as simple murder, unless the child was also the servant of his parents. 1 Hal. P. C. 380.

For though the breach of natural relation was unobserved, yet the breach of civil or ecclesiastical connections, when coupled with murder, formerly denominated it a new offence, no less than a species of treason, called parva proditio, or petit treason; which, however, was nothing else but an aggravated degree of murder; although, on account of the violation of private allegiance, it was stigmatized as an inferior species of treason. And, in the ancient Gothic constitution, the breach both of natural and civil relations are ranked in the same class with crimes against the state and sovereign. 4 Comm. 202, 203. Petit treason, however, is now reduced to the crime of murder. See Homicide, III. 4; and Treason.

PARSON.

PERSONA ECCLESIE.] One that hath full possession of all the rights of a parochial church. He is called parson, persona, because by his person the church, which is an invisible body, is represented; and he is in himself a body corporate, in order to protect and defend the rights of the church (which he personates) by a perpetual succession. 1 Inst. 300. It has been also said, that he is called parson, as he is bound, by virtue of his office, in propria persona servare Decem. Flata, 9. c. 18. He is sometimes called the rector or governor of the church; but the appellation of parson is the most legal, as well as the most beneficial and honourable title that a parish priest can enjoy; because such a one, (as Coke observes, and he only, is said vicem seu personam ecclesie gerere. 1 Comm. c. 11. p. 384.

Parson properly signifies the rector of a parish church, because during the time of his incumbency he represents the church, and in the eye of the law sustains the person thereof, as well in suing as in being sued in any action touching the same. God. 185.

The word parson, in a large sense, includes all clergymen having spiritual presentments.

There may be two parsons in one church; one of the one moiety, and the other of the other; and a part of the church and town allotted to each; and there may be two, that make but one parson in a church, presented by one patron. 1 Inst. 17, 18.

A parson hath the entire fee of his church; and where it is said he hath not the right of fee-simple, that is understood as to bringing a temporal writ of right. Cro. Car. 582. And in the time of the parson, the patron hath nothing to do with the church; but if the parson wastes the inheritance thereof to his own private use, in cutting trees, &c. his patron may have a prohibition, so that, to some purposes, he hath an interest during the parson's time. 11 H. 6. 4; 11 Rep. 4.

PARSON, I.

- I. The Distinction between a Parson (or Rector); and a Vicar.
- II. The Method of becoming a Parson or Vicar; and of their Qualifications and Duties.
- III. How one may cease to be a Parson or Vicar.

I. THOUGH a parson has regularly during his life the freehold in himself of the parsonage house, the glebe, the tithes, and other dues; yet these are sometimes appropriated; that is to say, the benefice is perpetually annexed to some spiritual corporation, either sole or aggregate, being the patron of the living; which the law esteems equally capable of providing for the service of the church, as any single private clergyman. See Appropriation.

The ancient appropriating corporations, or religious houses, were wont to depute one of their own body to perform divine service, and administer the sacraments in those parishes, of which the society thus became the parson. This officiating minister was in reality no more than a curate, deputy, or vicergerent of the appropriator, and therefore called vicarius or vicar. His stipend was at the discretion of the appropriator, who was however bound of common right to find somebody, qui illis de temporalibus, episcopo de spiritualibus, debeat respondere. Schd. Lth. c. 11. l. 1. But this was done in so scandalous a manner, and the parishes suffered so much by the neglect of the appropriators, that the Legislature was forced to interpose; and, accordingly, it is enacted by the 15 R. 2. c. 6. that in all appropriations of churches, the diocesan bishop shall ordain (in proportion to the value of the church) a competent sum to be distributed among the poor parishioners annually; and that the vicarage shall be sufficiently endowed. It seems the parishes were frequently sufferers, not only by the want of divine service, but also by withholding those alms, for which, among other purposes, the payment of tithes was originally imposed; and therefore, in this act, a pension is directed to be distributed among the poor parochians, as well as a sufficient stipend to the vicar. But he, being liable to be removed at the pleasure of the appropriator, was not likely to insist too rigidly on the legal sufficiency of the stipend; and therefore, by the 4 Hen. 1. c. 12. it is ordained, that the vicar shall be a secular person, not a member of any religious house; that he shall be vicar perpetual, not removable at the caprice of the monastery; and that he shall be canonically instituted and inducted, and be sufficiently endowed, at the discretion of the ordinary, for these three express purposes: to do divine service; to inform the people; and to keep hospitality.

From this statute we may date the origin of the present vicarages; for, before this time, the vicar was nothing more than a temporary curate; and when the church was appropriated to a monastery, he was generally one of their own body; that is, one of the regular clergy; for the monks, who lived secundum regulas of their respective houses or societies, were denominated regular clergy, in contradistinction to the parochial clergy, who performed their ministry in the world, in secula; and who, from thence, were called secular clergy.

All the tithes or dues of the church of common right belong to the rector; or to the appropriator or impropriator, who have the same rights as the rector, and the vicar is entitled only to that portion which is expressed in his endowment; or what his predecessors have immemorially enjoyed by prescription, which is equivalent to a grant or endowment.

The endowments, in consequence of these statutes, have usually been by a portion of the glebe, or land, belonging to the parsonage, and a particular share of the tithes, which the appropriators found it most troublesome to collect, and which are therefore generally called privy or small tithes; the greater, or predial, tithes being still reserved to their own use. But one and the same rule was not observed in the endowment of all vicarages. Hence some are more liberally, and some more scantily, endowed: and hence the tithes of many things, as wood in particular, are in some parishes rectorial, and in some vicarial, tithes. 1 Comm. c. 11.

These endowments frequently invest the vicar with some part of the great tithes; therefore the words rectorial and vicarial tithes have no definite signification: but great and small tithes are technical terms; and which are, or ought to be, accurately defined and distinguished by the law. See title Tithes.

The distinction therefore of a parson and vicar is this: The parson has for the most part the whole right to all the ecclesiastical dues in his parish; but a vicar has generally an appropriator over him, entitled to the best part of the profits, to whom he is in effect perpetual curate, with a standing salary. Though in some places the vicarage has been considerably augmented by a large share of the great tithes; which augmentations were greatly assisted by the 29 Car. 2. c. 8. enacted in favour of poor vicars and curates; which rendered such temporary augmentations (when made by the appropriators) perpetual.

A vicar indeed must necessarily have an appropriator over him, or a sinecure rector, who in some books is considered as, and called, an appropriator. Of benefices, some have never been appropriated; consequently, in those there can be no vicar, and the incumbent is rector, and entitled to all the dues of the church. Some were appropriated to secular ecclesiastical corporations, which appropriations still exist, except perhaps some few which may have been dissolved; others were appropriated to the houses of the regular clergy; all which appropriations, at the dissolution of monasteries, were transferred to the crown; and, in the hands of the king or his grantees, are now called impropriations; but in some appropriated churches no perpetual vicar has ever been endowed; in that case, the officiating minister is appointed by the appropriator or impropriator, and is called a perpetual curate. 1 Comm. c. 11. in n.

In 1 Hugard's Rep. 157. Lord Stowell, after observing that the term "appropriation" is almost entirely confined to the English church, and the English canon law, states that it was of two kinds: the one pleno jure sive utroque jure tam in spiritualibus quam in temporalibus; the other in temporalibus only, the want of distinguishing between which had led to great confusion. In the first, that in which both the spiritual and temporal interests of the church were annexed to the house, it had the cure of souls, and performed the duties by its own members, or mere stipendiary curates, from whence probably sprung the perpetual curacies of the present day. In the second kind, the cure of souls resided in an endowed perpetual vicar, who was instituted by the bishop. See further titles Vicar, Vicarage.

II. THE method of becoming a parson or vicar is much the same. To both there are four requisites necessary: holy orders, presentation, institution, and induction. The method of conferring the holy orders of deacon and priest, according to the liturgy and canons, is foreign to the present purpose, any farther than as they are necessary requisites to make a complete parson or vicar. See 1 Burn's Eccl. Law, 103. By common law, a deacon of any age, might be instituted and inducted to a parsonage or vicarage; but it was enacted by the 13 Eliz. c. 12. that no person under 23 years of age, and in deacon's orders, should be presented to any benefice with cure; and if he were not ordained priest within one year after his induction, he should be ipso facto deprived: afterwards, by the 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 4. that no person should be capable of being admitted to any benefice, unless he had been first ordained a priest; and then he is, in the language of the law, a clerk in orders. And now, by the 44 Geo. 3. c. 43. for enforcing the due observance of the canons and rubric, respecting the age of persons admitted into the sacred orders of deacon and priest, it is enacted, that no one shall be admitted a deacon before the age of 23, or a priest before 24, or be capable of holding a benefice. If orders, or a licence to preach, be obtained by money or corrupt practices, (which seems to be the true, though not the common notion, of simony,) the person giving such orders forfeits 40*l.* and the person receiving 10*l.* and is incapable of any ecclesiastical preferment for seven years afterwards. Stat. 31 Eliz. c. 6.

Any clerk may be presented to a parsonage or vicarage; that is, the patron, to whom the advowson of the church belongs, may offer his clerk to the bishop of the diocese to be instituted. A layman also may be presented; but he must take priest's orders before his admission. 1 Burn's Eccl. Law, 103. As to advowsons, or the right of presentation, which are a species of private property; see title Advowson.

But when a clerk is presented, the bishop may refuse him upon many accounts. As, if the patron is excommunicated, and remains in contempt forty days. 2 Roll. Abr. 355. Or if the clerk be unfit; Glan. l. 13. c. 20; which unfitness is of several kinds. First, with regard to his person; as if he be a bastard (though that incapacity seems now exploded, see Bastard); an outlaw, an excommunicate, an alien, under age, or the like. 2 Roll. Abr. 356; 2 Inst. 263; Stats. 3 Ric. 2. c. 3; 7 Ric. 2. c. 12. Next, with regard to his faith or morals; as for any particular heresy, or vice that is malum in se, but if the bishop alleges only in generals, as that he is schismaticus inveteratus, or objects a fault that is malum prohibitum, merely as haunting taverns, playing at unlawful games, or the like, it is not good cause of refusal. 5 Rep. 58. Or, lastly, the clerk may be unfit to discharge the pastoral office, for want of learning. In any of which cases the bishop may refuse the clerk.

In case the refusal is for heresy, schism, inability of learning, or other matter of ecclesiastical cognizance, there the bishop must give notice to the patron of such his cause of refusal, who, being usually a layman, is not supposed to have knowledge of it; else he cannot present by lapse: but, if the cause be temporal, there he is not bound to give notice. 2 Inst. 632. title Advowson, II.

If the patron be not a layman, or more correctly, if he present in a spiritual right, the bishop, it seems, is not bound to give him notice, though the cause of refusal be of a spiritual nature. Indeed, the notice would be useless, because such a patron, who ought to know whether his presentee be fit or not, and who in presenting an unfit person, is not supposed to have erred unintentionally, cannot without the bishop's consent, revoke his presentation and present a clerk better qualified. See 1 Burn's Eccl. Law, 157.

If an action at law be brought by the patron against the bishop for refusing his clerk, the bishop must assign the cause. If the cause be of a temporal nature and the fact admitted, (as, for instance, outlawry,) the judges of the king's courts must determine its validity, or whether it be sufficient cause of refusal; but if the fact be denied, it must be determined by a jury. If the cause be of a spiritual nature, (as, heresy, particularly alleged,) the fact, if denied, shall also be determined by a jury: and if the fact be admitted or found, the court, upon consultation, and advice of learned divines, shall decide its sufficiency. 2 Inst. 632. If the cause be want of learning, the bishop need not specify in what points the clerk is deficient, but only allege that he is deficient; for the 9 Edm. 2. st. 1. c. 13. is express, that the examination of the fitness of a person presented to a benefice belongs to the ecclesiastical judge. 5 Rep. 58; 3 Lev. 313. But because it would be nugatory in this case to demand the reason of refusal from the ordinary, if the patron were bound to abide by his determination, who has already pronounced his clerk unfit; therefore, if the bishop returns the clerk to be minus sufficiens in literaturâ, the court shall write to the metropolitan, to re-examine him, and certify his qualifications; which certificate of the archbishop is final. 2 Inst. 632.

If the bishop has no objections, but admits the patron's presentation, the clerk so admitted is next to be instituted by him; which is a kind of investiture of the spiritual part of the benefice; for by institution the care of the souls of the parish is committed to the charge of the clerk. When a vicar is instituted, he (besides the usual forms) formerly took, if required by the bishop, an oath of perpetual residence, according to the maxim of law, that vicarius non habet vicarium, and, as the non-residence of the appropriators was the cause of the perpetual establishment of vicarages, the law judged it very improper for them to defeat the end of their constitution, and by absence to create the very mischief which they were appointed to remedy; especially as, if any profits arose from putting in a curate and living at a distance from the parish, the appropriator, who was the real parson, had undoubtedly the elder title to them. And it appeared that the bishop could not dispense with the vicar's oath, which was, that he will be resident upon his vicarage, unless dispensed withal by his diocesan. 1 Burn's Eccl. Law, 148.

However this oath was taken away by the 57 G. 3. c. 99. § 34. by which statute the bishop is enabled to grant a licence of non-residence in certain enumerated cases.

When the ordinary is also the patron, and confers the living, the presentation and institution are one and the same act, and are called a collation to a benefice. See title Advowson, I. By institution or collation the church is full, so that there can be no fresh presentation till another vacancy at least in the case of a common patron; but the church is not full against the king, till induction; nay, even if a clerk is instituted upon the king's presentation, the crown may revoke it before induction, and present another clerk. Co. Litt. 344. Upon institution also the clerk may enter on the parsonage house and glebe, and take the tithes; but he cannot grant or let them, or bring an action for them, till induction. 1 Comm. c. 11. p. 391. See further, title Institution.

Induction is performed by a mandate from the bishop to the archdeacon, who usually issues out a precept to other clergymen to perform it for him. It is done by giving the clerk corporal possession of the church, as by holding the ring of the door, tolling a bell, or the like; and is a form required by law, with intent to give all the parishioners notice, and sufficient certainty of their new minister, to whom their tithes are to be paid. This therefore is the investiture of the temporal part of the benefice, as institution is of the spiritual. See further title Induction.

When a clerk is thus presented, instituted, and inducted into a rectory, he is then, and not before, in full and complete possession, and is called in law persona impersonata, or parson impersonate. Co. Litt. 300.

The duties of a parson or vicar are principally of ecclesiastical cognizance; see title Preaching; those only excepted which are laid upon him by statute. And those are indeed so numerous, that it is impracticable to recite them here with any tolerable conciseness or accuracy; they are to be gathered chiefly from such authors as have compiled treatises expressly upon this subject; though these, it is remarked by Blackstone, are not to be relied on with certainty.

The article of residence is now regulated in England by the 57 G. 3. c. 99. and in Ireland by the 5 G. 4. c. 91. Legal residence is not only in the parish, but also in the parsonage house, if there be one: for it hath been resolved, that the statute intended residence, not only for serving the cure, and for hospitality; but also for maintaining the house, that the successor also may keep hospitality there. 6 Rep. 21. And if there be no parsonage house, it hath been holden that the incumbent is bound to hire one, in the same parish, to answer the purposes of residence. See Comp. 429; 5 Burr. 2722; and title Residence.

For the more effectual promotion of this important duty of residence in the parochial clergy in England, a provision is made by the 17 Geo. 3. c. 53. for raising money upon ecclesiastical benefices, and to be expended in rebuilding or repairing the houses belonging to such benefices.

This statute enables the incumbent, when there is no parsonage house, or where it is so ruinous as not to be repaired with one year's income of the living, on a certificate of a surveyor on oath, before a justice, of the state of the buildings on the glebe, and of timber fit for repair, which, with an account on oath of the annual value of the living, is to be laid before the patron and ordinary, to borrow of any person, with the consent of the patron and ordinary, upon mortgage for twenty-five years of the revenue of the living, a sum not exceeding two years' clear value, to be laid out in repairs, building, or the purchase of a house. Such mortgage deed shall be registered with the register of the diocese. Mortgagee may recover his interest by distress and sale, or the ordinary may sequester the profits of the living. The money so borrowed shall be paid into the hands of a person appointed by the ordinary, patron, and incumbent, who is to contract and pay for repairs. The annual payments may be apportioned between deceased incumbent, and his successor, by arbitration. The interest of the money so borrowed is to be repaid by the incumbent yearly, and 5*l.* per cent. upon the principal remaining due, or 10*l.* per cent. if he does not reside 20 weeks within a year. And where the income is 100*l.* a year, and the incumbent does not reside 30 weeks within a year, the patron and the ordinary are empowered to borrow and apply money without his consent. Ordinary, patron, and incumbent may purchase a house (with in one mile of the church) and land either under this act, or by exchange of part of the glebe. The governors of Queen Anne's bounty may lend money upon such mortgages at 4*l.* per cent. interest, and 100*l.* upon a living under 50*l.* a year, without any interest. Colleges and other corporations may lend money for this purpose upon their own livings without interest. Where the crown is patron, the consent of the treasury, &c. is requisite. Lords of manors, &c. empowered to grant leases for building such houses. The statute contains the forms and modes of proceeding to fulfil its various purposes. As under this statute the money borrowed was directed to be discharged by paying 5*l.* per cent. yearly upon the principal remaining due; it was directed by 21 Geo. 3. c. 66. such instalments should be calculated on the original sum advanced, so that it should be paid, at the farthest, within twenty years.

By 43 Geo. 3. c. 107. the governors of Queen Anne's bounty are empowered to build parsonage houses on livings assigned by that fund; and by 43 Geo. 3. c. 108. persons possessed in their own right may, by deed enrolled, or by will executed three months before their decease, give lands not exceeding five acres, or personal property not exceeding 500*l.* for building parsonages (or churches), &c. See Churches.

Various acts have been passed for the effectuating of the like beneficent purposes in Ireland, viz. 43 Geo. 3. c. 106; 44 Geo. 3. c. 60; 48 Geo. 3. c. 65. For the acts for building additional churches, see Mortmain; see also Churches, First part.

III. ALTHOUGH there is but one way, whereby one may become a parson or vicar; there are many circumstances, which, by his death, by which one may cease to be so. By resignation, in taking another benefice. For by 21 Hen. 8. c. 13. if any one having a benefice of 8*l.* per annum or upward, according to the present valuation in the king's books, (see Par. 4*l.* c. 6.) accepts any other, the first shall be adjudged void, unless he obtains a dispensation; which no one is entitled to have but the chaplains of the king and others therein mentioned; the brethren and sons of lords and knights (but not of baronets, as that dignity did not exist at the time of the 21 Hen. 8.); and doctors and bachelors of divinity and law, admitted by the universities of this realm. See Chaplain, Plurality. And a vacancy thus made, for want of a dispensation, is called cession. See this title.

By consecration; for when a clerk is promoted to a bishopric, all his other preferments are void the instant that he is consecrated. See Bishops. But there is a method, by the favour of the crown, of holding such livings in commendam. Commenda, or reclusa commendata, is a living commended by the crown to the care of a clerk to hold it as a proper pastor is provided for it. This may be temporary for one, two, or three years; or perpetual; being a kind of dispensation to avoid the vacancy of the living, and is called a commenda retinere. There is also a commenda recipere, which is to take a benefice de novo, in the bishop's own gift, or the gift of some other patron consenting to the same; and this is the same to him as institution and induction are to another clerk. See further, tit. Commendam.

By resignation. But this is of no avail, till accepted by the ordinary, into whose hands the resignation must be made. Cro. Jac. 198. See further, Resignation.

By deprivation; either, first, by sentence declaratory in the ecclesiastical courts, for fit and sufficient causes allowed by the common law; such as attainder of treason or felony; Dyer, 108; Jenk. 210; or conviction of other infamous crimes in the king's courts; for heresy, infidelity, (Fitz. Ab. tit. Trial, 34.) gross immorality, and the like; or, secondly, in pursuance of divers penal statutes, which declare the benefice void, for some non-feasance or neglect, or else some malfeasance or crime. As for simony, by 31 Eliz. c. 6; 12 Ann. st. 2. c. 12; see Simony;—for maintaining any doctrine in derogation of the king's supremacy, or of the thirty-nine articles, or of the book of common prayer; by 1 Eliz. c. 1, 2; 13 Eliz. c. 12;—for neglecting, after institution, to read the liturgy and articles in the church, or make the declarations against popery, or take the abjuration oath; 13 Eliz. c. 12; 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 4; 1 Geo. 1. st. 2. c. 6;—for using any other form of prayer than the liturgy of the Church of England; 1 Eliz. c. 2; or for absenting himself sixty days in one year from a benefice belonging to a popish patron, to which the clerk was presented by either of the universities; 1 W. & M. st. 1. c. 26; see Papist: in all which and similar cases the benefice is ipso facto void, without any formal sentence of deprivation. 6 Rep. 29, 30; 1 Comm. c. 11.

And by the 57 Geo. 3. c. 99. § 33. if any spiritual person shall continue under sequestration two years, or incur three sequestrations within that period, his benefice shall become ipso facto void.

By the above act (§ 2.) spiritual persons cannot farm above eighty acres of land without the consent of the bishop, or (§ 3.) engage in trade; but (§ 3.) they may keep schools or be tutors.

As to the charging of benefices, see Lease, II.

PARSONAGE, personatus personagium.] Is sometimes taken for a dignitary in a church, and sometimes for the benefice itself. Correll.

Parsonage, or rectory, is a parish church endowed with a house, glebe, tithes, &c.; or a certain portion of lands, tithes, and offerings, established by law, for the maintenance of the minister who hath the cure of souls; and though properly a parsonage or rectory doth consist of glebe land and tithes, yet it may be a rectory, though it have no glebe but the church and churchyard; also there may be neither glebe nor tithes, but annual payments in lieu thereof. Par. Conc. 180.

The rights to the parsonage and church lands are of several natures; for the parson hath a right to the possession; the patron hath the right of presentation; and the ordinary a right of investiture, &c. But the rights of the patron and ordinary are only collateral rights; neither of them being capable of possessing or retaining the church themselves; though no charge can be laid on the church or parsonage but by the consent and agreement of all of them. Hughes's Pars. Law, 188. See Appropriation, Parson.

PARSON MORTAL. The rector of a church instituted and inducted for his own life, was called persona mortalis; and any collegiate or conventional body, to whom the church was for ever appropriated, was termed persona immortalis. Cart dar. Radmg. Ms. f 182. See Appropriation, Parson.

PARTES FINIS NIHI HABUERUNT, &c. The parties to the fine had nothing. Was an exception taken against a fine levied. 3 Rep. 88. See Fine of Lands.

PARTICEPS CRIMINIS. See Accessory.

PARTIES. Are those who are named in a deed, &c. as parties to it; or they who make any deed, and they to whom it is made. Cowell. See Deeds, Estoppel, Fine of Lands.

PARTITION, partitio. The dividing land descended by the common law or custom among co-heirs or parceners, where there are two at least. In Kent, where the land is of gavelkind nature, they call their partition shifting, from the Saxon shiftan, to divide (in Latin hercisseve.) See further, as to partition by joint-tenants, tenants in common, or parceners, or co-heirs by gavelkind, tithes. Gavelkind, Joint-tenants, Parceners, Tenants in Common.

PARTITIONE FACIENDA, mentioned in 31 Hen. 8. c. 1.] A writ that lies for those who hold lands or tenements pro indiviso, and would sever to every one his part, against those who refuse to join in partition as coparceners, tenants in gavelkind, &c. *Old. PARTNERS. Are where two or more persons agree to come into any trade or bargain in certain proportions agreed upon.

I. In order to constitute a partnership a communion of profit and loss between the parties is essential; and this is the true criterion to judge by, where the question is, whether persons are partners or not. 1 H. Bla. 43, 48.

The shares of the parties must be joint, but it is not necessary they should be equal; and the parties jointly interested in the purchase must also be jointly interested in the future sale. Ib.

Partnership, in its extended and complete sense, is a voluntary contract between two or more persons for joining together their money, goods, labour, and skill, or either or all of them, upon an agreement that the gain or loss shall be divided proportionally between them. Wats. on Partn. 1.

Where one takes a moiety of the profits indefinitely, he shall by operation of law be made liable to losses. 2 H. Bla. 247.

Where A., B. and C. had entered into an agreement to purchase goods in the name of A. only, and to take aliquot shares of the purchase, but it did not appear that they were jointly to resell the goods; the court of C. P. (Wilson, J. diss.) held, that on failure of A., the ostensible buyer, B. and C. were not answerable as partners with him. 1 H. Bla. 37.

A. and B. general partners in trade, being indebted to C. for advances paid by him, on the joint account of the three, in the purchase of tobacco, which had been sent out on a special joint adventure to Spain; with a view to liquidate that balance C. agreed with A. and B. to join with them in another adventure to Lisbon, of which he was to have one moiety; and it was agreed that A. and B. should purchase goods for the adventure, to be shipped on board a certain vessel, and pay for them, and the returns of such adventure were to be made to C. to go in liquidation of his demand on them; but C. was to bear his proportion of the loss, if any, and also to receive his share of the profit, if any, after reimbursing himself out of the returns the amount of his advances previously made to A. and B. The Court of King's Bench held, that this agreement constituted a partnership between the three in the adventure, at and from the time of the purchase of the goods for the adventure by A. and B. although C. did not go with them to make the purchase, nor authorize them to purchase on the joint account; but A. and B. alone, in fact, made the purchase; and although C. also purchased in his own name, and paid for goods to be sent out at the same time, in which B. was to share the profit or loss, and these goods were consigned for sales, and returns to the same person, who went out as supercargo on the joint account of the three. Gouthwaite v. Duckworth, 12 East, 421.

Plaintiff and defendant had been engaged in running a coach from B. to L.; plaintiff finding horses for one part of the road, and defendant for the other; and the profits of each party were calculated according to the number of miles covered by his own horses; the plaintiff received the fares and rendered an account thereof to the defendant every week. Held, that plaintiff and defendant were partners. 2 Bing. 170.

The bare consent of the parties is sufficient to contract the relation of a partnership; and such consent may be testified either in express terms, as by articles of co-partnership, or the assent may be tacit, and to be implied solely from the acts of the parties.

A partnership may legally subsist as between individuals and the world, and yet not as between the individuals themselves. For the former purpose, appearing as partners or participating in the profits of a trade is sufficient; for the latter, the parties must have joint shares in the stock, and must be jointly interested in the general trade or the particular adventure.

Thus where A., having neither money nor credit, offers to B. that if he will order with him certain goods to be shipped upon an adventure, if any profit should arise from them B. should have half for his trouble. B. having lent his credit on this contract, and ordered the goods on their joint account, which were furnished accordingly, and afterwards paid for by B. alone; held, that he was entitled to recover back such payment in assumpsit against A. who had not accounted to him for the profits; such contract not constituting a partnership as between themselves, but only an agreement for a compensation for trouble and credit, though B. were liable as a partner to third persons, creditors. 4 East, 144. And see 5 Taunt. 74; 2 B. & C. 101; 4 B. & C. 867; 2 Camp. 46.

So where A. and B., ship agents at different ports, entered into an agreement to share in certain proportions the profits of their respective commissions, and the discount on traders' bills employed by them in repairing the ships consigned to them, &c. By this agreement they were held to become liable as partners to all persons with whom either contracted as such agent, though the agreement provided that neither should be answerable for the acts or losses of the other, but each for his own. 2 H. Bla. 235.

Acts subsequent to the time of delivering goods on a contract, may be admitted as evidence to show that the goods were delivered on a partnership account, if it were do at the time of the contract; but if it clearly appears that no partnership existed at the time of the contract, no subsequent act by any person, who may afterwards become a partner, (not even an acknowledgment that he is liable, on his accepting a bill of exchange drawn on them as partners for the very goods, will make him liable in an action for goods sold and delivered; though he will be liable in an action on the bill of exchange. 4 T. R. 720.

A mining speculation, although differing in some respects from a common partnership, is yet in the nature of a trading concern; and the interest of a bankrupt in the partnership is, in the first place, applicable to satisfy his debt to the firm. Fereday v. Wightwick, 1 Russ. & M. 45.

With respect to what constitutes a partnership as regards the world, partners may be considered as being of three characters or denominations,—viz. ostensible, secret or dormant, and nominal partners.

An actual ostensible partner is a party who not only participates in the profits and contributes to the losses, but who appears and exhibits himself to the world as a person connected with the partnership, and as forming a component member of the firm. A dormant partner is likewise a participant in the profits and contributor to the losses of the trade, but his name being suppressed and concealed from the firm, his interest is consequently not apparent. A nominal partner has not any actual interest in the trade or its profits; but, by allowing his name to be used, he holds himself out to the world as apparently having an interest. Gow on Partners, 12.

An actual ostensible partner quid partner, is clearly answerable for the debts and engagements of the partnership.

And with respect to a secret or dormant partner, it may be taken down as a clear and well-established principle of law, founded upon reasons of policy, that whoever has a right to share in the profits of a trade or particular adventure, or has a specific interest in the profits themselves, as profits, be chargeable as a partner to third persons, in respect to transactions arising out of the trade or particular adventure, in the profits of which he is to participate. The reason why such a person becomes, by implication and operation of law, connected with the character of partner, is, that by the effect of the agreement for a partnership, the party participant takes from the creditors a part of that fund which is the proper security to them for the satisfaction of their debts, and upon which they rely for payment. Per D. Gwyn, 2 Bl. 98. Another reason assigned for subjecting a dormant partner to responsibility is, that if he were exempted he would receive an undue interest for his capital, without its being attended with any risk. Per Lord Mansfield, 1 Dougl. 571.

A distinction, however, prevails between an interest in the profits themselves, as profits, and the payment of a given sum of money in proportion to a given quantum of the profits, as the reward of, and as a compensation for, labour. For instance, a remuneration made to a traveller, or other clerk or agent, by a portion of the sums received by or for his principal, in lieu of a fixed salary, does not subject the traveller, clerk, or agent, to liability as a partner, such remuneration being merely a mode of payment adopted to increase or secure exertion. So a factor, receiving for his commission a percentage on the amount of the price of the goods sold by him, instead of a certain sum, proportioned to the quantity of the goods sold, does not thereby become a partner. 3 Wils. 17. And see 4 B. & A. 670.

II. PARTNERS are, at law, joint tenants of their merchandize; not only of that particular part which was brought into the partnership at the time of its formation, but they continue so to carry out their co-partnership dealings, whatever changes or addition may be made to it in the course of trade. The joint tenancy created by the contract of partnership differs, however, in one of its chief characteristics, from an ordinary joint-tenancy, because, as between partners, there is no jus accrescendi, or right of survivorship, a quality which, being applied to a possession per my et per tout at common law, always accompanies a joint-tenancy. This denial to the survivor of any benefit arising from survivorship, is a maxim of the mercatoria, of which the courts will take notice without being specially pleaded. 1 Ld. Raym. 281. Besides the purchase of joint stock, partners are sometimes obliged to invest part of their capital in real property; for it very frequently happens that joint undertakings require the possession of lands or houses, in order to carry on the intended trade or speculation. Wherever that is the case, and the lands or houses purchased with the joint capital are held for the purpose of, and as the substratum for, the partnership concern, the partners are, in reality, and to all beneficial intents, tenants in common thereof, without regard to the form of the conveyance, the individual to whom it is made, or the length of time for which the interest is to endure.

Courts of law, it is true, must look to the legal estate; they will consider the survivor of two joint-tenants as invariably entitled to the whole by survivorship; and if lands are conveyed to one of several partners, they will invest him with all the rights of a tenant in severalty, excluding from their attention the funds from which the lands were bought, and the object of the purchase. But courts of equity, unfettered by technical rules, seek to effectuate the intention of the parties, and are guided by the justice of each particular case; they consequently conceive that there is a tenancy in common between partners of real property, and they decree the person in whom the legal estate vests to be a trustee for those beneficially interested. In equity, therefore, real estates bought by a commercial partnership for the purpose of the partnership fund. 3 Bro. C. C. 199; 1 Swan, 508, 521.

But although, during the lives of the partners, freehold estates purchased by a commercial partnership as an article of stock, are considered as forming a portion of the joint fund; yet, on the death of any of the partners, it does not appear to be clearly established whether they pass as real estate, or as stock; although, according to modern decisions, it may perhaps be considered as settled that the right of survivorship does not exist even in such a case. See 3 Bro. C. C. 200; Eden's n. Formerly, indeed, it was held, that lands purchased for the purpose of a partnership concern were in all respects a portion of the partnership fund, and were therefore distributed as personal property. 1 Perm. 217; 3 P. W. 158; 9 Ves. 597. And although it was held by Lord Thurlow, (see 7 Ves. 425,) and his decision was twice subsequently recognized by Sir W. Grant, (7 Ves. 453; 9 Ves. 500,) that a co-partnership agreement to alter the nature of real property must be express; yet the principle on which that decision is founded is very doubtful, if not expressly overruled.

In the case of Townsend v. Devaynes (Mont. on Partners, n. 97), Lord Eldon decided, that the freehold of premises purchased by partners for the purpose of carrying on the business in which they are engaged, is, on the death of one partner, to be considered as personal estate. The same noble and learned lord is in another case (2 Dow. P. C. 242) represented to have stated it as his opinion, that all property involved in a partnership concern ought to be considered as personal. See Gow on Partnership, 31—35.

III. It may be laid down, that a partner may, by his own acts, bind his co-partners in all transactions relating to the partnership.

Whatever be the nature of any contract entered into by one partner, if it be within the scope and have reference to the copartnership, it will bind the rest. 7 T. R. 207; 1 Salk. 292; Hope v. Cust, cited 1 East, 48, 7 East, 210. And the act or assurance of one partner, made with reference to business transacted by the firm, will bind all the partners, even although it be out of the regular course, and be contrary to an express arrangement among themselves, because it is within the scope of his authority. See 2 B. & A. 679.

One partner, however, cannot bind his co-partners by deed. 7 T. R. K. B. 207; 10 East, 413. But he may by drawing or accepting bills of exchange. 7 T. R. 210.

Where, however, one of several partners, with the privacy of the others, drew bills in his own name in favour of persons who advanced him the amount, which he applied to the use of the partnership, it was held, that though the parties were not jointly liable on the bills, they might be jointly sued by the payees for money lent. 3 Camp. 493. However, if one partner draw bills in his own name, and procure them to be discounted, the party discounting has no remedy, either on the bills or for the money lent, against the other partners, though the proceeds are actually carried to the partnership account; for the money is advanced solely on the credit of the names on the bills. 15 East, 7; 1 Rose, 61.

But if a firm, consisting of several parties, carry on business in the name of one of them, the firm will be bound by the indorsement of that individual on bills indorsed for the partnership account. 8 B. & C. 427. And see further, Bac. Ab. ubi supra.

Two (of three) partners who had contracted a debt prior to the admission of the third partner into the firm, cannot bind him without his assent by accepting a bill drawn by the creditor in their joint names; but such security is fraudulent, and void as against the third partner, and cannot be recovered in an action against the three, wherein one only of the original partners pleaded to the action. 1 East, 48. See Gregson v. Hutton, B. R. East, 22 Geo. 3. and Marsh v. Vansommer, Guildhall, Mich. 1786, (cited) ib. 49; and 10 East, 264; 1 Camp. 405.

If one partner draw or indorse a bill in the partnership firm, it will prima facie bind the firm, although passed by the one partner to a separate creditor in discharge of his own debt; unless there be evidence of covin between such separate debtor and creditor, or at least of the want of authority, either express or implied, in the debtor partner to give the joint security of the firm for his separate debt. But the court of K. B. held, that no sufficient circumstance appeared in this case to raise any presumption adverse to the separate creditor taking such joint security; in a case where the bill appeared to have been drawn in the name of the firm to their own order, eighteen days before the delivery of it to the separate creditor, and to have been accepted and indorsed before such delivery, and to have been drawn for a larger amount than the particular debt; and where, though the indorsement was in fact made by the hand of the debtor partner, yet it did not appear that that fact was known to the separate creditor at the time; and this too in a case where direct evidence might have been given of the covin or want of authority, if it existed. 13 East, 175.

Where a partner borrowed a sum of money, and gave his own security for it, it was held not to become a partnership debt by being applied to partnership purposes with the knowledge of his co-partner. Bevan v. Lewis, 1 Sim. 376.

Where A., B. and C. were engaged in a cotton trade under the firm of A. and B. (C. not being known to the world as a partner,) and A. and B. traded under the same firm as grocers, and a bill given to them in the cotton business was indorsed in the firm common to both partnerships, and given in payment by A. and B. for goods received in their grocery business; the court of K. B. held, that C. was liable to pay the bill to the holders, although the indorsement was unknown to C., of whom the indorsee had no knowledge at the time of the indorsement. 7 East, 209.

Where the consignee of goods (to whom the bill of lading was indorsed in blank) assigned it over as a security for acceptances given by the assignee, not amounting to the value of the goods, and afterwards they became partners in the goods, by an agreement between them that the profits and loss should be equally divided; but the first was to stand guarantee to the other for the solidity of the factors by whom the goods were to be sold; and it appeared by the agreement that the consignor had not been paid for the goods: the assignee of the bill of lading cannot maintain trover against the consignor, if he stop the goods in transitu, on the insolvency of the consignee; for one partner cannot recover those goods which the other could not. 2 T. R. K. B. 674.

But the authority of one partner to bind another by signing bills of exchange and promissory notes in their joint names, is only an implied authority, and may be rebutted by express previous notice to the party taking such security from one of them, that the other would not be liable for it; and thus, though it were represented to the holder by the partner signing such security, that the money advanced on it was raised for the purpose of being applied to the payment of partnership debts; and though the greater part of it were in fact so applied. Nor can he recover against the other partner the amount of the sum so applied to the payment of the partnership debts against such notice. 10 East, 264.

One partner can likewise bind the firm by a guarantee to be answerable for the debt or responsibility of a third person in a matter that relates to the partnership. See 1 East, 53; 15 Ves. 286; 2 Gl. & Jam. 306; 2 B. & A. 673.

Although a partner cannot by deed bring any fresh burden on his co-partners, he may by deed bar him of a right they jointly possess. Thus he may release a debt due to the firm by deed. Seln. N. P. 362; 7 B. Moore, 356. So a receipt from one partner will discharge a debtor from the partnership claim; 2 Stark. 50, S. C.; 6 M. & S. 156; and payment to one partner is payment to all. See 8 B. & C. 132. And an acknowledgment of payment by one partner is conclusive evidence against the demand of the other. 3 B. & A. 163.

Partners being identified in interest, the acts and declarations of any one, with reference to the common object, are the acts and declarations of all, and are binding upon all. And even after a dissolution the admission of one partner is binding upon his co-partner, if it relate to a transaction which occurred during the existence of the partnership. 1 Taunt. 101. But see 7 Price, 198, and 3 Stark. 3.

Independently of commercial transactions, a partner may bind the rest in legal proceedings by releasing a supposed right of action; 7 B. Moore, 356; or by suspending the proceedings. Harwood v. Edwards, cited Gom. on Partn. 63.

But one partner cannot bind his partners by a submission to arbitration. 3 Bing. 101.

IV. THE causes of a dissolution of a partnership may be considered under three general heads:—1st. The act of God. 2. The act of the party; and, 3. The act of operation of law.

A dissolution by the act of God may arise either by the death of one of the partners, whereby the contract of partnership, in the absence of any express stipulation for its continuance, is ipso facto dissolved; 3 Merr. 614; even where the firm consists of more than two, unless provision is made to the contrary. 3 Madd. 254. And see 1 Swansd. 60. And although the partnership be for a term of years, it is dissolved by the death of either partner, if there be no agreement providing against that event. 3 Madd. 251.

A partner may stipulate for the devolution of his interest on another. 9 Ves. 300. But without the express assent of his co-partner, one partner cannot nominate a person to succeed him. Ibid.

Insanity does not, like death, per se, work a dissolution of a partnership. 2 Ves. & B. 303. It appears principally a question of circumstances to be decided by reference to the particular character of the disease, as permanent, or temporary, the terms of the contract and the nature of the undertaking as imposing on the lunatic an obligation of active interference, for the performance of which he is disqualified, or reserving to him a right of inspection, by the suspension of which the safety of his estate may be hazarded. In such cases the jurisdiction of a court of equity is most difficult and delicate, and to be exercised with great caution. Per Lord Eldon, 2 Ves. & B. 303.

Where no term is expressly limited, and there is nothing in the contract of partnership to fix its existence to any particular period, it is dissoluble at the will of either party. 16 Ves. 50; 1 Swanst. 508.

The effect of a marriage of a feme sole partner has never been expressly decided; but on general principles it would most probably be held to operate as a dissolution of the partnership. Wats. on Partn.; and see 1 Swanst. 517, n.

With respect to dissolution by the act of the law, where an undertaking cannot be carried on according to the intent of the articles of copartnership; as if a partnership be formed for carrying into effect a new invention, which, after repeated trials, is found impracticable, a court of equity will dissolve it. 1 Cox's Case, 213.

So where there is great misconduct and abuse of good faith on the part of a partner, a dissolution will be decreed; 2 Ves. 299; 1 Jac. & W. 594; and even at the instance of a single partner, notwithstanding the rest object to it. 1 Cox's Case, 213. So violent and lasting dissension, as where parties refuse to meet each other on matter of business, seems to be a ground upon which a court of equity will decree a dissolution. Le Berenger v. Hamell, 7 Jarman's Convey. 26.

An act of bankruptcy committed by one partner, if followed by a commission and assignment, is a dissolution of the partnership for all purposes as regards the bankrupt partner; all his property being by the Bankrupt Act vested in assignees, who become tenants in common with the other partners in respect of his share of the partnership stock. 4 Burr. 2174; Comp. 471; 6 Ves. 126; 1 Jac. & W. 609.

An execution, likewise, under which all the interest of one partner is seized and sold, is a determination of the partnership as to him; because, whatever interest he possessed is divested out of him, and becomes by the sale vested in the vendee of the sheriff, who is tenant in common with the solvent partners. Sayer v. Bennet, Mont. on Partn. n. 17. And see Comp. 445, and 2 V. & B. 299.

A partnership may likewise be dissolved by an award, and in order to empower arbitrators to direct a dissolution, it is not necessary that they should have an express authority given them by the submission for the purpose. 1 Bl. 475.

V. An action cannot be maintained by several partners for goods sold by one of them living in Guernsey, and packed up by him in a particular manner, for the purpose of smuggling, though the other partners, who resided in England, knew nothing of the sale; for the act of one is, in this respect, the act of all; and as it is a contract by subjects of this country, in contravention of the laws, this case must be considered in the same light as if all the partners resided in England. 4 T. R. 454; and see 4 T. R. 466; 5 T. R. 599.

One of two partners applied trust-money in the trade, without the privity of the other partner; afterwards they separated, and the partnership effects were assigned over to the first, who took on him the debts; this was held to be no payment in discharge of the other partner, but both were liable to make good the trust-money. 5 T. R. 601.

A partnership cannot acquire property in goods acquired by the fraud of one partner, though the other partners were privy to it. 1 Ry. & Moo. 178.

In some respects, an individual partner, or a particular partnership, consisting of two or more such persons as are partners in some larger partnership, may be considered as several persons, in transactions in which the general partnership may happen to be engaged with a correspondent. Per Lynn, C. J. 1 B. & P. 546, 547.

A contract made by two partners to pay a certain sum of money to a third person, equally out of their own private cash, is a joint contract, and they must be jointly sued upon. 1 H. Bla. 236.

Where money is owing to two partners, and after the death of one it is paid to a third person, the surviving partner may maintain an action for money had and received in his own right, and not as survivor. 2 T. R. 476.

If partners, by deed assign all their partnership effects, &c. to trustees for the benefit of their creditors, and some of the separate creditors of one partner do not assent to it, the assignment is fraudulent and void. 8 T. R. 140.

On the dissolution of a partnership between A., B. and C., a power given to A., to receive all debts owing to, and to pay all those owing from, the late partnership, does not authorize him to indorse a bill of exchange in the name of the partnership, though drawn by him in that name, and accepted by a debtor to the partnership, after the dissolution. The person, therefore, to whom he so indorses it, cannot maintain an action on it against A., B. and C., as partners. Neither can such indorsee maintain an action against A., B. and C., for money paid to the use of the partnership, though, in fact, the money advanced by him in discounting the bill be applied by A. to the payment of a debt due from the partnership. 1 H. Bla. 155.

If three partners (two of whom reside abroad, and one in England), be sued for a partnership debt, and the partner resident in England appear to the action, but refuses to appear for the partners resident abroad, the sheriff, under a distringas against the two partners, may take partnership effects, though paid for by the partner resident in England alone, to whom the partnership was legally indebted; and the court will not relieve him against such distress. 3 B. & P. 254.

The defendant agreed, in writing, to take one-half share of certain goods bought by the plaintiff on their joint account, half in the profit and loss, and to furnish the plaintiff with half the amount in time for the payment thereof, the goods being to be paid for by bills. The Court of King's Bench held, first, that this was an agreement relating to the sale of goods within the exemption in the stamp act, 44 Geo. 3. c. 98. sched. A., and did not require a stamp; secondly, that the plaintiff having paid the whole price of the goods which were to constitute the partnership stock, to which both parties were to contribute equally, an action lay against the defendant for his moiety of the price which was to be furnished by him in the first instance, although there might be an account to be taken between them as partners upon the subsequent disposal of the joint stock. 15 East, 7.

If several persons horse, with horses their several property, the several stages of a coach, in the general profits of which they are partners, they are not all jointly liable for goods furnished to one partner for the use of the horses drawing the coach along his part of the road. Barton v. Hanson & al. 2 Taunt. 49.

The partners in one house of trade cannot maintain an action against the partners in another house of trade, of which one of the partners in the plaintiff's house is also a member, for transactions which took place while he was partner in both houses; and that whether the action be brought in the lifetime of the common partner, or after his decease; but after his decease, the surviving partners of the one house may sue the surviving partners of the other house, upon transactions subsequent to the decease of the common partner. 6 Taunt. 597.

In assumpsit against one of several partners for not delivering goods, with a count for money had and received, to which defendant pleaded that the promises were jointly made with A. and B., it appeared, that defendant, being partner with A. and B., made the contract individually, though in the name of the partnership, and for the sale of partnership property; and that in fraud of his partners he received the money to his own use, though the bill drawn by him for the money was in the partnership name. Held that plaintiff might recover the money so received, under the common count. 4 M. & S. 475.

If the names of two partners in trade appear (among others) on the certificate of registry, as owners of a ship, the registry acts do not prevent the showing how and in what proportions the several owners are respectively entitled; and though partners may derive title under different conveyances, yet, if their shares were purchased with the partnership funds, and treated by them as partnership property, and the partners become bankrupt, these shares will be considered as the joint property. 4 M. & S. 450.

A bond was given to the several persons constituting the firm of a banking-house, conditioned for the repayment of the balance of an account, and of such further sums as the bankers might advance to the obligor; one of the partners dies, and a new partner is taken into the firm; at that time a considerable balance is due from the obligor to the firm; advances are afterwards made by the bankers, and payments made to them on account by the obligor; the latter is credited by the new firm with the several payments, and charged with the original debt and subsequent advances as constituting items in one entire account; and the balance due at the time of the partner's death is considerably reduced, and that reduced balance, by order of the obligor, is transferred by the bankers to the account of another customer, who, with his assent, is charged with the then debt of the obligor. The person so charged having become insolvent, the surviving partners of the original firm brought their action upon the bond: Held, that as they had not originally treated it as a distinct account, but had blended it in the general account with other transactions, they were not at liberty so to treat it at a subsequent period; and having received in different payments a sum more than sufficient to discharge the debt due upon the bond at the time of the death of the deceased partner, that the bond was to be considered as paid. 2 B. & A. 80.

Quære whether the transfer of the balance due from the obligor to the account of another, with his assent, did not, in point of law, operate as payment. Id. ib.

Where one of three partners, after a dissolution of partnership, undertook, by deed, to pay a particular partnership debt on two bills of exchange, and that was communicated to the holder, who consented to take the separate notes of the one partner for the amount, strictly reserving his right against all three, and retained possession of the original bills. Held, that the separate notes having proved unproductive, he might still resort to his remedy against the other partners, and that the taking under these circumstances the separate notes, and even afterwards renewing them several times successively, did not amount to satisfaction of the joint debt. 2 B. & A. 216.

VI. PUBLIC partnerships are where the association consists of an indefinite or a large definite number of joint undertakers, and they are usually called companies or societies.

Of these some are incorporated by letters-patent, or by act of parliament, as the East India Company, and the Bank of England; and others are not,—as, for instance, most of the Fire and Life Insurance Companies. See Joint Stock Companies.

Companies or societies, which are not confirmed by public authority, are in fact nothing more than ordinary partnerships, and the laws respecting them are the same. 9 East, 516; 3 Ves. & B. 180.

Now by the 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 94. his majesty may, by letters-patent, grant to trading and other companies, not incorporated, any privilege which by the common law, or by the 6 Geo. 4. c. 91. (whereby the Bubble Act was repealed,) it would be competent for him to grant by any charter of incorporation, and particularly the privilege of suing and being sued in the name of some officer of such companies.

See further Gow on Partnerships; also titles Bankrupt, Indictment, VI., Joinder in Action, Joint-tenants.

PART-OWNERS. Those who are concerned in ship matters, and have joint shares therein. See Insurance, Ship.

PARTY-WALLS. See Fire, London.

PARVISE. Selden, in his notes on Fortesque, c. 51, defines it to be an afternoon's exercise or moot for the instruction of young students, bearing the same name originally with the Parvisæ at Oxford. Seld. Notes, p. 56; Chaucer mentions it in one of his prologues.

PASCHA CLAUSUM. The octaves of Easter or Low Sunday, which closes that solemnity; and die (id est) post Pascha Clausum is a date in some of our old deeds. The first statute of Westminster, anno 3 Edw. 1, is said to be made the Monday after Easter week—Lendemain de la cluse de Pasche, &c.

PASCHA FLORIDUM. The Sunday before Easter, called Palm Sunday; when the proper hymn or gospel sung was occurreunt turbæ cum floribus et palmis, &c. Cartular. Abbat. Glaston. MS. 75.

PASCHAL RENTS. Rents or yearly tributes paid by the clergy to the bishop or archdeacon, at their Easter visitations.

PASCUA. A particular meadow or pasture ground, set apart to feed cattle. See Lindwood. Prov. Angl. l. 8. c. 18. and tit. Pastura.

PASCUAGE, pascuagium, Fr. pacage.] The grazing or pasturing of cattle. Mon. Angl. ii. 25. The same was pannage.

PASNAGE and PATHNAGE in WOODS, &c. See Pannage.

PASSAGE, passagium, is properly over water, as way is over land; it relates to the sea and great rivers, and is a French word signifying transitum.

Passagio is also the name of a writ directed to the keepers of the ports to permit a man to pass over sea, who has the king's leave. Reg. Orig. 193. The prices of passage at Dover, &c. were limited by 1 Edw. 3. c. 8, repealed 2 Jac. 1. c. 28. (§ 11.) None to pass out of the realm without the king's licence, 5 R. 2. st. 1. c. 2, repealed 4 Jac. 1. c. 1 (§ 22.) See King, Ne exeat Regno. Passage from Kent to Calais restrained to Dover. 4 Edw. 4. c. 10, repealed by 21 Jac. 1. c. 28. (§ 11.)

PASSAGIUM or PASSAGIUM REGIS. A voyage or expedition to the Holy Land, when made by the kings of England in person. Cowell.

PASSATOR. He who has the interest or command of the passage of a river, or the lord to whom a duty is paid for passage. Cowell.

PASSIAGIARIUS. A ferry-man. Thorn's Chronicle, m. an. 1287.

PASSPORT. A compound of two French words, passer, transire, and port, portus, a haven.

It signifies a licence for the safe passage of any man from one place to another. See 2 Edw. 6. c. 2; and Alieu, 11 Safe-conducts.

PASTITUM. A pastoral field. Domesday, per Gite, 761.

PASTORAL STAFF. The form of it was such, which signified rectum regimin. All the top part of it was crooked, and the other part sharp; the crooked signified that the bishop presided over the people; and the sharp signified to punish the stubborn. Cowell.

PASTURE. Is any place generally where cattle may feed; and feeding for cattle is called pasture; wherefore feeding grounds are called common of pasture; but common of pasture is properly a right of putting beasts to pasture in another man's soil; and in this there is an interest of the lord and of the tenant. Wood's Inst. 196, 197. For in those waste grounds, which are usually called commons, the property of the soil is generally in the lord of the manor; as in common fields it is in the particular tenants; and common of pasture is either appendant, appurtenant, because of vicinage, or in gross. See Common.

PASTUS. The procuration or provision which tenants were bound to make for their lords at certain times, or as often as they made a progress to their lands; this, in many places, was turned into money. Hoc unde per artem liberabo a pastu regis et principum. Chart. Willelmi Regis Marcarum in M. a. Angl. l. 123.

PATENTS for INVENTIONS. These which have already been slightly treated of under the title of Monopoly, are founded upon the 21 Jac. 1. c. 3 § 1, which excepts from the monopolies declared void by that statute, letters patent or grants of privilege for fourteen years, "of the sole working or making of new manufactures within the realm to the true and first inventor and inventors of such manufactures, which others at the time shall not use, so as also they be not contrary to the law, nor mischievous to the state, by raising prices of commodities at home, or hurt of trade, or generally inconvenient."

1. Who is an inventor.—No person who has not, without assistance, formed the original idea of that subject in his own mind, will be enabled to keep any patent he may have obtained; for if the principle be taken from a scientific work, he is not an inventor. The King v. Arkwright, printed case, 182. Neither will he be entitled to hold the grant if he has in any manner been informed of the secret by another person in England. Dav. Pat. Cas. 429. And see 8 Taunt. 195, 8 C. C. 2 B. Moore, 456; 1 Car. & P. 558.

In The King v. Arkwright, the point agitated was,—whether the machine for which the patent had been granted was invented by Mr. Arkwright,—and it was satisfactorily proved, that every part which was not old, or had not been used for the same purpose to which it was then applied, was either not material or not useful. It was therefore determined, that he was not the inventor of a new manufacture. So where the improvement consisted principally in the adoption of modes already known, and the only new part was not the object of the invention, it was held in a recent case, that the patent was not maintainable. 3 B. & Ad. 881. If two persons severally discover the same thing, the one who obtains a patent for it before the other has made the matter public, will be adjudged the "true and first inventor." See 9 H. Bla. 487.

The introducer of a foreign invention, whether it has been learnt by travel or produced by study, is within the statute, and entitled to a patent. 2 Salk. 477; Holt, N. P. C. 108; and see 1 Car. & P. 558.

2. What are new manufactures.—Every manufacture within the meaning of the statute must be, 1, new; 2, not used before; neither by any other person nor by the inventor; 3, useful, and 4, useful.

A new manufacture may be, 1, a substance or thing made; 2, a machine or instrument; 3, an improvement or addition; 4, a combination or arrangement of things already known; 5, a principle, method, or process introduced into practice by new means; 6, a chymical discovery; 7, a foreign invention.

3. Of the specification.—The 21 Jac. 1. left the terms in which patents might be obtained, to be settled at the pleasure of the sovereign; and in the reign of Queen Anne, a convention was introduced into the patent that the inventor did, by an instrument under his hand and seal particularly describe and ascertain the nature of his invention, and in what manner the same was to be performed; and also enrol the same in Chancery within a given time (generally six calendar months) the letters patent should be void. In the specification, therefore, the invention must be accurately ascertained and set forth in the most minute detail. The courts have ever looked with jealousy on the specification, as a bargain between the public and the inventor, as Lord Emswold called it (Dav. Pat. Cas. 434), should be too much in favour of the patentee; and hence more questions have arisen upon it than upon any other part of the grant, and more patents declared void upon this than upon any other ground.

The patent and the specification have always been considered as connected together and dependent on each other for support, and the one may be looked at to understand the other. 8 T. R. 95; and 2 H. Bla. 478. Still, however, the specification must contain within itself a full description of the invention.

The specification must support the title of the patent, and the latter should not indicate one thing, and the former describe another. 2 B. & A. 350. And it was held that a patent taken out for a tapering brush was not supported by the specification of a brush in which the hairs or bristles were made of unequal length. 2 Stark. 249; and see 6 B. & C. 169, 178.

In the specification of a substance, the thing itself should be accurately ascertained, the materials of which it is composed, the method by which it is made, and the use to which it is to be applied, correctly developed and particularly described.

4. Remedies for an infringement of a patent, &c.—Formerly monopolies and patent rights were investigated in the Star Chamber. 3 Inst. 183. But the 21 Jac. 1. enacted, that they should thenceforth be determined according to the common law.

The remedies now resorted to are, an action at law for damages, or proceedings in equity for an injunction and account.

When a patent is invalid, as being contrary to the statute, or from some defect in the specification, &c. the king may have a scire facias to repeal his own grant. 4 Inst. 88.

A subject also, who is prejudiced by a patent, may of right petition the king to use his name for its repeal; and as all persons are injured by its existence, it follows that every one may petition for a scire facias to have it cancelled. Dyer, 276 b; 2 Vent. 344; 3 Lev. 220.

Between subject and subject, each having a patent for the same thing, the first patentee may generally have a scire facias to repeal the second. 4 Inst. 88; Dyer, 197 b, 198 a; but the second patentee cannot bring a scire facias to repeal the first patent, though the better right should be in him. Dyer, 276 b; 277 a. For the second grant is necessarily bad, even if the first, by some informality, be rendered invalid.

For further information on this subject, see Godson's Law of Patents, from which the above sketch is chiefly abridged; and see Literary Property, Monopoly, Sculpture.

PATENTS or LETTERS PATENTS. The king's writings, sealed with the great seal, having their name from being open, and they differ from writs. Crompt. Jur. 126.

The king is to advise with his council touching grants and patents made of his estate, &c.: and in petitions for lands, annuities, or offices, the value is to be expressed; also a former patent is to be mentioned where the petition is for a grant in reversion, or the patents thereupon shall be void. 1 Hen. 4. c. 6; 6 Hen. 8. c. 15.

Patents, which bear not the date and day of delivery of the king's warrants into Chancery, are not good. 18 Hen. 6. c. 1. Where the king's patent creates a new estate, of which the law doth not take knowledge, the patents are void. 8 Rep. 1; 5 Rep. 93. But patents shall not be avoided by nice constructions: if a patent may be taken to two intents, and is good as to one, and not as to the other, it is valid. Jenk. Cent. 138.

When the king would pass a freehold, it is necessary that the patent be under the great seal; and it ought to be granted de adversamento of the chancellor of the exchequer and lord treasurer in the usual manner. Fitzgib. 291. See Grants of the King, Scire Facias.

For patents of peerage, see Peer. For patent of precedence, see Barrister.

PATRIA. The country: the men of a neighbourhood: thus when it is said inquiratur per patriam, a jury of the neighbourhood is meant. In like manner, assisa vel recognitio per assisam, idem est quod recognitio patriæ. Cowell. See Assise, Jury.

PATRIARCH. Is the chief bishop over several countries or provinces, as an archbishop is of several dioceses, and hath several archbishops under him. God. 20.

PATRIMONY. An hereditary estate or right descended from ancestors. The legal endowment of a church, or religious house, was called ecclesiastical patrimony; and the lands and reversions united to the See of Rome are called St. Peter's Patrimony. Cowell.

PATRINUS. A godfather, as matrina is a godmother. LL. H. 1.

PATRITIUS. An honour conferred on men of the first quality in the time of the English Saxon kings. Mon. Angl. i. 13.

PATRON. He who hath the disposition of an ecclesiastical benefice.

The patron's right is the most worthy and first act and part of a promotion to a benefice, and is granted and pleaded by the name of libera dispositio ecclesiæ. Hob. 152. But during the vacancy of a church, the freehold of the glebe is not in the patron, for it is in abeyance. 8 Hen. 6. 24; Lit. 144. A patron shall not have an action for trespass done when the church is vacant; and if a man who hath a right to glebe lands, releaseth the same to the patron, that is not good, because the patron has not any estate in the land, 11 Hen. 6. 4. If the patron grants a rent out of a church, it is void even against himself. 38 Edw. 3. c. 4. See further, Admanson, Parson, Vicar, &c.

PAVAGE, pavagium. Money paid towards paving the streets or highways. Rex concessit pavagium villæ de Huntingdon per quinquennium. Pla. Parl. 35 Edw. 1.

PAVING. See London, Scavengers, Police.

PAUPER. A poor man: according to which we have a term in law, to sue in formâ pauperis.

Before a person is admitted to sue in formâ pauperis, he must have counsel's hand to his petition, certifying the judge to whom the petition is directed, that he conceives the petitioner hath good cause of action; he must also annex an affidavit to his petition, that he is not worth five pounds, all his debts paid, except wearing apparel, and his right to the matter in question. Lit. Reg. 633.

None ought to be admitted to sue in formâ pauperis in an action on the case for words. Ibid.

A person admitted to sue in formâ pauperis can only sue in that cause for which he is admitted, et sic toties quoties. Ibid.

It seems that after the statutes which introduced costs, neither plaintiffs nor defendants could sue or defend in formâ pauperis; for that would be a means of depriving the other party of the costs given him by statute; and as the 11 Hen. 7. c. 12, enables persons only to sue as paupers, and as the 23 Hen. 8. c. 15, excepts only plaintiffs, who are paupers, from paying costs; it seems, that one cannot be admitted in a civil action to defend as a pauper. But it hath been adjudged, that a person may be admitted to defend an indictment in formâ pauperis for a misdemeanor, such as a conspiracy, keeping a disorderly house, &c., for in such proceedings there being no costs, the judges have a discretionary power of admitting or refusing them by the common law. Pasch. 9 Geo. 2. The King v. Wright.

It is said, that paupers ought not to be admitted to remove causes out of inferior courts, but ought to satisfy themselves with the jurisdiction within which their actions properly lie. 1 Mod. 368.

By the orders of the courts, if the party admitted to sue in formâ pauperis give any fee or reward to his counsel or attorney, or make any contract or agreement with them, he shall from thenceforth be dispaupered, and not be afterwards admitted again in that suit to prosecute in formâ pauperis. Ord. Cur. 94.

Also, if it shall be made appear to the court that any person prosecuting in formâ pauperis hath sold or contracted for the benefit of the suit, or any part thereof, while the same depends, such cause shall be from thenceforth totally dismissed the court. Ord. Cur. 95. Formâ Pauperis. See further, Costs, II.

Several poor persons having claimed the property of an intestate, as his next of kin, an issue was directed to try the rights of the parties. The Court of Equity allowed a portion of the fund in court to those whose claims had been allowed by the master, to enable them to proceed in the issue, but refused to make any such allowance to those whose claims had been disallowed. Gregg v. Taylor, 4 Russ. 277.

There must be special circumstances to entitle a party to prosecute in formâ pauperis. 1 D. P. C. 536.

A defendant, in an indictment for perjury, was allowed to plead in formâ pauperis, on the usual affidavit. 1 D. P. C. 507.

So in an excise information, the court will admit the party to defend in formâ pauperis, on the common affidavit, without a certificate of merits (3 & 4 Wm. 4. c. 53. § 97). But on an application of the defendant for a copy of the information, gratis, the court held he was only entitled to have the information read over to him by the officer, and that he might either plead instantly or at a future day. 2 C. & M. 593.

PAWN, pignus. A pledge or gage for payment of money lent; it is said (risum teneatis?) to be derived a pugno, quæ res quæ pignori dantur, pugno vel manu traduntur. Lit. Dict.

The party who pawns goods hath a general property in them; they cannot be forfeited by the pawnee or party who hath them in pawn, for any offence of his; nor be taken in execution for his debt; neither may they otherwise be put in execution till the debt for which they are pawned is satisfied. Lit. Rep. 332. For the absolute property is in the lender; therefore they are not alienable, nor, by consequence, forfeitable, because they cannot be forfeited without loss and danger to the absolute owner, and all qualified possessors do take the property under the restriction to preserve the property of the right owner. Bro. tit. Attachment in Assise 24.

If a man pawns goods for money, and afterwards a judgment is had against the pawner at the suit of one of the creditors, the goods in the hands of the pawnee shall not be taken in execution until the money is paid to the pawnee because he had a qualified property in them, and the judgment creditor only an interest. 3 Bulst. 17. And when a person hath jewels in pawn for a certain sum, and he who pawned them is attainted, the king shall not have the jewels unless he pay the money. Plond. 187. For the alienation of the general property doth not alter the special property in the pawnee. 2 H. 7. 1; 1 Bulst. 29.

If a man pledge goods and then is outlawed, he cannot redeem them; because then the absolute property is in the king; but if the outlawry is reversed, then the person is reinstated in his property, as if there had been no outlawry and therefore may redeem them. 1 Bulst. 29.

The pawnee of goods hath a special property in them, to detain them for his security, &c., and he may assign the pawn over to another, subject to the same conditions: and if the pawnee die before redeemed, his executors shall have it upon the like terms as he had it.

If goods pawned are perishable, and no day being set for payment of the money, they lie in pawn till spoiled, without any default in him who hath them in keeping, the party who pawned them shall bear the damage; for it shall be ad-to judge his fault that he did not redeem them sooner; and he to whom pawned may have action of debt for his money; also, if the goods are taken from him, he may have action of trespass, &c. Co. Lit. 89, 208; Yelv. 179.

Where goods are pawned for money borrowed, without a day set for redemption, they are redeemable at any time during the life of the borrower. They may be redeemed after the death of him to whom pawned, but not after the death of him who pawned the goods. 2 Cro. 245; Noy. 137; 1 Bulst. 9. But where a day is appointed, and the pawn is due before the day, his executors may redeem the pawn at the day, and this shall be assets in their hands. 1 Bulst. 30, 31. If goods are redeemable at a day certain, it must be strictly observed, and the pawnor, in case of failure of payment at the day, may sell them. 1 Rol. Rep. 181, 215. But still the right owner has his redemption in equity, as in case of a mortgage. 1 Inst. 297; Shp. 106.

He who borrows money on a pawn, is to have the pledge again when he repays it, or he may have action for the detainer, and his tender of the money revests the special property. 2 Cro. 244. And it hath been held, that where a broker or pawnee refuses (upon tender of the money) to redeliver the goods in pawn, he may be indicted; because, being secretly pawned, it may be impossible to prove a delivery for want of witnesses, if trover should be brought for them. 3 Salk. 268.

If the vendor of a leasehold estate deliver the conveyance as an escrow, to take effect on payment of the residue of the purchase-money; the property in the title-deeds of the estate is so vested in the vendee, that the vendor obtaining possession of those, and pawning them, does not confer on the pawnee a right to detain them, after tender of the purchase-money. 6 Taunt. 12.

And see the statutory provision against wilful detention, in Pawnbrokers.

Adjudged, that if goods are lost, after the tender of money, the pawnee is liable to make them good to the owner, for after tender he is a wrongful detainer; and he who keeps goods wrongfully must answer for them at all events; his wrongful detainer being the occasion of the loss. Cro. Jac. 28; Yelv. 149; 1 Bulst. 29; Bro. Bailment, 7; 1 Rol. Rep. 179; 1 Inst. 89. But if they are lost before a tender, it is otherwise; the pawnee is not liable, if his care of keeping them was exact; and the law requires nothing of him, but only that he should use an ordinary care in keeping the goods, that they may be restored on payment of the money for which they were deposited; and in such case if the goods are lost, the pawnee hath still his remedy against the pawnor for the money lent. 2 Salk. 522; 3 Salk. 268.

If the pawn is laid up, and the pawnee robbed, he is not generally answerable; though if the pawnee useth the thing, as a watch, &c. that will not be the worse for wearing. If he may do, it is at his peril; and if he is robbed, he is answerable to the owner, as the using occasioned the loss. 2 Salk. 522; 3 Salk. 268; see Co. Lit. 89 a; 3 Inst. 44; 4 Co. 83; Palm. 551; Ow. 123; Yelv. 178; Cro. Jac. 24; 1 Bulst. 29, 30; 1 Rol. Rep. 181.

Remember, that where goods pledged have been destroyed by fire without the pawnbroker's negligence or default, he is not liable to make compensation. 1 Nev. & M. 35.

If the pawn is of such a nature that the keeping is a charge to the pawnee, as a cow, or a horse, &c. he may milk the one or ride the other; and this shall go in recompense for its keeping. Things which will grow the worse by usage, as apparel, &c., he may not use. Owen, 124.

Where money is lent on a pledge, the borrower is personally liable to the payment, unless there be an agreement to the contrary. Str. 919.

A person borrowed 100*l.* on the pawn of jewels, and took a note from the lender, acknowledging them to be in his hands, for securing the money; afterwards he borrowed several other sums of the same person, for which he gave his notes, without taking any notice of the jewels. As in this case it was natural to think the lender would not have advanced the sums on note only, but on the credit of the pledge in his hands before, it was decreed in equity, that if the borrower would have his jewels, he must pay all the money due on the notes. Pre. Chan. 419, 421.

He to whom goods are delivered for safe custody cannot pawn them. Str. 1187. There can be no market-overt for pawning them. Ibid.

As to the pledging of goods by factors, see Factor. See further tit. Bailment, Pawnbrokers.

PAWNAGE or PANNAGE. In woods and forests for swine. See Pannage.

PAWNBROKERS. By the stamp acts, pawnbrokers are annually to take out a licence on a stamp.

By the 39 & 40 Geo. 3. c. 89, rates of profit are allowed to pawnbrokers; and regulations are made to prevent oppression by them, viz.

For every pledge upon which there shall have been lent not exceeding 2*s.* 6*d.* one halfpenny is allowed as interest, &c. for any time during which the said pledge shall remain in pawn, not exceeding one calendar month; and the same for every month afterwards, including the current month in which such pledge shall be redeemed, although such month shall not be expired: for 5*s.* one penny; 7*s.* 6*d.* one penny halfpenny; 10*s.* two pence; 12*s.* 6*d.* two pence halfpenny; 15*s.* three pence; 17*s.* 6*d.* three pence halfpenny; 1*l.* four pence; and so on progressively and in proportion for any sum not exceeding 40*s.*; and for any intermediate sum between 2*s.* 6*d.* and 40*s.* at the rate of 4*d.* for 20*s.*

And for every sum exceeding 40*s.* and not exceeding 42*s.* eight pence; and for every sum exceeding 42*s.* and not exceeding 10*l.* at the rate of three pence and no more for the loan of every 20*s.* of such money lent by the calendar month; and so in proportion for every fractional sum. § 1—3.

A party applying for the redemption of goods pawned, within seven days after the expiration of any month, may redeem them without paying any thing for the seven days, and applying after seven and within fourteen days, pays the profit for month and a half of another month; but after the expiration of the first fourteen days the pawnbroker may take for the whole month. § 5.

Entries to be made and duplicates given. § 6, 7.

Any person fraudulently pawning the goods of another, and convicted before a justice, shall forfeit from 20*s.* to 5*l.* and also the value of the goods pawned, &c. to be ascertained by the justice; and on failure of payment may be committed to the house of correction for not more than three months, and be publicly whipped; the forfeitures, when paid, to be applied towards making satisfaction to the party injured, and defraying the costs; the overplus, if any, to the poor of the parish. § 8.

Any person counterfeiting or altering a duplicate, may be seized and taken before a justice, who is to commit the party to the house of correction, for not more than three months nor less than one. § 9.

If any person shall offer to pawn any goods, refusing to give a satisfactory account of himself and the goods; or if there shall be reason to suspect that such goods are stolen; or if any person not entitled shall attempt to redeem goods pawned, they may be taken before a justice, who shall commit them for further examination; and if it appears that the goods were stolen, or illegally obtained, or that the person offering to redeem the same has no title or pretence to them, the justice is to commit him to be dealt with according to law, where the nature of the offence shall authorize such commitment by any other law, or otherwise for not more than three months. § 10.

PAWNBROKERS.

The power of imprisonment given by this section does not extend to cases of embezzlement, loss, or damage, provided for by § 24. 1 Nev. & M. 24.

Persons buying or taking in pledge unfinished goods, or any linen, &c. entrusted to be washed, shall forfeit double the sum lent, and restore the goods. § 11.

A justice may grant a search warrant, in executing which peace officer may break open doors; and the goods, if found, shall be restored to the owner. § 12, 13.

Persons producing notes, are to be deemed owners, unless on notice to the contrary from the real owner. § 15.

Duplicates being lost, the owners, on oath before a justice, shall be entitled to another from the pawnbroker. § 16.

Goods to be sold by public auction after the expiration of one year; being exposed to public view, and catalogues thereof published, and two advertisements of sale by the pawnbroker to be inserted in some newspaper two days at least before the first day's sale under penalty of 10*l.* to 40*s.* to the owner. § 17.

Pictures, prints, books, statues, &c. shall be sold only four times in a year. § 18.

Pawnbrokers receiving notice from the owners of goods before the expiration of a year, shall not dispose of them, until after the expiration of three months from the end of the said year. § 19.

Pawnbrokers to enter an account of sales in their books of all goods pawned for upwards of ten shillings; and in case of any overplus by the sale, upon demand within three years, it shall be paid to the owner, the necessary costs, principal, and interest being deducted; persons possessing duplicates entitled to the inspecting of the book; and in case the goods shall have sold for more than the sum entered, or the further entries not made, or the overplus is refused to be paid, the offender shall forfeit 10*l.* and treble the sum lent, to be levied by distress. § 20.

Pawnbrokers shall not purchase goods whilst in their custody, or suffer them to be redeemed for that purpose; nor lend money to any person appearing to be under twelve years of age, or intoxicated, or purchase duplicates of other pawnbrokers, or buy any goods before eight in the forenoon, and after seven in the evening; nor receive any goods in pawn before eight in the forenoon or after eight at night, between Michaelmas and Lady-day, and before seven o'clock in the forenoon, and after nine at night during the remainder of the year; except till eleven o'clock on the evenings of Saturday, and that preceding Good Friday and Christmas-day; nor carry on the trade on any Sunday, Good Friday, or Christmas-day, or any Fast or Thanksgiving-day. § 20.

Pawnbrokers to produce their books before any justice, if required, under a penalty of 10*l.* to 5*l.* § 25.

This act does not extend to persons lending money upon goods at 5 per cent. interest.

This act to extend to the executors, &c. of pawnbrokers and pawners. § 31.

The form of conviction is settled by § 33; and an appeal given to the quarter sessions. § 35.

PAYMENT of money before the day appointed, is in law payment at the day; for it cannot, in presumption of law, be any prejudice to him, to whom the payment is made, to have his money before the time; and it appears, by the party's receipt of it, that it is for his own advantage to receive it then, otherwise he would not do it. Yet it is said, that defendant must not plead, that the plaintiff accepted it in full satisfaction; but that he paid it in full satisfaction. 5 Rep. 117.

Payment of a lesser sum, in satisfaction of a greater, cannot be a satisfaction for the whole; unless the payment be before the day: though the gift of an horse, or robe, &c. in satisfaction may be good. Ibid. And where damages are uncertain, a less thing may be done in satisfaction of a greater. 4 Mod. 89.

Upon solvit ad diem pleaded, it is good evidence to prove payment at any time after the day, and before action brought; and payment, although after the day, may be pleaded to any action of debt, upon bill, bond, or judgment, or scire facias upon a judgment, 2 Lil. Abr. 287; 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16. But see 1 Str. 652; where, on such a plea, proof was made of interest paid two years after the day, whereby the plea was falsified; which was made on presumption only; as the debt had not been demanded for thirty years. And though payment after the day is good by way of discharge, it will not be so by way of satisfaction. 4 Mod. 250. Payment is no plea to debt on covenant, or an obligation, without acquittance; but if the obligation have a condition, it is otherwise. Dyer, 25, 169. If a bond, &c. be for payment of money, and no day is set, damages cannot be recovered till a den and is made. Bridge, 20. See Bond.

For payment of rent, there are said to be four times 1. A voluntary time, that is not satisfactory, and yet good to some purpose, as where a lessee pays his rent before the day. This gives seisin of the rent, and enables him to whom paid to bring his assize (now abolished) for it. 2. A time voluntary and satisfactory in some cases; when it is paid in the morning of the last day, and the lessor dies before the end of the day, this is a good payment to bind the heir or executor, but not the king. 3. The legal, absolute, and satisfactory time, which is a convenient time before the last instant of the last day, and then it must be paid. The 4th is satisfactory, and not voluntary, but coercive when forced and recovered by suit at law. Co. Litt. 200; 10 Rep. 127; Plowd. 172 See Rent.

A bill drawn on A. to pay money for value received, is a good discharge of a debt, though the bill be not paid, unless the creditor return the bill in convenient time. Shon. 155 A. gives B. a bill of exchange on C. in payment of a former debt, this is not allowable as evidence on non assumpsit unless paid; for a bill shall never go in discharge of a precedent debt, except it be part of the contract that it should be so. 1 Salk. 124. When a merchant draws a bill upon a correspondent, who accepts it, this is payment: for it makes him debtor to another person, who may bring his action. 10 Mod. 37. See Bill of Exchange.

Payment of money shall be directed by him who pays it, and not by the receiver, &c., 5 Rep. 117; Cro. Eliz. 8. If the payer does not apply the payment, the receiver may, but le must not apply it to an uncertain demand, as to a debt from a testator. Strange, 1194.

A creditor receiving money, without any specific appropriation thereof by the debtor, shall be permitted in a court of law, to ascribe his receipt to the discharge of a prior and purely equitable debt, and to sue his debtor at law for a subsequent legal debt. 6 Taunt. 597.

In the payment of a testator's debts by executors, they are to pay first judgments, mortgages, rent due by lease, &c. then bonds and bills, &c. 1 Roll. Abr. 927. See Executor, v. 6.

PAYMENT INTO COURT. See Money into Court.

PEACE, pax. In the general signification, is opposite to war or strife. but particularly in law, it intends a quiet behaviour towards the king and his subjects.

And if any man is in danger from another, and makes oath of it before a justice of the peace, he shall be secured by good bond, which is called binding to the peace. Lamb. lib. 1. c. 2, 77, Comp. Just of Peace, 118, 120. And also from pledge and conservation of the peace. Time of peace is, when the courts of justice are open; and judges and ministers of the same may, by law, protect men from wrong, and administer justice to all. Co. Litt. 249.

All authority for keeping the peace comes originally from the king, who is the supreme magistrate for preservation thereof; though it is said the king cannot take a recognizance of the peace; because it is a rule in law that no one can take any recognizance, who is not either a justice of record, or by commission: also it is certain, that no duke, earl, or baron, as such, have any greater power to keep the peace, than mere private persons. Lamb. lib. 1. c. 3; Dult. c. 1. But the lord chancellor, or lord keeper of the great seal, the lord high steward, the lord marshal, and every justice of the king's bench, have, as incident to their offices, a general authority to keep the peace throughout the realm, and to award process for surety of the peace, and take recognizances for it. And every court of record hath power to keep the peace within its own precinct; as have likewise sheriffs, who, being entrusted with the custody of the counties, consequently have by it an implied power of keeping the peace within the same; and coroners may bind persons to the peace, who make an affray in their presence; but may not grant process of the peace, &c. 2 Hank. P. C.

Peace shall be kept, and justice and right duly administered to all persons. 1 R. 2. c. 2, &c.—Breakers of the peace to be imprisoned, and to find sureties, &c. 2 Edw. 3. c. 6; 34 Edw. 3. c. 1. Recognizances for keeping the peace to be certified to the quarter sessions. 3 H. 7. c. 1.—The chancery and king's bench restrained from granting process of the peace or behaviour without motion and affidavit; and to give costs and damages to persons wrongfully vexed by such process, and restrained from granting supradias, unless the process is granted in the manner required by the statute. The said courts to punish insufficient sureties. 21 Jac. 1. c. 8. Actions against peace-officers made local. 21 Jac. 1. c. 12. And the general issue pleadable. 7 Jac. 1. c. 5; 21 Jac. 1. c. 12. See Justices of Peace; Peace of the King; and Society of the Peace.

PEACE OF GOD AND THE CHURCH, pax Dei et ecclesiae.] Was anciently used for that cessation which the king's subjects had from trouble and suit of law between the terms, and on Sundays and holidays. See Vacation.

PEACE OF THE KING, pax regis, mentioned in 6 R. 2. c. 1. c. 13. Is that peace and security both for life and goods, which the king promiseth to all his subjects, or others taken into his protection. And where an outlawry is reversed, a person is restored to the king's peace, and this is termed ad pacem redire. Bract. lib. 3. c. 11. This point of policy seems to have been borrowed by us from the Feudists, which, in the second book of the Feuds, cap. 53. entitled, De Pace tenenda, &c. Hotoman proveth. Of this Hoveden setteth down many branches. Annal. H. 2. fol. 144, 330.

The peace of the king's highway is the immunity that the king's highway hath to be free from annoyance or molestation. The peace of the plough whereby the plough and the plough cattle are secured from distresses. F. N. B. 90. And fairs have been said to have their peace; because no man might be troubled in them for any debt contracted elsewhere.

As to the peace of the church, see Sanctuary.

PECIA. A piece or small quantity of ground. Paroch. Antiq. 240.

PECTORALE. A word often met with in old writings. Most authors agree that it is the same with that garment called rationale, which the high priest in the old law wore on his shoulders, as a sign of perfection. It is worn also by the high priest of the new law, as a sign of the greatest virtue. Quæ gratia et ratione perficitur; for which reason it is called rationale. It is by some taken to be that part of the pall which covers the breast of the priest, and from thence called pectorale. But all agree that it is the richest part of that garment, embroidered with gold, and adorned with precious stones. Cowell.

PECTORAL. Armour for the breast, a breast-plate or petral, for a horse; from the Lat. pectus; it is mentioned in 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 3.

PECULIAR, Fr. peculiar, i. e. private.] A particular parish or church, that hath jurisdiction within itself, and power to grant administration or probate of wills, &c. exempt from the ordinary.

Exempt jurisdictions are so called, not because they are under no ordinary, but because they are not under the ordinary of the diocese, but have one of their own. These are therefore called peculiar, and are of several sorts. 1 Still. 336.

There are royal peculiars, and archbishops' peculiars: the king's chapel is a royal peculiar, exempted from all spiritual jurisdiction, and reserved to the immediate government of the king; there are also some peculiar ecclesiastical jurisdictions belonging to the king, which formerly appertained to monasteries and religious houses. It is an ancient privilege of the see of Canterbury, that wherever any manors or advowsons belong to it, they forthwith become exempt from the ordinary, and are reputed peculiars of that see; not because they are under no ordinary, but because they are not under the ordinary of the diocese, &c. For the jurisdiction is annexed to the Court of Arches, and the judge thereof may originally cite to these peculiars of the archbishop. Wood's Inst. 501.

The Court of Peculiars of the Archbishop of Canterbury, hath a particular jurisdiction in the city of London, and in other dioceses, &c. within his province: in all, fifty-seven peculiars. 4 Inst. 338; 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 15.

Where a man dies intestate, leaving goods in several peculiars, it has been held, that the archbishop is to grant administration. Sid. 90; 5 Mod. 239.

There are some peculiars which belong to deans and chapters, or a prebendary, exempted from the archdeacon only: they are derived from the bishop of ancient composition, and may be visited by the bishop in his primary or triennial visitation: in the mean time, an official of the dean and chapter or prebendary is the judge; and from hence the appeal lies to the bishop of the diocese. Wood, 504.

The dean and chapter of St. Paul's have a peculiar jurisdiction; and the dean and chapter of Salisbury have a large peculiar within that diocese; so have the dean and chapter of Litchfield, &c. 2 Nels. Abr. 1240, 1241.

There is mention in our books of peculiars of archdeacons; but they are not properly peculiars, only subordinate jurisdictions; and a peculiar is prima facie to be understood of him who hath a co-ordinate jurisdiction with the bishop. Hob. 185; Mod. Ca. 308. If an archdeacon hath a peculiar authority by commission, this shall not take away the authority of the bishop; but, if he hath authority and jurisdiction by prescription, it is said it shall. 2 Roll. Rep. 357.

Appeal lieth from other peculiar courts to the king in chancery. 25 H. 8. c. 19.

And as to other statutes concerning peculiars, see 25 H. 8. c. 21. § 21, with respect to the visitation of places exempt, and the 59 G. 3. c. 99. § 78, whereby the powers given by that act for enforcing residence, &c. may be exercised by the archbishop or bishop within whose province or diocese any peculiar lies. See further, 16 Vin. Abr. tit. Peculiars; and title Courts Ecclesiastical, 4.

PECUNIA. Properly money, but anciently used for cattle, and sometimes for other goods as well as money. So we find often in Domesday, pastura ibidem ad pecuniam villæ, that is, pasture-ground for the cattle of the village. Cowell.

PECUNIA SEPULCHRALIS, Ll. Canuti, 102. Money anciently paid to the priest at the opening of the grave, for the good of the deceased's soul. This the Saxons called saulescat, saulscot, and animæ symbolum. Spel. de Concil. t. 1. f. 517. See Mortuary.

PECUNIARY. All punishments of offences were anciently pecuniary, by mulct, &c. See Fine.

PECUNIARY CAUSES, cognizable in the Ecclesiastical Courts, are such as arise either from the withholding ecclesiastical dues, or the doing or neglecting some act relating to the church, whereby damage accrues to the plaintiff, towards obtaining a satisfaction for which he is permitted to institute a suit in the Spiritual Court. For the principal of these causes, see 3 Comm. 88; and titles Courts Ecclesiastical, Tithes, Spoliation, Dilapidation.

PECUNIARY LEGACY. See Executor, Legacy.

PEDAGE, pedagium. Money given for the passing by foot or horse through any country. Spelm.

PEDALE. A foot cloth, or piece of tapestry laid on the ground to tread on, for greater state and ceremony. Ingulph. p. 41.

PEDIS ABCISSIO. Cutting off the foot; a punishment on criminals, anciently inflicted, instead of death; as appears by the laws of William, called the Conqueror, c. 7; so in Ingulphus, p. 856; Fleta, lib. 1. c. 38; Bracton, lib. 3. c. 32; Monast. tom. 1. p. 166.

PEDLARS. See Hawkers.

PEDONES. Foot-soldiers. Sim. Dunelm. an. 1085.

PEERAGE. The dignity of the lords or peers of the realm. See Peers of the Realm.

PEERS, pares,] signify, in law, those who are empanelled in an inquest upon a man, for convicting or clearing him of any offence; the reason is, because the custom of the realm is to try every man in such case by his peers or equals. See st. Westm. 1. § E. 1. c. 6; Mag. Char. c. 29. And in this sense it is in use with other nations. Cowell.

And as every one of the nobility, being a lord of parliament, is a peer, or equal to all the other lords, though of several degrees; so the Commons are peers to one another, although distinguished as knights, esquires, gentlemen, &c. 2 Inst. 29; 3 Inst. 31. See post, Peers of the Realm.

PEERS or FEES. The word peer denoted originally one of the same rank; afterwards, it was used for the vassals or tenants of the same lord, who were obliged to serve and attend him in his courts, being equal in function; these were termed peers of fees, because holding fees of the lord, or because their business in court was to sit and judge, under their lord, of disputes arising on fees; but if there were too many in one lordship, the lord usually chose twelve, who had the title of peers, by way of distinction; whence, it is said, we derive our common juries, and other peers. Cowell.

PEERS OF THE REALM.

PARES REGNI; PROCERES. The nobility of the kingdom, and lords of parliament; who are divided into dukes, marquises, earls, viscounts, and barons. And the reason why they are called peers is, that notwithstanding a distinction of dignities in our nobility, yet in all public actions they are equal; as in their votes of parliament, and trial of any nobleman. S. P. C. lib. 3. The appellation seems to have been borrowed from France, from those twelve peers that Charlemagne instituted in that kingdom, called Pares, vel Patres Franciæ.

I. Of the Titles and Origin of the several Degrees of Nobility.

II. The Manner in which they may be created and limited, and how forfeited.

III. Of the Privileges of Peers (and see Privilege.)

IV. The Mode of their Trial in Capital Cases.

I. ALL degrees of nobility and honour are derived from the king as their fountain, and he may institute what new titles he pleases. Hence it is that all degrees of nobility are not of equal antiquity.

A duke, though he be in England, in respect of his title of nobility, inferior in point of antiquity to many others; yet is superior to all of them in rank, his being the first title of dignity after the royal family. Cambden Britan. tit. Ordines Among the Saxons the Latin names of dukes, duces, is very frequent; and signified, as among the Romans, the commanders or leaders of their armies, whom in their own language they call hepetoze; and in the laws of Henry I. as translated by Lambard, they are called heretochii. But after the Norman conquest, which changed the military polity of the nation, the kings themselves continuing for many generations dukes of Normandy, they would not honour any subjects with the title of duke till the time of Edward III.: who, claiming to be king of France, and thereby losing the Ducal in the royal dignity in the eleventh year of his reign, created his son, Edward the Black Prince, Duke of Cornwall; and many of the royal family especially were afterwards raised to the like honour. This reason, however, does not seem very satisfactory, as in fact this order of nobility was created about a year before Edward III. assumed the title of King of France. J. D. 1337. Henry's Hist. Eng. viii. 135. (8vo., Statutes Duke, King, II.)

In the reign of Queen Elizabeth, A. D. 1572, the whole order became utterly extinct; Cambden. Britan. tit. Ordines Spelman. Gloss. 191; but it was revived about fifty years afterwards by her successor, who was remarkably proud of honours, in the person of George Villiers, Duke of Buckingham. 1 Comm. c. 12.

A marquis (marchio) is the next degree of nobility. His office formerly was (for dignity and duty were never separated by our ancestors) to guard the frontiers and limits of the kingdom, which were called the marches, from the Teutonic word marche, a limit; such as, in particular, were the marches of Wales and Scotland, while each continued to be an enemy's country. The persons who had commanded there were called lord-marchers or marquises; whose authority, with respect to the marches of Wales, was abolished by the 27 H. 8. c. 20., while that of the lord-marchers on the Scotch frontiers existed until the accession of James I. to the English crown; see 4 Inst. 281; though the title had before been made a mere ensign of honour, Robert Vere, Earl of Oxford, being created Marquis of Dublin by Richard II. in the eighth year of his reign. 2 Inst. 5; see the Marquis.

An earl is a title of nobility so ancient, that its origin cannot be clearly traced out. Thus much seems tolerably certain; that among the Saxons they were called ealdormen, quasi elder men, signifying the same as senior or senator among the Romans; and also sciremen, because they had each of them the civil government of a several division or shire. On the irruption of the Danes they changed the names to eorles, which, according to Camden, signified the same in Jer- language. Brit. title Ordines. But see Turner's Hist. Angl. Sac. l. viii. c. 7.

In Latin they are called comites, (a title first used in the empire,) from being the king's attendants; à societate nomen sumperunt, reges enim tales sibi associant. Bracton. l. 1. c. 8; Flet. l. 1. c. 5. After the Norman conquest, they were for some time called counts or countesses, from the French; but they did not long retain that name themselves, though their shires are from thence called counties to this day. The name of earls or comites is now become a mere title; they having nothing to do with the government of the county, which is now entirely devolved on the sheriff, the earl's deputy or vicecomes. In writs and commissions, and other formal instruments, the king, when he mentions any peer of the degree of an earl, usually styles him "trusty and well-beloved cousin," an appellation as ancient as the reign of Henry IV.; who, being either by his wife, his mother, or his sisters, actually related or allied to every earl then in the kingdom, artfully and constantly acknowledged that connection in all his letters and other public acts; from whence the usage has descended to his successors, though the reason has long ago failed. See Earl.

The name of vicecomes, or viscount, was afterwards made use of as an arbitrary title of honour, without any shadow of office pertaining to it, by Henry VI., when, in the eighteenth year of his reign, he created John Beaumont a peer, by the name of Viscount Beaumont; which was the first instance of the kind. 2 Inst. 5. See Barrington on the Ancient Statutes, l. 1. § 10.

The title of baron is the most general and universal title of nobility; for originally every one of the peers of superior rank had also a barony annexed to his other titles. 2 Inst. 5.

But it hath sometimes happened that, when an ancient barony hath been raised to a new degree of peerage, in the course of a few generations, the two titles have descended differently; one perhaps to the male descendants, the other to the heirs-general, whereby the earldom, or other superior title, hath subsisted without a barony; and there are also modern instances where earls and viscounts have been created, without annexing a barony to their other honours; so that the rule doth not hold universally, that all peers are barons. The original and antiquity of baronies have occasioned great inquiries among our English antiquaries. The most probable opinion seems to be, that they were the same with our present lords of manors; to which the name of court-baron (which is the lord's court, and incident to every manor), gives some countenance. It may be collected from King John's Magna Charta, c. 14. that originally all lords of manors, or barons, that held of the king in capite, had seats in the great council or parliament, till about the reign of that prince, the conflux of them became so large and troublesome, that the king was obliged to divide them, and summon only the greater barons in person; leaving the small ones to be summoned by the sheriff; and (as it is said) to sit by representation in another house; which gave rise to the separation of the two houses of parliament. Gillb. Hist. of Exch. c. 3; Seld. Title of Hon. 2, § 21. See title Parliament. By degrees the title came to be confined to the greater barons, or lords of parliament only; and there were no other barons among the peerage but such as were summoned by writ, in respect of the tenure of their lands or baronies, till Richard I. first made it a mere title of honour, by conferring it on divers persons by his letters-patent. 1 Inst. 9; Seld. Jan. Angl. 2, § 11.

Before the time of King Edward III. there were but two titles of nobility, viz. earls and barons; the barons were originally by tenure, afterwards created by writ, and after that by patent; but earls were always created by letters-patent. Seld. 536. See 1 Comm. c. 12. p. 398. in n. And Henry VI. created Edmund of Hadham earl of Richmond by patent, and granted him precedency before all other earls. Mary I.

likewise granted to Henry Ratchiff, Earl of Sussex, a privilege by patent beyond any other nobleman, viz. that he might at any time be covered in her presence, like unto the grandees of Spain; and some few others of our nobility have had this honour. Diet.

The st. 31 Hen. 8. c. 10. settles the precedency of the lords of parliament and great officers of state; after whom, the dukes, marquises, earls, viscounts, and barons, take place according to their ancients; but it is declared, that precedency is in the king's disposition. See Precedence.

A dignity of earl, &c. is a title by the common law; and if a patentee be disturbed of his dignity, the regular course is to petition the king, who indorses it, and sends it into Chancery. Stawnd. Prærog. 72; 22 Edm. 3.

There are now no feudal baronies; but there are barons by succession, and those are the bishops; who, by virtue of ancient baronies held of the king, (into which the possessions of their bishoprics have been converted) are called by writ to parliament, and have place in the House of Peers as lords spiritual; the temporal possessions of bishops are held by their service to attend in parliament when called; and that is in the nature of a barony. See post, II. III.

II. The right of peerage seems to have been originally territorial; that is, annexed to lands, honours, castles, manors, and the like; the proprietors and possessors of which were (in right of those estates) allowed to be peers of the realm, and were summoned to parliament to do suit and service to their sovereign; and, when the land was alienated, the dignity passed with it as appendant. Thus the bishops still sit in the House of Lords in right of successions to certain ancient baronies annexed, or supposed to be annexed, to their episcopal lands. Glan. l. 7. c. 1. And thus, in 11 Hen. 6. the possession of the castle of Arundel was adjudged to confer an earldom on its possessor. Seld. Title of Hon. b. 2. c. 9. § 5. Afterwards, when alienations grew to be frequent, the dignity of peerage was confined to the lineage of the party ennobled, and, instead of territorial, became personal. Actual proof of a tenure by barony became no longer necessary to constitute a lord of parliament; but the record of the writ of summons to him, or his ancestors, was admitted as a sufficient evidence of the tenure. 1 Comm. c. 12. The estates and dignities attached to the castle of Arundel are now inalienably vested in the family of the Duke of Norfolk. See Private Acts, 3 Car. 1. c. 4; 37 Geo. 3. c. 40; 41 Geo. 3. (U. K.) c. xv.

One of the last cases in which a barony by tenure was endeavoured to be established, was that of de Roos or Ros of Hameslake, Irebute, and Belvoir, in 1805, when the Duke of Rutland claimed the barony in right of his castle of Belvoir, as a barony by tenure, in opposition to the claim of lady Henry Fitzgerald, who claimed as co-heir of lady Frances Manners, one of the two daughters and coheirs of John Earl of Rutland. The barony was created by a writ of summons to Robert de Ros in 40 Henry III., not referring to either of the three territorial baronies. The House of Lords resolved, 1806, that the duke was not entitled to the barony. See Cruise on Dignities, 51; and see the Claim in respect of the Castle of Berkley, p. 183.

Peers are now created either by writ or by patent; for those who claim by prescription must suppose either a writ or patent made to their ancestors, though, by length of time, it is lost. The creation by writ, or the king's letter, is a summons to attend the House of Peers, by the style and title of that barony which the king is pleased to confer; that by patent is a royal grant to a subject of any dignity and degree of peerage. The creation by writ is the more ancient way; but a man is not ennobled thereby, unless he actually takes his seat in the House of Lords; and some are of opinion, that there must be at least two writs of summons, and a sitting in two distinct parliaments, to evidence an hereditary barony.

Whitelocke of Parl. ch. 114. The most usual way therefore, because the surest, is to grant the dignity by patent; which enures to a man and his heirs according to the limitations thereof, though he never himself makes use of it. Co. Litt. 16. Yet it is frequent to call up the eldest son of a peer to the House of Lords by writ of summons, in the name of his father's barony; because in that case there is no danger of his children's losing the nobility, in case he never takes his seat, for they will succeed to their grandfather. And where the father's barony is limited by patent to him and the heirs-male of his body, and his eldest son is called up to the House of Lords by writ, with the title of this barony, the writ in this case will not create a fee or a general estate tail, so as to make a female capable of inheriting the title; but upon the death of the father the two titles unite, or become one and the same. Ex parte Eliz. Perry, Bro. P. C. Creation by writ has also one advantage over that by patent; for a person created by writ holds the dignity (in tail) to him and his heirs, without any words to that purport in the writ; but in letters-patent there must be words to direct the inheritance, else the dignity enures only to the grantee for life. Co. Litt. 9, 16. For a man or woman may be created noble for their own lives, and the dignity not descend to their heirs at all, or descend only to some particular heirs; as where a peerage is limited to a man, and the heirs male of his body, by Elizabeth his present lady; and not to such heirs by any former or future wife. And it is to be observed, that though the opinion of Lord Coke is to the contrary, it is now understood that a creation by writ does not confer a fee-simple in the title, but only an estate-tail-general; for every claimant of the title must be descended from the person first ennobled. 1 Woodd. 37; 1 Comm. c. 12. & n.

In case of creation by patent the person created must have the inheritance limited by apt words; as to him and his heirs, or the heirs male of his body, heirs of his body, &c. otherwise he shall have no inheritance. 2 Inst. 48.

The king may create either man or woman noble for life only; and peerage may be gained for life by act of law; as if a duke take a wife, she is a duchess in law by the intermarriage; so of a marquis, earl, &c. 1 Inst. 16; 9 Rep. 97. Also the dignity of an earl may descend to a daughter, if there be no son, who shall be a countess; and if there are many daughters, it is said the king shall dispose of the dignity to which daughter he pleases. 1 Inst. 165; Wood's Inst. 42. See Peers, Descent, III. If a person is summoned as a baron to parliament by writ, and, sitting, die, leaving two or more daughters, who all dying, one of them only leaves issue a son, such issue has a right to demand a seat in the House of Peers. Skin. 441.

Thomas de la Warre was summoned to parliament by writ, anno 3 Hen. 8; and William his son, anno 3 Edw. 6. was disabled by attainder to claim any dignity during his life, but was afterwards called to parliament by Queen Elizabeth, and sat there as puisne lord, and died; then Thomas, the son of the said William, petitioned the queen in parliament to be restored to the place of Thomas his grandfather; and all the judges to whom it was referred were of opinion that he should, because his father's disability was not absolute by attainder, but only personal and temporary during his life; and the acceptance of the new dignity by the petitioner shall not hurt him, so that when the old and new dignity are in one person, the old shall be preferred. 11 Rep. 1.

Where nobility is gained by writ or patent, without descent, it is triable by record; but when it is gained by matter of fact, as by marriage, or where descents are pleaded, nobility is triable per pais. 22 Assis. 24; 3 Salk. 243. A person petitioned the lords in parliament to be tried by his peers; the lords disallowed his peerage, and dismissed the petition; and it was held in this case that the defendant's right stood upon his letters-patent, which could not be cancelled but by scire facias; and that the parliament could not give judgment in a thing which did not come in a judicial way before that court. 2 Salk. 510, 511; 3 Salk. 243. Where peerage is claimed ratione baronii, as by a bishop, he must plead that he is unus parium regni Angliæ; but if the claim is ratione nobilitatis, he need not plead otherwise than pursuant to his creation. 4 Inst. 15; 3 Salk. 243.

When a lord is newly created, he is introduced into the house of peers by two lords of the same rank in their robes garter king at arms going before; and his lordship is to present his writ of summons, &c. to the lord chancellor, which being read, he is conducted to his place: and lords by descent, where nobility comes down from the ancestors, and is enjoyed by right of blood, are introduced with the same ceremony, the presenting of the writ excepted. Lex Constitutionis, 79.

A nobleman, whether native or foreigner, who has his nobility from a foreign state, although the title of dignity be given him, (as the highest and lowest degrees of nobility are universally acknowledged,) in all our legal proceedings no notice is taken of his nobility; for he is no peer; and the law of England prohibits all subjects to receive any hereditary title of honour or dignity from any foreign prince without consent of the sovereign. Lex Constitutionis, 80, 81.

An earldom consists in office for defence of the kingdom and of rents and possessions, &c.; and may be entailed as any other office may, and as it concerns land; but the dignity of peerage cannot be transferred by fine, because it is a quality affixed to the blood, and so merely personal that a fine cannot touch it. 2 Salk. 509; 3 Salk. 244.

A peer cannot lose his nobility but by death or attainder; though there was an instance in the reign of Edward IV. of the degradation of George Neville, Duke of Bedford, by act of parliament, on account of his poverty, which rendered him unable to support his dignity. 4 Inst. 355; Rot. Parl. 17 Edm. 4. nu. 6. But this is a singular instance, which serves at the same time, by having happened, to show the power of parliament; and, by having happened but once, to show how tender the parliament hath been in exerting so high a power. It hath been said, indeed, that if a baron wastes his estate so that he is not able to support the degree, the king may degrade him; but it is expressly held by later authorities, that a peer cannot be degraded but by act of parliament. Moor, 678; 12 Rep. 107; 12 Mod. 56.

George Neville, Duke of Bedford, was degraded by act of parliament, 16th June, 17 Edw. 4. The preamble of the act reciting that the said George hath not, nor may have, any livelihood to support his name, estate, and dignity, or any name of estate; and that it is oftentimes seen when a peer is called to high estate, and hath not convenient livelihood to support the dignity, it induceth great poverty, and often causeth great extortion, embracery, and maintenance, to the great trouble of all such counties where such estate shall happen to be; wherefore the king, by advice of his lords and commons, ordaineth, establisheth, and enacteth, that from henceforth the same creation and making of the said duke, and all the names and dignity given to the said George, or to John Neville, his father, be from henceforth void and of none effect, &c. Rot. Parl. 17 Edw. 4. nu. 6.

In which act these things are to be observed: First, That although the duke had not any possessions to support his dignity, yet his dignity could not be taken from him without an act of parliament. Secondly, The inconveniences attending a great estate and dignity is, and no livelihood to maintain it. Thirdly, it is a good reason to take away such dignity by act of parliament; therefore the statute De Absentibus made at a parliament holden at Dublin, in Ireland, the 10th of May, 28 Hen. 8. by reason of the long absence of George, Earl of Shrewsbury, out of that realm, shall be expounded according to the general words of the writ, to take away such inconvenience. 12 Rep. 106, 107. Earl of Shrewsbury's Case.

Though dignities of peerage are granted from the crown, yet they cannot be surrendered to the crown, except it be in order to new and greater honours; nor are they transferable, unless they relate to an office; and notwithstanding there are instances of earldoms being transferred, and wherein one branch of a family sat in the house of peers by virtue of a grant from the other branch, particularly in the reigns of Henry III. and Edward II. these precedents have been disallowed. Lex Constitutionis, 85, 86, 87. And it seems now to be settled that a peerage cannot be transferred (unless we consider the summoning of the eldest son of a peer by writ as a transfer of one of his father's baronies) without the concurrence of parliament; at least in those cases where the noble personage has no barony to remain in himself; as otherwise on the transfer he would himself be deprived of his peerage, and be made ignoble by his own act. It is a maxim that the whole nation is interested in each individual peer, and that a peer cannot be deprived of his peerage but by act of parliament. See Watkins's Notes on Gilbert's Tenures, note xi. on p. 11. and p. 361.

A personal honour or dignity may be forfeited on committing treason, &c.; for it is implied by a condition in law that the person dignified shall be loyal; and the office of an earl, &c. is ad consulendum Regem tempore pacis et defendendum tempore belli, therefore he forfeits it when he takes counsel or arms against the king. 7 Rep. 38.

By the 24th article of the union between Scotland and England (see tit. Scotland) "of the peers of Scotland at the time of the Union, sixteen shall be the number to sit in the House of Peers of Great Britain, and the words of the Statute Act, incorporated into stat. 5 Ann. c. 8. and recited in § 14. are, "that the said sixteen peers, &c. shall be named by the said peers of Scotland, whom they represent, &c." In consequence of these expressions it is understood that the king cannot create a new Scotch peerage with the elective right, as this would be an intrusion on the rights of the existing electors; for this reason,—Scotch peers are never made except in the case of the younger branches of the royal family, though extinct peerages are revived, or forfeited peerages restored.

With respect to the limitation of the number of the peers of Ireland, see tit. Ireland, Parliament.

III. Of the privileges of peers as members of the upper house of parliament, see tit. Parliament.

A. peers of the realm are also looked upon as the king's hereditary councillors, and may be called together by the king to impart their advice in all matters of importance to the realm, either in time of parliament, or, which hath been their principal use, when there is no parliament in being. Co. Litt. 110.

Instances of conventions of the peers to advise the king have been in former times very frequent, though now fallen into disuse by reason the more regular meetings of parliament. Many instances of this kind of meeting are to be found under our ancient kings; though the former method of convoking them had been so long left off, that when Charles I. in 1640, issued out writs under the great seal to call a great council of all the peers of England, to meet and attend his majesty at York, previous to the meeting of the Long Parliament, the Earl of Clarendon mentioned it as a new invention, not before heard of; that is, as he explains himself, so old, that it had not been practised in some hundreds of years. But though there had not so long before been an instance, nor has there been any since, of assembling them in so solemn a manner, yet in cases of emergency our princes have at several times thought proper to call for and consult as many of the nobility as could easily be got together; as was particularly the case with King James the Second, after the landing of the Prince of Orange; and with the Prince of Orange himself, before he called that convention-parliament which afterwards called him to the throne. 1 Comm.

Besides this general meeting, it is usually looked upon to be the right of each particular peer of the realm to demand an audience of the king, and to lay before him with decency and respect such matters as he shall judge of importance to the public. And, therefore, in the reign of Edward III. it was made an article of impeachment in parliament against the two Hugh Spencers (father and son), for which they were banished the kingdom, "that they by their evil covin would not suffer the great men of the realm, the king's good councillors, to speak with the king, or to come near him, but only in the presence and hearing of the said Hugh the father and Hugh the son, or one of them, and at their will, and according to such things as pleased them." 4 Inst. 53. See 1 Comm. 227—229.

We are next to consider the general privileges which attach to the persons of peers in their individual capacity.

Peers are created for two reasons: 1. Ad consulendum; 2. Ad defendendum Regem; for which reasons the law gives them certain great and high privileges, such as freedom from arrests, &c. even when no parliament is sitting; because the law intends that they are always assisting the king with their council for the commonwealth, or keeping the realm in safety by their prowess and valour. 1 Comm. 227.

In certain criminal cases, that is to say, on indictments for treason and felony, and misprision thereof, a nobleman shall be tried by his peers; but in all misdemeanors, as libels, riots, perjuries, conspiracies, &c. he is to be tried, like a commoner, by a jury. 3 Inst. 30; 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 44. § 13. So in case of an appeal of felony he was to be tried by a jury. 9 Rep. 30; 2 Inst. 49; 10 Edw. 4. b. 6; 3 Inst. 30.

The indictments of peers for treason or felony are to be found by freeholders of the county; and then the peers shall plead before the lord high steward, &c. 1 Inst. 156; 3 Inst. 28. See post, IV.

The 1 Edw. 6. c. 12. which took away benefit of clergy from persons convicted of house-breaking, highway robbery, horse stealing, and robbing of churches, by § 14. enacted, that in all cases where benefit of clergy was allowed to commoners, and also for the above offences, (the only crimes excepted being wilful murder and poisoning of malice prepense,) peers claiming the benefit of the act, though they could not read, should, without any burning in the hand, loss of inheritance, or corruption of blood, be adjudged for the first time as in the case of clerks convict who might make purgation.

Under this act, therefore, peers were invested with a perfect impunity in the commission of every crime except treason and murder, which they continued to enjoy until the passing of the 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 27. whereby all the statutes relating to benefit of clergy were repealed, and, among others, the above extraordinary enactment.

The privilege of peers extends only to the peers of Great Britain; so that a nobleman of any other country, or a lord of Ireland, hath not any other privileges in this kingdom than a common person; also the son and heir apparent of a nobleman is not entitled to the privilege of being tried by his peers, which is confined to such person as is a lord of parliament at the time; but it seems that an infant peer is privileged from arrests, his person being held sacred. Co. Litt. 156; 2 Inst. 48; 3 Inst. 30. See Arrest, Privilege, Process.

The peers of Scotland or Ireland had no privilege in this kingdom before the Union; but by clauses in the respective articles of Union the elected peers have all the privileges of peers of parliament; also all the rest of the peers of Scotland and Ireland have all the privileges of the peerage of England, excepting only that of sitting and voting in parliament. See tit. Ireland, Parliament, Scotland.

The right of trial by their peers, it seems now generally admitted, does not extend to bishops; though the reason given for this exception, viz. that they are not ennobled in blood, and consequently not peers with the nobility, does not seem sufficiently satisfactory. And it has been suggested, that if any instances of trials of this sort by a jury had occurred in remote times, the bishops could not have demanded a trial in parliament without admitting themselves subject to temporal jurisdiction; from which they then claimed exemption; and hence it may be conjectured the bishops have lost their right to be tried in parliament, though only two instances can be found of their being tried by jury, viz. those of Archbishop Cranmer and Bishop Fisher. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 44. § 12.

Some bishops have been tried by peers of the realm, but it hath been when impeached by the House of Commons, as upon special occasions many others have been who have not been peers. The bishops may, however, claim all the privileges of the lords temporal, except that they cannot be tried by the peers, and that they cannot, in capital cases, pass upon the trial of any other peers, they being prohibited by canon to be judges of life and death, &c. They usually therefore withdraw voluntarily, but enter a protest, declaring their right to stay.

A long and ingenious note in chap. viii. of Hallam's Middle Ages contains what the author pleases to call "a curious speculative question, and such only we may presume it will long continue, whether the bishops are entitled, on charges of treason or felony (against them), to a trial by the peers." This question is very fully considered, and the conclusion that they are not so entitled, is stated to be drawn from the great plurality of law-books; and it is suggested that "there cannot be much doubt that whenever the occasion shall occur this will be the decision of the House of Lords." See further, tit. Bishops, and 4 Comm. c. 19.

A peer or peeress (either in her own right or by marriage,) cannot be arrested in civil cases. Finch. L. 355; 1 Ventr. 298. And this privilege extends to all peers, although not having seats in the house; as in the case of Irish and Scotch peers; and in like manner to all peeresses, English, Scotch, or Irish. This is now settled in a report from the Lords' committee, specially appointed to search for precedents.

A subpoena shall not be awarded against a peer out of the Chancery, in a cause; but a letter from the lord chancellor, or lord keeper, in lieu thereof. See Chancery. A peer may not be empannelled upon any inquest, though the cause hath relation to two peers; and if a peer be returned on a jury, a special writ shall issue for his discharge from service. The houses of peers shall not be searched for conventicles but by warrant under the sign manual, or in the presence of the lord lieutenant, or one deputy lieutenant, and two justices of the peace. 22 Car. 2. c. 1; and it was expressly provided by 19 & 14 Car. 2. c. 1, against non-conformists, that for every third offence, which was punishable by transportation, lords of parliament should be tried by their peers.

A nobleman menacing another person, whereby such other person fears his life is in danger, no writ of supplicavit shall issue, but a subpoena; and when the lord appears, instead of surety, he shall only promise to keep the peace. 35 Hen. 6. See Surety of the Peace.

In ejectment a special verdict was found on a trial at bar, and judgment for defendant, and costs taxed; and after affidavit of the demand of costs, a motion was made for an attachment against the duchess, (the duke being dead,) she being one of the lessors, for non-payment of costs; and it was alleged, that if the court did not grant it, the defendant would be remediless; for though in other cases a distringas issues against peers, yet in this case no process can go but an attachment. The court refused to grant an attachment against the person of the duchess, but ordered her to show cause why an attachment, as to her goods and chattels, should not be issued; which rule was afterwards made absolute. Rep. of Pract. in C. B. 7, 8. See Attachment.

A peer, or lord of parliament, cannot be an approver, for it is against Magna Charta for him to pray a coroner. 3 Inst. 129. c. 56; 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 24. § 3.

If a bill in Chancery be exhibited against a peer, the course is first for the lord keeper to write a letter to him; and if he doth not answer, then a subpoena; then an order to show cause why a sequestration should not go; and if he still stands out, then a sequestration. And the reason is, because there can be no process of contempt against his person. 2 Ventr. 342. See Chancery, Privilege.

The Ecclesiastical Court pronounced an Irish peer in contempt for non-payment of costs, and directed such contempt to be signified, leaving it to the lord chancellor to order the writ de contumace capiendo to issue or not. Westmeath v. Westmeath, 2 Hagg. 653.

Distringas is the first process against a peer on an information for an intrusion on the king's lands, or for a conversion of the king's goods. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 12. cites Co. Ent. 587.

If a peer be impleaded by a commoner, yet such cause shall not be tried by peers, but by a jury of the country; for though the peers are the proper pares to a lord of parliament in capital matters, where the life and nobility of a peer is concerned; yet in matter of property the trial of fact is not by them, but by the inhabitants of those counties where the facts arise; since such peers living through the whole kingdom could not be generally cognizant of facts arising in several counties as the inhabitants themselves where they are done; but this want of having noblemen for their jury was compensated as much as possible by returning persons of the best quality; therefore it was formerly necessary that a knight should be summoned in any cause where a peer was party. G. Hist. C. B. 78, 79. See Jury.

See further as to the privilege of peers in cases of act and against them, tit. Parliament.

Peers have also many peculiar privileges annexed to their peerage in the course of judicial proceedings. A peer, sitting in judgment, gives not his verdict upon oath, like an ordinary jurymen, but upon his honour. 2 Inst. 49. He answers a writ to bills in chancery upon his honour, and not upon his oath. 1 P. Wms. 146; but when he is examined as a witness either in civil or criminal cases, or on interrogatories in chancery, he must be sworn (whether in inferior courts, or in the high court of parliament); for the respect which the law shows to the honour of a peer does not extend so far as to overturn a settled maxim, that in judicio non creditur nisi juratis. Dank. 512; Cro. Car. 64.

In the pleas of parliament, 18 Edw. 1. between the Earl of Gloucester and Earl of Hereford, on long debate whether John de Hastings, a baron, ought to be sworn, because he was a peer of the realm, it was resolved that he ought to lay his hand on the book. The like was resolved, 10 Car. 1. B. R. by the court, where the Lord Dorset's testimony was requisite. See Dy. 314, b. marg. pl. 98.

The privilege of a peer is so great in respect of his person, that the king may not restrain him of his liberty, without the order of the House of Lords, except it be in cases of treason &c. A memorable case wherein was that of the Earl of Arundel imprisoned by the king in the reign of King Charles I.

The honour of peers is, however, so highly tendered by the law, that it is much more penal to spread false reports of them and of certain other great officers of the realm, than of other men; scandal against them being called by the peculiar name of scandalum magnatum, and subjected to peculiar punishments by divers ancient statutes. West. 1. 3 Edw. 1. c. 34; 2 Rich. 2. st. 1. c. 5; 12 Rich. 2. c. 11. See Libel, Privilege, Scandalum Magnatum.

At common law it was lawful for any peer to retain as many chaplains as he would, but by 21 Hen. 8. c. 13. her number is limited. See Chaplain. In many cases, the protestation of honour shall be sufficient for a peer, as in trial of peers they proceed upon their honour, not upon oath; and if a peer is defendant in a court of equity, he shall put in his answer upon his honour (though formerly it was to be on oath); and in action of debt upon account, the plaintiff being a peer, it shall suffice to examine his attorney, and not himself on oath; but where a peer is to answer interrogatories, or make an affidavit, as well as where he is to be examined as a witness, he must be upon his oath. Bract. lib. 5. c. 9; 9 Rep. 49; 3 Inst. 29; W. Jones, 152; 2 Salk. 512.

And as to the general privileges of peers, see further Privilege.

With respect to the privileges of peeresses, see Peeresses.

IV. Blackstone says, that in the method and regulation of its proceedings, the trial by the House of Peers differs but little from the trial per patriam, or by jury; except that no special verdict can be given in the trial of a peer; because the lords of parliament, or the lord high steward, (if the trial be had in his court,) are judges sufficiently competent of the law that may arise from the fact. Hutt. 116. And except as to that the peers need not all agree in their verdict, but the greater number, consisting of twelve at the least, will conclude and bind the minority. Kilgus, 56; 7 Wm. 3. c. 3. § 10; Foster, 247. During a trial before the House of Peers a parliament, every peer present on the trial is to judge both of the law and the fact. Post. 112. In cases of the impeachment of a peer for treason, a lord high steward is usually, though not necessarily appointed, rather in the nature of a speaker to regulate the proceedings than as a judge. 4 Comm. 200; Post. 145. But in the court of the high steward, which is held in the recess of parliament, he alone is to judge in all points of law and practice, and the peeresses are merely judges of the fact. Post. 113.

All the barons of parliament shall be tried for treason, felony, misprision, or as accessory, at the suit of the king, by their peers. See Magna Charta, 2 Hen. 3. c. 29; 2 Inst. 49; 2 C. 10. 6; Sta. 152, 153. So all the nobility who are peers of parliament by the common law, which is now affirmed by 2 Hen. 6. c. 9. And a peer cannot waive the trial by his peers. Kel. 56, in marg. 621; 1 St. Tr. 265; 2 Rush. 94.

Trial by peers is very ancient. In the reign of William I. the Earl of Hereford, for conspiring to receive the Danes into England, and depose the Conqueror, was tried by his peers, and found guilty of treason, per judicium parium suorum. 2 Inst. 50. The Duke of Suffolk, anno 2 Hen. 6. being accused of high treason by the commons, put himself upon the king's grace, and not upon his peers, and the king alone judged him to banishment; but he sent for the lord chancellor, and the lords who were in town, to his palace at Westminster, and also the duke, and commanded him to enter the kingdom in the presence of the lords, nevertheless, entered a protest to save the privilege of their peerage; and this was deemed no legal banishment, for the king's judging in that manner was no judgment; he was extrajudicially bid to absent himself out of the realm, and in doing it, he was taken on the sea and slain. The case of the Lord Cromwell, in the reign of King Henry VIII. was very extraordinary; the lord was attainted in parliament, and condemned and executed for high treason, without being allowed to make any defence. It need only be observed, that this attainder was by a parliament under the power and influence of Henry VIII. See Parliament. Hist. vol. 3. 163. And several great persons during this reign were brought to trial before lords commissioners. Anno 32 Car. 2. the Lord Stafford was tried for treason; and after evidence given for the king, and the prisoner made his objections to the king's evidence, he was allowed upon several points of law, viz. That no overt act was alleged in his impeachment; that they were not competent witnesses who swore against him, but that they swore for money; and whether a man could be condemned for treason by one witness, there not being two witnesses to any one point, &c. But the points insisted upon being over-ruled, he was found guilty by a majority of twenty-four votes; fifty-five against thirty-one for him. 3 St. Tr. 311. He was executed; but in 1685 the attainder was reversed by an act of parliament, reciting, that he was innocent of the treason laid to his charge, and that the testimony whereon he was found guilty was false.

It was adjudged that if a peer on arraignment before the lords refused to put himself on his peers, he should be dealt with as one who stood mute; for it was as much the law of the land that a peer should be tried by his peers, as a commoner by commoners. But see now the 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 28. § 2, and tit. Mute.

If one who has a title to peerage be indicted and arraigned as a commoner, and plead not guilty, and put himself upon his country, it hath been adjudged that he cannot afterwards suggest that he is a peer, and pray trial by his peers. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 44. § 19.

By the 7 Wm. 3. c. 3. § 10, it is enacted, that upon the trial of any peers or peeresses, for treason or misprision, all the peers who have a right to sit and vote in parliament, shall be duly summoned twenty days at least before the trial, and every peer so summoned and appearing shall vote in the trial, first taking the oaths of allegiance and supremacy.

Formerly lords triers were appointed by the crown in the trial of peers, but this was at length found such an inlet to oppression, as to be deservedly abolished by the above stat. 7 Wm. 3. See Treason. And it seems that this act extends to every proceeding in full parliament, for the trial of a peer in the ordinary course of justice. Post. 247.

By 6 Ann. c. 23. § 12, peers shall be indicted in Scotland as in England.

By the acts for the Union of Great Britain and Ireland, (39, 40 Geo. 3. c. 67. (British); 40 Geo. 3. c. 38. (Irish);) Irish peers sitting in the House of Commons, shall not be entitled to the privilege of peerage, but are declared liable to be sued, indicted, and proceeded against, and tried as commoners for any offence with which they may be charged. In other cases they shall be sued and tried as peers of the United Kingdom. See Article IV. of the Union.

The peer being indicted for the treason or felony, before commissioners of oyer and terminer, (or in the King's Bench, if the treason, &c. be committed in the county of Middlesex,) then the king, by commission under the great seal, constitutes some peer (generally the lord chancellor) lord high steward, who is judge in these cases; and the commission commands the peers of the realm to be attendant on him, also the lieutenant of the Tower, with the prisoner, &c. A certiorari is awarded out of Chancery, to remove the indictment before the lord high steward; and another writ issues to the lieutenant of the Tower, for bringing the prisoner; and the lord high steward makes his precepts for that purpose, assigning a day and place, as in Westminster Hall, inclosed with scaffolds, &c., and for summoning the peers, of whom there are to be twelve and above, at least, present; at the day, the lord high steward takes his place under a cloth of state; his commission is read by the clerk of the crown, and he has a white rod delivered him by the usher; which being returned proclamation is made, and command given for certifying of indictments, &c. and the lieutenant of the Tower to return his writ, and bring the prisoner to the bar; after this, the serjeant at arms returns his precept with the names of the peers summoned, and they are called over, and, answering to their names, are recorded, when they take their places; the clerk only thus adjusted, the lord high steward declares to the prisoner at the bar the cause of their assembly, assures him of justice, and encourages him to answer without fear; then the clerk of the crown reads the indictment, and arraigns the prisoner, but is not to insist on his holding up his hand, and the high steward gives his charge to the peers; this being over, the king's counsel produce their evidence for the king; and if the prisoner hath any matter of law to plead, he shall be assigned counsel; after evidence given for the king, and the prisoner's answer heard, the prisoner is withdrawn from the bar, and the lords go to some place to consider of their evidence; but the lords can admit no evidence but in the hearing of the prisoner; they cannot have conference with the judges, or demand it, (who attend on the lord high steward, and are not to deliver their opinions beforehand,) but in the prisoner's hearing; nor can they send for the opinions of the judges, or demand them, but in open court; and the lord steward cannot collect the evidence, or confer with the lords, but in the presence of the prisoner; who is at first to require justice of the lords, and that no question or conference be had but in his presence. Nothing is done in the absence of the prisoner until the lords come to agree on their verdict; and then they are to be together as juries until they are agreed, when they come again into court and take their places; and the lord high steward publicly in open court demands of the lords, beginning with the puisne lord, whether the prisoner, calling him by his name, be guilty of the treason, &c. whereof he is arraigned; who all give in their verdict; and he being found guilty by a majority of votes, such majority being more than twelve, is brought to the bar again, and the lord steward acquainting the prisoner with the verdict of his peers, passes sentence and judgment accordingly; after which an O Ye! is made for dissolving the commission, and the white rod is broken by the lord high steward, whereupon this grand assembly breaks up, which is esteemed the most solemn and august court of justice upon earth. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 44; and see 4 Comm. c. 19.

The lord high steward gives no vote himself on a trial by commission; but only on a trial by the House of Peers, while the parliament is sitting. Where a peer is tried by the House of Lords in full parliament, the house may be adjourned as often as there is occasion, and the evidence taken by parcels; and it hath been adjudged that where the trial is by commission, the lord steward, after a verdict given, may take time to advise upon it, and his office continues till he gives judgment. But the triers may not separate upon a trial by commission, after evidence given for the king; and it hath been resolved, that the peers in such case must continue together till they agree to give a verdict. State Trials, ii. 702, iii. 657; and see more fully 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 44, § 1—8.

It is said, a writ of error lies in the King's Bench of an attainer of a peer before the lord high steward. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 50, § 16, cites 1 Sid. 208. If a peer be attainted of treason or felony, he may be brought before the court of B. R. and demanded what he has to say why execution should not be awarded against him? And if he plead any matter to such demand, his plea shall be heard, and execution ordered by the court, upon its being adjudged against him. 1 Hen. 7. 22. pl. 15; Bro. Coro. 129; Fitz. Coro. 49. Likewise the Court of King's Bench may allow a pardon pleaded by a peer to an indictment in that court, to save the trouble of summoning the peers merely for that purpose. But that court cannot receive his plea of not guilty, &c. but only the lord steward on arraignment before the lords, 2 Inst. 42.

See Mr. Amos's Disquisition on the Court of the Lord High Steward, annexed to the second volume of Phillips's State Trials; and tit. Lord High Steward.

The sentence against a peer for treason is the same as against a common subject, though the king generally pardons all but beheading, which is a part of the judgment; for other capital crimes, beheading is also the general punishment of a peer; but anno 23 Hen. 8. the Lord Daeres was attainted of murder, and had judgment to be hanged; and anno 3 & 4 P. & M. the Lord Stourton, being attainted of murder, had judgment against him to be hanged, which sentences were executed; and so in the case of Lord Ferrers, 10 St. Tr. 478. In this latter case it was determined by all the judges that a peer convicted of felony and murder ought to receive judgment for the same, according to the provisions of 25 Geo. 2. c. 37. See Homicide, III. 3. ad fin. And, secondly, supposing the day appointed by the judgment for execution should lapse before such execution done, that a new time may be appointed for the execution, either by the high court of parliament, before which such peer shall have been attainted, although the office of high steward be determined, or by the Court of King's Bench, the parliament not then sitting, and the record of the attainer being properly removed into that court. Fost. 139.

If execution be not done, the lord steward may by precept command it to be done according to the judgment. 3 Inst. 31.

PEERESSES. As we have noblemen, so we have noblewomen, and these may be by creation, descent, or marriage. And first, Henry VIII. made Anne Bullen Marchioness of Pembroke. James I. created Lady Compton, wife to Sir Thomas Compton, Countess of Buckingham in the lifetime of her husband, without any addition of honour to him; and also made Lady Finch Viscountess of Maidstone, and afterwards Countess of Winchelsea, to her and the heirs of her body. George I. made Lady Sculiburgh Duchess of Kendal. If any English woman take to husband a French nobleman, she shall not bear the title of dignity; and if a German woman, &c. marry a nobleman of England, unless she be made denizen, she cannot claim the title of her husband, no more than her dower, &c. Lex Constitution. 80.

There was no precedent for the trial of peeresses, when accused of treason or felony, till after Eleanor Duchess of Gloucester, wife to the Lord Protector, was accused of treason and found guilty of witchcraft, in an ecclesiastical synod, through the intrigues of Cardinal Beaufort. This very extraordinary trial gave occasion to a special statute, 20 Hen. 6. c. 9, which declares the law to be, that peeresses, either in their own right or by marriage, shall be tried before the same judicature as other peers of the realm. Mor. 769. 2 Inst. 50; 6 Rep. 52; Staunf. P. C. 152. This statute is said to be remarkable, as being the only instance of a legislative explanation of any part of Magna Charta. It recites a doubt which existed respecting the interpretation of that charter, from which it would seem that no precedent had occurred during the space of 200 years, in the most barbarous period of our history, of a peeress having been tried for a capital offence. See Barrington's Obs. t. Hen. 6.; 2 Inst. p. 50.

If a woman, noble in her own right, marries a commoner she still remains noble, and shall be tried by her peers; but if she be only noble by marriage, then, by a second marriage with a commoner, she loses her dignity; for as by marriage it is gained, by marriage it is also lost. Dyer, 79; Co. Lit. 16. Yet if a duchess dowager marries a baron, she continues a duchess still; for all the nobility are pares, and therefore it is no degradation. 1 Inst. 16. b.; 2 Inst. 50.

If a queen dowager takes a husband, noble or not noble, she, by her subsequent marriage, shall not lose her dignity. 2 Inst. 50. Yet if a woman, noble by descent, marries to an inferior degree of nobility, as if the daughter of a duke marries a baron, she shall have precedence only as a baroness. Ow. 82.

It hath been agreed that a queen consort and queen dowager, whether she continue sole after the king's death, or take a second husband, and he be a peer or commoner, and also all peeresses by birth, whether sole or married to peers or commoners; and all marchionesses and viscountesses are entitled to a trial by the peers, though not expressly mentioned in the st. 20 Hen. 6. c. 9; 2 Inst. 50; Crompt. Jur. 33; 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 44, § 10, 11.

A woman, noble in her own right, or by a first marriage, marrying a commoner, communicates no rank or title to her husband. 1 Inst. 326 b. There have been claims, and supported by authorities, by a husband after issue had, to assume the title of his wife's dignity, and after her death to retain the same as tenant by the curtesy, but it does not seem that such a claim would now be allowed. See 1 Inst. 29 b. in n.

A woman, noble by marriage, afterwards marrying a commoner, is generally called and addressed by the style and title which she bore before her second marriage; but this is only by curtesy, as the daughters of dukes, marquises, and earls are usually addressed by the title of lady; though in law they are commoners. In a writ of partition brought by R. pl. Howard and Lady Anne Powes, his wife, the court held that it was a mansioner, and that it ought to have been by R. pl. Howard and Anne his wife, late wife of Lord Powes, deceased. Dy. 79.

A countess or baroness may not be arrested for debt or trespass; for though, in respect of their sex, they cannot sit in parliament, yet they are peers of the realm, and shall be tried by their peers, &c. But a capias being awarded against the Countess of Rutland, it was held that she might be taken by the sheriff; because she ought not to dispute the authority of the court from whence the writ issued, but must execute it, for he is bound by oath so to do; and although by the writ itself it appeared that the party was a countess, against whom a capias would not generally lie, for that in some cases it may lie, as for a contempt, &c. therefore the sheriff ought not to examine the judicial acts of the court. 6 Rep. 52.

A bill was against a peeress to discover deeds, she answers on her honour and confesses deeds. She shall produce them only upon her honour, and not on oath. Ch. Proc. 92.

PEINE FORTE ET DURE. This punishment is now abolished. See Mute.

PELLA, a peel, pile, or fort. The citadel or castle in the Isle of Man was granted to Sir John Stanley by this name. Pat. 7 Hen. 4. m. 18. See Man, Isle of.

PELLS. Issues arising from or out of a thing. Fitzh. Just 205.

PELLE AND PELFRE, peltra.] In time of war, the earl marshal is to have of preys and booties, all the gelded beasts, except hogs, &c. which is called pelfre. Old MS. It is used for the personal effects of a felon convict. Plac. in itin. episc. Cistr. 14 Hen. 7.

PELLAGE. The custom or duty paid for skins of leather. Rot. Parl. 11 Hen. 4.

PELLIPARIUS. A leatherseller or skinner. Pat. 15 Edw. 3. p. 2. m. 45.

PELOTA, Fr. pelote.] The ball of the foot. See 4 Inst. 208.

PELT-WOOL. The wool pulled off the skin or pelt of clean sheep. See st. 8 Hen. 6. c. 22.

PEN. A word used by the Britons for a high mountain, and also by the ancient Gauls; from whence those high hills which divide France from Italy are called the Appenines; and more to the purpose is the name of Penmaenmawr in Wales. Cambd. Britan.

PENAL LAWS are of three kinds, viz. poena pecuniaria, poena corporalis, and poena exilii. Cro. Jac. 415.

Penal statutes are made on various occasions, to punish and deter offenders; and they ought to be construed strictly, and not extended by equity; but the words may be interpreted beneficially, according to the intent of the legislators. 1 Inst. 54, 268. See 1 Comm. Introd. § 8. p. 89.

Where a thing is prohibited by statute under a penalty, if the penalty, or part of it, be not given to him who will sue for the same, it goes and belongs to the king. Rast. Entr. 43; 2 Hank. P. C. c. 26. § 17. But the king cannot grant to any person any penalty or forfeiture, &c. due by any statute before judgment thereupon had. Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 3.

Though after plea pleaded, justices of assize, &c. having power to hear and determine offences done against any penal statute, may compound the penalties with the defendant, by virtue of the king's warrant or privy seal.

The courts at Westminster (particularly the Court of King's Bench) frequently give leave on motion, and an affidavit of circumstances, &c. to compound penal actions. Compounding without such leave, is punishable by indictment.

The court will not permit a defendant to compound a penal action, where part of the penalty goes to the crown, unless counsel for the crown are instructed by the Treasury to consent. 5 Taunton, 268.

Where penalties are ordained by penal acts of parliament to be recovered in any court of record, this is to be understood only of the courts at Westminster, and not of the courts of record of inferior corporations. Jenk. Cent. 228.

The spiritual court may hold plea of a thing forbidden by statute upon a penalty, but they may not proceed on the penalty. 2 Lev. 222. See further titles Information, Statutes, Action; and as to the sanction of laws by penalties, 1 Comm. Introd. pp. 56, 57.

As to the time within which actions on penal statutes must be brought, see Limitation of Actions, II. 2.

PENANCE. An ecclesiastical punishment, which affects the body of the penitent, by which he is obliged to give a public satisfaction to the church for the scandal he hath given by his evil example. And in the primitive times, they were to give testimonies of their reformation before they were readmitted to partake of the mysteries of the church.

In the case of incest or incontinency, the sinner is usually enjoined to do a public penance in the cathedral or parish church, or public market, bare-legged and bare-headed, in a white sheet, and to make an open confession of his crime in a prescribed form of words, which is augmented or moderated according to the quality of the fault and the discretion of the judge.

So in smaller faults a public satisfaction or penance, as the judge shall decree, is to be made before the minister, churchwardens, or some of the parishioners, respect being had to the quality of the offence; as in the case of defamation, or laying violent hands on a minister, or the like. God. Append. 18; Wood's Inst. 507. Penance may be changed into a sum of money to be applied to pious uses, and this is called commuting. 3 Inst. 150; 4 Inst. 336. See Articuli Cleri, 9 Edw. 2. c. 4; F. N. B. 53; and tit. Clergy, Excommunication.

PENANCE at common law, where a person stands mute. See Mute.

PENERARIUS. An ensign bearer. John Parient was squire of the body, and penerarius to King Richard II.

PENITENTIARY HOUSES. See Transportation.

PENNY, Sax. penig,] an ancient current silver coin. 2 Inst. 575.

The Saxons had no other sort of silver coin. It was equal in weight to our threepence. Five made one shilling Saxon, and thirty made a mark, which they called manse, and weighed as much as three of our half-crowns.

The English penny called sterling is round, without clipping, and weighs 32 grana frumenti in medio spicae; twenty pence make an ounce, and twelve ounces make a pound. See stats. 20 Edw. 1; 27 Edw. 1. st. 3; 31 Edw. 1. and Stat. antiq. inc. temp. It was made with a cross in the middle, and broke into half-pence and farthings. Cowell. Mat. Paris, 1279. See Denarius.

PENNYWEIGHT. As every pound troy contained twelve ounces, each ounce was formerly divided into twenty parts, called pennyweights; and though the pennyweight be altered, yet the denomination still continues. Every pennyweight is subdivided into twenty-four grains. Cowell.

PENON. Mentioned in an ancient statute, 11 Ric. 2. c. 1. A standard, banner, or ensign, carried in war. Cowell.

PENSA SALIS, casei, &c. A wey of salt or cheese, containing 256 pounds. Cowell.

PENSAM, ad pensam.] The ancient way of paying into the Exchequer as much money for a pound sterling as weighed twelve ounces troy. Payment of a pound de numero, imported just twenty shillings; ad scalam, (see Scalam,) twenty shillings and six-pence; and ad pensam imported the full weight of twelve ounces. See Lowndes's Essay on Coin, p. 4.

PENSION, Fr. pension.] An allowance made to any one without an equivalent. Johnson's Dict. See Pensioner.

To receive a pension from a foreign prince or state, without leave of our king, has been held to be criminal, because it may incline a man to prefer the interest of such foreign prince to that of his own country. See Contempt.

All pensions are liable to certain duties annually imposed by parliament.

As to the incapacity of persons, having pensions from the crown, of being elected members of parliament, see Parliament, VI. (B.) 2.

PENSION OF CHURCHES. Certain sums of money paid to clergymen in lieu of tithes.

Some churches have settled on them annuities, pensions, &c. payable by other churches; which pensions are due by virtue of some decree made by an ecclesiastical judge on a controversy for tithes, by which the tithes have been decreed to be enjoyed by one, and a pension instead thereof to be paid to another; or they have arisen by virtue of a deed made by consent of the parson, patron, and ordinary; and if such pension hath been usually paid for twenty years, then it may be claimed by prescription, and be recovered in the spiritual court, or a parson may prosecute his suit for a pension by prescription, either in that court or at common law, by writ of annuity; but if he takes his remedy at law, he shall never afterwards sue in the spiritual court; if the prescription be denied, that must be tried by the common law. F. N. B. 51; Hardr. 280; Ventr. 120.

A spiritual person may sue in the spiritual court for a pension originally granted and confirmed by the ordinary; but where it is granted by a temporal person to a clerk, he cannot; as if one grant an annuity to a parson, he must sue for it in the temporal courts. Cro. Eliz. 675. See tit. Corody, Courts-Ecclesiastical.

PENSIONS OF THE INNS OF COURT. Annual payments made by each member to the houses; and also that which in the two Temples is called a parliament, and in Lincoln's Inn a council, is in Gray's Inn termed a pension; being usually an assembly of the members to consult of the affairs of the society.

PENSIONER, from pension; one who is supported by an allowance at the will of another; a dependant. It is usually applied (in a public sense) to those who receive pensions or annuities from government; who are chiefly such as have retired from places of honour and emolument.

PENSIONERS, pensionarii.] A band of gentlemen so called, who attend as a guard on the king's person; they were instituted anno 1539, and have an allowance of fifty pounds a-year to maintain themselves and two horses for the king's service. See Stow's Annals, 793.

They have been recently designated, by order of his majesty, the Honourable Body of Gentlemen at Arms.

PENSION-WRIT. When a pension-writ is once issued, none sued thereby in any Inns of Court shall be discharged or permitted to come into Commons, till all duties be paid. Order in Gray's Inn, wherein it seems to be a peremptory order against such of the society as are in arrear for pensions and other duties. Cowell.

PENTECOSTALS, Pentecostalia.] Pious oblations made at the feast of Pentecost by parishioners to their priest, and sometimes by inferior churches or parishes to the principal mother-church. Which oblations were also called Whitsun-farthings, and were divided into four parts; one to the parish priest, a second to the poor, a third for repair of the church, and a fourth to the bishop. Stephens's Procurations and Pentecostals. See Kennet's Glossary in Pentecostalia.

These are still paid in some few dioceses, being now only a charge upon particular churches, where by custom they have been paid; Ken. Par. Ant. 596; Deg. p. 2. c. 15; and if they be denied when they are due, they are recoverable in the spiritual court. Gibbs. 977; 18 Wm. 657.

PERAMBULATION, perambulatio.] A travelling through, or over; as perambulation of the forest is the surveying or walking about the forest, and the utmost limits of it, by justices, or other officers thereto assigned to set down and preserve the metes and bounds thereof. Stats. 16 Car. 1. c. 16; 20 Car. 2. c. 3; 1 Inst. 50. See further tit. Forest.

Perambulation of parishes is to be made by the minister, churchwardens and parishioners, by going round the same once a year, in or about Ascension week, and the parishioners may well justify going over any man's land in their perambulation, according to usage; and it is said, may abate all nuisances in their way. Cro. Eliz. 441. See further Parish.

There is also a perambulation of manors; and a writ de perambulatione facienda, which lies where any encroachments have been made by a neighbouring lord, &c.; then, by the assent of the lords, the sheriff shall take with him the parties and neighbours, and make a perambulation, and settle the bounds; also a commission may be granted to other persons to make perambulation, and to certify the same in the Chancery, or the Common Pleas, &c. And this commission is issued to make perambulation of towns, counties, &c. New Nat. Br. 206.

If tenant for life of a lordship, and one who is tenant at fee-simple of another lordship adjoining, sue forth the writ or commission, and by virtue thereof a perambulation is made, the same shall not bind him in reversion; nor shall the perambulation made with the assent of tenant in tail, bind his heir. And it is said this assent of the parties to the perambulation ought to be acknowledged and made personally in Chancery, or by dedimus potestatem; and being certified, the writ or commission issues, &c. New N. Br. 206. The writ begins thus: "The King to the Sheriff, &c. We command you, that taking with you twelve discreet lawful men of your county, in your proper person you go to the land of A. B. of, &c. and the land of C. D. of, &c. and upon their oath you cause to be made perambulation betwixt the lands of the said A. in, &c. and of the said C. in, &c.; so that it be made by certain metes, or bounds and divisions, &c. And make known to our justices at Westminster, &c."

If perambulation be refused to be made by a lord, the other lord, who is grieved thereby, shall have a writ against him called de rationabilibus divisis. See F. N. B. 128, 153. Reg. Orig. 157; and Rationabilibus Divisio.

Questions as to boundaries, limits, &c. are now, however, in general determined by actions of trespass, ejectment &c.

Actions upon writs of perambulation were authorized in Scotland by the act 1697, c. 79, to settle the bounds of disputed properties adjoining each other.

PERANGARIA. See Angaria.

PERCA, for particu, a perch of land. Mon. Angl. n. 87.

PERCAPTURA. A place in a river made up with banks, &c. for the better preserving and taking fish. Paroch. Antiq. 120.

PERCH. A rod or pole of sixteen feet and a half in length, whereof forty in length and four in breadth make an acre of ground. Crompt. Jurisd. 222.

But by the customs of several counties, there is a difference in this measure; in Staffordshire it is twenty-four feet; and in the forest of Sherwood twenty-five feet, the foot there being eighteen inches long; and in Herefordshire a perch, of ditching is twenty-one feet; the perch of walling sixteen feet and a half; and a pole of denshired ground is twelve feet, &c. Skene.

Now, by the 5 Geo. 4. c. 74. the perch is fixed at five yards and a half of the standard yard. See Measure.

PER, CUI, ET POST. Writs of entry so called, but now abolished. See Entry.

PERDINGS. The dregs of the people, viz. men of no substance. Leg. Hen. 1. c. 29.

PERDONATIO UTLAGARIÆ. A pardon for a man, who, for contempt in not yielding obedience to the process of the king's court, is outlawed, and afterwards of his own accord surrenders. Reg. Orig. 28; Leg. Ed. Confess. c. 18, 19.

PEREMPTORY, peremptorius, from the verb perimere, to cut off. Joined with a substantive, as action or exception, signifies a final and determinate act, without hope of renewing or altering. So Fitzherbert calleth a peremptory action; Nat. Brev. 35, 38, 104, 108; and nonsuit peremptory. Idem. 5, 11. A peremptory exception. Bracton, l. 4. c. 20. Smith de Rep. Anglor. l. 2. c. 18. calleth that a peremptory exception, which makes the state and issue in a cause. Cowell.

A peremptory day is when business by rule of court is to be spoke to at a precise day; but if it cannot be spoken to then, the court, at the prayer of the party concerned, will give a farther day without prejudice to him. See Motion in Court, Practice.

PEREMPTORY CHALLENGE OF JURORS. See Jury, l. IV.

PEREMPTORY MANDAMUS. See Mandamus.

PEREMPTORY WRIT. See Optional Writ, Original.

PERINDE VALERE. A term in the ecclesiastical law, signifying a dispensation granted to a clerk, who being defective in capacity for a benefice, or other ecclesiastical function, is de facto admitted to it; and it hath the appellation from the words, which make the faculty as effectual to the party dispensed with, as if he had been actually capable of the thing for which he is dispensed with at the time of his admission. In stat. 25 Hen. 8. c. 21. it is called a writ. See Gibbs. 87.

PERINDINARE. To stay, remain, or abide in a place. Matt. West. an. 1016; Fortesc. c. 36.

PERIPHRAISIS. Circumlocution; use of many words to express the sense of one. Johns.

No periphrasis, or circumlocution, will supply words of art, which the law hath appropriated for the description of offences in indictments. No periphrasis, in indictment or composition, shall make good an indictment which doth not bring the fact within all the material words of a statute; unless the statute be recited, &c. Cro. Eliz. 535, 749. See Indictment.

PERJURY,

AND SUBORNATION THEREOF.

PERJURY, perjurium mandatum cum juramento firmatum, is defined to be a crime committed, when a lawful oath is administered, by any who hath authority, to a person in any judicial proceeding, who swears wilfully, absolutely, and falsely, in a matter material to the issue or cause in question, by their own act, or by the subornation of others. 3 Inst. 153, 164.

PERJURY, by the common law, is defined a wilful false oath by one who, being lawfully required to depose the truth in any proceeding in a court of justice, swears absolutely, in a matter of some consequence to the point in question, whether he be believed or not. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 69. § 1.

SUBORNATION OF PERJURY, by the common law, is an offence in procuring a man to take a false oath amounting to perjury, who actually takes such oath; but if the person induced to take such oath do not actually take it, the person, by whom he was so incited, is not guilty of subornation; yet he is liable to be punished not only by fine, but also by infamous corporal punishment. 1 Roll. Abr. 41, 57; Yelv. 72; Cro. Jac. 158; 2 Keb. 399; 3 Mod. 122; 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 69. § 10.

I. Of Perjury by the Common Law, and how restrained and punished.

II. Of the punishment of Perjury by Statute.

I. 1st, It is necessary, to constitute the offence of perjury, that the false oath be taken wilfully, viz. with some degree of deliberation; and it must also be corrupt (that is, committed malò animo); it must be wilful, positive, and absolute; not merely owing to surprise or inadvertency, or a mistake of the true state of the question. 5 Mod. 350; 4 Comm. 137; 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 69. § 2. See 1 T. R. 69.

2dly, The oath must be taken either in a judicial proceeding, or in some other public proceeding of the like nature, wherein the king's honour or interest is concerned, or before commissioners appointed by the king to inquire of the forfeitures of his tenants, or of defective titles wanting the supply of the king's patents; but it is not material whether the court in which a false oath is taken be a court of record or not, or whether it be a court of common law or a court of equity or civil law, &c., or whether the oath be taken in face of the court or out of it, before persons authorized to examine a matter depending on it, as before the sheriff on a writ of inquiry, &c.; or whether it be in relation to the merits of a cause, or in a collateral matter; as where one, who offers himself to be bail for another, swears that his substance is greater than it is, &c.; but neither a false oath in a mere private matter, as in making a bargain, &c., nor the breach of a promissory oath, whether public or private, are punishable as perjury. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 69. § 3.

The law takes no notice of any perjury but such as is committed in some court of justice having power to administer an oath, or before some magistrate or proper officer invested with a similar authority, in some proceedings relative to a suit or a criminal prosecution; for it esteems all other oaths unnecessary at least, and therefore will not punish the breach of them. For which reason it is much to be questioned how far any magistrate is justifiable in taking a voluntary affidavit in any extrajudicial matter, as is now too frequent upon every petty occasion, since it is more than possible that by such idle oaths a man may frequently in foro conscientie, incur the guilt, and at the same time evade the temporal penalties of perjury. 4 Comm. c. 10. p. 137; see 15 Geo. 3. c. 39, and Burn's Just. tit. Oath, 1.

Where the proceedings are coram non judice, however false the oath may be, the party cannot be indicted for perjury; thus a false oath taken in a court of requests, on a matter concerning lands, has been holden not to be indictable, that court having no jurisdiction in such cases. 3 Salk. 269.

An indictment for perjury assigned on an affidavit sworn before the court of B. R., need not state, nor is it necessary to prove, that the affidavit was filed of record or exhibited to the court, or in any manner used by the party. 7 T. R. 315.

3dly, The oath ought to be taken before persons lawfully authorized to administer it; for if it be taken before persons acting merely in a private capacity, or before persons pretending to a legal authority of administering such oath, but having no such authority, it is not punishable as perjury; yet a false oath taken before commissioners, whose commission at the time is in strictness determined by the demise of the king, is perjury, if taken before such time as the commissioners had notice of such demise; for it would be of utmost ill consequence, in such case, to make their proceedings wholly void. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 69. § 4.

But it has been held, though there seems no satisfactory ground for the decision, that a false oath taken before a surrogate in Doctors' Commons, in order to procure a marriage licence, will not support a prosecution for perjury. R. & R. 459; and see 1 Leach, 63, 64; 2 Deacon's Crim. Dig. 1001.

It is remarkable that the House of Commons have no power to administer an oath, except in a few particular instances, where that power is granted to them by express statute; as in cases of election petitions, &c. It is supposed that the reason they have never obtained the general authority of administering an oath, is owing to the jealousy of the upper house, which, by securing this privilege to itself, prevents the commons from participating in the judicature of parliament. 4 Comm. c. 10, in note.

4thly, The oath ought to be taken by a person sworn to depose the truth; therefore a false verdict comes not under the notion of perjury, because the jurors swear not to depose the truth, but only to judge truly of the depositions of others; but a man may be as well perjured by an oath in his own cause (e.g. in an answer in Chancery, or in an answer to interrogatories concerning a contempt, or in an affidavit, &c.) as by an oath taken by him as witness in another's cause. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 69. § 5.

5thly, It is not material whether the thing sworn be true or false, or whether the person who swears it in truth knows nothing of it. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 69. § 6. But see 1 T. R. 69, that the oath must be false.

6th, The oath must be taken absolutely and directly; therefore if a man only swears as he thinks, remembers, or believes, he cannot be guilty of perjury. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 69. § 7. But a man may be indicted for perjury in swearing that he believes a fact to be true, which he must know to be false. Leach, 270.

7thly, The thing sworn ought to be some way material; for if it be wholly foreign from the purpose, or immaterial, and neither pertinent to the matter in question, nor tending to aggravate or extenuate the damages, nor likely to induce the jury to give credit to the substantial part of the evidence, it cannot amount to perjury, because it is wholly insignificant; as where a witness introduces his evidence with an impertinent preamble of a story, concerning previous facts, no ways relating to what is material, and is guilty of a falsity as to such facts; but a witness may be guilty of perjury in respect to a false oath, concerning a mere circumstance, if such oath have a plain tendency to corroborate the more material part of the evidence; as if in trespass for spoiling the plaintiff's close, with defendant's sheep, a witness swears that he saw such a number of defendant's sheep in the close, and being asked how he knew them to be defendant's, swears that he knew them by such a mark, which he knew to be the defendant's, where in truth defendant never used any such mark. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 69. § 8. And it is incumbent on the prosecutor to prove the materiality of the perjury. Ibid. in note.

8thly, It is not material whether the false oath was credited or not, or whether the party in whose prejudice it was taken was in the event damaged by it; for the prosecution is not grounded on the damage to the party, but on the abuse of public justice. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 69. § 9. On the trial, the oath will be taken as true until it be disproved; and therefore to convict a man of perjury, one probable credible witness is not enough; for the evidence must be strong, clear, and more numerous on the part of the prosecution, than the evidence on the other side: therefore the law will not permit a man to be convicted of perjury, unless there are two witnesses at least. 10 Mod. 195. Nor shall the party prejudiced by the perjury be admitted as a witness to prove it. Lord Raym. 396.

With respect to subornation of perjury, if the person incited to take a false oath do not actually take it, the person by whom he was so incited is not guilty of subornation of perjury, but he is nevertheless liable to be punished as for a gross misdemeanor in attempting to pervert the course of justice. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 69. § 10.

The punishment of perjury and subornation at common law has been various: it was anciently death; afterwards banishment, or cutting out of the tongue; then forfeiture of goods; and now it is fine and imprisonment, and never more to be capable of bearing testimony. 3 Inst. 163. The 5 E. 2 c. 9. (see post, II.), if the offender be prosecuted thereon, inflicts the penalty of perpetual infamy, and a fine of 40*l.* on the suborner; and in default of payment, imprisonment for six months, and to stand in the pillory. Perjury itself is by that statute, punished with six months' imprisonment, perpetual infamy, and a fine of 20*l.*, or not paying the fine, to have both ears nailed to the pillory. See post, II. The prosecution, however, is usually carried on for the offence at common law (by indictment at the assizes, or in the King's Bench), especially as to the penalties before inflicted, the 2 Geo. 2. c. 25, superadds a power of punishment, by committing the offender to the house of correction, and transportation for seven years. 4 Comm. c. 10. See post, II.

A consequence of a conviction for perjury, though it forms no part of the judgment, is the incapacity of the offender ever more to give evidence in a court of justice. 4 Comm. 137. See the provisions of the 5 Eliz. c. 9; post, II.

If perjury be committed in a temporal cause, it is punishable only in the temporal courts; but where it is committed in a spiritual cause, the spiritual judge has authority to inflict canonical punishment, and prohibition will not go. Ciba. 1013; 1 Ought. 9; and see 5 Eliz. c. 9. § 11; post, II.

It has sometimes been wished, that perjury, at least upon capital accusations, whereby another's life has been, or might have been, destroyed, was rendered capital, upon a principle of retaliation; and certainly the odiousness of the crime seems to plead strongly in behalf of such a law. Where indeed, the death of an innocent person has actually been the consequence of such wilful perjury, it falls within the guilt of deliberate murder, and deserves an equal punishment, which our ancient laws in fact inflicted. Brit. c. 5. But Ciba says expressly, it is not holden for murder at this day. 3 Inst. 48; and see Fost. 121, 132; 4 Comm. c. 10. p. 38, 39 c. 14. p. 196.

II. By the English act, 5 Eliz. c. 9. § 3. (made perpetual by the 29 Eliz. c. 5. § 2, and 21 Jac. 1. c. 28. § 8.) and by the Irish act, 28 Eliz. c. 1, "Whoever shall unlawfully and corruptly procure any witness to commit any wilful and corrupt perjury, or shall unlawfully or corruptly procure or suborn any witness, who shall be sworn to testify in perpetuum rei memoriam, shall, for such offence, being thereto lawfully convicted or attainted, forfeit the sum of 40*l.* And if such offender so convicted or attainted, shall not have goods, &c. to the value of 40*l.*, then such person shall suffer imprisonment by the space of one half-year, without bail, and stand upon the pillory the space of one hour in some market town next adjoining to the place where the offence was committed, in open market there, or in the market town itself where the offence was committed.

§ 5. No person so convicted or attainted, shall be received as a witness in any court of record till such judgment shall be reversed; and that on such reversal the party aggrieved shall recover damages against the party who procured the judgment so reversed to be first given.

§ 6. If any person shall, either by the subornation, unlawful procurement, sinister persuasion, or means, of any other, or by their own act, consent, or agreement, wilfully and corruptly commit wilful perjury, that then every offender being duly convicted, shall forfeit 20*l.* and have imprisonment by the space of six months, without bail; and the oath of such offender shall not from thenceforth be received in any court of record, until such judgment be reversed, &c.

§ 7. If such offender shall not have goods or chattels to the value of 20*l*. then he shall be set on the pillory, where he shall have both ears nailed.

§ 8. One moiety of the forfeitures to the king, the other to the person grieved, who will sue for the same, &c., and (§ 9.) as well the judge of every court where any suit shall be, and wherein any such perjury shall be committed, as also the justices of assize and gaol delivery, and justices of peace at their quarter sessions, may inquire of, hear, and determine offences against the act.

§ 11. The act shall no way extend to any spiritual or ecclesiastical court; but every offender shall be punished by such civil laws as are used in the said courts.

§ 12. The statute shall not restrain the authority of any judge having absolute power to punish perjury before the making thereof; but every such judge may proceed in the punishment of all offences punishable before making the statute, as they might have done to all purposes, so that they set not on the offender less punishment than contained in the act.

In the construction of the English statute, the following opinions have been holden:

That every indictment or action on this statute must exactly pursue the words of it; therefore if it allege that the defendant deposed such a matter falso et deceptivè, or falso et corruptè, or falso et voluntariè, without saying voluntariè et corruptè, it is not good, though it conclude that sic voluntariè et corruptè commisit perjurium contra formam statuti, &c. Also it is necessary expressly to show that the defendant was sworn; and it is not sufficient to say that facto per se sacro evangelio deposuit. Cro. Eliz. 147; Heil. 12: Sac. 43; 2 Leon. 211; 1 Show. 198; Cro. Eliz. 105; 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 69, § 17.

But there is no need to show whether the party took the false oath through the subornation of another, or of his own act, though the words of the statute are, "If persons by subornation, &c. or their own act, &c. shall commit wilful perjury," for there being no medium between the branches of this distinction, they express no more than the law would have implied; therefore operate nothing. 3 Bulst. 147; 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 69, § 18.

It hath been adjudged that a man cannot be guilty of perjury within this statute, in any case wherein he may not possibly be guilty of subornation of perjury within it; for it is reasonable to give the whole statute the same construction; and it can be well intended that the makers of the statute meant to extend its purview farther as to perjury, which they seem to esteem the lesser crime, than to subornation of perjury, which they seem to esteem the greater: therefore, since the clause concerning subornation of perjury, mentioning only matters depending by writ, bill, plaint, or information, concerning hereditaments, goods, debts, or damages, &c. extends not to perjury on an indictment or criminal action, the clause concerning perjury, though pointed in more general words, hath been adjudged to come under the like restriction; also since the clause concerning subornation of perjury relates only to perjury by witnesses, that concerning perjury shall extend only to the like perjury; therefore, no perjury in an answer in Chancery; or in swearing the oath against a man; or in any presentment by homage in a court Baron; or in wager of law, or in swearing before commissioners of inquiry of the king's title to lands, and by the opinions of some, a false affidavit against a man in a court of justice is not within the statute, but it such affidavit be by a third person, and relate to a cause depending before the court, and either of the parties in variance be grieved in respect of such cause, by reason of the perjury, it may strongly be argued, that it is within the purview of the statute; also a false oath before the sheriff, on a writ of inquiry, is within the statute. 5 Co. 99; Cro. Jac. 120; 3 Inst. 164; 2 Leon. 201; Yelv. 120; Cro. Eliz. 148; 2 Rol. Abr. 77; 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 69, § 19, 21.

But it has been decided, that any court may punish such an offence committed in the face of the court, under this statute, 5 Eliz. c. 9. Therefore where one made an affidavit in the Court of Common Pleas, and confessed it was false, the court recorded his confession, and sentenced him to the pillory; and the objections that the court had no jurisdiction, and that the offender ought to have been brought before the court by indictment, were over-ruled. 8 Mod. 179; 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 69, § 21, in note.

It hath been collected from the clause which gives an action to the party grieved, that no false oath is within the statute, which does not give some person a just cause of complaint; therefore, if the thing sworn be true, though it be not known by him who swears it to be so, the oath is not within the statute, because it gives no just cause of complaint to the other party, who would take advantage of another's want of evidence to prove the truth; from the same ground, no false oath can be within the statute, unless the party against whom it was sworn suffered some disadvantage by it; therefore, in every prosecution on the statute, you must set forth the record wherein you suppose the perjury to have been committed, and must prove at the trial that there is such a record, either by actually producing it, or an attested copy; also in the pleadings you must not only set forth the point wherein the false oath was taken, but must also show how it conduced to the proof or disproof of the matter in question; and if an action on the statute be brought by more than one, you must show how the perjury was prejudicial to each of the plaintiffs. But it seems that a perjury which tends only to aggravate or extenuate the damages, is as much within the statute as a perjury which goes directly to the point in issue; and a perjury in a cause wherein an erroneous judgment is given, is a good ground of prosecution upon the statute till the judgment be reversed. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 69, § 22.

If perjury be committed that is within this statute, but the indictment concludes not contra formam statuti, yet it is good at common law, but not to bring one within the corporal punishment of the statute. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. c. 69, § 191.

The statute of Elizabeth did not alter the nature of the offence of perjury, but merely enlarged the punishment. It is however seldom resorted to in the present day, on account of the difficulty in convicting offenders under its enactments. See further, 2 Dencon's Crim. Dig. 1006.

By the British acts, 2 Geo. 2. c. 25, § 2. (revived and made perpetual by 9 Geo. 2. c. 18,) and by the Irish act, 3 Geo. 2. c. 4, § 2 (see also 17 & 18 Geo. 3. c. 36; 31 Geo. 3. c. 44,) the more effectually to deter persons from committing wilful and corrupt perjury or subornation of perjury, it is enacted, "that besides the punishment to be inflicted by law for so great crimes, it shall be lawful for the court or judge before whom any person shall be convicted of wilful and corrupt perjury or subornation of perjury, to order such person to be sent to some house of correction for a time not exceeding seven years, there to be kept to hard labour during the time; otherwise to be transported for a term not exceeding seven years, as the court shall think proper; therefore judgment shall be given that the person convicted shall be committed or transported accordingly, besides such punishment as shall be adjudged to be inflicted on such person, agreeable to the laws in being; and if transportation be directed, the same shall be executed in such manner as is provided by law for transportation of felons; and if any person so committed or transported shall voluntarily escape or break prison, or return from transportation, before the expiration of the time, such person, being lawfully convicted, shall suffer death as a felon, and shall be tried for such felony in the county where he so escaped, or where he shall be apprehended." The British act does not extend to Scotland.

Now, by the 4 & 5 Wm. 4. c. 67, capital punishment is taken away in case of returning from transportation.

By various acts the penalties of perjury are extended to false oaths taken before competent jurisdictions, and in matters relating to the revenue, &c.

By the British act, 23 Geo. 2. c. 11, which extends only to England and Wales, and by the Irish act, 31 Geo. 3. c. 18, for Ireland, "in every information or indictment for perjury, it shall be sufficient to set forth the substance of the offence charged, and by what court, or before whom the oath was taken (averring such court or person to have authority to administer the same,) together with the proper averments to falsify the matter wherein the perjury is assigned, without setting forth the bill, answer, information, indictment, declaration, or any part of any record or proceeding, and without setting forth the commission or authority of the court or person before whom the perjury was committed." § 1.

"In every information or indictment for subornation of perjury, it shall be sufficient to set forth the substance of the offence charged, without setting forth the bill, answer, information, indictment, declaration, or any part of any record or proceeding, and without setting forth the commission or authority of the court or person before whom the perjury was committed or agreed to be committed." § 2.

"It shall be lawful for any justice (sitting the court, or within twenty-four hours after) to direct any person examined as a witness before them, to be prosecuted for perjury, in case there appear a reasonable cause, and to assign the party injured, or other person undertaking such prosecution, counsel, who shall do their duty without fee: and every prosecution so directed shall be carried on without payment of any tax, and without payment of any fees in court, or to any officer of the court: and the clerk of assize, or his associate or prothonotary, or other officer of the court attending when such prosecution is directed, shall, without fee, give the party injured, or other person undertaking such prosecution, a certificate of the same being directed, with the names of the counsel assigned him; which certificate shall be deemed sufficient proof of such prosecution having been directed: provided that no such direction or certificate shall be given in evidence upon any trial against any person upon a prosecution so directed." § 3.

By the 56 Geo. 2. c. 138, "For abolishing the punishment of the pillory, except in particular cases," it is expressly provided, that all laws in force, whereby any person is subject to punishment for the taking any false oath, or for committing any manner of wilful and corrupt perjury, or for the procuring or suborning any person so to do, or for wilfully, falsely, or corruptly affirming or declaring, or procuring or suborning any other person so to affirm and declare, in any matter or thing, which, if the same had been deposed in the usual form, would have been wilful and corrupt perjury, shall continue in full force and effect.

In an indictment for perjury on a trial formerly had, it is not necessary, under the above statute, to set forth so much of the proceedings of the trial as will show the materiality of the question on which the perjury is assigned; it is sufficient to allege generally, that the particular question became a material question. But where the prosecutor undertakes to set out more than he need of the proceedings, he must set them out correctly. 5 T. R. 318.

In general the court will oblige the defendant to plead or demur, even to a defective indictment for this offence. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 25. § 146. They are also very cautious in granting a certiorari to remove it. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 28. And permission has been refused in Chancery to amend an answer, where an indictment for perjury had only been threatened; even where the party, having no interest, could not be supposed to make the false oath intentionally. 1 Br. P. C. 419. For it is the province of the grand jury to judge of the intention; and what the grand jury may find, the court will never expunge. Hardw. 203.

The two witnesses necessary to prove perjury are sufficiently satisfied by the production of one vivâ voce witness, and also of a document written by the defendant, contradicting his statement on oath. 6 C. & P. 315.

By the 8 Geo. 1. c. 6. "a false affirmation made by Quakers shall be liable to the same punishment as wilful perjury." The like provision is made in Ireland, by the Irish act 19 Geo. 2. c. 18.; and it has been introduced into all the statutes subsequently passed, relieving Quakers, &c. from the necessity of taking oaths. See Oaths, Quakers, Separatists.

In Scotland the punishment of perjury is directed by statute, the last of which, 1555, c. 47. declares perjury to be punishable by confiscation of moveables, piercing the tongue, and infamy; to which the judge, in aggravated cases, may add any other penalty that the case seems to require. By the same act, subornation of perjury is punishable as perjury.

PERMISSIVE WASTE. See Waste.

PERMIT, from permitto.] A licence or warrant for persons to pass with and sell goods, on having paid the duties of customs or excise for the same.

By the 2 W. 4. c. 16. the laws regulating the granting and issuing of permits for the removal of goods under the excise laws were consolidated and amended.

By § 2. the commissioners of excise are to provide moulds for making paper to be used for, and plates and types for printing permits.

§ 3. Unauthorized persons making paper in imitation of excise paper, and persons forging or counterfeiting such plates and types, are guilty of felony, punishable with seven years transportation, or imprisonment for not less than two years.

§ 3. Forging or counterfeiting permits, or uttering forged or counterfeited permits, is a misdemeanor subjecting the offender to transportation for seven years, or fine and imprisonment.

PERMUTATIONE archidiaconatus et ecclesiarum eodem annexæ cum ecclesiis et præbendis. A writ to an ordinary, commanding him to admit a clerk to a benefice, upon exchange made with another. Reg. Orig. 307.

PERMUTATION or BARTER, being the exchange of one moveable subject for another, may, by the law of Scotland, be completed by consent. See Exchange.

PER MY ET PER TOUT. By the half and the whole. See Joint-Tenants.

PERNANCY, from the Fr. prendre.] A taking or receiving; as tithes in pernancy, are tithes taken, or that may be taken, in kind. So, pernancy of the profits means the taking the profits. See the next title.

PERNOR OF PROFITS. He who receives the profits of lands, &c. and is all one with cestui que use. 1 Rep. 1. The king has the pernancy of the profits of the lands of a outlaw, in personal actions; and by seizure shall hold against the alienation of such outlaw, &c. Raym. 17. See Co. L. 589 b; and st. 12 R. 2. c. 15.

PERPARS. A part of the inheritance. Fleta, lib. 2. c. 54. par. 19.

PERPETUAL CURACIES. See Parson, Vicar.

By the 1 & 2 W. 4. c. 38. churches or chapels built and endowed by particular individuals shall have districts assigned to them, and be deemed perpetual curacies, and the right of nomination thereto shall be vested in the person so building and endowing.

PERPETUATING THE TESTIMONY or WITNESSES. If witnesses to a disputable fact are old and infirm, it is usual to file a bill in Chancery, to perpetuate the testimony of those witnesses, although no suit is depending; for, it may be, a man's antagonist only waits for the death of some of them to commence his suit. 3 Comm. 450.

A bill in perpetuum rei memoriam is filed for the purpose of preserving the evidence of witnesses, touching a matter which cannot be immediately investigated in a court of law, or where the evidence of a material witness is likely to be lost by his death, or departure from the realm, before the facts can be investigated. Mut. 51. Witnesses cannot be examined in perpetuum rei memoriam without a bill being filed. Lord Bacon's Ordinances, Beam. Ord. 32. The bill prays leave to examine the witnesses touching the matter so stated, to the end that their testimony may be preserved and perpetuated. Mut. 51. A bill to perpetuate must state that no action can be immediately brought, or it is demurrable. 1 S. & S. 83.

PERPETUITY. A perpetuity is, where, though all who have interest should join in a conveyance, yet they could not bar or pass the estate. But if, by concurrence of all having interest, the estate-tail may be barred, it is no perpetuity. Ch. Cas. 213. And see 3 Ch. Ca. 35.

A perpetuity is a thing odious in law, and destructive to the commonwealth; it would put a stop to the commerce, and prevent the circulation of the property of the kingdom. Vern. 164.

It is absolutely against the constant course of Chancery to decree a perpetuity, or give any relief in that case. 1 Chan. Rep. 144.

Perpetuities are absolute or qualified. And estates-tail from the time of the statute de donis, till common recoveries were found out, were looked upon as perpetuities. 12 Mod. 232.

Various have been the attempts to establish perpetuities, by controlling the exercise of that right of alienation which is inseparable from the estate of a tenant in tail. The chief of them are brought together in Taylor d. Atkins v. Horde, 1 Burr. 84, where it is observed, that the power to suffer a common recovery is a privilege inseparably incident to an estate-tail. It is a potestas alienandi, which is not restrained by the statute de donis; and has been so considered ever since Tadnam's case, 12 E. 1. 11. b. p. 16; and this power to suffer a common recovery cannot be restrained by condition, limitation, custom, recognizance, statute, or covenant. Trent v. n. c. 3. § 5. in n.

Every executory devise is a perpetuity, as far as it goes, in an estate inalienable, though all mankind join in the conveyance. 1 Salk. 229. See Executory Devise, Limitation of Estates, Tail, &c.

PER QUÆ SERVITIA, was a judicial writ issuing from the note of a fine, and lay for cognisee of a manor, seignory, church, or other servages, to compel him who was tenant of the land at the time of the fine levied to attend the court. West. Symbol. part 2. title Fines, sect. 126. Old Nat. Brev. 155. See 16 Im. Abr. title Per quæ Servitia.

PERQUISITES, perquisitum.] Any thing gotten by industry, or purchased with money, different from that which descends from a father or ancestor; and so Bacon uses it, when he says perquisition facere, lib. 2. cap. 30. num. 3. and ib. 4. c. 22. See Purchase.

PERQUISITES or COURTS. Are commonly those profits which arise to lords of manors, from their court baron, as the yearly revenue of the land, as fines of copyholds, heriots, amerciaments, &c. Perk. 20, 21.

PERQUISITES or OFFICES. See Fees.

PER QUOD, by which, whereby.] Words made use of by a plaintiff in his declaration, in the averring of particular things to have happened, without which his action would not have been maintainable. As in slander, to say that such a clergyman is a bastard, (which formerly was a disqualification for lay orders,) he cannot for this bring any action against me, unless he can show some special loss by it; in which case he may bring his action against me for saying he was a bastard, by which (per quod) he lost the presentation to such a living. 4 Rep. 17; 1 Lev. 248; 3 Comm. 124. So in a declaration in trespass, for an injury to a wife or servant, the plaintiff states per quod, whereby he lost consortium of the one, or servitium of the other.

PERSON. A man or woman; also, the state or condition whereby one man differs from another.

PERSON, INJURIES TO, are such as relate to life, limb, body, health, or reputation. See 3 Comm.; and this Dictionary, under the appropriate titles.

PERSONABLE, personabilis.] Enabled to maintain plea in court; e.g. the defendant was judged personable to maintain this action. Old Nat. Brev. 142.

The tenant pleaded that the wife was an alien, born in Portugal, and judgment was demanded whether she should be answered: the plaintiff saith, she was made personable by parliament, i.e. as the civilians would speak it, habere personam standi in judicio. Kitch. 214. Personable also signifies to be of capacity to take any thing granted or given. Plowd. 27.

PERSONAL, personalis.] Being joined with the substantives things, goods, or chattels, as things personal, goods personal, chattels personal, signifies any moveable thing, quick or dead. West. Symbol. part 2. sect. 58. Thus theft is an unlawful felonious taking away of the moveable personal goods of another. See Felony, Larceny.

PERSONAL ACTION. See Action, Personal.

PERSONAL SERVICES. See Tenures.

PERSONAL TITHES. Are tithes paid of such profits as come by the labour of a man's person; as by buying and selling, gains of merchandise, and handicrafts, &c. See Tithes.

PERSONALITY, personalitas.] An abstract of personal; the action is in the personality, i.e. it is brought against the right person, or the person against whom in law it lies. Old Nat. Brev. 92. Or it is to distinguish actions and things personal, from those that are real.

PERSONATE. See False Personation, and further Bail, Fine of Lands, Forgery, Fraud, Navy, 11.

PERSONS, are divided by law into either natural persons, or artificial. Natural persons are such as the God of nature formed us; artificial are such as are created and devised by human laws for the purposes of society and government, which are called corporations, or bodies politic. 1 Comm. 123, 407.

As to the rights of persons, see Liberty.

PERTINENTS. The Scotch term for appurtenances. See that title.

PERVISE. According to Somner, the Palace-yard at Westminster. Somn. Gloss. See his Gloss. in 10 Scriptores, verbo Triforium; and see Wood's Hist. of Oxford, 2 par. fol. 6; and ante, Parvise.

PESA, pensa, pisa.] A wey or weigh, or certain weight and measure of cheese and wool, &c. containing two hundred and fifty-six pounds. Cowell.

PESAGE, pesagium.] A custom or duty paid for weighing merchandise or other goods. Seld. tit. Hon.

PESSONA. Mast of oaks, &c. or money taken for mast, or feeding hogs. Mon. Ang. ii. 213. See Mast.

PESSURABLE, PESTARBLE, or PESTARABLE WARES. Seem to be such wares or merchandise as pester, and take up much room in a ship. See (repealed) stat. 32 Hen. 8. cap. 14.

PETER-CORN. Is mentioned in some of the ancient registers of our bishops, particularly in that of St. Leonard de Ebor, which contains a grant thereof by King Athelstane, &c. Collect. Dodsm. MS.

PETER-PENCE, denarii Sancti Petri.] Otherwise called in the Saxon tongue Romescoth, the fee of Rome, or due to Rome; also Romescot and Rome-penning, was a tribute given by Ina, King of the West Saxons, being in pilgrimage at Rome, in the year of our Lord 720, which was a penny for every house. Lamb. Explication of Saxon Words, verbo Nummus.

And the like was given by Offa, King of the Mercians, through his dominions, in anno 794, not as a tribute to the Pope, but in sustentation of the English school or college there, and it was called Peter-pence, because collected on the day of St. Peter ad Vincula. Spelm. de Concil. tom. i. fol. 2, 3. And see St. Edward's Laws, num. 10; King Edgar's Laws, 78, c. 4; Stow's Annals, p. 67. It amounted to 300 marks and a noble yearly. Leg. Hen. 1. cap. 1.

It was first prohibited by the statute of Carlisle, 35 E. 1; and afterwards by Edw. 3. It was abrogated by the 25 Hen. 8. c. 21; but revived by the 1 & 2 Ph. & Mar. c. 8. and at length wholly abrogated by the 1 Eliz. c. 1.

PETER AD VINCULA. See Gule of August.

PETITION, petitio.] A supplication made by an inferior to a superior, and especially to one having jurisdiction. S. P. C. c. 15. It is used for that remedy which the subject hath to help a wrong done by the king, who hath a prerogative not to be sued by writ; in which sense it is either general, that the king do him right, whereupon follows a general indorsement upon the same, "Let right be done the party;" or it is special, when the conclusion and indorsement are special, for this or that to be done, &c. Staunf. Prærog. c. 22. See Monstrans de Droit.

By the 13 Car. 2. stat. 1. c. 5. the soliciting, labouring, or procuring the putting the hands or consent of above twenty persons to any Petition to the King or either House of Parliament, for alterations in Church or State; unless by assent of three or more justices of the peace of the county, or a majority of the grand jury, at the assizes or sessions, &c. and repairing to the king or parliament to deliver such petition, with above the number of ten persons, is subject to a fine of 100*l*. and three months' imprisonment; being proved by two witnesses, within six months, in the court of B. R. or at the assizes. See Liberty.

By the Bill of Rights (1 W. & M. stat. 1. c. 2.) it is declared that the subject hath a right to petition, and that all commitments and prosecutions for such petitioning are illegal. On the trial of Lord George Gordon it was contended, that this article of the Bill of Rights had virtually repealed the provision of the act 13 Car. 2. This, however, was denied by Lord Mansfield in the name of the court. Douglas' Rep. 592.

To subscribe a petition to the king, to frighten him into a change of his measures, intimating that, if it be denied, many thousands of his subjects will be discontented, &c. is included among the contempts against the king's person and government, tending to weaken the same, and punishable by fine and imprisonment. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 23. § 3.

PETITION IN CHANCERY. A request in writing, directed to the lord chancellor or master of the Rolls, showing some matter whereupon the petitioner prays somewhat to be granted him. Pr. C. 269.

Most things, which may be moved for of course, may be petitioned for.

Sometimes it is upon a collateral matter only, as it has relation to some precedent suit, or to an officer of the court, as to have a clerk or solicitor's bill taxed, or to oblige him to deliver up papers. Pr. C. 270.

Petitions are either cause petitions, or petitions ex parte. The former are, when the petitioner is a party to a suit to which the petition relates, or at least derives a right or title from some such party, in which last case it may properly be termed both a cause and an ex parte petition united. But petitions exclusively ex parte are those which relate only to the petitioner, and where no suit exists.

Petitions are either of course, or special. Ex parte petitions are always of the latter kind; cause petitions, of both.

Cause petitions, of course, are for those matters of course which in general may also be obtained by motions of course for the ordinary purposes of forwarding a suit, such as for time to plead, answer, or demur, for a commission and such like; and now by the 21st Order, of April, 1828, for confirming a report nisi; and are for the most part presented at the Rolls, some few only being usually presented to the lord chancellor, such as for setting down pleas, demurrers, or exceptions, to be argued, and concerning special orders made by himself, and for rehearings, (though the master of the Rolls may also be petitioned to rehear a cause heard before himself.) Harr. 419. And these petitions of course (the orders on which, and on motions of course, are termed common orders, or orders of course,) when at the Rolls can always be presented whether in or out of term, and whether the courts are sitting or not. So indeed may the petitions of course to the lord chancellor.

Special petitions, whether not in a cause, but strictly ex parte; or in a cause, and yet concerning a person who is not in it, as they always implicate more or less, or at least are always supposed so to implicate the rights of others, besides the petitioner, are therefore never granted without being heard in Court or at the Rolls, to whichever of those judges they were presented, vis. to the lord chancellor or master of the Rolls. 1 Grant's Chan. Pr. 160.

PETITION OF RIGHT. An act, 3 Car. 1. cap. 1 is thus called; by which it was provided, that none should be compelled to make or yield any gift, loan, benevolence, tax, and such like charge, without consent by act of parliament, nor, upon refusal so to do, be called to make answer, take any oath not warranted by law, give attendance, or be confined, or otherwise molested concerning the same, &c. And that the subject should not be burdened by the quartering of soldiers or mariners; and all commissions for proceeding by martial law, to be annulled, and none of like nature to be issued, lest the subject (by colour thereof) be destroyed or put to death, contrary to the laws of the land, &c. See Liberty.

PETIT CAPE (now abolished). See Cape.

PETIT LARCENY. The distinction between grand and petit larceny is now abolished by 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 29. § 2. See Larceny.

PETIT SERJEANTY, parva serjeantia.] To hold by petit serjeanty, is to hold lands or tenements of the king, yielding him a knife, a buckler, an arrow, a bow with a string, or other like service, at the will of the first feoffee. None and there belongs not to it ward, marriage, or relief. None can hold by grand or petit serjeanty but of the king. But see stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24. for the abolition of tenures; and post, title Serjeanty, Tenures.

PETIT SESSION. In both corporations and counties at large, there is sometimes kept a special or petty sessions, by a few justices, for despatching smaller business in the neighbourhood between the times of the general sessions; as, for licensing alehouses, passing the accounts of parish officers, and the like. See Justices of the Peace, Sessions.

PETIT TREASON, parva prodition.] See Treason. Treason of a lesser kind; for as high treason is an offence against the security of the commonwealth, so was petit treason, though not so expressly. Petit treason was if a servant killed his master, a wife her husband, a secular or religious man his prelate. Stat. 25 Ed. 3. stat. 5. c. 2. Now by the 9 Geo. 4. c. 31. § 2. every offence which before the passing of the act would have amounted to petit treason, shall be deemed murder only. See further Homicide, III. 4. Treason.

PETRA. A stone weight. Cowell. See Stone.

PETRARIA. Is sometimes taken for a quarry of stones, and in other places for a great gun called Petard; it is often mentioned in old records and historians in both senses. Cowell.

PETTY-BAG. An office in the Court of Chancery for suits for and against attorneys and officers of that court; and for process and proceedings, by extents on statutes, recognizances, ad quod damnum, &c. Termes de la Ley. See Chancery.

PEWS. In a church, are somewhat in the nature of an heir-loom, and may descend by immemorial custom, without any ecclesiastical concurrence, from the ancestor to the heir. 3 Inst. 202; 12 Rep. 105; 2 Comm. 429.

The right to sit in a particular pew in the church arises either from prescription as appurtenant to a messuage, or from a faculty or grant from the ordinary, for he has the disposition of all pews which are not claimed by prescription. Gibbs Cod. 221.

An exclusive title to pews and seats in the body of the church may be maintained in virtue of a faculty, or by prescription, which is founded on the presumption that a faculty has been theretofore granted. All other pews and seats in the body of the church are the property of the parish; and the churchwardens, as the officers of the ordinary, and subject to his control, have authority to place the parishioners thereon. No precise rules are prescribed for the government of churchwardens in the use of this power, for its due exercise must depend on a sound judgment and discretion applied to the circumstances of the parish. Report of Eccl. Comm. Feb. 1832, p. 48.

By the general law, and of common right, all the pews in a parish church are the common property of the parish; they are for the use in common of the parishioners, who are all entitled to be seated, orderly and conveniently, so as best to provide for the accommodation of all. The distribution of seats rests with the churchwardens, as the officers, subject to the control of the ordinary. 12 Rep. 105; 3 Inst. 202; 3 Hagg. Eccl. Rep. 733.

The general right then being in the parish and the ordinary, any particular rights in derogation of these are stricti juris; and the policy of the law that few of these exclusive rights should exist, because it is the object of the law that all the inhabitants should be accommodated, and it is for the general convenience of the parish that the occupation of pews should be altered from time to time, according to circumstances.

A possessory right is not good against the churchwardens and the ordinary; they may displace and make new arrangements, but they ought not without cause to displace persons in possession, if they do, the ordinary will reinstate them. A possessory right, however, is sufficient to maintain a suit against a mere disturber. 1 Phill. Rep. 324.

A prescriptive right must be clearly proved, the facts must not be left equivocal, and they must be such as are not inconsistent with the general right.

To exclude the jurisdiction of the ordinary from the disposition of a pew, it is necessary, not merely that possession should be shown for many years, but that the pew should have been built and repaired time out of mind. 1 T. R. 428.

The strongest evidence of that kind is the building and repairing time out of mind; but mere repairing for thirty or forty years will not exclude the ordinary. The possession must be ancient, and going beyond memory, though on this subject the high legal memory, even before the recent Prescription Act, 2 & 3 Wm. 4. c. 71. § 2. for which see Prescription, was not required. 1 Hagg. Cons. Rep. 322.

Previous to the recent Prescription Act the uninterrupted possession of a pew in a church for twenty years afforded conclusive evidence of a legal title by prescription, or by faculty against a wrong doer. 2 Wms. Saund. 175 c. But if the claim were claimed as appurtenant to an ancient messuage, the claim was rebutted by proof that the pew began to exist within time of legal memory. 5 T. R. 296.

As well priority in the seat, as the seat itself, may be claimed by prescription; and an action on the case for a disturbance lies at common law. Carleton v. Hutton, Noy, 78. And a pew in the body of the church may be prescribed for as appurtenant to a house out of the parish. Forr. R. 14; 1 Y. & J. 583. And see 5 B. & A. 356.

And the right to sit in a pew may be apportioned. Where a messuage to which a pew had been annexed by a faculty was divided, the occupier of the lesser house, which formed a very small part of the original messuage, was held to have some right to the pew, by virtue whereof he might maintain an action against a wrong doer. 2 B. & Ad. 164.

Where the action is brought against a stranger, the plaintiff is not bound to state in his declaration that he has repaired the pew, though it is otherwise when the action is brought against the ordinary; in which case a title or consideration must be shown in the declaration, and proved, as the building or repairing of the pew. 1 Wils. 326; 3 Lev. 73; Com. Dig. tit. Action upon the Case for Disturbance, (A. 3); Gibbs, 197, 198. See further Shelford's Real Prop. Acts, 72.

Extra-parochial persons cannot establish a claim to seats in the body of a parish church without proof of a prescriptive title, and therefore if they sue in the Ecclesiastical Court to be quieted in the possession of such seats, the Court of K. B. will grant a prohibition, and it seems that such persons cannot establish such a claim even by prescription. 5 B. & C. 1; S. C. 7 Dowl. & Ry. 561.

A pew annexed by prescription to a certain messuage, cannot, as is often erroneously conceived, be severed from the occupancy of the house, but passes with the messuage, the tenant for the time being has de jure for the time being the prescriptive right to the pew, (1 Hagg. Cons. R. 319,) which cannot be sold nor let without a special act of parliament. 1 Hagg. Eccl. R. 29. Where an occupier of a pew ceases to be an inhabitant of the parish, he cannot let the pew with and thus annex it to his house, but it reverts to the disposal of the churchwardens. Id. 34.

Where a pew is claimed as annexed to a house by faculty or prescription, and in that case only, the courts of common law exercise jurisdiction, on the ground of the pew being an easement to the house, and the proper remedy for a disturbance is an action on the case. 5 B. & A. 361. The Ecclesiastical Court has jurisdiction in all suits respecting pews, but where prescriptive rights come in question prohibition will be granted on the application of either party, for the purpose of having the prescription tried by a jury. Report of Eccl. Comm. p. 49.

A grant of part of the chancel of a church, by a lay-impropriator to A., his heirs and assigns, is not valid in law. And therefore such grantee, or those claiming under him, cannot maintain trespass for pulling down a pew or pews there erected. 1 B. & A. 498.

PHAROS, from Pharus, a small island in the mouth of the Nile, wherein stood a high watch-tower.} A watch-tower or sea-mark. No man can erect a pharos, light-house, beacon, &c. without lawful warrant and authority. 3 Inst. 204. See Beacon.

PHILOSOPHER'S STONE. Henry VI. granted letters-patent to certain persons, who undertook to find out the philosopher's stone, and to change other metals into gold, &c. to be free from the penalty of the stat. 5 Hen. 4. c. 4. made against the attempts of chymists of this nature. Pat. 34 Hen. 6; 3 Inst. 74. See Multiplication of Gold and Silver.

PHYSICIANS. No person within London, or seven miles thereof, shall practise as a physician or surgeon, without licence from the Bishop of London, or Dean of St. Paul's; who are to call to their assistance four doctors of physic, on examination of the persons, before granted; and in the country, without licence from the bishop of the diocese, on pain of forfeiting 5*l.* a month. Stat. 3 Hen. 8. c. 11.

The charter for incorporating the College of Physicians is confirmed; they have power to choose a president, and have perpetual succession, a common seal, ability to purchase lands, &c. Eight of the chiefs of the college are to be called elects, who from among themselves shall choose a president yearly:

and if any practise physic in the said city, or within seven miles of it, without licence of the college under their seal, he shall forfeit 5*l*. Also persons practising physic in other parts of England, are to have letters testimonial from the president and three elects, unless they be graduate physicians of Oxford or Cambridge, &c. 14 & 15 Hen. 8. c. 5. confirmed and enlarged by 1 Mary, st. 2. c. 9.

The 32 Hen. 8. c. 40, ordains that four physicians (called censors) shall be yearly chosen by the college, to search apothecaries' wares, and have an oath given them for that purpose by the president; apothecaries denying them entrance into their houses, &c. incur a forfeiture of 5*l*. And physicians refusing to make the search are liable to a penalty of 40*s*. And every member of the college of physicians is authorized to practise surgery.

In the case of Dr. Bonham, 7 Jac. 1, is shown the power of the college of physicians, in punishing persons for practising physic without licence. They imprisoned the doctor for practising without licence; but it was adjudged that they could not lawfully do it, for in such case they had no power by the statute to commit, but they ought to sue for the penalty of 5*l*. per month, qui tam, &c. But in case of mal-practice, the censors have power to commit, for they may in such case fine and imprison by their charter, and they are judges of record, and not liable to an action for what they do by virtue of their judicial power. 8 Rep. 107; Carth. 494.

One who has taken his degree of doctor of physic in either of the universities, may not practise in London, and within seven miles of the same, without licence from the college of physicians; by reason of the charter of incorporation, confirmed by 14 & 15 Hen. 8. c. 5, penned in very strong and negative words. As to the testimonials granted by the universities, on a person's taking the doctor's degree, these may have the nature of a recommendation, and give a man a fair reputation, but confer no right; consequently those statutes which have confirmed the privileges of the universities would revive or confirm nothing but the reputation that this testimonial might give such graduates. And as to the last clause of this statute, that "none shall practise in the country without licence from the president and three elects, unless he be a graduate of one of the universities;" all the inference from that would be, that possibly two licences may be necessary where a person is not a graduate. In the case of Dr. Levett, Lord Chief Justice Holt did not think this question worth being found specially. The college of physicians, without doubt, are more competent judges of the qualifications of a physician than the universities; and there may be many reasons for taking particular care of those who practise physic in London. 10 Mod. 353, 354.

A doctor of physic, who has been licensed by the college of physicians to practise physic in London, and within seven miles, cannot claim as a matter of right to be examined by the college in order to his being admitted a fellow of the college. 7 T. R. 282.

If an apothecary takes upon him to administer physic, without advice of a doctor, this has been adjudged practising physic within the statutes; though no fee was given the apothecary. 2 Salk. 451. But this judgment was afterwards reversed in the House of Lords. Mod. Cas. 44. See Bro. P. C. title Physicians.

It hath been solemnly resolved, that mala praxis in a physician, surgeon, or apothecary, is a great misdemeanor and offence at common law, whether it be for curiosity or experiment, or by neglect; because it breaks the trust which the party had placed in his physician, and tends to the patient's destruction. Lord Raym. 214.

If a physician or surgeon gives his patient a potion or plaster to cure him, which, contrary to expectation, kills him, this is neither murder nor manslaughter, but misadventure; and he shall not be punished criminally, however liable he might formerly have been to a civil action for neglect or ignorance; Mirr. c. 4. § 16.; but it hath been holden, that if it be not a regular physician or surgeon who administers the medicine, or performs the operation, it is manslaughter at the least. Britt. c. 5; 4 Inst. 251; 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 62. Yet Sir Matthew Hale very justly questions the law of this determination. 1 Hale, P. C. 430. A physician cannot maintain an action for his fees. 4 T. R. 317. See Fees; also Apothecaries, Surgeon.

PICARDS. A sort of boats, of fifteen tons or upwards, used on the river Severn, mentioned in an ancient statute, 34 & 35 Hen. 8. c. 3. Also a fisher-boat, mentioned in 13 Eliz. c. 11.

PICCAGE, piccagium, from the Fr. piquer, i. e. effodere.] A consideration, paid for the breaking up ground to set up booths, stalls or standings, in fairs; payable to the lord of the soil.

PICKERY. The stealing of trifles which is liable to arbitrary punishment. Scotch Dict.

PICLE, picellum.] A small parcel of land inclosed with a hedge; a little close: this word seems to come from the Italian picciola, i. e. parvus; and in some parts of England it is called pightel.

PIE POWDER COURT, curia pedis pulverizati, the court of dusty-foot, from the Fr. pied, pes, and poudreux, pulverulentus.] A court held (de hora in horam) in fairs, to administer justice to buyers and sellers, and for redress of disorders committed in them.

Skene, De Verbor. Signif., Verbo Pes-pulverosus, says, the word signifies a vagabond; especially a pedlar, who hath no dwelling, therefore must have justice summarily administered to him, viz. within three ebblings and three flowings of the sea. Bracton, lib. 5. tract. 1. c. 6. num. 6. calleth it Justitiam populdrous. Of this court, read the 17 Edw. 4. c. 2; 4 Inst. 27. and Crompt. Jur. 221.

This among our old Saxons, was called ceapung-gemet, i. e. a court of merchandise, or handling matters of buying and selling. It is mentioned in Doctor and Student, c. 5, which says, it is a court incident to fairs and markets, to be held only during the time that the fairs are kept. Cancell.

The fair of St. Giles, held on the hill of that name, near the city of Winchester, by virtue of letters-patent of King Edward IV. hath a court of Pie-powder of a transcendent jurisdiction; the judges whereof are called Justices of the Pavillion, and have their power from the Bishop of Winchester. PIER, Fr. piere, saxum; from the materials of which it is composed.] A fortress or rampart made against the force of the sea or great rivers, for the better security of ships that lie at harbour in any haven. See Harbours. Pierage is the duty for maintaining such piers and harbours.

PIES, freres-pies.] Were a sort of monks; so called because they wore black and white garments, like magpies. They are mentioned by Hutsingham, p. 124. See Monks.

PIG OF LEAD. See Fother.

PIGEONS. By the 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 27, the statutes of 2 Jac. 1. c. 27. § 2; and 2 Geo. 3. c. 29, relating to house-doves and pigeons, are repealed.

By the 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 29. § 33, if any person shall unlawfully kill, wound, or take any housedove or pigeon under such circumstances as shall not amount to larceny at common law, he shall, on conviction thereof before a justice, forfeit above the value of the bird any sum not exceeding two pence.

To steal wild pigeons in a pigeon-house, shut up so that the owner may take them, is felony. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 33. § 26.

PIGEON-HOUSE. A place for safe-keeping pigeons. A lord of a manor may build a pigeon-house or dove-cot upon his land, parcel of the manor; but a tenant of the manor cannot, without the lord's licence. 3 Salk. 148. Formerly none but the lord of the manor, or the parson, might erect a pigeon-house; though it has been since held, that any freeholder may build a pigeon-house on his own ground. 5 Rep. 101; Cro. Eliz. 518; Cro. Jac. 382, 410. A person may have a pigeon-house or dove-cot, by prescription.

PIGHIEL. See Picle.

PILA. That side of money which was called pila, because it was the side on which there was impression of a church built on piles;—He who brought an appeal of robbery against another must have shown the certain quantity, quality, price, weight, &c. valorem et pilum, where pilum signifies figurum monete. Fleta, lib. 1. c. 89.

PILETTUS. Anciently used for an arrow, which had a round knob, a little above the head, to hinder it from going far into a mark; from the Lat. pila, which signifies generally any round thing like a ball. Et quod forestarii non portabunt sagittas barbatas, sed pilatos. Chart. 31 Hen. 3. Persons might shoot without the bounds of a forest with sharp or pointed arrows; but within the forest, for the preservation of the deer, they were to shoot only with blunts, bolts, or piles; and sagitta pileta was opposed to sagitta barbata; as blunts to sharps, in rapiers. Mat. Paris.

PILEUS SUPPORTATIONIS. A cap of maintenance. Pope Julius sent such a cap, with a sword, to Henry VIII. anno 1514. Holling. 827. Mention of such a cap is made by Hoveden, p. 856, at the coronation of Richard the First. Cowell.

PILLORY, collistrigium, collum stringens; pilloria, from the Fr. pilleur, i. e. depeculator; or pelori, derived from the Græc. πύλην, janua, a door, because one standing on the pillory puts his head, as it were, through a door, and opus, telum. An engine made of wood, to punish offenders, by exposing them to public view, and rendering them infamous. By the statute of the pillory, 51 Hen. 3. stat. 6 it was appointed for bakers, forestallers, and those who used false weights, perjury, forgery, &c. 3 Inst. 219. Lords of leets were to have a pillory and tumbrel, or it was cause of forfeiture of the leet, and a vill might be bound by prescription to provide a pillory, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 11. § 5.

By 56 Geo. 3. c. 138, the punishment of pillory is abolished in all cases except perjury and subornation thereof, (see Perjury); but in all cases where the punishment of the pillory has hitherto formed the whole or part of the judgment, the court may pass sentence of fine and imprisonment, or both, in lieu of the pillory.

PILOT. He who hath the government of a ship, under the master.

The name of pilot or steersman is applied either to a particular officer, serving on board a ship during the course of a voyage, and having the charge of the helm or the ship's route; or to a person taken on board at a particular place for the purpose of conducting a ship through a river, road, or channel, or from or into a port. Abbot on Ship. 148.

It is to the latter description of persons that the term pilot is now usually applied; and pilots of this sort are established in various parts of the country by ancient charters of incorporation, or by particular statutes. The most important of these corporations are those of the Trinity House, Deptford and London; the fellowship of the pilots of Dover, Deal, and the Isle of Thanet, commonly called the Cinque Port Pilots; and the Trinity Houses of Hull and Newcastle. A corporation for the regulation and licensing of pilots in Liverpool was established by the 5 G. 4. c. 73.

The 6 G. 4. c. 125, consolidated the law with respect to the licensing, employment, duties and fees of pilots.

The act imposes penalties on masters of ships acting themselves as pilots, or employing any unlicensed person, after a licensed pilot has offered himself. The statute, however, excepts the masters of colliers and some other vessels, so long as they are not assisted by any unlicensed pilot or other person than the ordinary crew.

The principle of the law respecting pilots seems to be, that where the master is bound by act of parliament to place his ship in the charge of a pilot, and does so accordingly, the ship is not to be considered as under the management of the owners or their servants; but when it is in the election or discretion of the master to take a pilot or not, and he thinks fit to take one, the pilot so taken is to be considered as a servant of the owner. See Abbot on Ship. 160.

As to pilots in Ireland, see the Irish Act, 27 Geo. 3. c. 25. § 9, 10.

The laws of Oleron ordain, That if any pilot designedly misguide a ship, that it may be cast away, he shall be put to a rigorous death, and hung in chains; and if the lord of the place where a ship be thus lost, abet such villains, in order to have a share in the wreck, he shall be apprehended, and all his goods forfeited for the satisfaction of the persons suffering; and his person shall be fastened to a stake in the midst of his own mansion, which being fired on the four corners, shall be burnt to the ground, and he with it. Leg. Ol. c. 25. It hath been said, if the fault of a pilot be so notorious, that the ship's crew see an apparent wreck, they may lead him to the hatches and strike off his head; but the common law denies this hasty execution. An ignorant pilot is sentenced to pass thrice under the ship's keel by the laws of Denmark. Lex Mercat. 70.

Before the ship arrives at her place or bed, while she is under the charge of the pilot, if she or her goods perish, or be spoiled, the pilot shall make good the same: but after the ship is brought to the harbour, then the master is to take charge of her, and answer all damages, except that of the act of God, &c. Leg. Ol. c. 23.

PINENDEN. See Sharnburn.

PINNAS BIBERE, or, ad pinnas bibere. The old custom of drinking brought in by the Danes was to fix a pin in the side of the wassal bowl, and to drink exactly to the pin; as now is practised in a sealed glass, &c. PIPE, pipa.] A roll in the exchequer, otherwise called The Great Roll, anno 37 Edw. 3. c. 4. See Clerk of the Pipe.

PIQUANT. A French word for sharp, made use of to express malice or rancour against any one. Law Fr. Dict.

PIRATES, piratæ.] Common sea rovers, without any fixed place of residence, who acknowledge no sovereign and no law, and support themselves by pillage and depredations at sea: but there are instances wherein the word pirata has been formerly taken for a sea captain. Spelm.

The offence of piracy, by common law, consists in committing those acts of robbery and depredation upon the high seas, which, if committed on land, would have amounted to felony there. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 37. § 10.

Formerly this crime was only cognizable by the admiralty courts, which proceed by the rules of the civil law. But, it being inconsistent with the liberties of the nation, that any man's life should be taken away, unless by the judgment of his peers, or the common law of the land, the statute 28 Hen. 8. c. 15, established a new jurisdiction for this purpose, which proceeds according to the course of the common law. 1 Comm. 71.

By this statute 28 Hen. 8. c. 15, all felonies, robberies, and murders committed by pirates, shall be inquired of, heard and determined in any county of England, by the king's commissioner of oyer and terminer, as if the offences had been committed on land; and such commission shall be directed to the lord admiral, and other persons, as shall be named by the lord chancellor, who shall determine such offences, after the common course of the laws of the kingdom, used for felonies and robberies, &c. and award judgment and execution as against felons for any felony done on the land; and the offenders shall suffer death, loss of lands and goods, as if they had been attainted of such offence committed on land, &c.

The commissioners under the above act are the admiral or his deputy, and three or four more, among whom two common law judges are usually appointed: the indictment being first found by a grand jury of twelve men, and afterwards tried by a petty jury: the judge of the admiralty presiding. See 4 Comm. c. 19. p. 268. and title Homicide, III. 3.

The 11 & 12 Wm. 3. c. 7. (made perpetual by 6 Geo. 1. c. 19.) enacts, That all piracies, committed on the sea, or in haven, &c. where the admiral hath jurisdiction, may be tried at sea, or on the land, in any of his majesty's islands, &c. abroad, appointed for that purpose, by commission under the great seal, or seal of the admiralty, directed to such commissioners as the king shall think fit; who may commit the offenders, and call a court of admiralty, consisting of seven persons at least, or for want of seven, any three of the commissioners may call others; and the persons so assembled may proceed according to the course of the admiralty, pass sentence of death, and order execution, &c. And commissions for trial of offences within the Cinque Ports, shall be directed to the warden of the Cinque Ports, and the trial to be by the inhabitants of the ports. And if any natural born subjects, or denizens, shall commit piracy against any of his majesty's subjects at sea, under colour of any commission from any foreign prince, they shall be adjudged pirates: if any master of a ship, or seaman, give up the ship to pirates, or combine to yield up, or run away with any ship; or any seaman lay violent hands on his commander, or endeavour a revolt in the ship, he shall be adjudged a pirate, and suffer accordingly; also, if any person discover a combination for running away with a ship, he shall be entitled to a reward of 10*l.* for every vessel of 100 tons, and 15*l.* if above: and all persons who set forth any pirate, or be assisting to those committing piracy, or that conceal such pirates, or receive any vessel of goods piratically taken, shall be deemed accessory to the piracy, and suffer as principals. The 4 Geo. 1. c. 11. (which excluded the principal from the benefit of clergy,) provides, that offenders under the 11 & 12 Wm. 3. may be tried and judged according to the form of the 28 Hen. 8. c. 15. See as to Ireland, the Irish acts, 11 Jac. 1. c. 2; 13 & 14 Geo. 3. c. 16; 23 & 24 Geo. 3. c. 14.

By the 8 Geo. 1. c. 24. (made perpetual by the 2 Geo. 2. c. 28.) the trading with known pirates, or furnishing them with stores or ammunition, or fitting out any vessel for that purpose, or in anywise consulting, combining, confederating, or corresponding with them, or the forcibly boarding any merchant vessel, though without seizing or carrying her off, and destroying or throwing overboard any of the goods, shall be deemed piracy; triable according to the 28 Hen. 8. c. 15; 11 & 12 Wm. 3. c. 7. and such accessories to piracy as are described by the 11 & 12 Wm. 3. are declared to be principal pirates; and all pirates convicted by virtue of this act, are made felons without benefit of clergy.—Ships fitted out with a design to trade with pirates, and the goods therein, shall be forfeited.

By several statutes (and see 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 11. and post, tit. Seamen) to encourage the defence of merchant vessels against pirates, the commanders and seamen wounded, and the widows of such seamen as are slain in any piratical engagement, shall be entitled to a bounty, to be divided among them, not exceeding two per cent. or one fiftieth part of the value of the cargo on board; and such wounded seamen shall be entitled to the pension of Greenwich Hospital, which no other seamen are, except such as have served in a ship of war. And if the commander, officers, or mariners shall behave cowardly, by not defending the ship, if she carries guns or arms; or shall discourage the other officers or mariners from fighting, so that the ship falls into the hands of pirates; such commander, officer, or mariner shall forfeit all his wages, and suffer six months' imprisonment.

By 18 Geo. 2. c. 30. any natural born subject or denizen who, during any war, shall commit hostilities on the sea against any of his majesty's subjects, by colour of any commission from the enemy, or adhere, or give aid to the enemy upon the sea, may be tried as a pirate, in the court of admiralty, on ship-board or on land, and being convicted shall suffer death, &c. as other pirates, &c. But persons, convicted on this act, shall not be tried for the same crime as for high treason; but if not tried on this act, may be tried for high treason on the 28 Hen. 8. c. 15. The adherence to the king's enemies was thought to make the offence high treason; this statute was made therefore to remove the doubt. See Staud. P. C. 10; 3 Inst. 112; 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 369, 370; 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 37. § 21.

By the 5 Geo. 4. c. 113. § 9. the carrying away or shipping of any person for the purpose of being sold as a slave is declared piracy, and is punishable with death.

The crime of piracy, or robbery and depredation upon the high seas, is an offence against the universal law of society, a pirate being, according to Coke, hostis humani generis, 3 Inst. 113. As therefore he hath renounced all the benefits of society and government, and has reduced himself almost to the savage state of nature, by declaring war against all mankind, all mankind must declare war against him: so that every community hath a right, by the rule of self-defence, to inflict that punishment upon him, which every individual would in a state of nature have been otherwise entitled to do for any invasion of his person or personal property. 4 Comm. 71.

Pirates are enemies to all; they are denied succour by the law of nations; and by the civil law, a ransom promised to a pirate, if not complied with, creates no wrong; for the law of arms is not communicated to such; neither are they capable of enjoying that privilege, which lawful enemies are entitled to in the caption of another. Lex Mercat. 183. If a pirate enters a port or haven, and assaults and robs a merchant ship at anchor there, this is not piracy, because it is not done upon the high sea; but it is a robbery at the common law, the act being infra corpus comitatus: and if the crime be committed either super alium mare, or in great rivers within the realm, which are looked upon as common highways, there it is piracy. Moor, 756.

If a ship be riding at anchor at sea, and the mariners part in their ship-boat, and the rest on shore, so that none are left in the ship; and a pirate attack her, and commits a robbery, it is piracy. 14 Edm. 3. And where a pirate assaults a ship, and only takes away some of the men in order to be taken for slaves, this is piracy: and if a pirate make an attack on a ship, and the master, for the redemption, is compelled to give his oath to pay a certain sum of money, though there be no taking, the same is piracy by the marine law; but, by the common law, there must be an actual taking, as in case of robbery on the highway. Lex Mercat. 185. But the taking by a ship at sea, in great necessity of victuals, clothes, ropes, &c. out of another ship, is no piracy; if that other ship can spare them, and paying or giving security therefore. Ibid. 183.

If a pirate takes goods upon the sea, and sells them, the property is not altered, no more than if a thief on land had stolen and sold them. See 27 Edm. 3. st. 2. c. 13; Crab. 193. Yet, by the laws of England, if a man commit piracy upon the subjects of any other prince, (at enmity with England,) and brings the goods into England, and sells them in a market-overt, the same shall be binding, and the owners be concluded. Hob. 79.

When goods are taken by a pirate, and afterwards the pirate, making an attack upon a vessel ship, is conquered and taken by the other, by the marine law the admiral may make restitution of the goods to the owners, if they are fellow-subjects of the captors, or belong to any state in amity with his sovereign, on paying the costs and charges, and making the captor an equitable consideration for his service. Lex Mercat. 184. See 6 Geo. 4. c. 49, post.

If a pirate at sea assault a ship, and in the engagement kills a person in the other ship, by the common law, all the persons on board the pirate ship are principals in the murder, although none enter the other ship; but, by the marine law, they who give the wound only shall be principals, and the rest accessories, if the parties can be known. Felo. 135. It has been holden, that there cannot be an accessory in piracy; but if it happens, that there is an accessory upon the sea, such accessory may be punished by the civil law before the lord admiral; and it was made a doubt, whether an accessory at land to a felony at sea, was triable by the admiral, within the purview of 28 Hen. 8. c. 15. Though this is settled by 11 & 12 Wm. 3. c. 7, which provides that accessories to piracy, before or after, shall be inquired of, tried, and adjudged according to the said statute. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 25, § 46. See post.

In cases the subjects of a prince, in amity with the crown of England, enter themselves sailors on board an English pirate, and a robbery is committed by them, who are afterwards taken; it is felony in the English, but not in the strangers; but in ancient times it was petit treason in the English, and felony in the strangers; and if any Englishman commits piracy upon the subjects of any prince or state in amity with England, they are within the statute 28 Hen. 8. c. 15. If the subjects of any nation or kingdom, in amity with England, shall commit a piracy on the ships or goods of the English, the same is felony, and punishable by this statute; and piracy committed by the subjects of France, or any other country in friendship with us, upon the British seas, is properly punishable by the crown of England only. Lex Mercat. 186, 187; 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 37. § 1. in n.

A piracy is attempted on the ocean, if the pirates are overcome, the takers may immediately inflict a punishment by hanging them up at the main-yard end; though this is understood where no legal judgment may be obtained. Lex Mercat. 184.

By the ancient common law, piracy, if committed by a subject, was held to be a species of treason, being contrary to his natural allegiance; and, by an alien, to be felony only; but now, since the statute of treasons, 25 Edm. 3. c. 2, it is held to be only felony in a subject. 3 Inst. 1. 3. See ante.

No attainer for this offence corrupts the blood, the statute mentioning only that the offender shall suffer death, loss of lands, &c. as if he were attainted of a felony at common law; but says not, that the blood shall be corrupted. 3 Inst. 1. 2. And the offender's lands are not forfeited by the civil law. 1 Lill. Abr.

In the construction of the 28 Hen. 8. c. 15. the following opinions have also been holden.

That it does not alter the nature of the offence, so as to make that, which was before a felony only by the civil law, now become a felony by the common law; for the offence is still be alleged as done upon the sea, and is no way cognizable by the common law, but only by virtue of this statute; which, by ordaining that in some respects it shall have the like trial and punishment as are used for felony by common law, shall not be carried so far as to make it also agree with it in other particulars which are not mentioned; from hence it follows, that this offence remains, as before, of a special nature, and that it shall not be included in a general pardon of all felonies. 3 Inst. 112; 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 27. Moor, 756; Co. Litt. 391; 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 37. § 6.

From the same ground it follows, that no persons, in respect of this statute, be construed to be, or punished as, accessories to piracy before or after, as they might have been, if it had been made felony by the statute; whereby all those would incidentally have been accessories in the like cases in which they would have been accessories to a felony at common law; therefore accessories to piracy, being neither expressly named in the statute, nor by construction included, remain as they were before, and were triable by the civil law, if their offences were committed on the sea; but on the land, by no law, until 11 & 12 Wm. 3. c. 7, for 2 & 3 Edm. 6. c. 24, which provides against accessories in one county to a felony in another, extends not to accessories to an offence committed in no county, but on the sea; but by 11 & 12 Wm. 3. c. 7, they are triable in like manner as the principals are by 28 Hen. 8. c. 15. 3 Inst. 112; 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 37. § 7. (But now, as has been already stated, accessories to piracy are made principals by 8 Geo. 1. c. 24.)

It hath been holden, that the indictment for this offence must allege the fact to be done at sea, and must have the words felonice et piratice; and that no offence is punishable by virtue of this act as piracy, which would not have been felony if done on the land; consequently taking an enemy's ship, by an enemy, is not within the statute. 3 Inst. 112; 1 Roll. Rep. 175; 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 37.

It is agreed, that this statute extends not to offences done in creeks or ports within the body of a county, because they are, and always were, cognizable by the common law. Moor, 756; 1 Roll. Rep. 175; 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 37.

The 28 Hen. 8. c. 15, did not, it seems, authorize the trial of marine felonies created by subsequent statutes. 2 East, P. C. 807. But by the 30 Geo. 3. c. 37, provision was made for the trial of all subsequent offences whatsoever committed upon the high seas.

By the 6 Geo. 4. c. 49. § 1, the treasurer of the navy is to pay to officers, seamen, marines, &c. on board any ship of war at the taking, sinking, &c. of any pirate ship, 20*l.* for each piratical person taken or killed during the attack, and 5*l.* for each man not taken or killed who was alive on board at the beginning of the attack. By section 3, vessels and other property found in the possession of pirates, shall be adjudged by court of admiralty to be restored to the owners on payment of salvage of one-eighth of value. See further Admiralty.

PIRATES' GOODS. In the patent to the admiral, he has granted him bona piratorum: the proper goods of pirates only pass by this grant; and not piratical goods. So it is of a grant de bonis felonum; the grantee shall not have goods stolen, but the true and rightful owner. But the king shall have piratical goods, if the owner be not known. 10 Rep. 109; Dyer, 269; Jenk. Cent. 325.

PISCENARIUS. A fishmonger. Pat. 1 E. 3. p. 8. m. 13.

PIT. A hole wherein the Scots used to drown women thieves; and to say condemned to the pit, is as when we say condemned to the gallows. Skene.

PIT AND GALLOWS. See Furca et Fossa.

PITCHING-PENCE. Money (commonly a penny) paid for pitching, or setting down every bag of corn or pack of goods, in a fair or market.

PITTANCE, pittance modicum.] A little repast, or refection of fish or flesh, more than the common allowance; and the pittance was the officer who distributed this at certain appointed festivals. Rot. Chart. ad Hospital. S. Salvator. Sancti Edmundi, &c. An. 1 Reg. Johan. p. 2; Lib. stat. L. c. l. Sti. Pauli Lond. A. D. 1298.

PLACARD, Fr. plaquant; Dutch, placecart.] Hath several significations: in France, it formerly signified a table, wherein laws, orders, &c. were written and hung up: in Holland, an edict or proclamation: also it signifies a writing of safe conduct; with us it is little used, but is mentioned as a licence to use certain games, &c. in the 2 & 3 P. & M. c. 9; and see 33 Hen. 8. c. 6.

PLACE, locus.] Where a fact was committed, is to be alleged in appeals of death, indictments, &c. And place is considerable in pleadings in some cases: where the law requires a thing to be set down in a certain place, the party must, in his pleadings, say, it was done there. Co. Lit. 282. When one thing comes in the place of another, it shall be said to be of the same nature; as in case of an exchange, &c. Shep. Epit. 700. See Local Pleading.

PLACITA. Pleas, pleadings, or debates and trials at law. Placita is a word often mentioned in our histories and law books; at first it signified the public assemblies of all degrees of men where the king presided, and they usually consulted upon the great affairs of the kingdom; and these were called generalia placita, because generalitas universorum majorum tam clericorum quam laicorum ibidem conveniebat: this was the custom in France, as well as here, as we are told by Bertinian, in his Annals of France, in the year 767. Some of our historians, as Simeon of Durham, and others, who wrote above 300 years afterwards, tell us, that those assemblies were held in the open fields; and that the placita generalia, and curia regis, were what we now call a parliament: it is true, the lords' courts were so called, viz. placita generalia, but oftener curiæ generales; because all their tenants and vassals were bound to appear there. See Parliament.

We also meet with placitum nominatum; i. e. the day appointed for a criminal to appear and plead, and make his defence. Leg. H. 1. c. 29, 46, 50. Placitum fractum; i. e. when the day is past. Leg. H. 1. c. 59. Lord Coke says, that the word is derived from placendo, quia bene placitare super omnia placet; this seems to be a very fanciful derivation of the word, which appears rather to be derived from the German plats, or from the Latin plateis; i. e. fields or streets, where these assemblies or courts were first held. But this word placita did sometimes signify penalties, fines, mulcts, or emendations, according to Gervase of Tilbury, or the Black Book in the Exchequer, lib. 2. tit. 13. Placita autem dicimus pœnas pecuniarias in quas incidunt delinquentes. So in the laws of Hen. 1. c. 12, 18. Hence the old rule or custom, comes habet tertium denarium placitorum, is to be thus understood; the earl of the county shall have the third part of the money due upon mulcts, fines, and amerciaments imposed in the assizes and county courts. Cowell.

Placita is the style of the court at the beginning of the record of Nisi Prius. Tidd's Pract. c. 37. In this sense pleas, placita, are divided into Pleas of the Crown and Common Pleas; Pleas of the Crown are all suits in the king's name for offences committed against his crown and dignity, and also against the peace; Common Pleas are those that are agitated between common persons in civil cases. Stamf. P. C. 1; 4 Inst. 10.

PLACITARE, i. e. litigare et causas agere.] To plead; and the manner of pleading before the Conquest was, coram aldermanno et proceribus et coram hundredariis, &c. MS. in Bibl. Cotton.

PLACITATOR. A pleader. Ralf Flambard is recorded to be totius regni placitator. Temp. Will. 2. See supra, under title Placita.

PLAGII CRIMEN. The stealing of human creatures. This, in Scotland, was anciently punishable with death as a treasonable usurpation of the royal authority in detaining his majesty's liege subjects. The same punishment has been applied to the stealing of children in Scotland, of which there was an instance in the trial and condemnation of Margaret Irvine, 24th Sept. 1784. Bell's Scotch Dict.

PLAGUE. See Quarantine.

PLAINT, Fr. plainte; Lat. querela.] The exhibiting any action in writing; and the party making his plaint is called the plaintiff. Kitch. 231. A plaint in an inferior court is the entry of an action, after this manner: A. B.

complaints of C. D. of a plea of trespass, &c. and there are pledges of prosecuting, that is to say, John Doe and Richard Roe.

The first process in an inferior court is a plaint, which is in the nature of an original writ, because therein is briefly set forth the plaintiff's cause of action; and the judge is bound, of common right, to administer justice therein without a special mandate from the king; 3 Comm. c. 18. p. 273; and on this plaint there may issue a pone, till the return of a nihil, upon which a capias will lie against the body of the defendant. 2 Lill. Abr. 294.

Where a plaint is levied in an inferior court, the defendant must be first distrained for non-appearance by something of small value; then, if he doth not appear, a farther distress is to be taken to a greater value, and so on; if all his goods are distrained on the first distress, attachment may be issued out of B. R. against the officers, &c. 2 Lill. Abr. See further, tit. County Court.

Plaint, in a superior court, is said to be the cause for which the plaintiff complains against the defendant, and for which he obtains the king's writ; for as the king denies his writ to none, if there be cause to grant it, so he grants not his writ to any without there be cause alleged for it. 2 Lill. 294. See Original.

PLAINTIFF. He that sues or complains in an assize or action personal. Termes de la Ley. In an action real he is termed Demandant.

PLAISTERERS. Not to exercise the art of a painter in London. 1 Jac. 1. c. 20. See Painters.

PLANCHIA. A plank of wood. Cowell.

PLANTATION, plantatio, colonia.] A place where people are sent to dwell; or a company of people transplanted from one place to another, with an allowance of land for their tillage. Lit. Dict.

Perhaps it may more fully, if not accurately, be defined a district, settlement, or colony; frequently a whole island in some foreign part, dependant on a mother country, with whose inhabitants it was originally peopled, or by whom it was conquered or acquired.

In glancing over the settlements on the coast of Africa, the settlements of the East India Company in India, the China trade, Nootka Sound, and many other places, we see lands and territories under very different circumstances, and dependant upon political considerations of infinite variety respecting some of which it must be extremely difficult to determine whether they are within the stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 22. (for regulating the plantation trade) as colonies or plantations; or, indeed, which is a further doubt, whether they are within any part of the Act of Navigation, as lands, islands, or territories to his majesty belonging, or in his possession. These are questions of great importance to the navigation system, and deserve a serious attention.

As to the terms Colony, or Plantation, whatever distinction may at one time have been made between them, there seems now to be none at all. The word Plantation first came into use. The plantations of Ulster, Virginia, Maryland, and other places, all implied the same idea of introducing, instituting, and establishing, where every thing was desert before. Colony did not come much into use till the reign of Charles II. and it seems to have denoted the sort of political relation in which such plantations stood to this kingdom. Thus the different parts of New England were, in a great measure, voluntary societies planted without the direction or participation of the English government, so that, in the time of Charles II. there were not wanting persons who pretended to doubt of their constitutional dependance upon the crown of England, and it was recommended, in order to put an end to such doubts, that the king should appoint governors, and so make them colonies. A colony, therefore, might be considered as a plantation, when it had a governor and civil establishment, subordinate to the mother country. All the plantations in America, except those of New England, had such an establishment; and they were, upon that idea, colonies as well as plantations. Those terms seem accordingly to be used without distinction in the 7 & 8 Will. 3. and in those made afterwards. Reeves's Law of Shipping, &c. p. 136, 138; p. 133, et seq. and p. 521. And see ante, Navigation Acts.

Plantations or colonies in distant countries (says Blackstone), are either such where the lands are claimed by right of occupancy only, by finding them desert and uncultivated, and peopling them from the mother country; or where, when already cultivated, they have been either gained by conquest or ceded by treaties. And both these rights are founded upon the law of nature, or, at least, upon that of nations. But there is a difference between these two species of colonies, with respect to the laws by which they are bound. For it hath been held, that if an uninhabited country be discovered and planted by English subjects, all the English laws then in being, which are the birth-right of every subject, are immediately there in force. Salk. 411, 666; 3 Mod. 159; 4 Mod. 225, 226; 2 P. Wms. 75. But this must be understood with very many and very great restrictions. Such colonists carry with them only so much of the English law as is applicable to their own situation and the condition of an infant colony; such, for instance, as the general rules of inheritance, and of protection from personal injuries. The artificial refinements and distinctions incident to the property of a great and commercial people, the laws of police and revenue (such especially as are enforced by penalties), the mode of maintenance for the established clergy, the jurisdiction of spiritual courts, and a multitude of other provisions, are neither necessary nor convenient for them, and therefore are not in force. What shall be admitted, and what rejected, at what times, and under what restrictions, must, in case of dispute, be decided, in the first instance, by their own provincial judicature, subject to the revision and control of the king in council; the whole of their constitution being also liable to be new-modelled and reformed by the general superintending power of the legislature in the mother country. But in conquered or ceded countries, that have already laws of their own, the king may indeed alter and change those laws; but till he does actually change them, the ancient laws of the country remain in force, unless such as are against the law of God, as in the case of an infidel country. 7 Rep. 17; Coleman's Case, Shew. Parl. C. 71. See also, in the case of Campbell v. Hall, an elaborate argument of Lord Mansfield, to prove the king's legislative authority, by his prerogative alone, over a ceded or conquered country. Corp. 94. Our American plantations are principally of this latter sort, being obtained in the last century either by right of conquest and driving out the natives, or by treaties. And therefore the common law of England, as such, has no allowance or authority there; they being no part of the mother country, but distinct (though dependent) dominions. They are subject however to the control of the parliament, though like the Isle of Man and the rest, not bound by any acts of Parliament, unless particularly named. 1 Comm. Introd. § 4. p. 108, 109.

With respect to their interior polity, our colonies are stated by Blackstone to be properly of three sorts:—1. Provincial Establishments, the constitutions of which depend on the respective commissions issued by the crown to the governors, and the instructions which usually accompany those commissions; under the authority of which provincial assemblies are constituted, with the power of making local ordinances, not repugnant to the laws of England. 2. Proprietary Governments of feudatory principalities, with all the inferior regalities and subordinate powers of legislation which formerly belonged to the owners of counties palatine; yet still with these express conditions, that the ends for which the grant was made be substantially pursued, and that nothing be attempted which may derogate from the sovereignty of the mother country. 3. Charter Governments; in the nature of civil corporations, with the power of making bye-laws for their own interior regulation, not contrary to the laws of England; and with such rights and authorities as are specially given them in their several charters of incorporation. The form of government in most of them is borrowed from that of England. They have a governor named by the king (or in some proprietary colonies by the proprietor), who is his representative or deputy. They have courts of justice of their own, from whose decisions an appeal lies to the king and council here in England. Their general assemblies, which are their House of Commons, together with their council of state, being their upper house, with the concurrence of the king or his representative, the governor, make laws suited to their own emergencies. But it is particularly declared by 7 & 8 Will. 3. c. 22. that all laws, bye-laws, usages, and customs, which shall be in practice in any of the plantations, repugnant to any law made or to be made in this kingdom relative to the said plantations, shall be utterly void and of none effect. And because several of the colonies had claimed the sole and exclusive right of imposing taxes upon themselves, the stat. 6 Geo. 3. c. 12. was passed, expressly declaring that all his majesty's colonies and plantations in America have been, are, and of right ought to be, subordinate to and dependant upon the imperial crown and parliament of Great Britain, who have full power and authority to make laws and statutes of sufficient validity to bind the colonies and people of America, subjects of the crown of Great Britain, in all cases whatsoever. This authority was afterwards enforced by 7 Geo. 3. c. 50. for suspending the legislation of New York, and by several subsequent statutes; but in the year 1782, by 22 Geo. 3. c. 46. his majesty was empowered to conclude a truce or peace with the colonies of New Hampshire, Massachusetts Bay, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, the Three Lower Counties or Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia, in North America; and for that purpose to repeal or to suspend the operation of any acts of parliament so far as they related to the said colonies. A peace was soon after concluded, and the independence which the above-mentioned colonies had before declared was allowed to them under the title of the United States of America.

Stat. 5 Geo. 2. c. 7. regulates suits in the courts of law and equity in the plantations, and makes houses, lands, negroes, and real estates, assets to pay debts; 13 Geo. 3. c. 14. enforces mortgages of estates in the West India Colonies, and the mode of proceeding to foreclose the same (and see Mortgage, IV.); 22 Geo. 3. c. 75. declares that offices in plantations shall only be granted by patent during the residence of the grantee and quandiu se bene gesserit; and on absence or misbehaviour the officer is removable by the governor and council, who may also give leave of absence.

By 11 & 12 Will. 3. c. 12. confirmed and extended by 42 Geo. 3. c. 85. all offences committed by governors of plantations, or any other persons in the execution of their offices, in any public service abroad, may be prosecuted in the Court of King's Bench in England. The indictment is to be laid in Middlesex; and the offenders are punishable as if the offence had been committed in England, and may also, by judgment of the court, be incapacitated from holding any office under the crown. The Court of K. B. is empowered to award a mandamus to any court of judicature, or to the governor, &c. of the country where the offence was committed, to obtain proofs of the matter alleged; and the evidence is to be transmitted back to that court, and there admitted on the trial. And when the party injured proceeds by action for damages, the fact may be laid to be committed in Westminster, or in any county where the defendant resides.

By the 1 Will. 4. (sess. 2.) c. 4. all powers vested in the governors of plantations or colonies, or any officers there by patent or commission determinable by the demise of the preceding monarch, George IV. were continued in force until new patents were issued and made known there. § 1. And no patent, commission, warrant, or authority, within any of the king's plantations or possessions abroad, determinable at the pleasure of the crown, shall on any future demise of the crown be vacated or become void until eighteen months after such demise. § 2.

Courts of civil jurisdiction in Newfoundland, and islands adjacent, were established and regulated by 33 Geo. 3. c. 76; 51 Geo. 3. c. 45. And see 5 Geo. 4. c. 67; 2 & 3 Will. 4. c. 78.

A court of criminal jurisdiction in Norfolk Island, on the eastern coast of New South Wales, whither felons are now transported, was established and regulated by 27 Geo. 3. c. 2; 34 Geo. 3. c. 45; 35 Geo. 3. c. 18. See now 4 Geo. 4. c. 96; 9 Geo. 4. c. 83.

PLASTERER. See Plasterer.

PLATE. Vessels and utensils of gold and silver. By the 29 Geo. 2. c. 14, a tax was laid on all persons possessed of plate; but that act was repealed by the 17 Geo. 3. c. 89.

By the 7 & 8 Will. 3. c. 19. § 5. public-houses were prohibited from using plate. This clause was repealed by the 9 Geo. 3. c. 11.

In Ireland a duty of excise is imposed of 4s. per oz. on all gold and silver wrought plate. See 47 Geo. 3. st. 1. c. 18; and st. 2. c. 15. See further, Gold.

PLAYHOUSE. Playhouses were originally instituted with a design of recommending virtue, and exposing vice and folly; therefore are not in their own nature nuisances. See Nuisance.

If any persons in plays, &c. jestingly or profanely use the name of God, they forfeit 10*l*. 3 Jac. 1. c. 21. And players speaking any thing in derogation of the Book of Common Prayer, are liable to forfeitures and imprisonment. 1 Elis. c. 2. § 9. Also acting plays or interludes on a Sunday is subject to penalties by 1 Car. 1. c. 1. See Sunday.

By 10 Geo. 2. c. 28, no person shall act any new play or addition to an old one, &c. unless a true copy thereof, signed by the master of the playhouse, be sent to the lord chamberlain fourteen days before acted, who may prohibit the representing any stage play; and persons acting contrary to such prohibition forfeit 50*l*. and their licences, &c. And no licence is to be given to act plays but in the city and liberties of Westminster, or places of his majesty's residence. But by 28 Geo. 3. c. 30, the General or Quarter Sessions may licence theatres in country towns and places, for sixty days at a time, under certain restrictions; and by special acts of parliament playhouses are permitted to be erected in various places.

By the above statute (10 Geo. 2. c. 28.) every actor for hire (if he shall have no legal settlement where he acts), without authority from the king or the lord chamberlain, shall be deemed a rogue and a vagabond, and be punished as such, or forfeit 50*l*.; and plays acted in any place where liquors are sold, shall be deemed to be acted for hire.

Players are no longer within the Vagrant Acts. See 5 Geo. 4. c. 83; Burn's Just. 659 (25th ed.); Bac. Ab. Nuisance, A. (7th ed.)

The 10 Geo. 2. c. 28. § 2. prohibits acting plays, &c. for gain without patent from the king, or licence from the lord chamberlain. § 5. provides that no person shall be authorized by patent or licence to act except within the liberties of Westminster or where the king shall reside. Held, that the prohibition in § 2. is not merely coextensive with the exempting power as limited by § 5. but prevails throughout the kingdom. Rees v. Kemble, 1 Barn. & Adol. 489.

Tumbling is not an entertainment of the stage within the meaning of this statute. 6 T. R. 286.

PLAYS AND GAMES. See Gaming, Nuisance.

PLEA, placitum.] That which either party alleges for himself in court in a cause there depending to be tried.

PLEADABLE BRIEFS. Are precepts directed to the sheriffs, who thereupon cite parties, and hear and determine, and this citation must be particular according to the old custom. Scotch Dict.

PLEADING. In a large sense, contains all the proceedings from the declaration till issue is joined; but is, in its immediate sense, taken for the defendant's answer to the declaration.

PLEADINGS are the mutual altercations between the plaintiff and defendant in a suit, which at present are set down and delivered into the proper office in writing; though formerly they were usually put in by their counsel ore trans or viva voce in open court, and then minuted down by the chief clerks or prothonotaries; whence, in the old law French, the pleadings are frequently denominated the parol. 3 Comm. c. 20.

These oral proceedings were delivered either by the party himself, or his pleader (called narrator and advocator) Bract. 412 a, 372 b. And it seems that the rule was then already established, that none but a regular advocate (or, according to the more modern term, barrister) could be a pleader in a cause not his own. Steph. on Pleading, 24 3rd ed.

[For the general Principles of Pleadings in Equity, see Chancery, Equity.]

I. 1. The pleadings commence with the declaration or count, anciently called the tale, which is a statement on the part of the plaintiff of his cause of action. In a real action, it is more properly called the count; in a personal one, the declaration. The latter, however, is now the general term, being that commonly used when referring to real and personal actions, without distinction. In the declaration the plaintiff states the nature and quality of his case; and in proceedings by original it is a rule that the statement of it must be in strict conformity with the tenor of that instrument; any substantial variance between them being a ground of objection.

It was formerly usual in actions upon the case to set forth several cases, by different counts, in the same declaration, so that if the plaintiff failed in the proof of one he might succeed in another. Thus, in an action on a warranty of a horse, one count stated the warranty to be on an executory consideration, "in consideration that plaintiff would buy the horse," &c.; and another count on an executed consideration,

"in consideration that plaintiff had bought the horse, the defendant undertook, &c. that the horse was sound," &c. And if he proved the case laid in any one of his counts, though he failed in the rest, he recovered proportionable damages. Now by the general rules of H. T. 4 Wm. 4. several counts shall not be allowed unless a distinct subject-matter of complaint is intended to be established in respect of each. Therefore counts founded on one and the same principal matter of complaint, but varied in statement, descriptions, or circumstances only, are not to be allowed.

Where the same plea may be pleaded, and the same judgment given on two counts, they may be joined in the same declaration. 1 T. R. 274. Assumpsit and trover cannot be joined. Ibid.

But to a declaration against a common carrier, upon the custom of the realm, a count in trover may be added. Ibid.

A count for beating the plaintiff's servant, per quod servitium amisit, may be joined with counts on trespass. 2 M. & S. 436. See further Joinder in Action.

The first count of a declaration in assumpsit, stating an agreement between two persons, omitted the mutual promises. On motion on arrest of judgment, held that the agreement imported a promise. 2 New Rep. C. P. 62.

In assumpsit brought by an administrator, de bonis non, the promise may be laid to have been made to the first administrator. 7 T. R. 182.

It is not necessary in a declaration on a bill of exchange, to aver that the maker delivered it; it is sufficient to state that he made it. 7 T. R. 596.

Trespass for assault and false imprisonment may be laid at divers days and times. 2 Bos. & Pull. 425.

But a declaration charging that the defendant on such a day, and on divers other days and times, &c. made an assault on the plaintiff, is bad, as one assault cannot be laid on different days. 6 East, 595. But it is otherwise if the word "assaulted" had been used.

The declaration always concludes with these words, "and thereupon he brings suit," &c. "inde producit sectam," &c. By which words, suit or secta (a sequendo), were anciently understood the witnesses or followers of the plaintiff. Seld. on Fortesc. c. 21. For in former times the law would not put the defendant to the trouble of answering the charge till the plaintiff had made out at least a probable case. Bract. fol. 142, l. 2, c. 6. But the actual production of the suit, the secta, or followers, hath been totally disused, at least ever since the reign of Edward III. though the form of it still continues. 3 Comm. c. 20.

By rule of M. T. 3 Wm. 4. r. 15. the declaration in an action commenced by the process prescribed by the Uniformity of Process Act, (2 Wm. 4. c. 39.) "shall in future be intitled in the proper court, and of the month and year on which it is filed or delivered;" and the same rule also points out the forms of the commencement of declarations, and declares "that the entry of pledges to prosecute at the conclusion of the declaration shall in future be discontinued." Besides this rule as to the title of the declaration, the rule of H. T. 4 Wm. 4. r. 1. orders that "every pleading, as well as the declaration, shall be intitled of the day of the month and year when the same was pleaded, and shall bear no other date; and every declaration, and other pleading, shall be entered on the record made up for trial, and on the judgment-roll, under the date of the day of the month and year when the same respectively took place, and without reference to any other time or date, unless otherwise specially ordered by the court or judge."

To avoid unnecessary expense to parties by reason of the length of declarations in actions on bills of exchange, promissory notes, and causes of action recoverable under the common counts, the courts have, by rule of T. T. 1 Wm. 4. prescribed forms of declarations in such actions, and ordered that the declaration shall not exceed in length such of the forms as may be applicable to the case.

When the plaintiff hath stated his case in the declaration, it is incumbent on the defendant within a reasonable time to make his defence, and to put in a plea; else the plaintiff will at once recover judgment by default or nihil dicit of the defendant. See Judgment.

As to the true meaning of this word defence, and the nature of it in various actions, see Defence; also Chit. on Pleading; and Steph. on Pleading, 2nd ed.

Now by the rules of H. T. 4 Will. 4. no formal defence shall be required in a plea which is to commence in the manner therein prescribed.

Before any defence made, however, if at all, cognizance of the suit must be claimed or demanded, when any person, or body corporate hath the franchise, not only of holding pleas within a particular limited jurisdiction, but also of the cognizance of pleas; and that, either without any words exclusive of other courts which entitles the lord of the franchise, whenever any suit that belongs to his jurisdiction is commenced in the courts at Westminster to demand the cognizance thereof; or with such exclusive words which also entitle the defendant to plead to the jurisdiction of the court. 2 Ld. Raym. 886; 10 Mod. 126. Upon this claim of cognizance, if allowed, all proceedings shall cease in the superior court, and the plaintiff is left at liberty to pursue his remedy in the special jurisdiction. It must be demanded before full defence is made, or imparlance prayed; for these are a submission to the jurisdiction of the superior court, and the delay is a laches in the lord of the franchise; and it will not be allowed if it occasion a failure of justice, or if an action be brought against the person himself, who claims the franchise, unless he hath also a power in such case of making another judge. See Rast. Ent. 128; 2 Vent. 363; Hob. 87; Bac. Ab. tit. Universities, 7th ed. See further ante, Cognizance, Courts of the Universities; and post, 4.

Before he defended, the defendant was formerly in certain cases entitled to demand one imparlance or licentia loquendi; and might before he pleaded have had more granted by consent of the court; to see if he could end the matter amicably without farther suit, by talking with the plaintiff; but imparlances seem to be now abolished in all actions commenced under the Uniformity of Process Act. See Imparlance.

There are also many other previous steps which may be taken by a defendant before he puts in his plea. He may, in real actions, demand a view of the thing in question, in order to ascertain its identity and other circumstances. See View. He may craveoyer of the bond, or other specialty upon which the action is brought; that is, to hear it read to him. See Oyer. In real actions also the tenant may pray in aid, or call for assistance of another, to help him to plead, because of the feebleness or imbecility of his own estate. Thus a tenant for life may pray in aid of him that hath the inheritance in remainder or reversion; and an incumbent may pray in aid of the patron and ordinary; that is, that they shall be joined in the action and help to defend the title. See Aid Prayer.

2. The plaintiff having declared (i. e. delivered his declaration), it is for the defendant to concert the manner of his defence. For this purpose he considers whether, on the face of the declaration, and supposing the facts to be true, the plaintiff appears to be entitled, in point of law, to the relief he seeks, and in the form of action which he has chosen. If he appears to be not so entitled in point of law, and this defect, either in the substance or the form of the declaration, i. e. as disclosing a case insufficient in the merits, or as framed in violation of any of the rules of pleading, the defendant is entitled to except to the declaration on such ground. In so doing, he is said to demur; and this kind of objection is called a demurrer.

A demurrer, (from the Latin demorari, or French demorror, 2 U 2 to "wait or stay.") imports, according to its etymology, that the objecting party will not proceed with the pleading, because no sufficient statement has been made on the other side, but will wait the judgment of the court whether he is bound to answer.

If the defendant does not demur his only alternative method of defence is to oppose or answer the declaration by matter of fact. In so doing he is said to plead (by way of distinction from demurring) and the answer of fact, so made, is called the plea.

Pleas are divided into pleas dilatory and peremptory; and this is the most general division to which they are subject.

Subordinate to this is another division. Pleas are either to the jurisdiction of the court,—in suspension of the action,—in abatement of the writ or declaration,—or in bar of the action; the three first of which belong to the dilatory class; the last is of the peremptory kind.

A plea to the jurisdiction is one by which the defendant excepts to the jurisdiction of the court to entertain the action.

A plea in suspension of the action is one which shows some ground for not proceeding in the suit at the present period, and prays that the pleading may be stayed until that ground be removed. The number of these pleas is small, and none of them is of ordinary occurrence in practice.

A plea in abatement is one which shows some ground for abating or quashing the original writ in a real or mixed action, or the declaration in a personal action, and makes prayer to that effect. The grounds for such plea are any matters of fact tending to impeach the correctness of the writ or declaration, i. e. to show that they are improperly framed, without at the same time tending to deny the right of action itself.

Besides these pleas in abatement, properly so called, there are others which take exception to the personal competency of the parties to sue or to be sued; these are not founded on any objection to the writ or declaration, and, therefore, do not fall within the definition which has been given of pleas in abatement; but as they offer, like them, a sort of formal objection, and do not tend to deny the right of action itself, they are considered as of the same general with that class of pleas, and pass under the same denomination.

The effect of all pleas in abatement, if successful, is, that the particular action is defeated. But, on the other hand, the right of suit itself is not gone; and the plaintiff, on resorting to a better form of writ or declaration, may maintain a new action, if the objection were founded on the form or tenor of those instruments; or if the objection were to the ability of the party, (as in last of the above examples,) a new action may be brought when that disability is removed.

Such is, in its principle, the doctrine of pleas in abatement; but the actual power of using these pleas has been much abridged, and the whole law relating to them consequently rendered of less prominent importance than formerly by the effect of modern alterations. Of these the principal are as follow: 1. A large proportion of these pleas was in former times founded on objections applying to the frame of the original writ exclusively of the declaration. By the recent statute (2 Wm. 4. c. 39.) abolishing the original writ in personal actions, this species of the plea is, in personal actions of course, absolutely extinguished; and in actions of every kind it had long been practically abrogated by certain rules of court in the reigns of George II. and George III. providing that over should no longer be granted of the original writ, that is, that the defendant should no longer be permitted to demand to hear it read in court for the purpose of founding an objection to its tenor. 2. One of the most frequent pleas in abatement has hitherto been that of misnomer, viz. that the plaintiff or defendant was misnamed in the writ or declaration. This plea of misnomer is abolished in personal actions by the late act 3 & 4 Wm. 4. c. 42. § 11. and a new mode of taking the objection substituted. See Misnomer. 3. Another plea in abatement of the most ordinary occurrence was that of non-joinder of necessary party, of which an example is above given. This plea having been often adopted where the omitted party was abroad, or his residence unknown to the plaintiff, and its operation being in such cases of a very unfair kind, it is now provided by the same statute (§ 8.) that it shall henceforth be disallowed unless it contain an allegation that the defendant resides within the jurisdiction of the court, and be accompanied with an affidavit stating the place of residence. The effect of that provision will probably be to render the use of the plea of non-joinder considerably less frequent. See Non-joinder.

A plea in bar of the action may be defined as one which shows some ground for barring or defeating the action. A plea in bar is, therefore, distinguished from all pleas of the dilatory class, as impugning the right of action altogether, instead of merely tending to divert the proceedings to another jurisdiction, or suspend them or abate the particular writ or declaration. It is, in short, a substantial and conclusive answer to the action.

It follows from this property, that in general it must either deny all, or some essential part of, the averments of fact in the declaration; or, admitting them to be true, allege new facts which obviate or repel their legal effect. In the first case, the defendant is said, in the language of pleading, to traverse the matter of the declaration; in the latter, to confess and avoid it. Pleas in bar are consequently divided into pleas by way of traverse, and pleas by way of confession and avoidance. Steph. on Plead. 44—52.

A confession of the whole complaint is not very usual for then the defendant would probably end the matter sooner, or not plead at all, but suffer judgment to go by default. Yet sometimes, after tender and refusal of a debt, if the creditor harasses his debtor with an action, it then becomes necessary for the defendant to acknowledge the debt, and plead the tender; adding that he has always been ready, tout temps prêt, and still is ready, encore prêt, to discharge it. See Tender. But frequently the defendant confesses one part of the complaint (by a cognovit actionem in respect thereof,) and traverses or denies the rest, in order to avoid the expense of carrying that part to a formal trial which he has no ground to litigate. A species of this sort of confession is the payment of money into court. See Money into Court. To this head may also be referred the practice of what is called a set-off, whereby the defendant acknowledges the justice of the plaintiff's demand on the one hand, b. & on the other, sets up a demand of his own, to counterbalance that of the plaintiff either in the whole or in part. See further Set-off.

Pleas that totally deny the cause of complaint, are either the general issue or a special plea in bar.

The general issue or general plea was, what traversed and denied at once the whole declaration, without offering any special matter whereby to evade it. As in trespass contra vi et armis, or on the case, not guilty in debt upon contract nil (nil) debet, "he owed nothing;" on an assumpsit, non assumpsit, "he made no such promise." These pleas were called the general issue; because, by importing an absolute and general denial of what was alleged in the declaration, they amounted at once to an issue; by which was meant a fact affirmed on one side and denied on the other. See further, Issue.

Formerly the general issue was seldom pleaded, except when the party meant wholly to deny the charge alleged against him. But when he meant to distinguish away or palliate the charge, it was always usual to set forth the particular facts in what is called a special plea; which was originally intended to apprise the court and the adverse party of the nature and circumstances of the defence, and to keep the law and the fact distinct. But, special pleading having been frequently perverted to the purposes of chicane and delay, the courts in some instances, and the legislature in many more, permitted the general issue to be pleaded, which left every thing open, the fact, the law, and the equity of the case; and allowed special matter to be given in evidence at the trial.

All effects having arisen from such laxity in pleading, the strictness of the ancient practice has been restored, and by the rules of H. T. 4 Wm. 4. the general issues are in effect abolished, for the traverses in personal actions heretofore known under that name are restricted to the denial of one or two points, instead of putting the whole declaration in issue, as was formerly the case. See Issue, Non-assumpsit, Not Guilty, &c.

The alteration, however, does not extend to cases where the general issue may be pleaded by statute, and the special matter given in evidence, as they are expressly excepted from the operation of the above rules.

Special pleas in bar of the plaintiff's demand are very various, according to the circumstances of the defendant's case. As, in real actions, which are now, with a few exceptions, abolished, a general release may destroy and bar the plaintiff's title; or, in personal actions, an accord, arbitration, conditions performed, nonage of the defendant, or some other fact which precludes the plaintiff from his action. A justification is likewise a special plea in bar; as in actions of assault and battery, see assault de morte, that it was the plaintiff's own original assault; in trespass that the defendant did the thing complained of in right of some office which warranted him so to do; or, in an action of slander, that the plaintiff is really as bad a man as the defendant said he was. See further, Justification.

The statutes of limitation may also be pleaded in bar, and cannot be given in evidence on the general issue; that is, the time limited by certain acts of parliament, beyond which no plaintiff can lay his cause of action; as to which see Limitation of Actions.

An estoppel is likewise a special plea in bar; which happens where a man hath done some act, or executed some deed, which estops or precludes him from averring any thing to the contrary. See Estoppel.

No matter of defence arising after action brought can properly be pleaded in bar of the action generally, but it ought to be pleaded in bar of the further maintenance of the suit. 1 East, 502.

The conditions and qualities of a plea (which, as well as the doctrine of estoppels, will also hold equally, mutatis mutandis, with regard to other parts of pleading), are: 1. That it be single and containing only one matter; for duplicity brings confusion. 2. That it be direct and positive, and not argumentative. 3. That it have convenient certainty of time, place, and persons. 4. That it answer the plaintiff's allegations in every material point. 5. That it be so pleaded as to be capable of trial.

Special pleas are usually in the affirmative, sometimes in the negative, but they always advance some new fact not mentioned in the declaration; and then they formerly must have been averred to be true, in the common form:—"and as he is ready to verify," which was not necessary in pleas of the general issue; those always containing a total denial of the facts before advanced by the other party, and therefore putting him upon the proof of them.

Now, by the rules of H. T. 4 Wm. 4. all special traverses, or traverses with an inducement of affirmative matter, shall now preclude the opposite party from pleading over to the defendant when the traverse is immaterial.

If a plea in bar, the defendant in the beginning formerly said, "That the plaintiff ought not to have or maintain his action against him;" and concluded to the action, viz. "He prays judgment if the plaintiff ought to have or maintain his action against him," &c.; but these formal parts are no longer necessary.

A plea of a record ought to conclude, "And this he is ready to verify by the record," &c.

It is said, that the conclusion makes the plea; for if it begins in bar, and concludes in abatement, it is a plea in abatement. Id. Raym. 337.

It is a rule in pleading, that no man be allowed to plead specially such a plea as amounts only to the general issue, or a total denial of the charge; but in such case he shall be driven to plead the general issue, in terms; whereby the whole question is referred to a jury. But if the defendant, in an action of trespass, be desirous to refer the validity of his title to the court rather than the jury, he must state his title specially, and at the same time give colour to the plaintiff, or suppose him to have an appearance or colour of title, bad indeed in point of law, but of which the jury are not competent judges. See Colour; see also Steph. on Plead.

It hath already been observed, that duplicity in pleading must be avoided. Every plea must be simple, entire, connected, and confined to one single point; it must never be entangled with a variety of distinct independent answers to the same matter; which must require as many different replies, and introduce a multitude of issues upon one and the same dispute. For this would often embarrass the jury, and sometimes the court itself, and at all events would greatly enhance the expense of the parties.

But by the 4 Anne, c. 16. § 14. a defendant in an action, or a plaintiff in replevin, with leave of the court, may plead as many several matters as he shall think necessary to his defence; and for that purpose he must apply for a rule to a judge, (Rule T. T. 1 Will. 4.) who has a discretion either to grant or refuse the application.

The 32 Geo. 3. c. 58. § 1. enabling defendants in quo warranto to plead double, is, as well as the 9 Ann. c. 20. confined to corporate officers. 9 East, 469.

The court continues to exercise an authority over applications for pleading several matters only in order to prevent an oppressive use being made of the liberty given by the statute. 2 Bos. & Pull. 12.

They will not allow non-assumpsit and alien enemy to be pleaded together. 2 Bos. & Pull. 72.

To trespass and false imprisonment a plea of alien enemy not allowed to be pleaded, together with a special justification inconsistent therewith, and the general issue. 12 East, 206.

A plea of tender to one count and of alien enemy to another cannot be pleaded together. 10 East, 326.

Now by the rules of H. T. 4 Wm. 4. it is no longer necessary to state in a second or other plea or avowry that it is pleaded by leave of the court, or according to the form of the statute, or to that effect.

By the same rules, pleas, avowries, and cognizances founded on one and the same principal matter, but varied in statement, description, or circumstances only, (and pleas in bar in replevin are within the rule,) are not to be allowed.

Formerly it frequently was expedient to plead in such a manner as to avoid any implied admission of a fact which would not with propriety or safety be positively affirmed or denied. And this was done by what was called a protestation; whereby the party interposed an oblique allegation or denial of some fact, protesting (protestando) that such a matter did, or did not, exist; and at the same time avoiding a direct affirmation or denial. But by the rules of H. T. 4 Wm. 4. no protestation shall hereafter be made in any pleadings, but either party shall be entitled to the same advantages, in that or other actions, as if a protestation had been made. See Protestation.

When the plea of the defendant is thus put in, if it does not amount to an issue or total contradiction of the declaration, but only evades it, the plaintiff may plead again, and reply to the defendant's plea; either traversing it, that is, totally denying it, as if on an action of debt upon bond the defendant pleads solvit ad diem, "that he paid the money when due," here the plaintiff in his replication may totally traverse this plea by denying that the defendant paid it; or he may allege new matter in contradiction to the defendant's plea, as when the defendant pleads no award made, the plaintiff may reply, and set forth an actual award, and assign a breach, or the replication may confess and avoid the plea, by some new matter or distinction, consistent with the plaintiff's former declaration; as, in an action for trespassing upon land whereof the plaintiff is seised, if the defendant shows a title to the land by descent, and that therefore he had a right to enter, and gives colour to the plaintiff, the plaintiff may either traverse and totally deny the fact of the descent; or he may confess and avoid it, by replying, that true it is that such descent happened, but that since the descent, the defendant himself demised the lands to the plaintiff for term of life. See Replication, Traverse. To the replication the defendant may rejoin, or put in an answer called a rejoinder. The plaintiff may answer the rejoinder by a sur-rejoinder; upon which the defendant may rebut, and the plaintiff answer him by a sur-rebutter. See for further information those titles in this Dictionary; also Steph. on Plead.; and 1 Chit. on Plead.

The whole of this process is denominated the pleading; in the several stages of which it must be carefully observed, not to depart or vary from the title or defence which the party has once insisted on. For this (which is called a departure in pleading) might occasion endless altercation. Therefore the replication must support the declaration, and the rejoinder must support the plea, without departing out of it. See Departure.

Yet in many actions the plaintiff, who has alleged in his declaration a general wrong, may in his replication, after an evasive plea by the defendant, reduce that general wrong to a more particular certainty, by assigning the injury afresh with all its specific circumstances, in such manner as clearly to ascertain and identify it consistently with his general complaint; which is called a new or novel assignment.

In consequence, however, of the recent alteration in pleading, new assignments will now be rarely necessary. See New Assignment.

In trespass, quare clausum fregit, if the defendant plead soil and freehold in another, by whose command he justifies the trespass, such command may be traversed by the plaintiff. 10 East, 65.

That which is alleged by way of inducement to the substance of the matter, need not be as certainly alleged as the substance itself. Plond. 81. He who pleads in the negative is not bound to plead so exactly as he who pleads in the affirmative. And that which a man cannot have certain knowledge of, he is not bound certainly to plead. Plond. 33, 80, 126, 129.

Where the matter is indifferent to be well or ill, and the party pleads over, the court will intend it well. Mod. Cas. 136. If there be a repugnancy in pleading, it is error. 2 And. 182; Jenk. Cent. 21. And a man shall not take advantage of his own wrong, by pleading, &c. Cro. Jac. 588. A man cannot plead anything afterwards which he might have pleaded at first. Ibid. 318. Surplusage shall never make the plea vicious, but where it is contrary to the matter before. Raym. 8.

Every man must plead such plea as is proper; but that need not be pleaded on one side which will come properly on the other. Hob. 3, 78, 162.

Where it is doubtful between the parties whether a plea be good or not, it cannot be determined by the court on motion, but there ought to be a demurrer to the plea; and on arguing thereof, the court will judge of the plea, whether good or bad; and no advantage can be had of double pleading, without special demurrer. But though the court is to judge of pleading, they will not direct any person how to plead, notwithstanding the matter be difficult; for the parties must plead at their peril, and counsel are to advise, &c. Lutw. 322.

A plea may be amended, if it be but in paper, and not entered, paying costs. If, after the defendant hath pleaded, the plaintiff alters his declaration, the defendant may alter his plea. See Amendment.

Falsehood in a plea, if not hurtful to plaintiff nor beneficial to defendant, doth no injury; as it doth where detrimental to plaintiff, &c. 2 Lil. 297. Though if an attorney pleads a false plea by deceit, it is against his oath, and he may be fined. 1 Salk. 515.

Where a sham plea was pleaded calculated to raise issues requiring different modes of trial, the court suffered the plaintiff to sign judgment as for want of a plea, and made the defendant, or his attorney, pay the costs occasioned by the plea, and the costs of the rule for correcting the proceedings. 2 B. & A. 197. So also where the sham plea was such as to make it necessary for the plaintiff's attorney to consult counsel, and thereby cause delay and expense, the court suffered the plaintiff to sign judgment, and made the attorney pay the costs. 2 B. & A. 199.

Difficult questions are not allowed to be pleaded as sham pleas. 1 Taunt. 225. And see 10 East, 237; 1 B. & C. 286; 2 B. & C. 81.

Sham pleas are now very rarely in use, owing to the discouragement of the courts (see the cases above) and to the Writ of Error Act, 6 Geo. 4. c. 96. requiring bail in all cases of writs of error; for before that act the common course for delaying the plaintiff was to plead a sham plea, then withdraw it, and suffer judgment by default, and then bring a writ of error, on which formerly no bail, in general cases, was requisite. But now, bail being in all cases required, writs of error for delay are less frequent, and sham pleas are consequently much disused.

It is a common rule that a replication, when entire, which is bad as to part, is bad as to the whole. 1 T. R. 40. But the rule does not apply to any case where the objection is merely on account of the surplusage. 3 T. R. 374.

A replication to a plea of ne unquus accouché, in dower, alleging a marriage in Scotland, may conclude to the contrary; and in such replication it is not necessary to state that the marriage was had at any place in England, by way of venue. 2 H. Black. 145.

In replying to a plea of infancy the plaintiff must show enough in his replication to maintain every part of the declaration. 1 T. R. 40.

3. In any stage of the pleadings, when either side traverses or denies the facts pleaded by his antagonist, he usually tenders an issue, as it is termed; the language of which is different, according to the party by whom the issue is tendered, for if the traverse or denial comes from the defendant, the issue is tendered in this manner, "and of this he puts himself upon the country;" thereby submitting himself to the judgment of his peers; but if the traverse lies upon the plaintiff, he tenders the issue, or prays the judgment of the peers against the defendant in another form; thus, "and this he prays may be inquired of by the country."

But if either side, (as, for instance, the defendant,) pleads a special negative plea, not traversing or denying any thing that was before alleged, but disclosing some new negative matter, as where the suit is on a bond, conditioned to perform an award, and the defendant pleads, negatively, that no award was made, he tenders no issue upon this plea; because it does not yet appear whether the fact will be disputed, the plaintiff not having yet asserted the existence of any award, but when the plaintiff replies, and sets forth an actual specific award, if then the defendant traverses the replication, and denies the making of any such award, he then, and not before, tenders an issue to the plaintiff. For when in the course of pleading they come to a point, which is affirmed on one side, and denied on the other, they are then said to be at issue; all their debates being at last contracted into a single point, which must then be determined either in favour of the plaintiff or of the defendant. Raym. 199.

An issue upon matter of law is called a demurrer; as to which see Demurrer.

An issue of fact is where the fact only, and not the law, is disputed. And when he that denies or traverses the fact, pleaded by his antagonist, has tendered the issue thus,—“and thus he prays may be inquired of by the country;” or, “and of this he puts himself upon the country,”—it may immediately be subjoined by the other party, “and the said A. B. doth the like.” Which done, the issue is said to be joined; both parties having agreed to rest the fate of the cause upon the truth of the fact in question. And this issue of fact is, generally speaking, determined not by the judges of the court, but by some other method; the principal of which methods is that by the country, per pais, (in Latin, per patriam), and, by jury. See Jury, Trial.

During the whole of the proceedings, from the time of the defendant's appearance in obedience to the king's writ, it is necessary that both the parties be kept or continued in court from day to day, till the final determination of the suit. For the court can determine nothing, unless in the presence of both the parties, in person or by their attorneys, or upon default of one of them, after his original appearance, and a time prefixed for his appearance in court again. Therefore in the course of pleading, if either party neglects to put in his declaration, plea, replication, rejoinder, and the like, within the time allotted by the standing rules of the court, the plaintiff, if the omission be his, is said to be nonsuit, or not to follow and pursue his complaint, and shall lose the benefit of his writ; or, if the negligence be on the side of the defendant, judgment may be had against him for such his default. And lately, after issue or demurrer joined, as well as in some of the previous stages of proceeding, a day was continually given, and entered upon the record, for the parties to appear on from time to time, as the exigence of the case required. The giving of this day was called the continuance, whereby the proceedings were continued without interruption from one adjournment to another. If these continuances were omitted, the cause was thereby discontinued, and the defendant discharged sine die, without a day, for that term; for by his appearance in court he had obeyed the command of the king's writ, and, unless he were adjourned over to a certain day, he was no longer bound to attend upon that writ, but he must have been warned afresh, and the cause must have begun de novo.

Now, by the rules of H. T. & Wm. 4. no entry of continuance by way of imparlance, curia advisari vult, vicecomes non venit, or otherwise, shall be made, except the jurata upon the jurata in respectu, which is to be retained, but such regulation is not to alter or affect the times of proceeding in the cause.

It may sometimes happen that after the defendant has pleaded, nay, even after issue or demurrer joined, there may have arisen some new matter which it is proper for the defendant to plead, as that the plaintiff, being a jointure, is since married, or that she has given the defendant a release, or the like; here, if the defendant takes advantage of this new matter as early as he possibly can, viz. at the day given for his next appearance, he is permitted to plead it at what is called a plea puis darrein continuance, or, “since the last adjournment.” For it would be unjust to exclude him from the benefit of this new defence, when it was not in his power to make when he pleaded the former. But it is dangerous to rely on such a plea without due consideration, for it confesses the matter which was before in dispute between the parties. Cro. Eliz. 49. And it is not allowed to be put in, if any continuance has intervened between the arising of this fresh matter and the pleading of it; for then the defendant is guilty of neglect, and is supposed to rely on the merits of his former plea. Also it is not allowed after a demurrer is determined, or verdict given; because then relief may be had in another way, namely, by writ of audita querela. Cro. Jac. 646. And these pleas, puis darrein continuance, when brought to a demurrer in law, or issue of fact, shall be determined in like manner as other pleas.

As to pleas puis darrein continuance, see further, Tidd's Pract. 847. (9th ed.)

In consequence of the abolition of continuances the rules of H. T. & Wm. 4. provide, that in all cases in which a plea puis darrein continuance was by law pleadable, the same defence may be pleaded, with an allegation that the matter arose after the last pleading, or the issuing of the jury process, as the case may be; but no such plea is to be allowed unless accompanied by an affidavit that the matter arose within eight days next before the pleading, or unless the court or a judge shall otherwise order.

If, by the misconduct or inadvertence of the pleaders, the issue be joined on a fact totally immaterial, or insufficient to determine the right, so that the court, upon the finding, cannot know for whom judgment ought to be given, the court will award a repleader, quod partes replacent. As if, in an action on the case in assumpsit against an executor, he pleads that he himself (instead of the testator) made no such promise. 2 Vent. 196. So if, in an action of debt on bond, conditioned to pay money on or before a certain day, the defendant pleads payment on the day; which issue, if found for the plaintiff, would be inconclusive, as the money might have been paid before. Str. 994. Unless it appears from the whole record that nothing material can possibly be pleaded in any shape whatsoever, and then a repleader would be fruitless. 4 Burr. 301, 302. And whenever a repleader is granted, the pleadings must begin de novo at that stage of them, whether it be the plea, replication, or rejoinder, &c. wherein there appears to have been the first defect or deviation from the regular course. Raym. 453; Salk. 579. See further, tit. Repleader.

The pleadings were formerly all written, as indeed all public proceedings were, in Norman or law French; and even the arguments of the counsel and decisions of the court were in the same barbarous dialect. An evident and shameful badge, it must be owned (says Blackstone), of tyranny and foreign servitude, being introduced under the auspices of William the Norman and his sons. This continued till the reign of Edward III., who, having employed his arms successfully in subduing the crown of France, thought it unbeseeming the dignity of the victors to use any longer the language of a vanquished country. By the 36 Edw. 3. c. 15. it was therefore enacted, that for the future all pleas should be pleaded, shown, defended, answered, debated, and judged in the English tongue, but be entered and enrolled in Latin. The practisers, however, being used to the Norman language, and therefore imagining that they could express their thoughts more aptly and more concisely in that than in any other, still continued to take their notes in law French; and of course, when those notes came to be published under the denomination of reports, they were printed in that dialect. 3 Comm. c. 21.

The learned commentator then proceeds to show the necessity, and in some measure the propriety, of these ancient law languages; and afterwards thus proceeds in the history of the change of that used in pleadings and records —

This technical Latin continued in use from the time of its first introduction till the subversion of our ancient constitution under Cromwell, when, among many other innovations in the law, some for the better, and some for the worse, the language of our records was altered and turned into English. But at the restoration of King Charles II. this novelty was no longer countenanced; the practisers finding it very difficult to express themselves so concisely or significantly in any other language but the Latin. And thus it continued, without any sensible inconvenience, till about the year 1730, when it was again thought proper that the proceedings at law should be done into English; and it was accordingly so ordered by stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 26. This provision was made, according to the preamble of the statute, that the common people might have knowledge and understanding of what was alleged or done for and against them in the process and pleadings, the judgment and entries in a cause. Which purpose has, it is to be feared, not been very completely answered. On the other hand, these inconveniences have already arisen from the alteration, that now many clerks and attorneys are hardly able to read, much less to understand, a record, even of so modern a date as the reign of George I. And it has much enhanced the expense of all legal proceedings; for since the practisers are confined (for the sake of the stamp duties, which are thereby considerably increased) to write only a stated number of words in a sheet; and as the English language, through the multitude of its particles, is much more verbose than the Latin, it follows that the number of sheets must be very much augmented by the change. The translation also of technical phrases, and the names of writs and other process, were found to be so very ridiculous (a writ of nisi prius, quare impedit, feri facias, habeas corpus, and the rest, not being capable of an English dress with any degree of seriousness) that in two years' time it was found necessary to make a new act, 6 Geo. 2. c. 14; which allows all technical words to continue in the usual language, and has thereby almost defeated every beneficial purpose of the former statute.

What is said of the alteration of language by stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 26. will hold equally strong with respect to the prohibition of using the ancient immutable court hand in writing the records or other legal proceedings, whereby the reading of any record that is fifty years old is now become the object of science, and calls for the help of an antiquarian. But that branch of it, which forbids the use of abbreviations, seems to be of more solid advantage in delivering such proceedings from obscurity.

Demurrers, or questions concerning the sufficiency of the matters alleged in the pleadings, are to be determined by the judges of the court, upon solemn argument; and to that end a demurrer-book is made up, containing all the proceedings at length, which are afterwards entered on record; and copies thereof, called paper-books, are delivered to the judges to peruse. But no entry on record of the proceedings in error is now necessary before setting down the case for argument.

An issue of fact takes up more form and preparation to settle it; for here the truth of the matters alleged must be solemnly examined and established by proper evidence in the channel prescribed by law. To which examination of facts the name of trial is usually confined. As to which see titles, Trial, Jury, &c.

4. It is now settled, that where the defendant has appeared, or filed bail, upon any kind of process, returnable the first or second return of any term, if the plaintiff declare in London or Middlesex, and the defendant live within twenty miles of London, the declaration should be delivered or filed absolutely, with notice to plead within four days; or in case the plaintiff declare in any other county, or the defendant live above twenty miles from London, within eight days exclusive after the delivery or filing thereof; and the defendant must plead accordingly, or in default thereof the plaintiff may sign judgment. Rule Trin. 5 & 6 Geo. 2. (a.)

Where the defendant has not appeared, or filed bail, the rule is, that "upon all process returnable before the last return of any term, where no affidavit is made and filed of the cause of action, the plaintiff may file or deliver the declaration de bene esse, at the return of such process, with notice to plead in eight days exclusive, after the filing or delivery thereof;" Rule Trin. 22 Geo. 3. (and see Rule Mich. 10 Geo. 2.) being the same time as is allowed for the defendant to appear and file common bail; and "if the defendant do not file common bail, and plead within the said eight days, the plaintiff, having filed common bail for him, may sign judgment for want of a plea." Rule Trin. 22 Geo. 3. But if the declaration be not filed until after the return of the process, the defendant has eight days to plead, from the time of filing it, whenever it may be. And "upon all such process, where an affidavit is made and filed of the cause of action, the declaration may be filed or delivered de bene esse, at the return of such process, with notice to plead in four days after the filing or delivery, if the action be laid in London or Middlesex, and the defendant live within twenty miles of London; and in eight days, if the action be laid in any other county, or the defendant live above twenty miles from London;" Rule Trin. 22 Geo. 3. being the same time as is allowed for pleading where the declaration is delivered or filed absolutely. And, "if the defendant put in bail, and do not plead within such times as are respectively before mentioned, judgment may be signed." Same Rule. But in all the foregoing cases the declaration should be delivered, or filed, and notice thereof given, four days exclusive before the end of the term; a rule to plead duly entered, and a plea demanded, when necessary. Rules Tr. n. 5 & 6 Geo. 2. b.; Mich. 10 Geo. 2. Reg. 2.; Trin. 22 Geo. 3.

Formerly, unless the plaintiff declared within certain prescribed times, the defendant was entitled to an imparlance, or, in other words, was allowed another term to plead in. But since the 2 Will. 4. c. 39. it is conceived that in actions commenced by the process prescribed by that act, these imparlances are wholly put an end to, and such at least is the present practice. 1 Archbold's Pract. by Chitty, 232.

To prevent surprise on the defendant, if four terms have elapsed since the delivery or filing of the declaration, the defendant shall have a whole term's notice to plead before judgment can be entered against him. Rule Trin. 6 & 6 Geo. 2. b. Unless the cause have been stayed by injunction or privilege; and the notice in such case must be given before the first day of term; but it does not extend beyond the term; and therefore a rule to plead may be entered, and judgment signed, in the vacation. 2 1 R. 10.

It remains to be observed, within what time the defendant must plead after changing the venue, demand of oyer, or amending the declaration. After changing the venue the defendant must plead to the new action, as he should have done in the other, without delay. Rule Mich. 10 Geo. 2. § 5. After the delivery of oyer, the defendant shall have the same time to plead as he had when he demanded it. See Oyer. And if the plaintiff amend his declaration, the defendant shall have two days, exclusive of the day of amendment, to enter his first plea, or plead de novo. Rule Trin. 5 & 6 Geo. 2.

When an order for the delivery of particulars has been drawn up and served, it operates as a stay of proceedings from the time of service until particulars have been delivered. 7 D. & R. 458; 4 B. & C. 970, S. C.; 5 B. & C. 769. A summons for particulars does not, of itself, operate as any stay of proceedings; but by a rule of H. 1. 2 16, "a defendant shall be allowed the same time for pleading after the delivery of particulars under a judge's order, which he had at the return of the summons; nevertheless judgment shall not be signed till the afternoon of the day after the delivery of the particulars, unless otherwise ordered by a judge."

If the defendant be not ready to plead by the expiration of the time allowed him for that purpose, his attorney or agent should take out a summons and serve it upon the plaintiff's attorney or agent, requiring him to attend a judge, and show cause why the defendant should not have further time to plead. When the summons is taken out, and made returnable before the expiration of the time for pleading, it is a stay of proceedings pending the application; but it is otherwise when taken out or made returnable after the expiration of the time for pleading; nor will it operate as a stay of proceedings where the object of it is collateral to the time for pleading; as to discharge the defendant out of custody upon common bail, &c.

The plaintiff's attorney or agent, on being served with the summons, either endorses his consent to an order being made upon it, attends the judge, or makes default. In the latter case, the defendant's attorney or agent, after waiting an hour, should take out a second summons, and after that a third (if necessary), which should be respectively served and attended as the first. And if default be made upon three summonses, the judge, on affidavit thereof, will make an order ex parte. But if any one of the summonses be attended, the judge will make an order upon, or discharge it, as he sees cause; and if he make an order for a month's time to plead, it is understood to mean a lunar, and not a calendar month.

The order of a judge for time to plead must be served in like manner as the summons. And it is either upon or without terms. The usual terms are, pleading issuably, rejoining gratis, and taking short notice of trial or inquiry. And where the defendant is an executor or administrator, he must undertake not to plead any judgment obtained against him, since his time for pleading was out; for otherwise he might confess judgments in the mean time, and plead them in bar to the plaintiff's demand.

An issuable plea is a plea in chief to the merits, upon which the plaintiff may take issue, and go to trial. Therefore a plea in abatement is not an issuable plea, nor a false plea of judgment recovered, or other plea which does not go to the merits. But a plea of tender has been deemed an issuable plea, and also a plea of the statute of limitations, or that a bail-bond was taken for ease and favour. As to demurrers, there is a distinction between a real and fair demurrer and a demurrer without good cause: the former is an issuable plea, within the meaning of a judge's order; the latter is not, but only an evasion of it. By rejoining gratis, is meant rejoining without the common four-day rule to rejoin. Short notice of trial, in country causes, must be given at least four days before the commission-day; one day exclusive, and the other day inclusive. Rule East. 30 Geo. 3: H. T. 2 Wm. 4. In town causes two days' notice seems to be sufficient; but it is safer to give as much more as the time will admit of. The defendant, however, is not precluded by these terms from demurring to the replication, if there be good cause. Rule Trin. 5 & 6 Geo. 2. b.

Where the defendant is under a judge's order to plead issuably, and pleads a plea which is not issuable, the plaintiff may consider it as a mere nullity, and sign judgment; and where several pleas are pleaded, one of which is not issuable, it will vitiate all the others. But where it is doubtful whether the plea be issuable, the better way, in term time, is to move the court to set it aside.

Of the Rule to plead, and Demand of a Plea.

If a defendant be bound by rule of court, or order of a judge, to plead by a time therein limited, it is incumbent on him to do so, although the plaintiff do not enter any rule to plead, or call for a plea. Rule Trin. 5 & 6 Geo. 2. With a single exception, the plaintiff must in all cases enter a rule to plead, whether the defendant have appeared or not; and where the defendant has appeared, he must also demand a plea before he can sign judgment.

The Rule to plead is the order of the court, and may be entered, at any time after the delivery, or filing or notice of the declaration, in term, or within four days after; and Sanday is a day within this rule, unless it be the first or last. Anciently there were two rules given, of four days each; the first ad respondendum; the second, ad respondendum peremptoriè. These were afterwards converted into one eight-day rule; but now, "four days only shall be allowed the defendant from the time of giving any rule to plead;" Rule Trin. 1 Geo. 2; which four days expire before, with, or after the time for pleading. If they expire before, the plaintiff must wait till the expiration of the time for pleading, before he can sign judgment for want of a plea; but if they expire with or after that time, "the plaintiff is at liberty to sign his judgment the day after the rule for pleading is out; the declaration having been regularly delivered or filed, and the defendant or his agent being called upon for a plea." Rule Hil. 2 Geo. 2. Reg. 3.

When a rule to plead has been once entered, and the cause stands over to another term, without any further proceeding, a new rule to plead should regularly be entered in that term to entitle the plaintiff to sign judgment; for all judgments must be entered the same term in which rules are given. Where the declaration is amended, if a rule to plead be entered the same term the amendment is made, though before such amendment, it is sufficient; otherwise a new rule to plead must be entered. And where the plaintiff, after giving a rule to plead, has been delayed by injunction, he may sign judgment after the injunction is dissolved, without a new rule.

The demand of plea is a notice in writing from the plaintiff's attorney; and, except where the defendant is in custody of the sheriff, &c. must be made in every case where the defendant has appeared. But before the defendant has appeared, or after the plaintiff has entered an appearance, or filed common bail for him, according to the statute, or where the defendant is in custody of the sheriff, &c. the demand of a plea is unnecessary. It is usually made pending the time for pleading; and the plaintiff cannot sign judgment till the expiration of twenty-four hours from the time of making it.

By one of the rules of H. T. 2 Wm. 4. "judgment for want of a plea after demand may, in all cases, be signed at the opening of the office in the afternoon of the day after that in which the demand was made, but not before.

II. WHEN a criminal is indicted for felony, &c. he ought not to be allowed to plead to the indictment till he holds up his hand at the bar, which is in nature of an appearance. See Trial.

The plea of a prisoner, or defensive matter alleged by him on his arraignment, if he does not confess or stand mute, may be either a Plea to the jurisdiction, a Demurrer, a Plea in Abatement, a special Plea in Bar, or the General Issue. See 4 Comm. c. 26.

Formerly there was another plea, that of Sanctuary, now abrogated; and as to which see tit. Sanctuary.

The Benefit of Clergy used also formerly to be pleaded before trial or conviction, and was called a Declaratory Plea; which was the name also given to that of Sanctuary. 2 Hal. P. C. 236. But as the prisoner upon a trial had a chance to be acquitted and totally discharged, and, if convicted of a clergyable felony, was entitled equally to his clergy after as before conviction, this course was extremely disadvantageous, and therefore the benefit of clergy was very rarely pleaded; but if found requisite, was prayed by the convict before judgment was passed upon him.

By the 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 28. § 6. benefit of clergy was altogether abolished. See Judgment (Criminal), Clergy, Benefit of.

A Plea to the Jurisdiction is, where an indictment is taken before a court that has no cognizance of the offence; as if a man be indicted for a rape at the sheriff's tourn, or for treason at the Quarter-sessions: in these or similar cases, he may except to the jurisdiction of the court, without answering at all to the crime alleged. 2 Hal. P. C. 256.

A Demurrer is incident to criminal cases as well as to civil. See Demurrer to Indictments.

A Plea in Abatement was principally for a misnomer, a wrong name, or a false addition to the prisoner. Now, however, by the 7 Geo. 4. c. 64. § 19. no indictment or information shall be abated by misnomer, or want of addition, or wrong addition of the defendant; but the court may forthwith cause the indictment, &c. to be amended according to the fact.

Special Pleas in Bar go to the merits of the indictment, and give a reason why the prisoner ought not to answer it at all, nor put himself upon his trial for the crime alleged. These are of four kinds: A former Acquittal; A former Conviction; A former Attainder, or A Pardon.

First, The plea of autrefois acquit, or a former acquittal, is grounded on this universal maxim of the common law of England, that no man is to be brought into jeopardy of his life, more than once for the same offence. And hence it is allowed as a consequence, that when a man is once fairly found not guilty upon any indictment, or other prosecution, before any court having competent jurisdiction of the offence, he may plead such acquittal in bar of any subsequent accusation for the same crime. Therefore an acquittal on an appeal was formerly a good bar to an indictment on the same offence. And so also was an acquittal on an indictment a good bar to an appeal by the common law; and, therefore, in favour of appeals, a general practice was introduced, not to try any person on an indictment of homicide, till after the year and day, within which appeals may be brought, were passed; by which time it often happened that the witnesses died, or the whole was forgotten. To remedy which inconvenience the stat. 3 Hen. 7. c. 1. enacted, that indictments should be proceeded on immediately, at the king's suit, for the death of a man, without waiting for bringing an appeal; and that the plea of autrefois acquit on an indictment should be no bar to the prosecuting of any appeal. See Appeal, I. (now abolished); and, at large, 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 35.

The true test by which the question, whether such a plea is a sufficient bar in any particular case may be tried, is, whether the evidence necessary to support the second indictment would have been sufficient to procure a legal conviction upon the first. 1 B. & B. 473. And see 9 East, 437; 2 C. & P. 634.

Secondly, The plea of autrefois convict, or a former conviction, for the same identical crime, though no judgment was ever given, or perhaps will be, is a good plea in bar to an indictment. And this depends upon the same principle as the former, that no man ought to be twice brought in danger of his life for one and the same crime. Hereupon it has been held, that a conviction of manslaughter, on an appeal or an indictment, is a bar even in another appeal, and much more in an indictment of murder; for the fact prosecuted is the same in both, though the offences differ in colouring and in degree. See 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 36. § 10, &c.

It is to be observed, that the pleas of autrefois acquit, and autrefois convict, or a former acquittal, and former conviction, must be upon a prosecution for the same identical act and crime.

But the case was otherwise in the plea of autrefois attaind, or a former attainder; which, until recently, was a good plea in bar, whether it were for the same or any other felony. For wherever a man was attainted of felony, by judgment of death, either upon a verdict or confession, by outlawry, or, heretofore, by abjurcation; and whether upon an appeal or an indictment; he might have pleaded such attainder in bar to any subsequent indictment or appeal for the same or for any other felony. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 36. § 1. And this because generally such proceeding on a second prosecution could not be to any purpose; for the prisoner was dead in law by the first attainder, his blood was already corrupted, and he had forfeited all that he had; so that it was absurd and superfluous to endeavour to attain him a second time. But to this general rule, however, as to all others, there were some exceptions; wherein cessante ratone, cessat et ipso iure. As, where the former attainder was reversed for error, for then it was the same as if it had never been. And the same reason held where the attainder was reversed by parliament, or the judgment vacated by the king's pardon, with regard to felonies committed afterwards. Where the attainder was upon indictment, such attainder was no bar to an appeal, for the prior sentence was pardonable by the king; and if that might be pleaded in bar of the appeal, the king might in the end defeat the suit of the subject, by suffering the prior sentence to stop the prosecution of a second; and then, when the time of appealing was elapsed, granting the delinquent a pardon. An attainder in felony was no bar to an indictment of treason, because not only the judgment and manner of death were different, but the forfeiture was more extensive and the land went to different persons. Where a person attainted of one felony was afterwards indicted as principal, in another, to which there were also accessories, prosecuted at the same time; in that case it was held, that the plea of autrefois attaind was no bar, but he should be compelled to take his trial for the sake of public justice; because the accessories to such second felony could not be convicted till after the conviction of the principal. Poph. 107. But see Accessory. And from these instances it might be collected that the plea of autrefois attaind was never good, but when a second trial would be quite superfluous. See 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 36. § 1—10.

Now, however, the plea of autrefois attaind is, in effect, at an end; for by the 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 28. § 4. attainder is no longer a bar, unless for the same offence as that charged in the indictment.

Lastly, A pardon may be pleaded in bar; as at once destroying the end and purpose of the indictment by releasing that punishment which the prosecution is calculated to inflict. See Pardon.

Though in civil actions, when a man has his election what plea in bar to make, he is concluded by that plea, and cannot resort to another, if that be determined against him: (as, for an action of debt, the defendant pleads a general release, and no such release can be proved, he cannot afterwards plead the general issue, nil debet, as he might at first, or he has made his election what plea to abide by, and it was his own folly to choose a rotten defence;) yet in criminal prosecutions, in favorem vite, as well upon appeal as indictment, when a prisoner's plea in bar is found against him upon issue tried by a jury, or adjudged against him in point of law by the court; still he shall not be concluded or convicted thereon, but shall have judgment of respondent dabit, and may plead over to the felony the general issue, not guilty. 2 Hal. P. C. 239. For the law allows many pleas by which a prisoner may escape death; but only one plea in consequence whereof it can be inflicted; viz. on the general issue, after an impartial examination and decision of the facts, by the unanimous verdict of a jury.

The general issue, or plea of Not Guilty, then, is the only plea upon which the prisoner can receive his final judgment of death. In case of an indictment of felony or treason, there can be no special justification put in by way of plea. As, on an indictment for murder, a man cannot plead that he was in his own defence against a robber on the highway or a burglar; but he must plead the general issue, Not guilty, and give this special matter in evidence. For (besides that these pleas do in effect amount to the general issue, since, if true, the prisoner is most clearly not guilty,) as the facts of treason are laid to be done proditore et contra tigeantem sua debitum; and, in felony, that the killing was done fel m. et these charges, of a traitorous or felonious intent, are the points and very gist of the indictment, and must be answered of Magna Charta; if they are distrained, they shall have a special writ on the statute to discharge them. Magna Charta, 9 Hen. 3. c. 8. But if the plaintiff sue the sureties in C. B., where the principal is sufficient to pay the debt, whether the sureties may plead that, and aver that the principal debtor is sufficient to pay it, or whether they shall have a writ to the sheriff not to distrain in such a case, hath been made a question. New Nat. Br. 306. It was adjudged (Pasch. 43 Edw. 3.) that the writ de plegiis acquietandis lieth without any specialty showed thereof, as it has been held, that a man shall have an action of debt against him who becometh pledge for another, upon his promise to pay the money, without any writing made of it. New Nat. Br. 270, 304.

But notwithstanding these old authorities, there seems now little doubt that a man may maintain his action against the surety, as soon as the cause of action accrues, without any regard to the circumstances of the principal. And it hath been determined, that if a surety in a bond pays the debt of the principal, he may recover it back from the principal, in an action of assumpsit for so much money paid and advanced to his use. 2 T. R. 105.

PLENA FORISFACTURA. A forfeiture of all that one hath, &c. See Forfeiture.

PLENARTY. The abstract of the adjective plenus, and is used in common law in matters of benefices, where a church is full of an incumbent; plenarty and vacation, or avoidance, being direct contraries. Staundf. Prærog. c. 8. f. 32; stat. Westm. 2. c. 5. A clerk inducted may plead his patron's title, and being instituted by the space of six months, his patron may plead plenarty against all common persons. Plowd. 501. Institution by six months, before a writ of quare impedit brought, is a good plenarty against a common person; but plenarty is no plea against the king, till six months after induction. Co. Lit. 119, 344. Plenarty for six months is not generally pleadable against the king, because he may bring quare impedit at any time, and nullum tempus occurrit regi; though if a title devolves to the king by lapse, and the patron presents his clerk by usurpation, who is instituted and inducted, and enjoys the benefice for six months, this is such a plenarty as deprives the king of his presentation. 2 Inst. 361. And plenarty by six months after institution is a good plea against the queen consort, although she claims the benefice of the king's endowment. Wood's Inst. 160. Upon collation of a bishop by lapse, plenarty is not pleadable; for the collation doth not make a plenarty, by reason the bishop would be judge in his own cause; the bishop must certify whether the church is full or not; and his collation is interpreted to be no more than to supply the cure till the patron doth present; and it is for this cause a plenarty by collation cannot be pleaded against the right patron; but, by collation, plenarty may be a bar to any lapse of the archbishop and to the king, though it is no bar to the right patron. 6 Rep. 50; Co. Lit. 344; Cro. Jac. 207. Plenarty or not shall be tried by the bishop's certificate, being acquired by institution, which is a spiritual act; but in a quare impedit, the plenarty must be tried by a jury. 6 Rep. 49.

By the common law, where a person is presented, instituted, and inducted to a church, the church is full, though the person presented be a layman; and shall not be void but from the time of the deprivation of the incumbent for his incapacity. Count. Pars. Compan. 99. See Adwoson, Parson, Quare Impedit.

PLENE ADMINISTRATIVIT. A plea pleaded by an executor or administrator, where they have administered the deceased's estate faithfully and justly before the action brought against them. See further, Executor, VI. 1, 2.

PLEVIN. See Replevin.

PLIGHT. An old English word, signifying sometimes the estate, with the habit and quality of the land; and extends to rent-charge, and to a possibility of dower. Co. Lit. 221 b.

PLONKETS. A kind of coarse woollen cloth. See 1 Rich. 3. c. 8.

PLOUGH-ALMS, elemosyna aratralis. Anciently 1d. paid to the church for every plough-land. Mon. Angl. i. 256.

The plough-alm was a kind of oblation, being most commonly a penny for every plough, to be paid between Easter and Whitsuntide. 2 Sult. 177.

PLOUGH-BOTE. A right of tenants to take wood to repair ploughs, carts, and harrows, and for making rakes, forks, &c. See 2 Comm. 35.

PLOUGH-LAND. Is the same with a hide of land; and a hide or plough-land, it is said, do not contain any certain quantity of acres; but a plough-land, in respect of repairing the highway, was settled at 50l. a year, by the 7 & 8 H. 3. c. 29.

PLOUGH-SILVER. In former times was money paid by some tenants, in lieu of service to plough the lord's lands. W. Jones, 280. See Socage, Tenure.

PLURALITY, pluralitas. Signifies the plural number; mostly applied to such clergymen who have more benefices than one; and Selden mentions trialities and quadralities, where one person hath three or four livings. Seld. Tit. Hon. 687.

Plurality of livings is where the same person claims two or more spiritual preferments, with cure of souls; in which case the first is void ipso facto, and the patron may present to it, if the clerk be not qualified by dispensation, &c.; for the law enjoins residence, and it is impossible that the same person can reside in two places at the same time. Count. Pars. Compan. 94.

By the canon law, no ecclesiastical person can hold two benefices with cure simul et semel; but that upon taking the second benefice, the first is void; but the Pope, by usurpation, did dispense with that law; and at first, every bishop had power to grant dispensations for pluralities, till it was abrogated by a general council, held anno 1273; and this constitution was received till the statute 21 Hen. 8. c. 13 Moor, 119.

By 21 Hen. 8. c. 13, if any parson having one benefice with cure, of the yearly value of 8l. or above, in the king's books, accept of another benefice with cure, and is instituted and inducted, the first benefice is declared void; so that there may be a plurality within the statute, and a plurality by the canon law. 2 Lutw. 1306. By 36 G. 2. c. 33, curacies augmented by Queen Anne's bounty are to be considered as benefices.

The power of granting dispensations to hold two benefices with cure, &c. is vested in the king by the aforesaid statute; and it has been adjudged, that a dispensation is not necessary for a plurality, where the king presents his chaplain to a second benefice; for such a presentment imports a dispensation, which the king hath power to grant, as supreme ordinary; but if such a chaplain be presented to a second benefice by a subject, he must have a dispensation, before he is instituted to it. 1 Salk. 161.

The archbishop's dispensation and king's confirmation regularly are necessary to hold pluralities; and the 21 Hen. 8. c. 13. ought to be construed strictly, because it introduces non-residence and plurality of benefices against the common law. Jenk. Cent. 272.

A man, by dispensation, may hold as many benefices without cure as he can get, and likewise so many with cure as he can get, all of them, or all but the last, being under the value of 8l. per annum in the king's books, if the person to be dispensed withal be not incapable thereof. Yet if a dispensation is made to hold three benefices with cure, whereof the first is of the yearly value of 8l., the dispensation is void, unless it be in case of the king's chaplains, &c. who may hold three benefices with cure, above the value of 8l. a year, where one of them is in the king's gift. Hob. 148.

If there be two parsons of one church, and each parson hath the entire cure of the parish, and their benefices be severally of the value of 8*l.* per annum, if one dies, and the other succeeds, this is a plurality within the statute. Cro. Car. 456. And though the act mentions instituted and inducted, when one is instituted into the second church, the dispensation to hold two benefices comes too late, though he be afterwards inducted; for by institution the church is full of the incumbent. 4 Rep. 79.

By the statute, if the first benefice be of the value of 8*l.* a year or more, by the acceptance of a second it is actually void to all intents; but benefices under that value, being not within the statute, are only avoidable by accepting a second, and not void on such plurality without a declaratory sentence, &c. Mull. v. Q. Impet. 104. In these cases it hath been held, that the value of livings, to make a plurality, shall be determined by the king's books in the First-fruits Office; though the court hath been divided whether the value should be taken as it was in the king's books, or according to the true value of the living. 2 Lutw. 1801.

The 59 Geo. 3. c. 40. secured spiritual persons in the possession of benefices in certain cases which had occurred, where being possessed of two benefices (under dispensation) they had afterwards, without previously resigning either of such benefices, obtained a new dispensation to hold another benefice, with one of their former benefices, by which means such second dispensation might have become invalid, and one or both of such benefices rendered void.

PLURIES, many times.] A writ that issues in the third place, after two former writs have been disobeyed. See Capas.

POCKET SHERIFF. A person appointed by the king himself to be sheriff, who is not one of the three nominated in the Exchequer. See Sheriff.

POCKET OF WOOL. A quantity of wool, containing half a sack. 3 Inst. 96.

POUNDING. The Scotch term for taking goods, &c. in execution, or by way of distress. It is defined to be "the diligence (process) which the law hath devised for transferring the property of the debtor to the creditor in payment of his debt." It is either real or personal, not that any interest is conveyed by pounding; but real pounding is a power of carrying off the effects on the ground in payment of such debts as are debta fundi or heritable; personal pounding is the pounding of moveables for debt, or for rent, &c. There is also a species of pounding by attaching cattle trespassing. See 3 Geo. 3. c. 74. § 5; and tit. Distress.

POISON. The killing a person by poisoning was heretofore held more criminal than any other murder, because of its secrecy, which prevents defence against it, whereas most open murders give the party killed some opportunity of resistance. For this reason, offenders guilty of poisoning any person, were anciently judged to a severer punishment than other offenders. See 3 Nels. Abr. 363.

Richard Roose (otherwise Cooke) was attainted of high treason, for putting poison into a pot of pottage boiling in the Bishop of Rochester's kitchen, by which two persons were poisoned; and there was a particular statute made for his punishment, viz. by the 22 Hen. 8. c. 9, it was enacted, that he should be boiled to death; and that in future wilful murder, by poisoning, should be adjudged treason; but this act was repealed by the general operation of the acts of Edward VI. and Queen Mary, repealing all new treasons. See Treason.

If a man persuade another to drink a poisonous liquor, under the notion of a medicine, who afterwards drinks it in his absence; or if A., intending to poison B., put poison into a flagon, and deliver it to D., who knows nothing of the matter, to be by him delivered to B., and D. innocently delivers it accordingly, in the absence of A., in this case the procurer of the felony is as much a principal as if he had been present when it was done. And so likewise all those seem to be, who are present when the poison was infused, and privy and consenting to the design; but persons, who only abet their crime by command, counsel, &c., and are absent when the poison was infused, are accessories only. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. § 11. See further, Accessory, Homicide, II.

POLE. See Perch.

POLEIN. Was a shoe sharp or picked, and turned up at the toe; it first came in use in the reign of William Rufus, and by degrees became of that length, that in Richard the Second's time they were tied up to the knees with gold or silver chains; they were restrained anno 4 Edm. 4, but not wholly laid aside till the reign of Henry VIII. See Mabne. in Vit. Wil. 2.

POLICE, not improbably from Πολις, a city.] The term public police and economy is applied by Blackstone to signify the due regulation and domestic order of the kingdom; but is more generally applied to the internal regulations of large cities and towns, particularly of the metropolis, whereby the individuals of the state, generally speaking, or of any town or city within itself, like members of a well-governed family, are bound to conform their general behaviour to the rules of propriety, good neighbourhood, and good manners, and to be decent, industrious, and inoffensive in their respective situations. See 4 Comm. c. 13. p. 162.

The police of the metropolis (says an author who wrote on this subject with great accuracy, and after much research,) is a system highly interesting to be understood; but a vast proportion of those who reside in the capital, as well as the multitude of strangers who resort to it, have no accurate idea of the principles of organization which move so complicated a machine—establishing those conveniences and accommodations, and preserving that regularity which prevails in the particular branches of power, which may be denominated municipal regulations. These relate to paving, watching, lighting, cleansing, and removing nuisances, furnishing water, the mode of building houses, the system established for extinguishing fires, and for regulating coaches, carts, and carriages, with a variety of other useful improvements tending to the comfort and convenience of the inhabitants. See Colquhoun's Treatise on the Police of the Metropolis.

To administer that branch of the police which is connected with the prevention and suppression of crimes, twenty-six magistrates, namely, the lord mayor and aldermen, sit in rotation every forenoon, and take cognizance of all complaints within the ancient jurisdiction of the city of London. See London.

Provisions were made to prevent depredations on the Thames, by the acts 39 & 40 Geo. 3. c. 87; 42 Geo. 3. c. 76; 47 Geo. 3. c. 1. c. 37; and 54 Geo. 3. c. 187, usually called the Thames Police Acts. And see 3 & 4 Wm. 4. c. 49. post.

The duty of these stipendiary magistrates (in conjunction with the county magistrates) extends also to several judicial proceedings, where, in various instances, they are empowered and required to hear and determine offences in a summary way; particularly in cases relating to the customs and excise, game-laws, pawnbrokers, labourers, and apprentices, &c. They act ministerially in licensing and regulating public-houses, punishing vagrants, removing the poor, &c. &c. And ex parte into complaints in criminal cases, capital and others, for the purpose of sending them to superior tribunals for trial.

These extensive duties, and others, which it is to be wished these magistrates could perform towards the prevention of crimes, the author of the above treatise thinks would be much facilitated, by the establishment of a fund, from whence to bestow rewards on constables and others for detecting, and on accomplices for discovering, offenders.

The following abstract of the Civil Municipal Regulations of the police of the metropolis above alluded to, and the various statutes by which they are regulated, is extracted and corrected from the same author:—

The metropolis having by degrees been extended so far beyond its ancient limits, every parish, hamlet, liberty, or precinct, now contiguous to the cities of London and Westminster, may be considered as a separate municipality; where the inhabitants regulate the police of their respective districts, raise money for paving the streets, and assess the householders for the interest thereof, as well as for the annual expense of watching, cleansing, and removing nuisances and annoyances. These funds, as well as the execution of the powers of the different statutes creating them, (excepting where the interference of magistrates is necessary,) are placed in the hands of trustees; of whom, in many instances, the churchwardens or parish officers, for the time being, are members ex officio; and, by these different bodies, all matters relating to the immediate safety, comfort, and convenience of the inhabitants, are managed and regulated; under the provisions of statutes made in the last and present reign, as well public as private, applicable to the metropolis in general, and to the various parishes, hamlets, and liberties in particular; former statutes for these purposes having been found inadequate.

The 10 Geo. 2. c. 22, established a system for paving, lighting, cleansing, and watching the city of London; but the statute which removed signs and sign-posts, balconies, spouts, gutters, and those other encroachments and annoyances which were felt as grievances by the inhabitants, did not pass till the year 1771. The 11 Geo. 3. c. 29, contains a complete and masterly system of that branch of the police which is connected with municipal regulations; and may be considered as a model for every large city in the empire. This statute extends to every obstruction by carts and carriages, and provides a remedy for all nuisances which can prove, in any respect, offensive to the inhabitants; and special commissioners, called commissioners of sewers, are appointed to ensure a regular execution. This statute is improved by 33 Geo. 3. c. 75, by which the power of the commissioners is increased, and some nuisances, arising from butchers, dustmen, &c. further provided against.

Various acts are from time to time passed for local improvements in streets, squares, docks, &c.

In the city and liberty of Westminster also many new and useful municipal regulations have been made within the present century. The 27 Eliz. and 16 Car. 1. (private acts), divided the city and liberties into twelve wards, and appointed twelve burgesses to regulate the police of each ward, who, with the dean or high steward of Westminster, were authorized to govern this district of the metropolis.

The 29 Geo. 2. c. 25, enabled the dean or his high steward to choose eighty constables in a court leet; and the same act authorized the appointment of an annoyance-jury of forty-eight inhabitants, to examine weights and measures, and to make presentments of every public nuisance either in the city or liberty. The 31 Geo. 2. c. 17, 25, improved the former statute, and allowed a free market to be held in Westminster. The 2 Geo. 3. c. 21, amended by 3 Geo. 3. c. 23, extended and improved the system for paving, cleansing, lighting, and watching the city and liberty, by including six other adjoining parishes and liberties in Middlesex. The 5 Geo. 3. c. 13, 50; 11 Geo. 3. c. 22; and particularly 14 Geo. 3. c. 90, for regulating the nightly watch and constables, made further improvements in the general system; by which those branches of police in Westminster are at present regulated. See also 44 Geo. 3. c. 61; 45 Geo. 3. c. 113; 46 Geo. 3. c. 89; 48 Geo. 3. c. 187; 50 Geo. 3. c. 119; and 54 Geo. 3. c. 154, under which many improvements have been made in Westminster, with a view to the convenience and dignity of the courts of justice and houses of parliament.

In the borough of Southwark also, the same system has been pursued: the 23 Geo. 2. c. 9; 8 Geo. 3. c. 24; 11 Geo.

3. c. 17; and 44 Geo. 3. c. 86, having established a system of regulation applicable to this district of the metropolis, relative to markets, hackney-coach stands, paving, cleansing, lighting, watching, marking streets, and numbering houses; and placing the whole under management of commissioners.

In contemplating the great leading features of municipal regulation, nothing places England in a situation so superior to most others, with regard to cleanliness, as the system of the sewers; under the management of special commissioners in different parts of the kingdom; introduced so early as by 6 Hen. 8. c. 5, and organized by 6 Hen. 8. c. 10; 23 Hen. 8. c. 5; 25 Hen. 8. c. 10, afterwards improved by 3 & 4 Edw. 6. c. 8; 1 M. st. 3. c. 11; 13 Eliz. c. 9; 3 Jac. 1. c. 14; 7 Ann. c. 10. See Sewers.

Sewers being early introduced into the metropolis, as well as other cities and towns, in consequence of the general system, every offensive nuisance was removed through its medium; and the inhabitants early accustomed to the advantages and comforts of cleanliness.

Another feature, strongly marking the wisdom and attention of our ancestors, was the introduction of water, for the supply of the metropolis, in the reign of King James I. in 1604. The improvements which have been since made, extending the supplies, by means of the New River, and also by the accession of the Thames water through the medium of the London-bridge, Chelsea, York-buildings, Sladwell, and other water-works, it is not necessary to detail.

The 9 Ann. c. 23, first established the regulations with regard to hackney-coaches and chairs, which were improved and extended by several subsequent statutes; enlarging the power of the magistrates of the city of London, to compel the appearance of hackney coachmen residing out of their immediate jurisdiction; all of which statutes were repealed and the law consolidated by the 1 & 2 Wm. 4. c. 22.

Carts and other carriages have also been regulated by different statutes, viz. 1 Geo. 1. st. 2. c. 57; 18 Geo. 2. c. 43, 24 Geo. 2. c. 43; 30 Geo. 2. c. 22; 7 Geo. 3. c. 44; 21 Geo. 3. st. 2. c. 27; which contain a very complete system relative to this branch of police: by virtue of which all complaints arising from offences under these acts are cognizable by the magistrates in a summary way. See also the provision in the 3 & 4 Wm. 4. c. 79, post.

The 34 Geo. 3. c. 65, established an improved system with regard to watermen plying on the river Thames, at which this act was repealed, and the law consolidated by the 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 75. See Watermen.

Offences relative to the driving of cattle improperly, usually termed bullock-hunting, are also determinable by the magistrates in the same summary way, under the authority of 21 Geo. 3. c. 67, by which every person is authorized to seize delinquents guilty of this very dangerous offence. And by the 3 & 4 Wm. 4. c. 19, § 28, the penalties for this offence are increased.

The last great feature of useful police to be here mentioned, consists in the excellent regulations relative to buildings, projections and fires; first adopted after the fire of London in 1666, and extended and improved by several statutes from that time down to the 14 Geo. 3. c. 78. This statute repeals all former acts, and besides regulating the mode of building houses in future, so as to render them ornamental, commodious, and secure against the accidents of fire, established other useful rules for the prevention of this dreadful calamity, by rendering it incumbent on the churchwardens to provide engines and ladders; to fix fire plugs at convenient distances on all the main pipes in the parish; to fix a mark in the street where they are to be found, and where there is a key ready to open the plugs; rewards are also payable to persons bringing the engines to a fire. See Fire.

These outlines will explain, in some measure, by what means the system of the police in most of its great features, is conducted in the metropolis: to which it may be necessary to add, that the beadles of each parish are the proper persons to convey informations, in case of any inconvenience or nuisance, by which a stranger may have it removed. The city and police magistrates, in their respective courts, if not immediately authorized to remedy the wrong complained of, will point out how it may be effected.

By the Middlesex Police Act, 10 Geo. 4. c. 44, reciting that offences have increased in and near the metropolis, and that the local establishments of nightly watch and nightly police have been found inadequate to the prevention of crime, his majesty was empowered to cause a new police office to be established in the city of Westminster, and to appoint two fit persons as justices of peace of Middlesex, Surrey, Herts, Essex, and Kent, to execute the duties of a justice of peace at the said office, and the said justices need not have any qualification by estate: the said justices salary not to exceed $$7$. The whole of the city and liberties of Westminster, and such parishes, townships, precincts, and places in Middlesex, Surrey, and Kent, as are mentioned in the schedule, to be called the Metropolitan Police District, and a sufficient number of fit and able men, by the direction of a secretary of state, shall be appointed as a police force for the whole of such district; and to have within the aforesaid counties the powers and authorities of constables, and to obey all lawful commands of the said justices. The said justices shall subject to the approbation of the secretary of state, make orders and regulations for the government of the men, their residence, classification, rank, arms, horses, &c. and may suspend or dismiss any man for negligence of duty. Victuallers, or keepers of liquor-shops, harbouring or entertaining such men during the time of their duty are subject to a penalty of $$1$. The police force may apprehend all loose, idle, and disorderly persons disturbing the public peace, or whom they shall suspect of evil designs, or found between sunset and eight in the morning lying or loitering in any highway, yard, or other place, and not satisfactorily accounting for themselves, and deliver such person to the constable at the nearest watchhouse in order to be secured till he can be brought before a justice to be dealt with according to law. Any person assaulting or resisting the police force in the execution of their duty, or aiding or assisting others so to do, or resist, shall forfeit $$1$. The constable at the watchhouse may, if he deem it prudent, take bail from persons charged with paltry misdemeanors, without warrant of justice, to appear before a justice at ten in the morning following. His majesty may appoint a "Receiver for the Metropolitan Police District," to receive all sums applicable to the purposes of the act; who shall give security, in a bond with two sureties, for such sum as the lords of the treasury shall direct, conditioned for faithful performance of his duty and the due application of all monies paid him: and the receiver shall pay all sums received by him to the Bank of England, and shall draw out of the Bank all monies necessary for payment of salaries, wages, and allowances, as after mentioned, to the police force, and all charges of carrying the act into execution. The salary of the receiver shall not exceed 700*l*. and he shall pay to the police force such salaries, wages, &c. and at such periods as one of the secretaries of state shall direct; and also all such extraordinary expenses as they shall have necessarily incurred in apprehending offenders and executing the act, and any further sums which a secretary of state shall direct to be paid to them as a reward for extraordinary diligence, a compensation for wounds, or an allowance to those so killed, and all other expenses which a secretary of state shall direct, to be paid for carrying the act into execution. No justice of peace or receiver, under the act, shall be capable of sitting in the House of Commons; and no justice, receiver, or person belonging to the police force shall vote at the election of a member for Middlesex, Surrey, Hertford, Essex, or Kent, or for any city or borough within the police district, under penalty of 100*l*. The watchmen and night police already appointed in any parish, &c. are to continue to act till it shall be notified by the justices under the act that the new police is ready to take the charge of such parish, &c. The justices under the act, subject to the approbation of one of the secretaries of state, may order watch-boxes to be placed in the highways, &c. where convenient. As soon as the new police take charge of any parish, township, &c. the justices under the act may forthwith, subject to the approbation of a secretary of state, issue a warrant to the overseers of the parish, &c. commanding them, out of the money collected for relief of the poor, to pay the amount in the warrant for the purposes of the new police, or to levy such amount as part of the rate for relief of the poor in such parish, &c.; and the overseers shall pay the amount to the receiver within forty days from delivery of the warrant; the sum not to exceed in any year eightpence in the pound on the full and fair value of all property rateable to the poor within the parish, &c. The overseers are to pay such money out of any money in their hands collected for the relief of the poor, and, if no such money, shall levy the amount as part of the rate for relief of the poor. If the sum is not paid to the receiver within the time specified, the justices under the act may order a distress on the goods of the overseer. In case of neglect or default of the overseers, or in any case where a secretary of state shall direct, the justices under the act may appoint two or more persons to act as overseers in any parish, &c. for levying the money for the purposes of the act. Where messuages, &c. are occupied by ambassadors or public ministers, &c. the landlord shall be deemed the occupier and liable to the payment of the money due, under the act. An account of all monies received and expended under the act, is to be laid annually before both houses of parliament. The inhabitants and occupiers of all messuages, &c., not rated or rateable for the relief of the poor, shall be liable to contribute to the expenses of the act as if they were rated to the relief of the poor, the sum levied not to exceed eightpence in the pound. The act provides the mode of assessing the money in such cases, and of appealing, &c. His majesty may order any parishes, &c. in the aforesaid counties, and within twelve miles of Charing Cross, to be added to the police district, which shall then be subject to all the provisions of the act.

See the 3 Geo. 4. c. 55, and 6 Geo. 4. c. 21, which are not to be affected or altered by the above act.

POLICY OF ASSURANCE, or Insurance, from the Ital. polizza, i. e. schedula et assicuratio.] An instrument entered into by insurers of ships and merchandise, &c. to merchants, obligatory for the payment of the sum insured, in case of loss. Merch. Dict. See Insurance.

POLYGAMY, polygamia.} The having a plurality of wives or husbands at once. See Bigamy.

PONDUS, poundage; which duty, with that of tonnage, was anciently paid to the king according to the weight and measure of merchants' goods. Cowell.

PONDUS REGIS. The standard weight appointed by our ancient kings. And what we now call troy weight, was this poundus regis, or le roy weight, with the scales in equilibrio: whereas the aver du pois was the fuller weight, with a declining scale. Comell. See Troy Weight, Weights.

PONE. A writ whereby a cause depending in the county, or other inferior court, is removed into the Common Pleas; and sometimes into the King's Bench: as when a replevin is sued by writ out of Chancery, &c. then if the plaintiff or defendant will remove that plea out of the county-court into C. P. or K. B. it is done by pone. F. N. B. 4, 69; 2 Inst. 39. The writ pone lies to remove actions of debt, and detinue, and formerly writ of right, nuisance, &c. New Nat. B. R.

A pone to remove causes is of this form: "For at the petition of A. B. before our justices at Westminster, [the day, &c.] the plea which is in your court by our writ, between the said A. B. and C. D. of, &c. and summon the said C. that he be then there to answer the said A. &c." This form is only applicable to the Common Pleas; but if the writ of pone be to remove a cause into K. B. it should be worded thus: "put at the petition of, &c. before us, wheresoever, &c. the plea, &c."

Pone is also a writ willing the sheriff to summon the defendant to appear and answer the plaintiff's suit on les puttees in sureties to prosecute: it is so called from the words of the writ pone per ralem et sic os plegis. "Put, by gage and safe pledges, A. B. the defendant." This is a writ not issuing out of Chancery, but out of the Court of Common Pleas, being grounded on the non-appearance of the defendant, at the return of the original writ: and thereby the sheriff is commanded to attach him, by taking gage, that is, certain of his goods, which he shall forfeit if he doth not appear, or by making him find safe pledges or sureties, who shall be answer'd in case of his non-appearance. Fouch. L. 345; Id. Rouns. 278; Dalt. Sher. c. 52. See Process.

Previous to the Uniformity of Process Act, this was also the first and immediate process, without any previous summons, upon actions of trespass real actions, or for other injuries, which, though not forcible, were yet trespasses against the peace, as deceit and conspiracy; where the violence of the wrong required a more speedy remedy, and therefore the original writ commanded the defendant to be at once attached, without any precedent writ. 3 Comm. c. 19, p. 289, cites F. N. B. L. 50, 351. See Original.

PONENDIS IN ASSISTIS. A writ formerly granted by the statute of Westm. 2. 13 E. 1. st. 1. c. 38, which statute appointed what persons sheriff's ought to command upon, seize and juries. Reg. Orig. 175; 1 N. B. 105. This act was repealed by the 6 Geo. 4. c. 51 § 63. See Jury.

PONENDUM IN BALLIUM. A writ commanding that a prisoner be bailed in cases bailable. Reg. Orig. 133.

PONENDUM SIGILLUM AD EXCEPTIONEM. A writ by which justices are required to put their seals to exceptions, exhibited by defendant against the plaintiff's evidence, verdict, or other proceedings before them, according to the statute Westm. 2. 13 E. 1. st. 1. c. 31. See Bid of Exceptions.

PONE PER VADIUM. See Pone.

PONTAGE, pontagium.] A contribution towards the maintenance, or re-edifying bridges. Stat. Westm. 2. c. 25. It may also signify toll taken to this purpose of those who pass over bridges. 1 Hen. 8. c. 9; 22 Hen. 8. c. 5; 30 Eliz. c. 25. See Trinoda Necessitas.

PONTIBUS REPARANDIS. A writ directed to the sheriff, &c. requiring him to charge one or more, to repair a bridge, to whom it belongeth. Reg. Orig. 153. See Pontage.

POOR.

PAUPER.] A poor person, who is a burden and charge upon a parish. The poor our law takes notice of, are, 1st. poor by infirmity and defect; as the aged or decrepid, fatherless or motherless; poor under sickness, and persons who are idiots, lunatics, lame, blind, &c.—these the overseers of the poor are to provide for.

POOR.

2dly, Poor by casualty; such as house-keepers, decayed or ruined by unavoidable misfortunes: poor persons overcharged with children; labourers disabled; and these, having ability, are to be set to work; but if not able to work, they are to be relieved with money.

3dly, Poor by prodigality and debauchery, also called thrifless poor; as idle slothful persons, pilferers, vagabonds, strumpets, &c. who are to be sent to the house of correction, and be put to hard labour, to maintain themselves; or work is to be provided for them, that they do not perish for want; and if they become impotent by sickness, or if their work will not maintain them, there must be an allowance by the overseers of the poor for their support. Dalt. c. 73. § 35.

The law not only regards life and member, and protects every man in the enjoyment of them, but also furnishes him with every thing necessary for their support. For there is no man so indigent or wretched, but he may demand a supply, sufficient to all the necessities of life, from the more opulent part of the community, by means of the several statutes enacted for relief of the poor. 1 Comm. 131.

The poor of England, till the time of Henry VIII. subsisted entirely upon private benevolence and the charity of well-disposed Christians; and the poor in Ireland have, to this day, no relief except from private charity. By an ancient statute, 3 Edw. 3. c. 7, it was enacted, that none should give alms to a beggar able to work. It appears by the Mirror, that at the common law the poor were to be "sustained by parsons, rectors of the church, and the parish officers; so that none of them die for default of sustenance." Mirr. c. 1. § 3. And by 15 Rich. 2. c. 6; 4 Hen. 4. c. 12, impropriators were obliged to distribute a yearly sum to the poor parishioners, and to keep hospitality. (See Parson, Appropriators.) By 12 Rich. 2. c. 7; 10 Hen. 7. c. 12, the poor were directed to abide in the cities and towns wherein they were born, or such wherein they had dwelt for three years: which seems to be the first rudiment of parish settlements.

No compulsory method, however, was marked out for the relief of the poor, till the 27 Hen. 8. c. 25, under which provision was ordered to be made for the impotent poor.—Before that time, the monasteries were their principal resource; and among other bad effects, which attended these institutions, it was not perhaps one of the least, (though frequently esteemed quite otherwise,) that they supported and fed a very numerous and very idle poor; whose sustenance depended upon what was daily distributed in alms at the gates of the religious houses. But upon the total dissolution of these, the inconvenience of thus encouraging the poor in habits of indolence and beggary, was quickly felt throughout the kingdom; and abundance of statutes were made in the reign of King Henry VIII. and his children, for providing for the poor and impotent; which, the preambles to some of them recite, had of late years greatly increased. These poor were principally of two sorts; sick and impotent, and therefore unable to work; idle and sturdy, and therefore able, but not willing to exercise any honest employment. To provide, in some measure, for both of these, in and about the metropolis, Edward VI. founded three royal hospitals; Christ's and St. Thomas's, for relief of the impotent, through infancy or sickness; and Bridewell, for the punishment and employment of the vigorous and idle. But these were far from being sufficient for the care of the poor throughout the kingdom at large: and therefore, after many other fruitless experiments, by 43 Eliz. c. 2, overseers of the poor were appointed in every parish; whose office and duty are principally these: 1st, to raise competent sums for the necessary relief of the poor, impotent, old, blind, and such other being poor, and not able to work, and them only; and, 2dly, to provide work for such as are able and cannot otherwise get employment: but this latter part of their duty, which, according to the wise regulations of that salutary statute, should go hand in hand with the other, is now most shamefully neglected. 1 Comm. c. 9. pp. 359, 460.

The learned commentator then proceeds to state the evils arising from what he considers as a deviation from the original purpose of the poor laws, by accumulating all the poor in one workhouse; a practice which he condemns as destructive of the industry and domestic happiness of the poor. He also reprobates the subdivision of parishes; the plan of confining the poor to their respective districts; and the laws passed since the Restoration; as having given birth to the intricacy of our poor laws, by multiplying and rendering more easy the methods of gaining settlements: and, in consequence, creating an infinity of expensive law-suits between contending neighbourhoods, concerning those settlements and removals. He then proceeds to state the general heads of the law relative to the settlement of the poor; which, he truly observes, by the resolutions of the courts of justice thereon, within a century past, are branched into a great variety. "And yet," he concludes, "notwithstanding the pains that have been taken about these laws, they still remain very imperfect, and inadequate to the purposes they are designed for: a fate that has generally attended most of our statute laws, where they have not the foundation of the common law to build upon. When the shires, the hundreds, and the tithings were kept in the same admirable order in which they were disposed by the great Alfred, there were no persons idle, consequently, none but the impotent that needed relief: and the 43 Eliz. c. 2. seems entirely founded on the same principle. But when this excellent scheme was neglected and departed from, we cannot but observe, with concern, what miserable shifts and lame expedients have from time to time been adopted, in order to patch up the flaws occasioned by this neglect. There is not a more necessary or certain maxim, in the frame and constitution of society, than that every individual must contribute his share, in order to the well-being of the community; and surely they must be very deficient in sound policy, who suffer one half of a parish to continue idle, dissolute, and unemployed; and at length are amazed to find that the industry of the other half is not able to maintain the whole." 1 Comm. c. 9. ad finem.

The poor laws have been most materially altered by a recent statute (4 & 5 Wm. 4. c. 76.), under which a board of commissioners has been appointed to carry the act into execution. These commissioners are invested with very extensive powers, which will be hereafter noticed. Several heads of settlement have been altogether abolished; but as all settlements gained previous to the passing of the act, (14th August, 1834,) with the exception of those acquired by estate, or by apprenticeship in the sea service, are unaffected by the alteration, it is still necessary to be acquainted with the old law. The outline therefore of the latter, contained in the former edition of this work, will still be preserved, and will be followed by an abstract of the principal provisions of the late statute.

In Scotland the poor are distinguished into the idle and the infirm. Several acts have been made for the punishment of sturdy beggars and vagabonds, by whipping and burning in the ear. Those who from age or infirmities are unable to maintain themselves, are maintained by a tax levied on the parish.—Birth is the original rule of settlement; but which may be superseded by three years' continued residence in any other parish. The collection and management of the poor's fund, is placed in the Heritors and Kirk sessions. In parishes where a sufficient fund cannot be raised for all the poor, either by taxation or voluntary contribution at the church-doors, the magistrates are authorized to give them badges as a warrant to ask alms within the limits of their parishes. See Bell's Scotch Dict.

In Ireland, by the Irish Act 11 & 12 Geo. 3. c. 30. a corporation is erected in every county, county of a city and town, of which the bishop and member of parliament are presiding members: and who are empowered to relieve poor parish vagabonds, to apprentice children, &c. with great discretionary powers, which are varied and enlarged by several subsequent acts, as well local as general.

I. 1. THE CHURCHWARDENS of every parish, and four, three, or two substantial householders there, shall be nominated yearly in Easter-week, or within a month after Easter, under the hands and seals of two justices of the county, to be overseers of the poor of that parish. 43 Eliz. c. 2 § 1.

By the 54 Geo. 3. c. 91. the appointment of overseers shall be made on March 25 yearly, or within fourteen days after.

The words substantial householders are to be understood relatively. 2 T. R. 395.

In the counties of Lancashire, and others specified, and any other counties, where the parishes by reason of the extent cannot reap the benefit of the said 43 Eliz. c. 2. two or more overseers shall be yearly chosen and appointed, according to the directions of the said 43 Eliz. within every township or village within such county. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12. § 21. This statute extends to towns and villages, in extra-parochial places, as well as within parishes; and, by an equitable construction, to all counties, though not named in the statute. An appointment of one overseer only for a township is bad, the statute requiring at least two. 2 East, 168.

If any overseer so appointed shall die, or remove from the place, or become insolvent before the expiration of his office, two justices, on oath made thereof, may appoint another in his stead, until new overseers are appointed. 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. § 3.

The mayor and magistrates of every city, being justices of the peace, shall have the same authority within their respective jurisdictions as is given to two or more justices of the peace. 43 Eliz. c. 2. § 8.—If any parish happen to extend into more counties than one, or part to lie within a city, and part without, the magistrates of the city and justices of the county shall only intermeddle in so much of the parish as lies within their several jurisdictions respectively; but the churchwardens and overseers of such parish shall nevertheless duly execute their office, without dividing themselves, in all places within the said parish. § 9. If in any place there be no nomination of overseers, every magistrate in the division, and every mayor, alderman, and head officer of the corporation where the default shall happen, shall forfeit 5*l*. § 10.

By 59 Geo. 3. c. 12. § 6. persons assessed to the poor-rates and resident out of the parish (but within two miles of the church) may be appointed overseers; and by § 7. of the same act assistant overseers may be nominated by the parish, in vestry, with a yearly salary, who shall receive their appointment under the hands and seals of two justices.

The appointment must expressly state that the persons named in it are appointed "Overseers of the Poor." It must also state that they are "substantial householders there," that is, within the parish; and the county in which the parish lies must be named. An appointment to a prebend is not good; but an appointment to a hamlet is: the appointment need not state the justice to be of the division, or that one of the justices is of the quorum. 26 Geo. 2. c. 27.

The appointment of overseers must be under the hands and seals of two justices, pursuant to the direction of the 43 Eliz. c. 2; and therefore it cannot be made by the sessions, nor by the mayor of a corporation, conjointly with the justice of a county; but if there should happen to be only one justice in a county, perhaps he alone may appoint. It is however completely determined that the two justices must sign and seal the appointment in the presence of each other, for it is not merely a ministerial but a judicial act wherein the justices are to exercise their discretion. 3 T. R. 38.

The appointment, though made on a Sunday, is good, provided it be within Easter-week, or within a month after; but if the Sunday be Easter Sunday, the court will take it to be prima facie clandestine and bad; but it will be good unless so void as to be made to appear, although Sunday is considered as an improper day for making an appointment of overseers. An order also, appointing overseers in obedience to a mandamus, is good, although made above a month after Easter; so also an appointment of an overseer for the year next ensuing, will be understood to be for the overseer's year. 4 T. R. 778.

All persons, of whatever age or sex, are prima facie liable to serve, unless they can show some legal exemption to except them out of it. That a woman may be appointed overseer, see 2 T. R. 395. It is said that all peers of the realm, by reason of their dignity; clergymen, by reason of their order; members of parliament, by reason of the privileges of parliament; and attorneys, by reason of the necessity of their attendance at Westminster Hall,—are exempted from being chosen overseers, even where there is a special custom in the parish for every inhabitant to serve: it is admitted that practising barristers also have the same privilege for the like reason. The clerk of the treasury of the Court of Common Pleas was held not compellable to serve the office of overseer, the duties of that office being incompatible with his necessary personal attendance on the court. Ex parte Jeffries, 6 Bing. 10. It has also been held that an alderman of London ought to be discharged from serving parish offices, on account of his necessary attendance on the duties of the corporation. Persons also of particular professions and descriptions are exempted, by divers statutes, from serving the office of overseer. The president and members of the College of Physicians, in London. 32 Hen. 8. c. 40. Surgeons, being free-men of the Corporation of Surgeons, in London, for so long a time as they shall practise. 18 Geo. 2. c. 15. And it is said that surgeons in general are exempted by special custom at common law. Apothecaries, free of the Apothecaries' Company, and every person using and exercising the said art, who has served as an apprentice to it for seven years, while they practise. 6 & 7 Wm. 3. c. 4. Dissenting ministers, who shall conform to the directions of the Toleration Act; 1 W. & M. c. 18; and dissenters in general, are allowed to serve the office by deputy. See Dissenter. Soldiers serving in the militia during the time of service. 26 Geo. 3. c. 107. § 193. And perhaps it may be considered that those who are exempted from serving the office of churchwarden, are also exempted from serving the office of overseer. See Churchwarden. It has also been said, that persons who are only occasional residents in a parish ought not to be appointed: and it seems clear that absentees, or persons who do not reside, but only hold land in the parish, cannot be chosen. But it is settled that a woman, or a justice of the peace, or an officer upon half-pay, may be appointed, if there are no other more substantial or proper persons in the parish, who are eligible to the office. But, unless there is a positive exemption, the justices have a discretionary power to appoint such persons in the parish as they think most proper to execute the office.

It seems to be settled that no overseers can be appointed for any place that is not, in contemplation of law, a vill; and therefore, if a place that is extra-parochial come within the notion of a vill, overseers may be appointed for the purpose of obliging the inhabitants to provide for their own poor. But it is a subject that has been much litigated what kind of place shall be so considered. Coke describes a vill thus: "Villa est ex pluribus mansionibus vicinata," and it seems to be taken generally, that wherever there is a constable, the place over which he presides shall be considered a township. It has been determined, that a place consisting of two houses, or of a castle and an ale-house, or of a capital mansion house, and three keepers' lodges in the parish adjoining, though the lodges were converted into farms, were not vill. The number of houses, however, or the size of the place, is not the only distinguishing feature of a vill; for where a place consisted of a capital mansion house, and a large farm house thereto belonging, of the yearly value of 200*l*., and also of three other large farm houses, with three other farms, the court refused to grant a mandamus to appoint overseers, because it did not appear that the place had ever had a constable, or even been reputed to be a vill. So also it has been determined, that the sites of ancient cathedrals, colleges, and inns of court, are extra-parochial; and not being vill, either legally or by reputation, cannot have overseers appointed to them. But if an extra-parochial place be a vill by reputation, it may have overseers appointed, although it consist only of a mansion house and a farm house, occupied by different persons, and the property of one; and where the sessions, on an appeal from an appointment of overseers, adjudge the place to be a vill, this is conclusive; for then it is perfectly immaterial of what number of houses or persons it consists; but if the sessions set forth the facts upon which their judgment is founded, the Court of King's Bench will consider whether they have rightly concluded the place to be a vill.

The justices cannot appoint more than four overseers for any parish, unless the parish be divided into two or more divisions or townships, each separately maintaining its own poor. After an appointment of four overseers by magistrates at one meeting, the magistrates are functi officio; and no other magistrates can afterwards, upon a claim of exemption by one of the persons so appointed, appoint another in his place; but the party must appeal to the sessions to get his discharge; and such objection to the second appointment may be disclosed to the Court of K. B. on affidavit upon the removal of the appointment thither by certiorari, and the court will thereupon quash the appointment. 2 East, 244.

The justices ought not to appoint separate overseers for distinct parts of a parish, under 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12. unless such separate appointments are necessary; and this necessity can only be evinced by the inability of a parish to reap the benefit of the 43 Eliz. c. 2; of which inability the circumstances of a township having for sixty or seventy years had separate overseers, and maintained its own poor, independently of the parish at large, is pregnant evidence; and therefore, where a parish consists of several townships, some of which have immemorially maintained their own poor, the court will grant a mandamus for the appointment of separate overseers for the remaining townships. And when a parish is thus divided into separate townships, each township is to be considered as a distinct parish. But it is decided that a parish shall not be thus divided unless the sessions find it as a fact that the parish could not reap the benefit of the 43 Eliz. c. 2; and this in a case where the parish had immemorially been divided into two separate districts, making separate rates which were afterwards blended together, and divided in certain proportions; and there had been more than four overseers, and a constable for the hamlet part of the parish.

The two districts of which a parish consisted had from 43 Eliz. down to the 13 & 14 Car. 2. maintained their poor jointly, and at the time of passing the act 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12. agreed to separate in the maintenance of their poor, and that separate overseers should be appointed, upon condition that the rateable property in the parish, whether situated in the one or the other district, should be rated where the occupiers resided. In consequence of that agreement they had ever since uniformly maintained their own poor separately, and had had separate overseers, constables, &c. Held, that this clearly showed that the parish, at the time of the agreement, could not reap the full benefit of the statute of Eliz.; and that therefore the separation of the two districts was valid, and that an appointment of overseers for the whole was now bad. Held, also, that the agreement consisted of two distinct parts, and that the invalidity of the latter part, as to rating property not situate within the district rated, did not affect the question on the former part. 2 B. & A. 157.

By 59 Geo. 3. c. 95. after reciting that various towns corporate, or franchises, situate within one or more parish or parishes, and not being co-extensive therewith, have heretofore, for a long time, been separately assessed (assessed separately) from the parish in which they are situate; and that overseers of the poor for such town or franchise have been appointed distinct and apart from the overseers for the parish; that such assessments and appointments have, in some cases, been made without sufficient authority; it is enacted that all such separations of towns corporate, or franchises, from the parish or parishes in which they are situate, and the separate appointment of overseers, shall be deemed lawful to all intents and purposes, as if they had taken place under the authority of the 43 Eliz. c. 2; unless where it shall appear that such separation commenced within sixty years before the act.

See now post, VII., as to the uniting of parishes.

Persons aggrieved by any thing done or omitted by the churchwardens or overseers, or the two justices, may, on giving reasonable notice to the churchwardens, &c. appeal to the next general or quarter sessions; and if it shall appear to the sessions that reasonable notice were not given, they shall adjourn it to the next quarter sessions, and then and there finally determine the same, giving reasonable costs, &c. 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. § 4. See Sessions.

The appointment cannot be removed into the court of K. B. before the time for appealing is expired, for it would deprive the party of his right of appeal. This appeal may be made as well by the parishioners as by the persons who are appointed overseers. 3 T. R. 38.

The manner of appointing assistant overseers, together with their duties, is prescribed and limited by the 59 Geo. 3. c. 12. They are to be elected by the inhabitants in vestry assembled: their number is not restricted, and no qualification is required except that of being discreet persons.

2. It is provided that overseers shall, within four days after the end of their year, and after other overseers nominated, make and yield up to two justices true and perfect accounts of all monies by them received, or rated and assessed, and not received; and also such stock as shall be in their hands or in the hands of the poor to work; and of all other things concerning their office; and pay over the balance to the succeeding overseers. 43 Eliz. c. 2. § 2. The succeeding overseers may, by distress, levy the sums of money or stock which shall be behind upon any account so made; in default of distress the offender may be committed to the common gaol until payment of the arrears; two justices may commit overseers, who shall refuse to account, until they make a true account, and pay over the balance in their hands. § 4.

The overseers shall not bring into their account any money given to the relief of a poor person not registered in the parish books as a person entitled to receive collections, on pain of 5*l.* 19 Geo. 1. c. 7. § 2.

The overseers shall, within fourteen days after other overseers are appointed, deliver in to such succeeding overseers a true and just account, in writing, fairly entered in a book or books to be kept for that purpose, and signed by the overseers; such account to be verified on oath before one justice, who shall sign and attest the caption of the same at the foot of the account; and the overseers shall deliver over all the stock and pay the balance remaining in their hands to their successors; these books of account to be carefully preserved in some public place, and to be open at all seasonable times to the inspection of any person assessed, and copies thereof delivered if required. 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. § 1. If any overseer shall refuse or neglect to account and pay the balance, as aforesaid, two justices may commit such overseer until he complies. § 2. If an overseer shall remove, he shall previously deliver accounts and papers, and pay the balance aforesaid to the churchwarden or other overseer: and if any overseer shall die, his executors or administrators shall, within forty days after his decease, deliver all things concerning his office to the churchwarden or other overseer, and pay the balance out of assets, before any of the other debts are paid and satisfied. § 3. The succeeding overseers may levy arrears of rates due to their predecessors, and out of the money reimburse to their predecessors sums expended for the use of the poor, and which are allowed to be due to them upon their accounts. § 11.

By 50 Geo. 3. c. 49. in all cases when any such account is required to be made under 17 Geo. 2. it shall be submitted by the churchwardens and overseers to two justices at a special sessions within the 14 days; and such justices may examine into the matter of such account, and administer an oath to the party as to the truth thereof, and may disallow charges; which account shall be signed by such justices, overseers and churchwardens neglecting or refusing to yield up, submit, or verify, such accounts, or to deliver over to their successors, within ten days, any goods, &c. remaining in their hands, shall be committed to gaol until compliance; and upon neglecting to pay over within fourteen days money in their hands, it shall be levied by distress and sale of the goods; and in default of distress, shall be committed till payment. Parties aggrieved may appeal to quarter sessions. § 2, 3. Saving the rights of magistrates of corporations. § 4. This act not to extend to places exempted from accounting under former acts. § 6.

The provisions of this latter act are not a substitution in lieu of those in 17 Geo. 2. but are cumulative; and if the overseer refuse to deliver in such accounts to his successor within fourteen days, he may be committed by two justices for that refusal. 16 East, 374.

If, after an order made by the justices under the act 50 Geo. 3. confirmed on appeal, the overseers refuse to pay such balance, the magistrates may, upon the application of one of the succeeding overseers, issue a warrant to levy the same, although the rest of the parish officers refuse to concur in such application. 2 M. & S. 343.

The court will not, upon removal of an order of sessions allowing overseers' accounts, which is good upon the face of it, go into the merits of those accounts upon affidavit. 2 M. & S. 321. See Rex v. Glyde, ib. n.

The authority given by the 43 Eliz. c. 2. to commit, upon the non-delivery of the account within the time limited, extends only to overseers, and not to churchwardens; and if the latter are committed for a default, as overseers, they must be so named. The power of stating and allowing the accounts at the end of the year must be executed by the justices themselves, for they can not delegate any other person to perform this office. The account delivered must be a particular account, and not merely what the overseer has received and paid in gross; but the justices cannot commit if an account be actually delivered, though it is objectionable, they must go into it, hear the objections, strike out what is wrong, and balance the account; and if, after the accounts are passed, they appear to be fraudulent, the remedy is to indict the overseers. After the justices have examined, they are to allow the account; and if they refuse to administer the oath prescribed by 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. in verification of the account, the overseer may have a mandamus to compel them. A mandamus will also lie on behalf of the new overseers to compel the old overseers to deliver over the book of poor's-rates and all other public books and papers in their custody relating to the office. Overseers must account yearly, although they may be appointed for several years successively.

If any persons shall find themselves aggrieved by any act done by the churchwardens and overseers, or by the two justices, they may, by 43 Eliz. c. 2. § 1. appeal to the general or quarter sessions. And also, by 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. § 1. (see ante 1.) if any person shall have any material objection to any account, or any part thereof, such person giving reasonable notice to the churchwardens, &c., may appeal to the next general or quarter sessions, and the justices there assembled shall receive such appeal, and finally determine the same.

The sessions, upon an appeal against the allowance of overseers' accounts, may, if they see reason, disallow of the account, and order the overseers to pay over such balances as they shall adjudge to be due to the parish; but if they refuse to do so, the sessions cannot commit, but must levy the arrears pursuant to the direction of the 43 Eliz. c. 2. § 4. So at the sessions may, upon an appeal, set aside the allowed account, and order a re-examination of the account by two justices, or the sessions cannot receive an appeal, and the allowance must appear on the face of the order; but objections may be made to the accounts before the appeal, if the inhabitants are aggrieved as soon as the money is assessed. Great doubts have been entertained as to the time when the appeal is to be brought; and it has been said, that the appeal must be to the next sessions; but that the accounts are passed before one justice, under 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. § 1. that the appeal must be to the next sessions; but that the accounts are passed before two justices, under the 43 Eliz. c. 2. § 4. an appeal may be at any distance of time; but with respect to a poor's-rate, it has been determined, that the latter statute repeals the former, and therefore the appeal must be in all such cases to the next sessions after the publication of the account.

If a person be appointed overseer for four successive years, and do not make any rate for the first three to reimburse himself what he expended in those years, he cannot in the fourth year make a rate for that purpose. 6 T. R. 159.

It has been heretofore doubted how far overseers who have laid out their money upon the maintenance of the poor, were to be reimbursed after they were out of office. By 41 Geo. 3. (U. K.) c. 23. § 9. succeeding churchwardens and overseers are empowered to reimburse to their predecessors in office any money expended for relief of the poor while there was no rate, or during an appeal; and in default of such reimbursement, the quarter sessions, on application, shall make an order for that purpose.

The balance must be paid over to the succeeding overseers, notwithstanding a vestry may be willing to let the old overseers retain it, in order to discharge the expenses of a law-suit, or a surgeon's bill incurred on account of the poor; nor can they take credit in their accounts for money paid, as a salary to an assistant overseer, although such assistant overseer be appointed with such salary at a vestry meeting.

As overseers are not compellable, under 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. to give in their accounts until fourteen days after Easter, the sums of money they may receive in their official capacity, are not due until that time is expired; and therefore if an overseer become bankrupt, such money cannot be proved against his estate before his accounts are delivered in.

For the provisions of the recent statute with respect to the accounts, as well as the other duties imposed on overseers, see post, VII.

3. If any action of trespass or other suit shall be brought against any person taking a distress, making of any sale, or any other thing done by authority of the act, they may plead that it was done by virtue of the act; and if a verdict be for the defendant, or the plaintiff be nonsuit after appearance, the defendant shall recover treble damages and costs. 43 Eliz. c. 2. § 19.

If any action upon the case, trespass, battery, or false imprisonment shall be brought against any overseer, or any in aid of him, for any thing touching and concerning his office, the action shall be laid in the county where the fact was done, and he may plead generally; and on a verdict in his favour, or if the plaintiff be nonsuit, or after any discontinuance, or the fact is not proved to be committed within the county, the defendant shall have double costs. 7 Jac. 1. c. 5; 21 Jac. 1. c. 12.

Parish officers, or persons acting in their behalf, are not entitled under these statutes to double costs, upon judgment as in case of a nonsuit, in an action brought against them for goods purchased by them for the use of the poor, it being a mere non-feasance. 3 M. & S. 131; and see 3 East, 92.

When any distress shall be made for a poor's-rate, the distress itself shall not be deemed unlawful, nor the parties making it deemed trespassers on account of any defect or want of form in the warrant for the appointment of such overseers; or in the rate of assessment; or in the warrant of distress thereon; nor shall the party distraining be deemed a trespasser ab initio, on account of any subsequent irregularity; but the parties injured may have their action of trespass, or on the case, at their election; and if the plaintiffs recover, they shall have full costs; provided no such plaintiffs shall have any action for such irregularity, if tender of amends hath been made before action brought. 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. § 8.

No action shall be brought against any constable or other officer (and it has been decided that overseers are officers within this statute), or person acting under his authority, for any thing done under a warrant, under the hand and seal of any justice, until demand made, and left at the usual place of his abode, signed by the party demanding, of a perusal and copy of the warrant, and the same has been refused for six days; and after complying with such demand, if any action be brought, without making the justice, who signed it, defendant, on producing and proving the warrant at the trial, the jury shall find for the defendant, notwithstanding any defect of jurisdiction; and if the action be brought jointly against the justice and the officer, then, on proof of such warrant, the jury shall find for such officer, notwithstanding such defect of jurisdiction; and if a verdict shall be given against the justice, the plaintiff shall recover against him the costs, which he is liable to pay to the officer acquitted. 21 Geo. 2. c. 44. § 6. And where in such case the plaintiff shall obtain a verdict against a justice, and the judge shall certify that the injury complained of was wilfully and maliciously committed, he shall have double costs. § 7. But no such action shall be brought unless commenced within six calendar months after the act committed. § 8.

It has been decided that the 7 Jac. 1. c. 5. and 21 Jac. 1. c. 12. giving double costs, do not extend to ecclesiastical matters; as if a churchwarden present a man upon a pretended crime of incontinency; or a constable present a person as an inhabitant of a parish, when he is only an occupier of lands therein, for non-payment of charges towards the repair of the church; and to entitle an overseer to the double costs, it must be certified by the judge who tries the cause, that the overseer was acting in the execution of his office; if, however, there is a special verdict in a case where an overseer is defendant, and it appears by the facts found in such verdict, that the act for which the action is brought was done by virtue or reason of his office, the master must tax double costs, though there is no certificate or allowance by the judge who tries the cause.

As the law hath provided these protections to overseers acting properly in their office, so also it has inflicted punishments on them for misbehaviour; besides those already noticed on their failing to deliver their accounts, and hereafter as to the removal of the poor.

The churchwardens and overseers shall meet together at least once a month in the church, upon a Sunday, in the afternoon, after divine service, to consider of business respecting the poor, upon pain of forfeiting 20s. for every neglect. 43 Eliz. c. 2. § 2.

The justice before whom any idle and disorderly person shall be convicted, may order the overseer to pay 5s. to the person who apprehended the offender, and if he shall refuse or neglect so to do, it may be levied by distress. 17 Geo. 2. c. 5. § 1.

If any overseer (or other officer of any parish) shall neglect or refuse to obey and perform the several orders and directions in the statute particularized, or any of them, if no penalty is specifically provided, he shall forfeit not exceeding 5l. nor less than 20s. 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. § 14.

If any overseer, intrusted to make payments for the use of the poor, shall make such payments in base or counterfeit coin, the offence may be heard in a summary way, and on conviction he shall forfeit from 10s. to 20s. for each offence. 9 Geo. 3. c. 37. § 7.

Overseers also may be indicted for refusing to accept of and undertake the office, or for refusing to make a rate to reimburse constables for the apprehending of vagrants, under 17 Geo. 2. c. 1. § 1. or for refusing to account within the time limited for the monies they have received for the relief of the poor; or for not relieving the poor; or for relieving them unnecessarily; or for disobeying a legal order of justices; or for not receiving a pauper when sent to their parish under an order of removal; or for cruelty in the removal of a poor woman with child: so also the court will grant an information against an overseer, for fraudulently contriving to remove a poor person in order to prevent him from becoming chargeable to the parish; or for contriving to marry a pauper, or for giving a man money to marry a woman who was with child, in order to prevent the child from being a burden to the parish; but the court will not grant an information against an overseer for making an alteration in a poor's-rate, after it had been allowed by two justices, if the alteration appear to have been made with the approbation of the justices. Nor can an overseer be adjudged guilty of absenting himself from the monthly meetings appointed by 43 Eliz. c. 2. until he has had personal notice of his appointment; and if he be appointed under 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12. an overseer in an extra-parochial place, he is not liable to this penalty.

An information in nature of a quo warranto will not lie against overseers; nor can the justices in sessions award an attachment against those officers. See further, VII.

II. 1. THE churchwardens and overseers, or the greater part of them, shall take order from time to time, with the consent of two justices, to raise, weekly or otherwise (by taxation of every inhabitant, parson, vicar, and every other occupier of lands, houses, tithes impropriate, appropriations of tithes, coal-mines, or saleable underwood in the parish, in such competent sums as they shall think fit), 1, a sufficient stock of materials to set the poor on work; 2, competent sums of money to relieve the lame, impotent, old, blind, and indigent; 3, to put out poor children apprentices; and 4, for doing and executing all other things concerning the premises, as to the overseers shall seem convenient. 43 Eliz. c. 2. § 1. The mayors or other head officers of corporations, shall have the same authority within their respective jurisdictions, both in and out of sessions, as is given to county justices; and every alderman of London, within his ward. § 8.

As this latter clause restrains the magistrates and justices to the limits of their respective jurisdictions, the justices for a county cannot allow a rate made by the overseer of a borough. 2 Const. 62.

The justices of the counties in which separate overseers shall be appointed for particular townships and villages, shall have the like authority to raise and levy monies, and to do and execute every thing in such townships and villages, as is given them in any parish where the overseers are appointed, under 43 Eliz. c. 2; 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12. § 22.

The justices and parish officers of a distinct jurisdiction, as of the precinct of the cathedral church at Norwich, may therefore be compelled, by a mandamus, to make a rate for the relief of the poor. 1 Const. 61.

Public notice in the church shall be given, by the overseers, of every poor's-rate allowed by the justices, the next Sunday after such allowance; and no rate shall be valid to collect and raise the same, unless such notice shall have been given. 17 Geo. 2. c. 3. § 1.

In trespass on a distress for non-payment of a poor's-rate, the publication of the rate must be proved; and the court of K. B. will not grant a mandamus to compel justices to sign a warrant of distress under a poor's-rate, if it has not been duly published. But a special case, respecting the legality of a rate, is good, though it does not appear therein that that rate was duly published.

The overseers shall permit the inhabitants of the parish, &c. to inspect every such rate at all reasonable times, paying 1s., and shall give copies at the rate of 6d. for every twenty-four names; or, on refusal or neglect, forfeit 20l. 17 Geo. 2. c. 3. § 2, 3.

In an action against an assistant overseer for this penalty, for not permitting an inspection of the rate, it was held, 1, that a demand of inspection made by the plaintiff (and his attorney, who was not a parishioner), was valid; 2, that refusal to an inhabitant constitutes him a party grieved, without any actual injury to him; 3, that a notice that a rate would be collected forthwith, was a good publication, and necessarily implied allowance by the justices; 4, that a demand to see the rate was sufficient, there being no other rate in existence at the time; 5, that the refusal was complete, though the defendant said "he may see the books by going to the vestry;" 6, that an assistant overseer is within the statute. Bennett v. Edwards, 7 B. & C. 586, affirmed in Cam. Scac. 3 Y. & J. 458; 6 Bing. 230.

True copies of all poor's-rates shall be entered in a book, within fourteen days after the determination of all appeals, to be attested by the overseers, and kept for public perusal, under penalty of from 20s. to 5l. where no other penalty is provided. 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. § 13, 14. Overseers, where there are no churchwardens, may do, perform, and execute, and shall be liable as to all matters relating to the poor. § 15.

The rate which the churchwardens and overseers are by these statutes authorized to make, must be assessed only on the visible property, both real and personal, which the occupier or owner may have within the parish, and not according to the amount of the property which a person, rated as an inhabitant, may have out of the parish.

The general rule seems to be, that every species of property, lying within the parish, which has an occupier, and from which an annual profit arises, is rateable to the poor.

By 59 Geo. 3. c. 12. § 19—23. provisions are made for rating the owners of houses let at rents from 8l. to 20l. a-year, for less than a year, or at rents payable at a shorter period than three months; the goods of the occupier being made liable to the rate; and the amount, if levied on such goods, may be deducted out of the rent.

Land is to be rated according to its value, of which the improved rents may be taken as evidence. Therefore, if a person rent a quantity of land, together with a mineral spring thereout arising, at a gross yearly rent, it is rateable to the poor in respect of the whole of such rent; for the value of the land is improved by the profits of the spring. Comp. 6, 2. 1 M. & S. 509. But as the improved rent is supposed to be in proportion to the quantity of stock it keeps or furnishes, the value of the stock ought not to be assessed; unless, indeed, a farmer, under colour of keeping stock for the purposes of husbandry, or as the produce of his farm, do buy and sell articles, such as hay, corn, straw, or horses, in the way of trade. So also lands, though given to an hospital, are still rateable to the poor; for a man cannot, by appropriating his land to charitable purposes, exempt them from taxes to which they were before liable.

Tithes are, in contemplation of law, a tenement, and are sold on by the parson as an occupier; and, therefore, the parson is rateable for the amount of his tithes to the poor; but the assessment must be made personally on him, although he has leased them to one or more of the parishioners. So also, if a sum of money be paid annually in lieu of tithes, it is rateable to the poor; although the amount of such money be settled under a compromise between the parson and the parish, and confirmed by act of parliament. But if an act of parliament say, that the inhabitants of such a place shall pay tithes to the vicar, and give an option to the parishioners, either to pay such tithes personally, or to raise such a sum as will pay it to the vicar, "clear of all deduction or charges, whether parochial or parliamentary, in lieu of his tithes," this payment is not liable to the poor's rate. Tithes which are payable by custom only, as on fish, are liable to be rated to the poor.

Rents.—Quit-rents, it has been said, are rateable to the poor; but this opinion may be doubted; for it is positively laid down in one case, that the quit-rents and casual profits of a manor are not rateable to the poor's tax; for the property, though permanent, does not produce a regular annual profit, but is merely accidental: but ground-rents are certainly

Waste lands.—By 17 Geo. 2. c. 37. waste and barren lands, when improved, and adjudged assessable by the sessions, shall be assessed to the poor's rate of the nearest parish: and the justices, in general quarter sessions, may hear and determine disputes concerning the same. And it has been adjudged, that if a waste be inclosed in the parish of A. on which the holders of the parish of B. have right of common appurtenant, the allotment, given in lieu of that right, shall be assessed to the poor of the parish of A.

Ferry.—The owner of a ferry, residing in a different parish, but taking the profits of the ferry on the spot, by his servants and agents, is not rateable for such tolls in the parish where they are collected. 12 East, 346.

Tolls, which a corporation is entitled to, and which yield a certain annual profit, are rateable to the poor. So also, it has been determined, that the grantee of the right of navigation of the river Ouse, between Erith and Bedford, is rateable to the poor in each of those parishes, in which a sluice is erected; and for the passing of which certain tolls are established, although the grantee live, and tolls are collected in a different parish. So also, where, by a navigation act, the proprietor was entitled to a toll of 4s. per ton for goods carried up the river Kennet, from Reading to Newbury, or down the river from Newbury to Reading, and to a proportionable sum for any less distance; and was also enabled to appoint any place of collection; it was held, that the tolls for goods, carried the whole voyage from Reading to Newbury, were rateable in Newbury, though in fact they were collected at Aldermaston lock, in the parish of Padworth, about midway between Newbury and Reading, by the agent of the proprietor. So also, where a person is entitled to a dish or measure, by way of toll, of all tin gotten in certain lands, he is rateable to the poor in respect of the profits produced by his right of toll. So also, it has been determined, that the barge way in the hamlet of Hampton Wick, purchased by the city of London, for the more effectually completing the navigation of the Thames, is rateable to the poor in respect to the tolls and duties thereon collected. But where the right of using a certain path or way is a mere easement; or if A. has an exclusive right of using a way-leave over lands which he holds in common with B., paying B. certain sums yearly; and has the privilege of using another way-leave, occupied by C., paying to C. so much a ton for the goods carried over it; A. is not liable to be rated to the poor in respect of either of such way-leaves: nor are the tolls collected at a light-house, of all ships passing or coming into the harbour, rateable, unless it be found as a fact, that the person rated is the occupier of the house.

The tolls of a light-house, situate in a township, which are collected out of the township, are not rateable quod tolls in the township. 12 East, 46.

The lessee of tolls of a public bridge is not rateable as such, it not appearing that he was the occupier of any local visible property within the parish, nor that he was an inhabitant resident there, deriving profit there from such tolls beyond the rent paid by him for the same. 12 East, 416.

See further, on the rateability of incorporeal hereditaments, 1 Nolan, 85.

Chapels.—A house converted into a chapel, if not used for any other purpose than that of public worship, was not rateable to the poor; nor was the preacher of the sect, unless he were permitted by his congregation to dwell therein, rateable as the occupier thereof: but if a private building used, and, by covenant, always to be used, as a chapel, for religious purposes, were let out so as to produce an annual profit, either by the rent of the pews, or by any other means, such a building was then rateable to the poor.

Now by the 3 & 4 Wm. 4. c. 80. chapels and places exclusively appropriated to public religious worship, and duly certified as such, shall not be liable to be rated to the poor or church rates. Parts of buildings not so exclusively appropriated and from which any rent or profits are derived, are not exempted; but the using of chapels, &c., or any part thereof, for Sunday or infant schools, does not render them liable.

An almshouse wholly occupied by objects of the charity, and from which no profits arise, is not rateable to the poor; and if lands be given to a charitable purpose, as for building a school or alms-house, by a private act of parliament, in which it is expressed, that such lands shall be free from "all public taxes," they are not liable to be rated to the poor. But the master of a free school, appointed by the minister and inhabitants, under a charitable trust, whereby a house, garden, &c. were assigned for his habitation, for the teaching of ten poor boys, is rateable for his occupation of the same. 6 T. R. 332.

Market and fair.—The lessee of a stall in a market town, to which the lessee resorts every market-day weekly, to sell his wares, is not liable to be rated to the poor in respect thereof; nor is a person liable to be assessed for the profits of a fair.

Palaces.—A bishop is liable to be rated to the poor in respect of his palace; for there can be no prescription against this rate. So also where the site of a royal palace is demised to a subject, for a certain permanent interest, the grantees that occupy it are rateable for such property to the poor. So also, though royal palaces, in the hands of the crown, are not rateable; yet, if they, or the respective apartments in them, are separately occupied, the occupiers are liable to be rated, whether they pay for such occupation by rent or services.

Army.—Stables rented by a colonel of a regiment, by order of the crown, for the use of the regiment, are not liable to be rated to the poor. So also, the battery-house, at Seaford, which is the property of the crown, is not liable to be rated, although the master-gunner live in the house; for, being removable at pleasure, he has no permanent occupation; but if the sessions find the fact positively, that he is the occupier, and rate him, such rate is good. But the owner of stables in the parish of Mary-le-bone, rented by a colonel of a troop of horse, by the authority of the king, for the use of the troop, is liable to be assessed for them, to the rates collected in that parish, under 10 Geo. 3. c. 23.

Where a canteen was demised to B. by the barrack-board for a year, at a rent of 15*l.* for the canteen and buildings; and also the farther sum of 510*l.* for the privilege of using the same as a canteen, and selling therein provisions and liquors, &c. usually sold by butlers, with power of distress for the aggregate sum; B. was held rateable to the relief of the poor, as occupier of the canteen, in respect of the 525*l.* aggregate rent; and not merely in respect of the 15*l.* 4 M. & S. 317.

Parks.—The ranger of a royal park is rateable, as such, to the poor; for all the inclosed lands therein, in the parish, yielding certain profits: and so also is the herbage and pannage of a park, if it yields a certain profit; but if they yield no profit, they are not rateable.

Chambers in the inns of court and chancery are not liable to be rated to the poor.

Hospitals.—The officers belonging to and lodging in Chelsea Hospital are rateable to the poor; but neither the trustees nor the servants attending St. Luke's Hospital; nor the governors of St. Bartholomew's Hospital, are liable to be rated. See 1 East, 584.

Mines, pits, and quarries.—The lessees of lead-mines, who pay no rent, but only a certain part of the ore raised, are not rateable to the poor: but the lessee of lead-mines, though held of the crown, is rateable for the profits arising from lot and cope; which are duties paid him by the adventurer without any risk on his part. See also 1 East, 534; 2 East, 164; 5 East, 478.

The lessor of coal-mines is liable to be rated, though he derive no profit from the mine, the mine being rateable property. 5 T. R. 593. But not where, becoming unproductive, it ceases to be worked, though the lessee is still bound to pay rent for it. Aliter, where the mine is productive, though worked at a loss. 8 East, 387.

Landlords not resident within the parish, having leased lead-mines and other minerals, reserving a certain annual rent, and certain proportions of the ore which should be raised, are not rateable for the rent, no ore being raised 12 East, 353.

Iron-mines are not rateable. 5 East, 478.

A slate-quarry is rateable. 2 East, 164.

And so is a clay-pit. 8 East, 528. And lime-works. 1 East, 534.

The trustees under the will of a person seised in fee of two-third parts of a manor, subject to certain leases to a company of adventurers of the mines of lead, tin, and copper ore, and other minerals under the moors, commons, or wastes of the manor, at a rent certain, are not rateable to the relief of the poor at such rent; and, therefore, a rate by which they were rated in one gross sum for such rent, and also in respect of their being owners and occupiers of the moors, commons, and wastes within the manor, was held ill. 4 M. & S. 222.

Corporation.—A corporation is liable to be rated to the poor for profits arising from tolls; see ante: but a corporation established for the purposes of a public charity, such as the governors of St. Bartholomew's Hospital, are not rateable with respect to the hospital; for they cannot be considered as occupiers. A corporation, however, seised of lands in fee for its own profit, are inhabitants and occupiers, within the meaning of the 43 Eliz. c. 2. and are, in respect thereof, liable to be rated, in their corporate capacity, to the relief of the poor. So also, lands purchased by a company, not incorporated, and converted into a dock under an act of parliament, declaring that the shares of the proprietors shall be considered as personal property, are rateable to the poor in proportion to the annual profits. See also 5 East, 453, 456.

Woods consisting of timber trees, where the under-wood is left for standards, are not rateable to the poor.

Saleable under-woods are rateable in proportion to the value, though they should only be cut down once in twenty-one years, and their annual value may be estimated according to what they could be worth to rent for a lease of the duration of their intended growth. 10 East, 219.

Offices.—An officer of the Salt Office is not liable to be rated to the poor in respect of his salary.

Professions.—The profit arising from, are not rateable 7 T. R. 60.

Machines.—The profits of a weighing machine, on a turnpike road, are liable to be rated to the poor. So, a building called, "the engine-house," in which is a carding-machine for manufacturing cotton, is rateable to the poor, on its increased value by the working of the machine; although this engine is not fixed to the premises, but capable of being moved at pleasure; but the profits of a light-house are not rateable. See ante, Tolls.

Prisons.—The warden of the Fleet prison is liable to the poor's rates in respect of those profits which he derives from letting lodgings to prisoners, in the prison and the rules thereof.

Ships.—The owners of a coasting vessel are liable to be rated in respect of the profits accruing therefrom, in that parish where they themselves reside, and where the ship is registered, her cargoes are usually received, and delivered, and her freight paid, and which is the home of the vessel when unemployed, although at the time of making the rate, the ship was not actually within the parish. But they are not liable to be rated for a ship which was never locally within the parish, although the profits be there received by the owners. 1 B. & A. 109.

Stock in trade.—The general question, how far personal property is rateable to the poor, was long undetermined: and whether stock in trade were liable, was considered to depend, in a great measure, upon the particular circumstances of each case; for although there were not wanting authorities of a recent as well as more early date, to show that stock in trade, in general, was rateable to the poor; yet until of late years there was no express authority, in the instance of any one trade, adjudging the stock of that par-icular trade to be liable, except in those places in which an usage to assess such stock was proved; though, in many boroughs, the stock in all trades had immemorially, and even from the very date of the stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2. been, in point of fact, rated. It seems, now, to be decided, that stock in trade, if it be the property of the person in possession, and productive, is ratable: the circumstance of its having been rated one year, is prima facie evidence that it is productive the next year; and, if not contradicted by other evidence, is sufficient to warrant the justices to decide that it should be then rated. See 6 T. R. 468. And stock in trade is rateable, although it never has been previously rated in the parish. 16 East, 350.

Silk throwsters, working up in their mills the silk of their employers sent to them for that purpose, are not liable to be rated in that respect as for their stock in trade. 8 Eust, 537.

A farmer shall be taxed for his stock in hand, in case it is more than necessary for the carrying on his farm and paying his rent, for then it is like a stock in trade; but for stock necessary for his farming, he shall not be taxed. Vin. Abr. tit. Poor, xvi. p. 426. See ante, Land.

2. The poor's-rate must be made by the overseers, and allowed by the justices; for the sessions have no original power to order an assessment to be made. The overseers, with the concurrence of the justices, may make the rate without the consent of the churchwardens; and when made, the justices must allow it, for this is merely a ministerial act; and if either the overseers neglect to make, or the justices to allow a rate, they may be compelled by mandamus.

The time for which a poor's-rate ought to be made, seems to be left to the discretion of the overseers. The stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2. says "weekly or otherwise." In one case, it is said that it ought to be monthly, because the possessors are to pay, and possessions frequently change; this rule is confirmed by Burrow, but denied by Bott, who states a dictum of Lord Mansfield, that a poor's-rate might as well be made for three months as for one month; and Holt, chief-justice, assigned as a reason against making poor's-rates quarterly, that by this means a man cannot move in the middle of the quarter but he must be twice charged. The legislature, however, has provided against this by stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. § 12. which enacts, "that when any person shall come into, or occupy any premises, from which any person assessed shall be removed, or which, at the time of making the rate, were empty, every person, so removing or coming in, shall pay the rate in proportion to their respective occupations."

The purposes, also, for which a poor's-rate is made, must be conformable to the direction of the stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2. and therefore a rate cannot be made to reimburse former overseers for money expended to the use of the poor, or to defray law charges; for an overseer is not bound to lay out the money until he has it; nor can a rate be made to repay money borrowed to build a workhouse; but if the monies, on any rate made by preceding overseers, be not raised at the expiration of their office, the successors may, by stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. § 11. raise it, and reimburse them; and overseers, before their office expires, may make a rate to reimburse themselves monies laid out in proceedings at law, provided such expense be not incurred wantonly and unnecessarily. See also 11 Geo. 3. c. 25. post. And by stat. 11 Geo. 3. c. 12. § 18. a rate may be made for reimbursing constables such monies as they shall have expended in relieving the poor, in conveying them with passes, and in carrying rogues, vagabonds, and sturdy beggars to houses of correction.

The rate, also, must be made in equal proportion on all the persons assessed, according to their respective properties; and therefore a pound-rate on the rent of lands and houses, and the amount of the interest of personal property, is said to be the most fair and reasonable assessment; but this is deemed to be the rule; for the circumstances of a man of landed property may differ in proportion as his family is large or small, and personal property is in a continual state of fluctuation; and, therefore, neither rent nor land-tax ought to be considered in the making of a rate; but the overseers, taking their former assessments as their best guide, are to proportion rates according to their best discretion; and if they make it unequal, the sessions on appeal will correct it, for the sessions are the ultimate judges of the proportion and equality of the rate. A poor's-rate made upon three-fourths of the yearly value of land, and upon one moiety of the yearly value of houses, is not disproportionate or unequal. A rate made on one-half of the full yearly value or net rent of farms, and taking one-twentieth part of all stock, personal estate, and money out at interest, valuing the interest of such twentieth part at 4 per cent., and then rating one moiety of such twentieth part, varying the proportions as circumstances require, (for the overseers cannot make a standing rate,) is a good and equal rate. A rate on lands and houses, at one penny in the pound, without making any distinction between farm dwelling-houses and cottages, although they had been before rated in different proportions, is not an unequal rate; for whether houses are to be rated to the poor in a different proportion from land, must depend on local circumstances. But of those equalities and proportions the sessions are ultimately to judge; and therefore the Court of King's Bench, presuming prima facie that the inferior jurisdiction will not violate its duty, will not grant a mandamus to make an equal rate, or quash a rate, unless it evidently appear unequal on the face of it.

3. The appeal to the sessions may, by 43 Eliz. c. 2. § 4. be to any general quarter sessions; but by 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. § 4. it must be on reasonable notice given to the next sessions, general or quarter (see ante, 1. 1, 2); for it is by making the rate that the party is aggrieved, and the publication shall be taken from the time it is allowed; and if an appeal be lodged and dismissed for informality, the party cannot have a second appeal, but if it appears that reasonable notice has not been given, they may adjourn the appeal to the next quarter sessions, and there finally determine the same, and award the party, in whose favour it is determined, costs.

In all corporations which have not six justices, persons aggrieved may appeal against a poor's-rate to the next sessions for the county or division. (Stats. 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. § 5.; 1 Geo. 4. c. 36.) The overseer's book, in which all appeals from poor's-rate are directed to be entered, shall be produced at the sessions when any appeal is heard. § 13.

Upon all appeals from rates, the sessions may, by stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. amend the rate, without altering it with respect to other persons. Upon an appeal from the whole rate, if it shall be found necessary, the sessions may, in their discretion, quash the rate, and direct the overseers to make a new equal rate. The sessions cannot strike out the name of a person from the poor's-rate; so, if the name of any person be omitted, the sessions must quash the rate, and cannot amend it by inserting his name. But it seems agreed, that, where a person is overcharged in a poor's-rate, the sessions may relieve him, on appeal, by lessening the sum assessed on him. A partitioner who is liable to be rated, but who in fact is not rated, is a competent witness to prove that the person, whose name is omitted, is liable to be rated.

The justices in sessions shall cause defects of form in appeals to be amended without costs; and determine the appeal on the merits of the case. Stat. 3 Geo. 2. c. 19. § 1.

By stat. 41 Geo. 3. (U. K.) c. 23. for the better collection of the poor's-rates, it is enacted, that on appeal from any poor-rate the quarter sessions may amend it without quashing it, or, if necessary to grant relief, they may quash it, but the sum assessed shall nevertheless be levied and applied in satisfaction of the next effective rate to be made. § 1. Notice of appeal shall not prevent distress being made for recovery of the rate, for a sum not exceeding the amount of the last effective rate. § 2. Quarter sessions ordering a rate to be quashed, may direct any sum charged not to be paid, and stop proceedings for the levying of it. § 3. Notices of appeal shall be in writing, and shall specify the grounds of appeal; and this extends to appeals against overseers' accounts. § 4. 6. Appeals may be decided by consent without notice. § 5. The rate shall be levied as altered by the sessions. § 7. In case in the rate the name of any person shall be struck out, or any sum lowered, the sessions may order money unduly levied to be repaid with costs. § 8.

If a poor-rate be legal on the face of it, though stated to be made for illegal purposes, the courts will not quash the rate, but will leave the parties aggrieved to appeal against the allowance of the overseers' accounts. 5 T. R. 346.

When a person is overcharged, the sessions may relieve him on appeal, and amend the rate, by lessening the sum assessed on him. 2 T. R. 623.

But if the name of any person be omitted in the rate, the justices ought to quash the rate, and not amend it by adding the name. 1 T. R. 625; 6 T. R. 468.

Trespass will not lie for a distress for non-payment of the poor's-rate, if the objection to the rate be, that it is made for six months. The party ought to appeal. 6 T. R. 580.

If a party appeal on the ground that he has no rateable property in the parish, the respondents must first establish their case. 4 T. R. 475.

The party objecting to a poor's-rate may appeal to the next session, for which he is in time to give an effectual notice of appeal, after the publication of the rate. One intervening day between such publication and the next immediate quarter sessions, is not sufficient time for the purpose. 15 East, 256. See 4 T. R. 12.

An appeal in London or Middlesex must (as in all other counties) be made to the next practicable general quarter sessions; the stat. 17 Geo. 2. in its terms, gives the appeal to the next general or quarter sessions. 15 East, 692.

4. The present, as well as the subsequent overseers, may, by warrant from two justices, levy the sums of money assessed for the poor's-rates, and all arrears thereof, of every one that shall refuse to contribute according as they shall be assessed, by distress and sale of the offender's goods, rendering the party the overplus; and, in defect of such distress, two justices may commit the defaulter till payment. Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2. § 4.

The goods of any person assessed, and refusing to pay, may be distrained not only in the place for which the assessment is made, but in any other place within the same county or precinct; and if sufficient distress cannot be found there, on oath before a justice of any other county or precinct, goods in such other county or precinct may be distrained. Stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. § 7. In case any person refuse to pay the present overseers, the succeeding overseers may levy arrears, and reimburse their predecessors. § 11. But persons succeeding tenants rated, or coming into houses empty at the time of the rate, shall only pay in proportion to the time they have occupied the premises; which proportion shall be settled by two justices. § 12.

By 54 Geo. 3. c. 170. § 12. the goods of persons neglecting for seven days to pay the poor's-rates, may be distrained not only within such district, but within any place in the same county; and if sufficient distress cannot be found in the same county, the goods of such person neglecting to pay the rates may be distrained in such other county where they shall be found. And see 59 Geo. 3. c. 12. § 19, 20.

Justices granting distress-warrants shall therein order the goods distrained to be sold within a certain time limited in the said warrant, not less than four, nor more than eight days, unless the penalty and charges of distress be sooner paid. Stat. 27 Geo. 2. c. 20. § 1. The officer making such distress may deduct his reasonable charges out of the money arising by the same, and also the penalty or sum distrained for; and shall, if required, show the warrant of distress, and suffer a copy thereof to be taken by the person whose goods are distrained. § 2.

Justices acting for adjoining counties, and personally resident in one of them, may grant distress-warrants; and the acts of any constable or other officer, in obedience thereto, shall be as valid as if they had been granted by justices acting for the proper county only; but such warrants must be directed and given, in the first instance, to the constable or other officer of the county to which the same particularly relate; and the constable may take persons apprehended before justices of the adjoining county. Stat. 28 Geo. 2. c. 19. See Justices.

Justices may act in all matters relating to the poor laws, notwithstanding they are rated to, or chargeable with taxes or rates within the parish or place affected by the acts of such justices. Stat. 16 Geo. 2. c. 18. § 1.

A poor's-rate, after it is demanded and the party summoned, may be distrained for before the time for which the rate is made is expired; but if the landlord of the premises tender the rate, the overseers are bound to receive it, although the tenant is not rated; and if they make an excessive distress, they are liable to a special action on the case. The granting of such warrant of distress is a judicial, not a ministerial act; and the magistrates ought first to summon the party, and hear what he has to say in his defence. 7 T. R. 270.

Parishes also may be rated in aid; for, by the said stat. 13 Eliz. c. 2. if the justices perceive that the inhabitants of any parish are not able to levy, among themselves, sufficient sums of money for the purposes of the act, the said two justices may rate any other (inhabitants) of other parishes, or out of any parish within the hundred where the said parish is, to pay such sum or sums of money to the churchwardens and overseers of the poor parish as the said justices shall think fit; and if such parish so rated is not able to pay the sum assessed, then the sessions may rate any other (inhabitants) of other parishes, in or out of any parish within the county, for the purposes aforesaid. § 3.

The two justices or the sessions, as the case may happen to be, are, under this clause of the act, to order the quantity of money which they think ought to be raised in aid of the poor of the parish; but the overseer must make the rate on those who are to pay it. They may make the order either on particular persons, or on the whole parish, for the relief of a year; but the order must state that it was made by the justices, if the parish charged be within the hundred; and by the sessions, if the parish be within the county; but both these jurisdictions are original, and independent of each other, and therefore it is not necessary that the justices should adjudge the parish within the hundred incapable, before the sessions can rate a parish out of the hundred in aid. An extra-parochial place may be taxed in aid of a poor parish, and one vill may be ordered to contribute to the relief of another vill in the same parish, or any division of a county that is equivalent to the name of a hundred. It is also said, that the next able parish to the poor parish should be first rated, but one parish in a city cannot be made contributory to another parish in the same city, if not locally situated within a hundred or a county.

An order for taxing one parish in aid of another, under the said act 13 Eliz. was held good, although the two parishes were, by act of parliament, incorporated with others for the maintenance of the poor; there being a special proviso that nothing should extend to repeal the powers of 43 Eliz. as to taxing parishes in aid of others. 2 East, 417.

III. 1. The overseers are to set to work all such children whose parents shall not be thought able to maintain them; and all such persons, married or unmarried, who have no means to maintain themselves, and use no ordinary and daily trade to act their living by; to relieve (as has been already noticed) the lame, impotent, old, blind, and such other among them, being poor and not able to work; and to put out poor children apprentices. 43 Eliz. c. 2. § 1. The overseers shall meet once a month in the church on Sunday afternoon, after divine service, to take some good course in the premises, on pain of 20s. § 2. (This clause does not extend to overseers of extra-parochial places. 8 Mod. 40.) The justices, or any one of them, may send to the house of correction, or common gaol, such poor persons as shall not employ themselves according to the direction of the overseers. § 4. The majority of the churchwardens and overseers, by leave of the lord of the manor, whereof any waste or common within the parish shall be parcel, and by order of sessions, may build on such waste or common, at the charge of the parish, convenient houses for the impotent poor. § 5.

The overseers, with the consent of two justices, may set up any trade or manufactory for the employment and relief of the poor. 3 Car. 1. c. 4. § 22.

The sessions may set poor prisoners on work, and expend the profit arising from their labour, towards their relief; but no parish shall be rated above 6d. a week on this account. 19 Car. 2. c. 4. Other provisions are also made by the same statute, for the relief and removal of sick prisoners.

There shall be kept in every parish, at the charge of the parish, a book or books wherein the name of all such persons who do or may receive collection, shall be registered, with the day and year when they were first admitted to have relief, and the occasion which brought them under that necessity. Yearly, in Easter week, or as often as it shall be thought convenient, the parishioners of every parish shall meet in vestry, before whom the said book shall be produced; and all persons receiving collections shall be called over, and the reasons of their taking relief examined, and a new list made and entered as shall be thought fit, to receive collection: and no person shall be allowed to have or receive parish collection, but by authority under the hand of a justice residing in the parish, or if none be there dwelling, in the parts near or next adjoining, or by order of quarter sessions, except in cases of pestilential diseases, and then only such families as are infected. 3 & 4 Wm. & M. c. 11. § 11. So much of this act as required the poor to wear badges was repealed by 50 Geo. 3. c. 52.

Every person who shall be upon the collection-books, and receive relief, and the wife and children of such person cohabiting in the same house, shall wear a badge, as described in the act, on pain of losing the usual allowance; and if any parish-officer shall relieve any person, not having such badge, he shall forfeit 20s. 8 & 9 Wm. 3. c. 30. § 2.; repealed by 50 Geo. 3. c. 52.

No justice shall order relief to any poor person, until oath be made before him of some matter which he shall judge a reasonable cause or ground for having such relief, and that the same person had applied to the parish for relief, and was refused: and until such justice has summoned two of the overseers to show cause why such relief should not be given. 9 Geo. 1. c. 7. § 1. The person, whom the justice shall order to be relieved, shall be entered in the books, as a person entitled to receive collections, as long as the cause of such relief continues, and no longer. § 2.

For the greater ease of parish in the relief of the poor, the churchwardens and overseers, or the major part of them, with the consent of the major part of the parishioners, may purchase houses, or contract with persons for the maintenance of the poor; and such persons shall have the benefit of their work and labour; and when any parish shall be too small to purchase or hire such workhouse, two or more such parishes, with the consent of the majority of their respective parishioners, may unite in purchasing or hiring such workhouse: and the churchwardens and overseers of a parish, where a workhouse is situated, may contract with the churchwardens and overseers of any other parish, for the maintenance of any of the poor of such other parish. But no poor person so removed from one parish to the other, shall gain a settlement thereby. 9 Geo. 1. c. 7. § 4. By 45 Geo. 3. c. 54. no contract for maintaining the poor shall be valid, unless the contractor resides in the parish where the poor are to be maintained, and security is given for the due performance of the contract.

The 7th section of 9 Geo. 1. c. 4. was repealed, with respect to any parish, township, or place, which should adopt the provisions contained in 22 Geo. 3. c. 83. (explained by 33 Geo. 3. c. 35.) for the establishment of houses of industry, and incorporated societies, for the maintenance of the poor. That act laid down many excellent regulations for the furthering the wholesome purpose of protecting and relieving the poor; by appointing guardians of the poor, and governors and visitors of the poor-houses. See also the additional powers given to the acting guardians of the poor in the several places where the acts were put in execution, by 36 Geo. 3. c. 10; 39 & 40 Geo. 3. c. 40; 41 Geo. 3. c. 9; 41 Geo. 3. c. 12; and 52 Geo. 3. c. 73. And see 42 Geo. 3. c. 74; 43 Geo. 3. c. 110. for payment of debts incurred, under 22 Geo. 3. c. 83. for the building and enlarging of poor-houses, &c.

By 49 Geo. 3. c. 124. § 5. two justices in petty sessions, may direct the regulation of 22 Geo. 3. c. 83. to be executed in any parishes within their divisions, as fully as in those incorporated by that act.

By 50 Geo. 3. c. 50. two justices in special sessions may direct the regulations in the schedule of 22 Geo. 3. (with such additions as they may make,) to be observed in work-houses, poor-houses, or any houses set apart for that purpose, (although there should be no superintending master or mistress,) in any place within their divisions. Such justices may add to, or alter regulations previously made, provided they are not contradictory to the regulations established by 22 Geo. 3. and provided they shall not be repealed at the quarter sessions. § 1. Contractors for maintaining the poor, subjected to the jurisdiction of justices or overseers of the poor. § 3. Such justices may appoint the keeper of the workhouse to be the governor. § 3. Paupers embezzling, wasting, or damaging goods, clothing, &c. entrusted to their care, shall be punished by commitment to hard labour in the house of correction. § 4.

By 55 Geo. 3. c. 137. all goods, provisions, clothes, tools, and materials, provided for the use of the poor, are vested in the overseers for the time being, and their successors, who are enabled to bring actions, and prefer indictments for the same. § 1. Persons knowingly taking the same in pawn, or buying, or receiving the same in any way, or defacing marks thereon, punishable by fine before one justice. § 2.

Paupers refusing to work, or getting drunk, or otherwise misbehaving, may be committed to the gaol or house of correction, and kept at hard labour, not exceeding twenty-one days. § 5. Persons having the management of the poor, not to be concerned in contracts, on penalty of 100*l.* § 6.

By 54 Geo. 3. c. 170. § 7. no master, governor, or person superintending houses for the reception of poor persons, or churchwardens, overseers, or any other person having the management of the poor, shall punish corporally any adult person under his care, for any misbehaviour, nor confine any such person longer than twenty-four hours, or till they can be conveyed before a magistrate.

The 9 Geo. 1. c. 7. § 4. contained a clause, enacting, that poor persons who refused to be maintained and lodged in such workhouses, should be struck out of the book, and not entitled to any relief from the parish. But by the 36 Geo. 3. c. 23. after reciting the clause, and that it had been found to be inconvenient and oppressive, "inasmuch as it often prevents an industrious poor person from such occasional relief as is best suited to their peculiar case, and in certain cases holds out conditions of relief injurious to the domestic comfort and happiness of the poor;" it is enacted, that overseers may, with the approbation of the parishioners, in vestry assembled, or of any justice of the district, relieve any industrious poor person at their own house, under circumstances of temporary illness or distress, and, in certain other discretionary cases; although such poor person shall refuse to be lodged and maintained in the poor-house. § 1. And a justice of the district may, at his discretion, make an order for the relief of such poor persons at their own houses; which the overseers must obey. But the special cause of such relief must be assigned on the face of the justice's order; which order is only to remain in force for one month, but is then renewable from month to month; and an oath of the necessity of such relief is to be administered to the poor person applying, and the overseer is to be summoned to show cause, if any there be, against it. § 2. See now, post, VII.

This act does not extend to any places where houses of industry are provided, under the 22 Geo. 3. c. 83. already mentioned, or under any special act.

Justices of peace, and physicians, apothecaries, or clergymen authorized by them, may visit parish workhouses; and two justices may make order for relieving the sick poor therein. 30 Geo. 3. c. 49.

See now the provisions of the recent statute, post, VII., with respect to workhouses, by which the provisions of the above acts are materially controlled and varied.

The sessions, as well as the single justice, may make original orders for the relief of the poor; for in this respect they have a concurrent jurisdiction. The order must be for the relief of the person in whose favour it is made; and, therefore, no order can be made to pay a surgeon for attending a pauper, or to pay a bill for the nursing a pauper sick in gaol; nor unless the oath required by 9 Geo. 1. c. 7. be first made. The order of relief must also state, that the party is poor and impotent. So also, if materials are required to set the poor on work, one order cannot be made for that purpose, under 43 Eliz. c. 2. and 19 Car. 2. c. 4. for as they are for distinct purposes, there must be distinct and several orders. An order, however, to pay a person so much "weekly and every week," is good, and the money is due at the beginning of every week. It was also settled, previously to 36 Geo. 3. c. 28. that when an order of relief is made to a poor person, such person only, and not any other of his family, is obliged to go into the workhouse; and when a bastard child is born in a parish, and the parents neglect to provide necessaries for its sustenance, the parish officer must afford it relief, although there is no order of justices for the purpose.

By 56 Geo. 3. c. 129. for repealing certain provisions in local acts for the maintenance and management of the poor; after reciting that divers local acts had passed, containing enactments relative to the maintenance and regulation of the poor, varying the general law with respect to particular parishes, &c.; it is enacted, that all enactments and provisions in any act passed since the beginning of the reign of King George I. of the following nature, should be repealed; viz. whereby any poor persons, not actually applying for, and receiving relief, are compellable to go or remain in any house of industry or workhouse; or may be kept therein, at the discretion of the governors or overseers, &c. after they are capable of maintaining themselves, or until the charges of the parish in the maintenance of them or their families shall be reimbursed; or whereby poor children are rendered liable to be apprenticed to the governor, &c. of any workhouse, &c. or whereby any parish, &c. at a greater distance than ten miles from the workhouse, &c. may become contributors thereto; or whereby governors, &c. of any workhouse, &c. are empowered to hire out the poor of full age, or to contract with any person for the profit of the labour of such poor.—And by the same act, it is enacted that it shall not be lawful for any governor, director, guardian, or master of any house of industry or workhouse, on any pretence, to chain, or confine by chains or manacles, any poor person of sane mind.

By the 59 Geo. 3. c. 12. § 1—5. parishes were empowered to establish select vestries for the concerns of the poor, to consist of a certain number of householders (not more than twenty, nor less than five) elected by the parishioners at a vestry, and then appointed by the justices at sessions, together with the minister, churchwardens, and overseers; and such select vestry was authorized to examine into the state and condition of the poor, the proper objects for relief, the nature and amount of the relief to be given, and to inquire into and superintend the collection and administration of all money raised by poor-rates, and of all other funds and money raised, or applied by the parish for relief of the poor. The overseers were required to conform to the directions of the vestry; and not to give any relief, (except in cases of emergency, and under the order of a justice of peace,) other than ordered by the vestry. In parishes not having select vestries under this act all orders for relief of the poor were to be made by two justices, except in emergency, for fourteen days by one justice. By § 9. parishes were enabled to rent or purchase land for building or enlarging workhouses in the parish, or some adjoining parish; to provide land for the employment of the poor: the expensae not to exceed a rate of 1s. in the pound per annum. By § 24, 25. a summary remedy was provided, on application to two justices, for obtaining possession of any houses or lands belonging to parishes, upon one month's notice. § 27. facilitated the mode of obtaining relief, in cases of parishes incorporated, under 22 Geo. 3. c. 83. By § 29, &c. overseers were empowered to give relief by way of loan; and pensions for services in the army, navy, &c. and the wages of seamen, are made available, as a security or indemnity to the parishes affording relief to the parties entitled to such pensions or wages.

For the provisions of the new act for relieving the poor &c., see post, VII.

By the 1 & 2 Wm. 4. c. 60. for the better regulation of vestries, the vestries appointed under that act are not to consist of less than twelve, or more than one hundred and twenty householders, who are to exercise the authority of former vestries.

By the 1 & 2 Wm. 4. c. 59. churchwardens and overseers may, with the consent of the treasury, inclose crown lands not exceeding fifty acres, for the purpose of cultivating and improving the same for the benefit of their parish and the poor persons within the same.

By the 2 Wm. 4. c. 42. where allotments are made for the benefit of the poor, in any parish, under inclosure acts, such allotments may be let in portions to industrious cottagers.

2. The father and grandfather, and the mother and grandmother, and the children, of every poor, old, blind, lame, and impotent person, or other person, not able to work, being of sufficient ability, shall, at their own charges, relieve and maintain every such poor person, at the rate the justices at sessions shall assess, on pain of 20s. a month. 43 Eliz. c. 2. § 7. The penalties levied, for disobeying such order of maintenance, shall go to the relief of the poor. § 11.

The justices of the county or place in which the rich relation, and not where the poor relation, dwells, have alone authority to make this order, and to assess the rate of maintenance. The order must be made at a quarter, and not at a general session; in which it must be alleged, that the person to be relieved is poor, unable to work, and liable to become chargeable to the parish; and the person to relieve is of sufficient ability, and within the jurisdiction of the session. The justices have, in this case, an original jurisdiction; but they make it as well upon the complaint of the overseers, as upon the complaint of the poor relation; but they must order a sum of money to be paid; for they cannot order generally the rich person to relieve his poor relation.

By the 59 Geo. 3. c. 12. § 26. the order for relief on the rich relation may be made by two justices in petty sessions.

This statute extends only to natural relations, and not to relations in law; and it seems that, in default of one relation, another may be compelled to relieve the pauper; as in the case of grandfather, father, and child; the father being incapable of maintaining the child, the grandfather may be compelled, if of sufficient ability; and, therefore, a man is not obliged to maintain his son's wife, nor his wife's mother, nor his wife's child by a former husband. And it seems to be now settled, that it makes no difference whether the wife be alive or dead at the time her poor relations require relief, contrary to some former determinations on this subject. It is said also that a wife cannot be ordered to maintain her grandchild, nor the husband of a grandmother to maintain her grandchild; but if an order of maintenance be made on a grandmother, and she afterwards marries, the husband shall be liable (during her life) to the maintenance. It is also clear that the reputed grandfather of a poor orphan cannot be ordered to maintain it, for no order can, in this respect, be made for the maintenance of a bastard. See Bastard. But where this species of order is well and properly made, it may be nullified for disobeying it; and the money ordered to be paid becomes due at the beginning of each week.

By 11 & 12 Wm. 3. c. 4. the Protestant children of Popish parents might obtain relief by application to the Court of Chancery; and by 1 Ann. c. 30. the same was enacted with respect to the Protestant children of Jews.

The churchwardens and overseers, where any wife, child, or children, shall be left chargeable to the parish, on application to, and by warrant of, or order from, two justices, shall seize so much of the goods and chattels, and receive so much of the rents and profits of the lands and tenements of the husband, father, or mother, as the two justices shall direct, for and towards the discharge of the parish and relief of the family; and, on the order being confirmed at sessions, the goods may be disposed of, and the rents received, as the court shall direct. 5 Geo. 1. c. 8.

All persons who threaten to run away and leave their wives or children to the parish, are declared idle and disorderly persons, by 17 Geo. 2. c. 5. § 1. And all persons who run away and leave their wives or children so chargeable are declared rogues and vagabonds. § 2.

See the provisions of the new statute with respect to the liability of relations, post, VII.

IV. THE state of the poor in ancient times was slightly mentioned at the beginning of this long article. Previous to the recent statute there were ten modes whereby persons might gain a settlement; which entitled them to claim and receive relief from the parish in which they are settled, whenever such relief is necessary; and if it is happened while the pauper resided in a parish where he or she is not settled, they are to be removed to their place of settlement, under the regulations noticed in this and the two subsequent divisions.

Many alterations in the general law of settlements having been made by several local acts, it was by 54 Geo. 3. c. 170. enacted, that all enactments contained in any act of parliament since the commencement of the reign of George I. whereby any alteration is made in respect of gaining or not gaining a settlement within any particular district, parish, &c. shall be repealed; and that every person shall be deemed to have acquired and acquire a settlement in every such district or parish by any means they would or might have done or do, in case such acts had not been made. All such parishes, &c. therefore became subject to the general laws of settlement.

1. Before the late act the place of birth was the place of settlement of all illegitimate children; for a bastard, not having any legal parents, could not be referred to their settlements, as a legitimate child might be; but this general rule was subject to the following exceptions:—1st. Where the mother was conveyed collusively and by fraud into the parish where the bastard was born: 2. Where a bastard was born in a house of industry, hospital, county gaol, or house of correction. See 13 Geo. 3. c. 82; 20 Geo. 3. c. 36; and see 13 Geo. 2. c. 29. as to the Foundling Hospital: 3. Where born while the mother was under an illegal order of removal: 4. Where born pending an appeal against an order of removal, which was afterwards reversed: 5. Where born, in transitu, while the mother was passing under an order of removal, or remaining under the suspension of such order. See post, VI. But a bastard born on the road while the mother was endeavouring to reach her own parish, without fraud, was settled where born. 6. Where born after an order of removal was made out, but before actual removal: 7. Where the mother returned to the place from which she was removed: 8. Where born in the streets while the mother was wandering in a state of vagrancy. 17 Geo. 2. c. 5. § 25. In all other cases the birth decided the settlement.

This rule also, that a bastard was settled where born, extended to the illegitimate offspring of persons certificated; see post, V.; although the certificate was in force at the time of the birth, and undertook to provide for the mother and her child, but not if it expressly undertook to provide for the child she is then pregnant with; for then the child, though born a bastard, should be settled in the certifying parish: and where a child was born a bastard, and its parents afterwards intermarried, and the father procured a certificate for himself, his wife, and his child, such bastard should have his father's settlement. Under 8 & 9 Wm. 3. c. 30. (see post, V.) the legitimate children of certificated persons shall not gain a settlement by birth in the certificated parish.

The parish where born is also prima facie the settlement of all legitimate children; but this, though the primary place of settlement, is only so until the settlement to which such child is entitled by parentage can be discovered. So also the place where a legitimate child is first found is the place of its legal settlement, until the place of its birth or its derivative settlement can be known.

By § 2. 3. of 54 Geo. 3. c. 170. children shall not acquire any settlement in any district, &c. by being born of any mother actually confined as a prisoner within a prison, or in any house licensed for the reception of pregnant women, or other place appropriated for the charitable reception of such women. And children born of poor persons in any house of industry, &c. locally situate in any district contributing to the expenses of maintaining the poor in such house, or in any other district not contributing to such expenses, shall be deemed born in the district by whom the mother of such person was sent to, and on whose account she was received and maintained in, such house.

Settlement by birth is now altered as regards illegitimate children; see post, VII.; but if the mother have no settlement, then it should seem that the place of birth shall be the place of settlement, unless she be confined at the time within the walls of a prison, &c. within the meaning of the above statute of 54 Geo. 3. c. 170.

2. All legitimate children are settled in the parish in which their father is last settled, wherever else he may have resided, or they may have been born; or if the father have no settlement, or if that cannot be traced, then in the place in which their mother is settled, until they are emancipated, or gain a new and distinct settlement for themselves. Foreigners, who have gained no settlement in England, cannot of course communicate this species of settlement to their children; and if the children are not born here they cannot resort to that primary settlement which is gained by birth; but they (and their parents, if necessary) must be maintained where found. The father's settlement is communicated to his legitimate child, though born after his death, or though it is an ideot; and this right, which children have to the father's settlement, is not taken away after his death, by their mother gaining a new settlement in her own right by marriage; nor can she, during the life of her husband, gain a different settlement for her children than that which they inherit from their father; but if a child above the age of nineteen, who possesses a derivative settlement from its father, go, after his death, with its mother into a different parish, and live there with her upon her own estate, they, both of them, gain a new settlement by their residence. See post, 10.

But children, after the age of seven years, (or perhaps before,) may become emancipated, and gain a settlement for themselves. Thus, where a child, on the removal of his father into another parish, was left behind, and continued distinct from his father's family, maintaining himself by his own industry, he was held to be emancipated. So also where a son, nineteen years of age, left his father's family, and went into another parish, where he married and had children. So also where a son, after he was one-and-twenty years of age, married and lived with his wife and family separately and distinct from his father's family, though in the same parish, he was held to be emancipated; but a child cannot be emancipated from its parents, either by marriage or living apart in a distinct habitation, unless such child has gained a settlement in its own right. A son, therefore, who at fifteen years of age, bound himself apprentice, served out part of his time, and worked about the country in the way of his business, but went to his father's house whenever it was convenient, was held not to be emancipated. So also where a son resided nine or ten years, by his father's direction, at the house of a friend, by whom he was supported; this was held not an emancipation. So also where a boy was hired out for seven years successively, but his father received the wages, and maintained him. So where a child was separated from its family by being maintained several years in a workhouse; or where a child leaves its father's family when only five years old, and lives with different relations till ten; or where a son, sixteen years of age, was bound apprentice for five years, and afterwards returned to his father's family, the indentures being void for want of a stamp; or where the son of a certificated person, at nineteen years of age, leaves his father's family, and serves a year under a hiring in an extra-parochial place, and then returns unmarried and under age to his father's family: for in all these cases the child, not being of age, nor having married, nor gained a settlement in his own right, nor contracted any relationship inconsistent with the idea of being part of his father's family, cannot be considered as emancipated, so as to lose the benefit of any settlement which his father may gain. It has however been held, that if a son enlist himself as a soldier, he thereby emancipates himself from his father's family, and cannot therefore change his original derivative settlement, by parentage, for a new settlement gained by his father.

So a son of age, and married, continuing to live with his father, does not follow such new settlement gained by the father, though he accompanies him as part of his household. 1 East, 526. But see 8 T. R. 479.

This head of settlement by parentage is not affected by the new act.

3. Settlement by marriage is acquired by construction of law, independently of any statute; and therefore, the moment a legal settlement takes place, the settlement of the husband is ipso facto transferred to the wife. It must however be a legal marriage, conformable to the directions of the Marriage Act, in force at the time; and therefore, where a woman under age was married without the consent of parents, it was held, (under the 26 Geo. 2 c. 33,) that the children born during the connection were illegitimate, and, as such, could not gain a derivative settlement from their parents. So also where a marriage was celebrated in a chapel, in which banns had not been usually published according to the direction of the then Marriage Act, it was held, previous to the 21 Geo. 3 c. 53. (see tit. Marriage), that the wife gained no settlement by virtue of this union; and it is necessary that the marriage should be with all the legal forms, though both the parties are illegitimate (see tit. Marriage); but a marriage in Scotland is a legal marriage for the purposes of gaining a settlement. So also is a marriage, though procured by a third person by fraud; and a cohabitation, as man and wife, for thirty years, is such a presumptive proof of marriage as will entitle the children of the parties to the settlement of their parents. Indeed, the law, favouring settlements as much as possible, has, in many instances, precluded the fact of marriage from being controverted: thus, after an order of removal, stating the parties to be husband and wife, the fact of marriage can only be controverted upon appeal to the sessions. So also if a man and woman be certificated as husband and wife, the legality of their marriage cannot be controverted by the certifying parish; and it is not necessary for this purpose to prove a marriage in fact; evidence of cohabitation, reputation, and other circumstantial proof, is sufficient.

A person whose baptismal name was A. L. was married by banns by the name of G. S. having been known by that name only in the parish where he resided, for about three years, and was married; held, that the marriage was valid, and therefore the wife and children entitled to the husband's settlement. 3 M. & S. 270.

So a marriage by licence, not in the man's real name, but in the name which he had assumed because he had deserted, he being known by that name only where he lodged, and was married, and where he had resided sixteen weeks, was held a valid marriage for the like purpose. 3 M. & S. 537.

But although the husband's settlement is, if known, communicated to the wife, and retained after the husband's death, till she gain a new one, notwithstanding she never lived with him at the place in which he is settled; yet her own settlement, in certain cases, is not extinguished, but only suspended, during the coverture; and if her husband have no settlement, her own remains even during the coverture; or if he have a settlement, but it cannot be discovered, her settlement returns. The removal of a wife, therefore, imports, that it is to her husband's settlement; for it is incumbent on the parish to which she is removed to prove a different settlement, even though she be not removed as a wife.

An order for the removal of a married woman (not stating her to be such) and her children to Y. adjudging that the lawful settlement of her and her children is in Y., was held good, without adjudging that Y. was her husband's settlement; and proof by the mother of the husband that he had gained a settlement by hiring and service, was held sufficient, without calling the husband, although it appeared he was in this country. 4 M. & S. 52.

Settlement by marriage is not altered by the recent statute.

4. To prevent improper persons from gaining a settlement by residence, it was enacted by 13 & 14 Car. 2 c. 12. § 1 "That it shall be lawful, upon complaint made by the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of any parish to any justice of the peace, within forty days after any poor person shall come to settle in any tenement, under the yearly value of .ol., for any two justices of the peace, of the division where any person likely to be chargeable to the parish shall come to inhabit, by their warrant to remove and convey such person to such parish where he or she were last legally settled, either as a native, householder, sojourner, apprentice, or servant, for the space of forty days at the least, unless he or she give sufficient security for the discharge of the said parish, to be allowed by the said justices."

By stat. 1 Jac. 2 c. 17. § 3. "the forty days' continuance intended by stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2 c. 12. to make a settlement, was to be accounted from the time of his or her delivery of notice, in writing, of the house of his or her abode, and the number of his or her family, to one of the churchwardens or overseers of the poor of the parish to which they shall so remove."

By stat. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11. "the forty days were to be accounted from the publication of the notice, in writing: when the churchwardens or overseers were required to cause to be read publicly, immediately after divine service in the church or chapel of the said parish or town, on the next Lord's day, when there should be divine service in the same, which notice was to be registered and kept in the book of the poor's accounts, and if they neglected to read or register such notice, they were to forfeit £10. No solicitor, scrivener, scribe, &c. were to gain any settlement in any parish, by delivery and publication of such notice, unless after the admission of such person from the service." § 4.

By the same statute it is provided, that if any person shall execute an annual office, or, being properly rated, shall pay the public taxes; or shall be lawfully hired as a servant, and serve for a year; or shall be bound an apprentice in any parish; they shall respectively gain settlements thereby, though no such notice in writing was delivered or published as the statutes above recited require. §§ 6, 7, 8.

It is apparent, from these statutes, that the legislature was anxious to prevent a settlement being gained by constructive acts; it was therefore settled, by various determinations of the courts, that nothing could be equivalent to a notice, except those acts for which the statutes provide, and by stat. 15 Geo. 3. c. 101. § 5. it is expressly provided, "that no person shall, in future, be enabled to gain any settlement in any parish, township, or place into which they shall come, by delivery and publication of any notice in writing."

The forty days' residence, which is required to gain this species of settlement, need not be in the tenement which the party occupies; and therefore, when a person took a wind-mill of above 10*l.* a year, but resided in a distant cottage under 10*l.* a year, within the same parish, he thereby gained a settlement; nor need the residence be for forty days successively; but if, during his occupation of the tenement, he resided at different times any where within the parish for more than forty days, it is sufficient; and if he occupy two tenements in different parishes, and resided alternately in each parish above forty days in the whole, his settlement shall be in that parish in which he lodged the last night of the first forty days; but the occupation must be legal, for if he has obtained possession of the tenement by fraud, a residence without a single exception, that no person can be removed from residing upon his own estate, whatever likelihood there may be of his, or any part of his family, becoming chargeable. See post, 10.

By §§ 4, 5, and 6 of stat. 54 Geo. 3. c. 170. it is provided, that no person shall be deemed to gain a settlement by any residence in any district, whilst he shall be confined as a prisoner within such district on any civil process, or for any contract. Nor shall any gate-keeper, or toll-keeper of any turnpike-road or navigation, or persons renting the tolls, and residing in any toll-house of any turnpike-road or navigation, thereby gain a settlement in any district, &c. Nor shall any person gain a settlement by residence in any house, &c. provided by any charitable institution, while supported as objects of such institution.

By the construction of stat. 11 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12. § 1. not read in the preceding division, it is enacted, that whoever shall rent a tenement of the yearly value of 10*l.* in the parish, in which he shall come to inhabit, for the space of forty days, shall thereby gain a settlement.

But by stat. 9 & 10 Wm. 3. c. 51. § 11. it is provided, that no certificate person (see post, V.) shall be adjudged to gain a settlement by residence, unless he shall really and bona fide take a lease of a tenement of the value of 10*l.*

In the construction of this part of the statute, 9 & 10 Wm. 3. c. 51, it has been held, that where a certificate-man agreed with the lessee of a mill that he would occupy the mill, and, in pursuance of the agreement, occupied it for two years, this was a sufficient taking to avoid the certificate, though there was no under-lease or assignment; for the rent being reserved for a year, it is an absolute demise for a year; and if not, it is a lease at will, which is sufficient. And where it was stated that a certificate-man took a lease for seven years, the court said they would intend that it was by deed, for otherwise it would be no lease at all. And renting a tenement of 10*l.* a year, with a residence of forty days, will avoid a certificate, although the certificate be granted after the taking, and before the expiration of the forty days.

As to the kind of tenement, it has been held that the renting of a water-mill—a coney-warren—a piece of pasture-ground—a house within the rules of the Fleet prison—a wind-mill—a dairy of cows, with privilege of pasture for them—a potatoe ground—a first and second floor unfurnished—a shop occupied separately from the house to which it belongs—a furnished room hired for a particular purpose, though the landlord is to find fire, and have the use of it at other times—a land-sile colliery—a cattle gate—the usuary of a pond, with the spearsedge flags and rushes in and about the same—the hay-grass and after meath of meadow land—a rabbit-warren, though the party has no interest in the soil (except that of entering on the soil to kill the rabbits—the fogs and after-grass of a meadow-land—the hiring of twenty cows at 3*l.* 10*s.* per annum each, with privilege to feed them in particular fields for a certain part of the year, during which time no other cattle were to depasture there—are all of them tenements within the meaning of the statutes, and will, if above the value of 10*l.* a year, gain the party, who resides on them for forty days, a settlement in the parish in which each respectively lies. But no gate-keeper, or person renting the tolls of turnpikes, and residing in any toll-house belonging to the trustees, shall thereby gain a settlement. Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 84. § 56. But such person may gain a settlement by renting a tenement above 10*l.* a year, in the parish where he resides, in such toll-house. See East, 333.

The tenement must be entire; but formerly it was not necessary to this purpose that the tenement should be taken all of the same landlord, or that it should lie entirely in the same parish. Therefore a house rented at 7*l.* a year of one landlord, and a piece of land of 1*l.* a year of another landlord, or a house of 1*l.* a year rented of one landlord and stables of this landlord of another, were tenements sufficiently entire to give a settlement. So also an entire tenement of house and lands of the value of 12*l.* a year, lying in different parishes, although in neither parish the value amounts to 10*l.* a year, would gain a settlement, and so, though the taking were at different times, and the tenement was afterwards divided in part, or in the whole, to, and occupied jointly with, another person, and in these cases the settlement was in that parish in which the tenant lodged the last forty days.

The tenement also must be of the value of 10*l.* a year, and the value not depending upon the rent, but on the real worth it might be of at any one time during the occupation of the tenant; for though no rent was reserved, yet, if it were worth 10*l.* a year, it would formerly have gained a settlement. The rent, however, was good pro â facta evidence of its value, and conclusive, if no other evidence of value appeared. It was accordingly adjudged, that a house of the yearly value of 1*l.* 10*s.* a year, taken at the rent of 16*l.* a year, under a covenant that the landlord should make new buildings, was not of sufficient value, if those new buildings were never made. So a sole tenancy in a house of 5*l.* a year, and a joint tenancy in and of 3*l.* 15*s.* a year, were adjudged not of sufficient value. So also a house of 10*l.* a year, occupied jointly by two persons, or a farm of 14*l.* a year rented by two persons jointly, although the rent be paid, the stock stinted, and the profits taken separately by each, was not of sufficient value to gain either of them a settlement; but a farm of 52*l.* a year, rented, occupied, and managed jointly by two tenants, was a tenement of sufficient value to each of them. A tenement of 10*l.* a year, taken without fraud, would formerly have gained a settlement, although the tenant lived only in one part of it, and underlet the remainder to different tenants.

As to the time of renting, the tenement need not have been, previous to the 59 Geo. 3. c. 51. taken for a whole year, and therefore a taking and occupying from the first of June to the Lady-Day following, was held sufficient to gain a settlement.

By stat. 59 Geo. 3. c. 50. reciting that many disputes had arisen respecting the settlement of the poor by the renting of tenements, it was enacted that no person should acquire a settlement in any parish, by dwelling for forty days in any tenement rented by such person, unless such tenement consisted of a house or building within such parish, being a separate and distinct dwelling-house or building, or of land within the parish, or of both, bond fide hired by such person at 10*l.* a year at least, for the term of one whole year; nor unless such house or building were held, and such land occupied, and the rent actually paid for the same, for one whole year at least by the person hiring the same; nor unless the whole of such land should be situate in the same parish (or township) as the house wherein the party hiring the same dwelt.

This statute was repealed by the 6 Geo. 4. c. 57. which provided that no person, after the 22d June, 1825, should acquire a settlement in any parish or township by reason of settling upon, renting, or paying parochial rates for any tenement, not being his own property, unless such tenement consisted of a separate and distinct dwelling-house or building, or of land, or of both, bond fide rented by such person, in such parish or township, for the sum of 10*l.* a year at the least, for the term of one whole year; nor unless such house, or building, or land, should be occupied under such yearly hiring, and the rent for the same, to the amount of 10*l.* actually paid, for the term of one whole year at the least; provided, that it should not be necessary to prove the actual value of such tenement.

By the 1 Wm. 4. c. 18. after the passing of the act, no person shall acquire a settlement by reason of the yearly hiring of a dwelling-house or building, or of land, or of both, unless such house, &c. shall be actually occupied by the person hiring the same, for one whole year at the least, and unless the rent for the same, to the amount of 10*l.* at the least, shall be paid by the person hiring the same.

Now, by the recent act, no settlement by renting a tenement can be gained, unless the occupier be assessed to, and pay the poor-rate, in respect of such tenement, for one year. See post, VII.

To complete this species of settlement, there must be a residence of forty days either on the tenement, or in the parish where it lies.

6. If any person shall come into any town or parish to inhabit, and shall for himself, and on his own account, be charged with, and pay his share towards the public taxes or levies of the said town or parish, he shall be adjudged and deemed to have a legal settlement in the same. Stat. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11. § 6. But no person shall gain such settlement by paying taxes for any tenement of less than 10*l.* yearly value. Stat. 35 Geo. 3. c. 101. § 4.

As to the kind of taxes, the land-tax and the poor's-tax are public taxes within the meaning of this statute; but a tax assessed for the repair of a county bridge—or towards the repairs of the highways—or for the scavenger (stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 7. § 6.)—or the duties on houses and windows (stat. 21 Geo. 2. c. 10. § 13.)—or the stoppage raised on the persons belonging to Sheerness yard for the relief of the poor—are neither public taxes or levies within the meaning of the legislature; and therefore the paying them will not entitle the person to a settlement under this statute.

Payment by one who was assessed to a church-rate upon householders only, and not upon the parishioners at large, gained him a settlement; for it is not less a public tax because laid too narrowly, and it is charged and paid within the parish, which is all that is required by 3 & 4 W. & M. 9 East, 203.

The party must be both assessed to, and pay the tax, to gain a settlement; and payment of an assessment, which, as to other purposes, is illegal and void, will gain a settlement, so also, if it be made upon the house, and not upon the person, or on the occupier of such a house, or the farmer of such lands; and if the assessment continue in the rate-book in the name of a former tenant deceased, payment by the occupier is sufficient; for it is not necessary that the tenant should be rated by name; if he is virtually rated and has paid, it is sufficient. If the tenant be assessed, and he pay, he will thereby gain a settlement, although it is repaid to him by his landlord, or allowed in his rent; but if the landlord be assessed, payment by the tenant is not sufficient, although the tax is demanded of him by the officer who made the rate. So also where a father occupied a house, and was rated to the poor, but gave up the occupation to his son, with whom he continued to live merely as an inmate, a payment by the son, under this rating, will not gain him a settlement; but if the father had continued in the occupation, and the son, being the visible manager of his concerns, had been rated instead of his father, and had paid, he would have gained a settlement.

A custom-house officer who was rated for his salary towards the land-tax, and in fact paid the rate himself, though the money was either given to him beforehand or allowed him afterwards, thereby gained a settlement. 8 East, 483.

The rate-books are generally divided into different columns, and distinguished—"Landlords rated,"—"Names of occupiers;"—and therefore, if different persons be named in each, payment by the one will not gain a settlement, because in the one case he is not rated, and in the other has not paid, as where the landlord is assessed, and tenant pays; but in general where there is no name mentioned, or if both the names of landlord and tenant are inserted, but it does not appear which of them is rated—or if the tenant's name has been once introduced upon the rate-book, though taken off in consequence of his poverty, and at his own request, and no other name inserted—it shall be considered, in all these cases, as an assessment upon the tenant; for the land-tax is the tenant's tax, as between him and the public, and shall be so taken, unless it expressly appear that the landlord is rated, but whether landlord or tenant be rated, is a question of fact for the justices at session to decide.

A landlord cannot pay the tax for the tenant; and therefore where a farm was rated by a particular name, and neither the name of the landlord or tenant was on the rate, and the landlord paid the tax and received it again from the tenant, it was held, that this did not give the tenant a settlement; but if a tenant be rated and abscond, and his landlord desire the collectors to levy it by distress, lest he should lose the money, and on their going to the premises, a friend of the tenant pays it to him, this is equal to payment by the tenant himself, and he thereby gains a settlement. So also if the collectors of the land-tax demand payment of the tenant, and on his refusing to pay, they show him a paper-writing and read it, and tell him the sum he is to pay, and on his refusal levy the money by distress, and he afterwards pays such sum as an assessment on him, it shall be intended that he was in fact assessed, unless the contrary clearly appear.

By the 6 Geo. 4. c. 57. § 2. the tenement, in respect of which parochial rates were paid, was to possess the requisites therein mentioned, and which have been already stated; and further restrictions were imposed, as to the occupation and payment of the rent, by the 1 Wm. 4. c. 18. By the provision of the new act, which has also been already noticed, requiring the occupier of a tenement to be assessed to, and pay the poor-rate, this head of settlement by payment of taxes seems now merged, so far as relates to tenants, in the settlement by renting a tenement; for the payment of the land-tax, and any other rate other than the poor-rate, by the occupier, will hereafter be insufficient to gain a settlement.

7. If any person, who shall come to inhabit in any town or parish, shall for himself, and on his own account, execute any public annual office, or charge, in the said town or parish, during one whole year, he shall have a legal settlement in the same. Stat. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11. § 6.

If a certificate person shall serve an annual office in such parish, being legally placed in such office, he shall thereby gain a settlement. Stat. 9 & 10 Wm. 3. c. 11.

The kind of office.—The office need not to be what is generally called a parish office, for if it be an annual office, and served in the parish, it is sufficient, and therefore, it has been held, that serving the office of warden of a borough; or the office of parish clerk, though chosen by the parson, and not by the parishioners, and although he has no licence from the ordinary, for the office is annual; or the office of collector of the land-tax; or the office of collector of the duties on births and burials; or the office of tithingman; or the office of constable of a city, although the election is not in the parishioners; or the office of petty constable, if sworn in at the leet, though served by deputy; or the office of bailiff or aleconner; or the office of sexton; or the office of hog-ringer, being annual offices, will gain a settlement:—but the office of deputy constable; or the office of school-master to a charity school, established by private donation; or the office of deputy tithingman; or the office of curate; are not annual offices, and therefore the serving them will not gain a settlement.

The party also must be regularly and legally appointed to the office, or the serving it will not be sufficient; and therefore, although an inhabitant of a parish has a tally left at his house, signifying that he is chosen borsholder or tithingman, yet if he is not presented and admitted in the court leet, he is not legally placed in the office, and cannot gain a settlement by serving it. So also, where a man was chosen constable, and even sworn in, yet not being presented at the leet, it was held that he gained no settlement by serving the office: but when a person was appointed a tithingman by the steward of the leet, and served the office for a whole year, it was held, that he thereby gained a settlement, although he was not sworn in until after the year was expired.

The office must be completely served for a year; and therefore, if the party become chargeable before the year expires, this is an interruption to the service, and will prevent his gaining a settlement, although no other person is appointed in his stead, until the year expires: and if a person appointed at an annual court leet, serve till the next annual court leet, but when takes place less than twelve months, another person is appointed, such service shall not gain a settlement: and so strictly has this part of the statute been construed, that when a tithingman served two half years at different times, it was held, that they could not be joined so as to make a service for a year, although there was a custom in the parish not to serve the office longer than half a year at a time. For the very custom proved that in this parish the office of tithingman was not an annual office.

This head of settlement is now abolished; see post, VII. But settlements gained under it previous to the recent act are not affected.

8 The class of settlements, by hiring and service, is, perhaps, above all others, obscured by an innumerable variety of cases, the determinations in which, unless very minutely attended to, will frequently appear contradictory. The following summary is intended to contain a statement of the general rules on this head, as concise as possible; without entering into exceptions, caused, for the most part, rather by the particular circumstances of the cases, than by any uncertainty in the law.

If any unmarried person, not having child or children, shall be lawfully hired into any parish or town, for one year, such service shall be adjudged and deemed a good settlement therein. 3 & 4 Wm. & M. c. 11. § 7. But no person, so hired as aforesaid, shall be deemed to have a good settlement in any such parish or township, unless such person shall continue and abide in the same service during the space of one whole year. 8 & 9 Wm. 3. c. 30. § 4.

Under 9 & 10 Wm. 3. c. 11. certificated persons cannot gain a settlement by hiring and service: and by 12 Ann. st. 1. c. 18. § 2. it is expressly provided, that no hired servant to a certificated person shall gain a settlement by such hiring and service.

No child, nurse, or servant, received into, maintained, or employed with the Foundling Hospital, shall gain any settlement in the parish where such hospital is situated, by virtue of being so received, employed, or maintained. 13 Geo. 2. c. 29. § 7.

No person, who shall be admitted into the Magdalen Hospital as a penitent prostitute, or who shall be employed in the said hospital as a hired servant, shall, by reason of such admittance, or service, gain a settlement in the parish in which the said hospital is or shall be situate. 9 Geo. 3. c. 31. § 8.

Who shall gain such settlement.—The clause in the 3 & 4 Wm. & M. c. 11. preventing married persons, having children, from gaining settlements by hiring and service, was made merely for the protection of parishes; and therefore, a widower, although he has children, if such children are emancipated, and have gained settlements for themselves, may gain a settlement by hiring and service; for, in such case, there is no danger of the parish being burdened with the children, by settlement derivatively from their father; and, upon this principle, it has been settled, that a daughter, who is emancipated, may gain a new settlement, by hiring and service with her father. And, indeed, this clause has always been considered as favourably as possible to settlements; and therefore, if a wife, where the husband is abroad, is hired as a servant, and, before a year expires, her husband dies, a continued service for a year, from the time of his death, will gain a settlement, although, at the time of the hiring, she was a married person. So also, if a servant be unmarried at the time when he is hired, he gains a settlement by a year's service, although he marry before the service commences. So also, if a married man hire himself conditionally, and, before the condition performed, his wife dies without issue, he is an unmarried person within the statute, and shall gain a settlement, if the hiring takes place, and he serves a year from the time the condition was performed.

To complete this species of settlement, there must be such a contract, between the master and servant, as will amount to what the law considers as a hiring; for a hiring cannot be intended, where no contract appears: and therefore, where a gentleman, wishing to have his foot-boy instructed in the art of shaving, sent him to a barber to learn to shave, where he staid three years, and afterwards became chargeable to the parish: the court held, that there was not such a contract in this case as would amount to a hiring and service; for there was no implied agreement, much less a positive contract, between the boy and the barber: so also, where a captain brought a female negro slave from America to England, who lived with him here in the capacity of a servant, but there was no hiring; it was held that the service, under this circumstance, would not entitle her to a settlement because there was no contract appeared: so also, where a boy worked for several years with his uncle, who allowed him board, lodging, clothes, and pocket-money; yet, because there was no contract between them for a hiring, it was held, that the boy did not gain any settlement under this service: so also, where the waiter of an inn being ill, procured another waiter of his acquaintance to assist him, who continued, with the knowledge of the master of the inn, boarding and lodging in the inn for the course of nineteen months, when the waiter went away, and the assistant continued to serve for more than twelve months afterwards, as he had done before, without making any agreement with the master; it was held, that he did not gain any settlement by this service; because there was no contract for such service with the master.

And when a contract of hiring does appear, or can from the circumstances be inferred; yet it must also appear that the hiring was for a year. If, however, there be a hiring in general terms without any designation of time, it is always understood that such general hiring is for a year. Therefore, where a boy went into a service without any express contract being made, and his master told him, that if he staid a year, and behaved himself well, he would give him, the next year, a livery and full wages; the court held, that although there was no express hiring, yet as it was clearly a general hiring, it amounted, by construction of law, to a hiring for a year; for a general hiring shall always be construed into a hiring for a year: of which it would be needless here to multiply examples.

But a hiring at weekly wages, for so long time as the master should want a servant, is not a hiring for a year; for the contract is at the will of the master, and is so far from being for a year, that the servant may be turned away at the end of the week. And the same principle seems to apply to all cases where, by the express contract, the hiring may be determined either by the master or the servant before the year expired: and to make a hiring such as will gain a settlement, there must be, in the original agreement, something by which it appears to be a hiring for a year; as that the party should have so much a week the year round, or so much a week both summer and winter.

A hiring at eight shillings a month, with liberty to let himself out in harvest time, and depart at a month's wages, or a month's warning, is not a hiring for a year: and the distinction in this species of hiring seems to be, that where the liberty either to work for another master, or not to work for the master hiring, forms part of the contract, that such hiring is not a hiring for a year, and, of course, a service under it will not gain a settlement; for, to gain a settlement, the servant must continue and abide in a state of servitude, all the time, during a whole year. But where the exception does not form any part of the original agreement or contract, then an exemption from service, during part of the year, particularly if it arise from usage, will not vitiate the hiring. And even where the hiring is accompanied with an agreement to be absent; yet if it be for the purpose of a duty, which the law would have compelled the master to permit the servant to perform, it will not vitiate the contract; as where a man was hired to serve a year, with an express exception to be absent for a month on the duty of a militia-man. In all cases, if the contract be legal at the time of the hiring, a new agreement, during the service, will not avoid a settlement under it; as where a man hired himself to a turner for a year for board, lodging, pocket-money, and clothes, but in the middle of the year it was agreed, that instead of these, he should work by the piece, and have what he could earn.

As to customary and retrospective Hirings.—A hiring from May-day to Lady-day, and from Lady-day to May-day; or from the 3d of October to the Michaelmas following; or from Michaelmas to Michaelmas, with liberty of absence during sheep-shearing or harvest month, will not gain a settlement; although in all these cases it is the custom of the country to consider such hiring as a hiring for a year; but a hiring from Whitsuntide to Whitsuntide, if it be the custom of the country to consider such hiring as a hiring for a year, will gain a settlement, although it fall short of 365 days: so also, a hiring at a statute fair, held the day after Michaelmas-day, from that time till the Michaelmas following; or from the second day of one year until the first day of the next year, are hirings for one year; for the days shall be taken inclusively; but where such a number of days intervene, as to prevent the principle of there being no fraction of a day, by analogy to the rule of law in other cases, from applying; or where such terms as will warrant a construction of intent between the parties, are wanting; in such case no custom of the country shall avail to control the law, and give a retrospect; therefore, where there was a hiring at a statute fair held three days after Martinmas to serve till the Martinmas following; the court held, it was not a hiring for a year, although it was so considered by the custom of the country. So also, a hiring three days after Michaelmas till the Michaelmas following, is not a hiring for a year, although, by its happening to be leap-year, the number of days amounted to 365. It seems, therefore, to be most clearly settled, that a retrospective hiring will in no case be considered as a hiring for a year; as where Michaelmas was on Thursday, and upon the Saturday following a man was hired from the said Michaelmas-day to Michaelmas following: but a conditional hiring may be a good hiring for a year; as where a woman agreed to live with a man as a servant for three months, at the rate of 8*l.* a year; and if he and she liked one another, that then she would continue his servant for the remainder of the year, and continued without any other agreement to serve the whole year; the opinion of the court uno ore was, that the woman, by this hiring and service, had gained a settlement: so, where a person, in the common case, is hired upon a month's liking, and to go away on a month's wages, or a month's warning, to be at any time paid or given on either side, and the servant continues to serve a year under this hiring, it is held, that he or she thereby gains a settlement.

No settlement can be gained by serving under a contract of hiring for four years, with liberty for the servant to leave for a week every year to see his friends, for that is to be taken distributively, i. e. reserving a week out of each year 10 East, 325.

The courts of justice lean so much in favour of settlements, that if, from the circumstances, a contract for a year appears, it is considered as good, although it was not made by one, but by several hirings: therefore, where a person was hired from three weeks after Michaelmas to the Michaelmas following, and on the expiration of this hiring, was hired again for a year, and there was a service for a year under both hirings; it was held, that the party gained a settlement, although the service, under the second hiring, was only for forty days: so also, where a servant was hired from Christmas to Michaelmas, and served accordingly, and at the said Michaelmas was hired again by the same master for a year, but served only till Midsummer following; it was held, that these several hirings might be joined so as to form a hiring for a year. The general principle in these causes is, that though the service must be immediately continued, yet the hiring, under which such service is performed, need not be by one and the same contract; for if there be a continuation of the same service of forty days, after a hiring for a year, such hiring will connect itself with any former hiring, by which the service was continued, so as to make a service for a year. The question, therefore, in this species of settlement, always is, whether the former service was discontinued? therefore, where a person was hired from Ash-Wednesday until Christmas, and, after serving that time, left his master, and went home to his father, where he stayed about a week; this was held a discontinuance, and that it could not be connected with a subsequent hiring for a year, and service under it for eleven months, so as to gain a settlement: but the mere absence of a day between two hirings, or increase of wages on the second hiring, or the former hiring's being from week to week, or absence on account of ill health, or an omission during service to make a new agreement at the expiration of the first hiring, will not make a discontinuance. But the servant must, at the time of the second hiring, be in a capacity to gain a settlement by hiring and service; and, therefore, if a servant be unmarried at the first hiring, and married at the second hiring, they cannot be so connected as to gain a settlement under him by any length of service.

Of service in different places, at different times, and to different masters.—It is not necessary that the whole year's service, under any hiring for a year, should be performed in the parish where the hiring is made; and therefore if, under a hiring for a year, the servant serves half a year in one parish, and then removes with his master, and serves the other half of the year in another parish, he gains a settlement where he serves the last forty days; even although the master went into the other parish merely on a visit, or for his health, as to a watering-place. It is not necessary that the service should be performed in the place where the servant lives, or where the master dwells; therefore where a house stood in two parishes, the part of the house in which the master lived, and in which the servant constantly worked, stood in one parish; but that part in which the servant lodged stood in another, and the settlement was held to be in that parish where the servant lodged; so also where a groom was hired for a year to a nobleman who resided at Wybridge, to look after his running horses, which stood in the parish of Barrowbrook, it was held, that a residence in this last parish for forty days gained a settlement, although the master had neither house, nor land, nor settlement in the parish.

The forty days' residence need not be forty successive days; for if a servant serves more than forty days in the whole, within any one year of his service, he gains a settlement; and where the last forty days are in a place where no settlement can be gained, the settlement shall be in the place where the last preceding forty days were served. In the case of alternate residence, the settlement shall be in that parish where the servant sleeps the last night of the last forty days. There must, however, be a residence of forty days in some one parish; and therefore, where a person who was hired to a waterman served a year by navigating a boat to and from London, and it did not appear that he had, during the year, slept for forty days in any one parish at different times, either in going to or returning from London, he having in general lived and slept in the boat; it was held, that he did not gain a settlement in either place.

The service may not only be performed in different places, but with different masters, provided there be no dissolution of the original hiring; and the servant be unmarried at the time such original hiring took place; for marriage, during the service, as has already been said, will not vacate the settlement, or entitle the master to turn the servant away. Service with the executor of the master for the remainder of a year, though in a different parish from that in which the hiring for a year was made, is good; for the death of the master does not dissolve the contract; and the servant, by such service, gains a settlement in the second parish.

Of absence from service.—The year's service must be performed; and therefore, if the servant voluntarily and without sufficient cause go away, or absent himself from the service, at any period previous to the expiration of the year, this absence operates as a dissolution of the contract; and this, though done by collusion between the master and servant for the purpose of avoiding a settlement; if a discharge is procured under the order of a justice, and no actual fraud be positively found: so also an absence in the servant, arising from his criminal conduct, or even though involuntary on his part, will, under certain circumstances, prevent a settlement: thus where a maid servant served till within three weeks of the end of the year, when her master, discovering her to be with child, turned her away, and paid her her year's wages, and half a crown over; it was held an insufficient service, and no settlement gained under it; for this was a good cause to discharge her: so where a man-servant is turned away by his master before the expiration of the year, on the fact of his being the reputed father of a bastard child, he thereby loses his settlement; for the being taken into custody, and detained for this offence, renders him incapable to perform his service, and gives the master a right to discharge him.

The contract, if once dissolved by any species of absence on the part of the servant, cannot be set up again or renewed between the parties by the return of the servant, and subsequent agreement; but an absence created by the default or fraudulent contrivance of the master shall not impede a settlement; as if he turn a servant away or remove him on his falling sick; or he goes away on being disabled by accident, though he be thereby prevented from returning to his service during the remainder of the year. So also an absence procured by the fraud of others will not prevent the party from a settlement; as where the parish officers give a servant money to leave the parish, in order to prevent his becoming chargeable when the year expires; or if the servant, before the year expires, declare to his master that he does not wish to be settled in that parish, and goes away with his master's consent, merely to avoid the gaining of a settlement. An express, or even an implied consent of the master to the absence of the servant, will prevent such absence from dissolving the contract; and the taking the servant again into his service during the year, is evidence of his implied consent to such absence. Thus where a man hired from Martinmas to Martinmas, for a year, about the middle of the year absented himself from his master's service, without his consent, for above three weeks together, but on the demand of his master returned and served out the remainder of the year; it was held, that the absence of the servant was purged by the master's receiving him again. So also where the servant served till within three weeks of the end of the year, when he asked his master's leave to go to the herring fishery, and his master consented he should go, if he would get a man to do the work in the mean time, to his master's liking, which he did, and then received part of his wages, and went away, and returned after the year expired, and received the residue; this was held an absence with the master's consent, and therefore a good service. So also on a hiring from Michaelmas to Michaelmas, if the servant tell his master, at the time of hiring, that he cannot come till the day after Michaelmas, and the master says he will shift till that time; this is a permission of absence till the time, and will gain a settlement, although the servant quit his service the day before the ensuing Michaelmas-day, if he so quit by the leave of his master; and where the dispensation of service at the end of the year is bona fide, the absence does not dissolve the contract, though a new service is entered on before the first year actually expires; and, indeed, absence with consent is always good, unless where, as has been before observed, it is an exception in the original contract of hiring.

A clerk in a mercantile house, hired by the year, but serving only during the usual hours of business, thereby gains a settlement, although those hours did not, by the custom of the trade, ever occupy the whole day, and he went where he pleased, without asking his master's leave, when those hours were over. 1 B. & A. 322.

A settlement by hiring and service can no longer be acquired; see post, VII.; but the law with respect to settlements gained previous to the late act remains unaltered.

9. If any person shall be bound an apprentice by indenture, and inhabit in any town or parish, such binding and inhabitation shall be adjudged a good settlement. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11. § 8.

Certificate persons, under 9 & 10 Wm. c. 11. cannot gain a settlement by apprenticeship. And by 12 Ann. c. 18. § 2. apprentices to any person, residing in any parish under a certificate, and who shall not have gained a legal settlement, shall not gain any settlement in such parish by reason of such apprenticeship or binding; but an apprentice to a certificate man may gain a settlement by serving him in another parish, or even in the certified parish, if his master purchase an estate there; or if he serves forty days before the master is certificated; or if the master is certificated to another parish, and the apprentice serves the last forty days in the parish first certified.

No person, bound apprentice by any deed, writing, or contract not indented, being first legally stamped, shall be liable to be removed from any parish, &c. where he shall have been so bound an apprentice, and has resided forty days, on account of such deed, writing, or contract, not being indented. 31 Geo. 2. c. 11.

An apprentice, by being bound and inhabiting in the parish where his master lives, or where his servitude is performed under the indenture, thereby gains a settlement, although it be to a master who has no right to take an apprentice; and although the apprentice, at the time he binds himself, is an infant; and though the binding is for a less term than seven years, if not avoided on this account by the parties themselves during the time. So also, although the apprentice-fee is not inserted in the indentures, pursuant to 8 Ann. c. 9. § 39; or though the indenture, or its counterpart, is not executed by the master or the apprentice; or although the master be an infant. But there must be a binding as an apprentice, either by indenture or by deed properly stamped; and if the indentures are absolutely void, he cannot gain a settlement as a servant by his servitude under them. So also where a contract or agreement was made to serve for so many years; it was held not to amount to a sufficient binding as an apprentice; for a hiring as a servant, and an agreement to bind as an apprentice, are distinct and independent contracts, and never can be converted one into another. Thus where a written agreement was made between the parents of a boy and his intended master, to bind him apprentice for seven years; but no indenture of apprenticeship was executed pursuant to the agreement; the court held, that although an apprenticeship was intended between the parties, yet he could not gain a settlement as a hired servant, by serving under this agreement as an apprentice, nor could he gain a settlement as an apprentice, because no indenture of apprenticeship was executed.

There must also be a residence of forty days under the indenture, to give a settlement to an apprentice; but the forty days may be at different times; and though, in the interval of these times, the apprentice gain a new settlement, yet they will connect so as to form a 40 days' residence under the indenture, and give him a settlement in the parish where he lodges the last night, although the master himself has no settlement in the parish. This species of settlement arises from the binding and inhabiting, and not, as in the case of a servant, from hiring and service; and therefore the apprentice gains his settlement in that place where he inhabits, and not where his service is performed; therefore an apprentice who serves his master in one parish, and boards and lodges with his father in another, although such board and lodging is paid for by the master pursuant to a covenant in the indentures, does not gain a settlement in the master's parish. So also where a boy was bound apprentice to a mariner, and served his master in the day-time for a quarter of a year at his house on shore, but lay every night on board his master's ship at her moorings in the Thames; it was held, that he gained no lodging in the master's parish on shore; although if it had appeared that he slept on board in his master's service, he might thereby have gained a settlement in the parish within which the ship lay; for although the service relates to one place, and the inhabitation is in another, yet that is sufficient; and, therefore, an apprentice to a captain of a ship, who served and lodged the last forty days on board the ship, while lying in her harbour, gained a settlement in the parish within which the harbour lay; the said harbour being considered by the captain and sailors as the proper home of the ship. So also where an apprentice married during his apprenticeship, and served his master by day in one parish, and slept with his wife and family in a different parish, he gained a settlement in the parish where he slept; for that was the parish of his habitation. So where a boy was bound an apprentice for three years, and after a service of more than forty days with his master, his master died, and he, with the consent of his mistress, and before administration taken out, went from his master's house to his father's, there being no work for him to do, and continued with his father till his time expired; yet it was held, that he gained a settlement in the master's parish. So where an apprentice, after a residence with his master of forty days, fell sick, and on account thereof went home into a different parish with his master's consent, and remained ill until his time expired, he gained a settlement in the master's parish.

An apprentice, while the indentures subsist, is not suus juris, and therefore cannot serve another person without his master's consent; but if the original master consent, such service is a service under the indenture, and he gains a settlement in the parish where he lives with such second master, although the hiring out by the first to the second master is by parol, or the agreement be made by the widow of the first master before administration taken out. As to what shall be considered as a consent on the part of a first master, it must always depend on the particular circumstances of each case.

An indenture of a parish apprentice, assented to by two justices separately, is void, and gives no settlement. 3 East, 180.

But if signed by one magistrate alone, who is afterwards present when the other signs, it is sufficient. 8 T. R. 451.

Serving under indentures of apprenticeship not stamped gives no settlement. 3 T. R. 358; 4 T. R. 218, 769.

A defective contract of apprenticeship cannot be converted into a contract of hiring and service, so as to give a settlement as a yearly servant by serving under it. 8 T. R. 379.

A contract of apprenticeship may be formed without using the term "apprentice." Id. ib.

An indenture binding an adult female as an apprentice, which was not executed by herself, but only by her father-in-law and the master, though with her consent, does not constitute her an apprentice, and consequently no settlement is gained thereby. 9 East, 295.

For further matter relating to parish apprentices, see tit. Apprentice, 1, 2. By 42 Geo. 3. c. 46. overseers are to keep a register of poor children apprenticed by them, under 20 Geo. 3. c. 36. See also 50 Geo. 3. c. 139; 3 & 4 Wm. 4. c. 43.

No settlement can now be gained by apprenticeship to the sea service, but a settlement acquired before the passing of the act, where the party has ceased to be an apprentice, does not seem to be affected. See post, VII.

10. By the common law, founded on Magna Charta, no person can be removed from his own landed estate, however inconsiderable its value may be, and this law still continues, provided such estate come to him by operation of law, out by 9 Geo. 1. c. 7. § 5 it is enacted, that "no person shall acquire any settlement, in any parish or place, for or by virtue of any purchase of any estate or interest in such parish or place, where the consideration for such purchase doth not amount to the sum of 30*l.* bona fide paid for any longer or further time than such person shall inhabit such estate."

An estate by operation of law is, that estate which the party gains without any act of his own. Thus, a husband may gain a settlement by residing on an estate vested in trustees for the separate use of his wife, or on an estate to be purchased by her previous to the marriage, though of the value of less than 30*l.* So the husband of an administratrix, who is entitled as a trustee to a lease for years, has the trust estate by operation of law; and, by a residence thereon for forty days, will gain a settlement: but it seems, that the forty days' residence ought to be subsequent to his obtaining letters of administration, for it hath been adjudged, that a son, or next of kin, who, after his father's death, lives on an estate for years during the remainder of the term, but does not take out administration until the term is expired, does not gain a settlement by his residence on such estate: for even a person solely entitled, but in whom the estate does not vest, for his own use, cannot, by residence thereon, acquire a settlement without obtaining letters of administration: but a residence of forty days upon a reputable estate will gain a settlement; and, therefore, if an estate be decreed to trustees to be sold to pay debts, and to divide the surplus, if any, between A., B., and C.; A. has such an estate, by operation of law, as will gain a settlement. So also, a person entitled as executor to the remainder of a term of ninety-nine years, of a cottage of 4s. a year, gains a settlement by residing on such estate forty days. So also, where a man built a cottage upon the waste lands of a nobleman, and lived on it undisturbed for more than twenty years, and it descended to his daughter; it was held, that the daughter, or, if married, her husband, gained a settlement by a residence of forty days upon this estate; for although her father had not originally any right to the land on which the cottage was built, yet the disseisin having been permitted so many years, and a descent cast, the right of entry on the land is taken away, and, having thereby gained the right of possession, it is sufficient to render her irremovable: and it makes no difference, though the possession for more than twenty years was not an adverse possession: and even although the ground and cottage was originally obtained by fraud. An estate in fee being to a married woman, and enjoyed by her husband as tenant by the curtesy, will, after his death, give his son a settlement, although under the value of 10*l.* a year. So, the widow of a man, who dies seised of a house, gains a settlement by residence therein for forty days in right of her dower; but this species of estate will not give a settlement to the widow, where the husband was certificated, nor can she communicate a settlement thereby to any other person, unless her dower be assigned. A conveyance from a father to his daughter, in consideration of natural love and affection, of the residue of a term determinable upon lives, is an estate by operation of law; and a residence thereon of forty days will give such daughter a settlement, although the original consideration paid for such estate, by the father, was only 20*s.* So also, a conveyance after marriage, by the wife's father to the husband only, if it appear to be grounded on natural affection, and intended for the use both of husband and wife, is an estate by operation of law, which will give a settlement though under the value of 30*l.*, and a fortiori, an estate of whatever value, conveyed from a father to his son, in consideration of natural affection, although it is also expressed to be in consideration of 10*l.* paid by the son to the father. So also, where a woman, on her marriage with the copyholder of a manor, where the widows are entitled to free-bench, gave a bond, that the son of her husband, by a former wife, should have possession of part of the copyhold estate after the death of her husband, on condition of his repairing the part of the house reserved for her, and after the death of her husband, delivered up the possession to the son, according to the bond; it was held, that the son gained a settlement by residing forty days on this estate. So also, the surrender of an old lease, which had been many years in the family, and the taking a new one, is an estate by operation of law. So also, a married daughter, who resides with her family on the estate of her mother, for forty days after her mother's death, gains a settlement, although the estate was devised to the mother only during her life, and then to be sold for the benefit of her children. But residence on leasehold premises, determined on the death of the mother, and from the profits of which the daughter is entitled to an annuity, will not gain her a settlement; neither can a remainder-man gain a settlement by residing on the estate during the life of the tennant for life; nor a mortgagor, who, after the mortgagee has recovered possession in ejectment, is permitted to reside thereon for a particular purpose; for he is not in possession as mortgagor; nor a man who, having conveyed over his estate in trust for the benefit of his creditors, afterwards gets fraudulently into possession; nor can a wife, in any case, gain a settlement in her own right by residing, either on her own estate, or the estate of her husband, during his life.

An estate by purchase is, in contemplation of law, that estate which a man acquires by his own act and agreement; and it has been held, that a copyhold estate surrendered by a father to his son, and to which the son is admitted, is an estate acquired by purchase, within the meaning of the statute 9 Geo. 1. c. 7. § 5. and therefore will not gain a settlement by a residence thereon of forty days, unless it be of the value of 30*l.* So also is a grant of a copyhold, with a fine, heriot, and rent.

A guardian in socage residing on the ward's estate for forty days gains a settlement in the parish, and cannot be removed from the possession of it at any time. 10 East, 491.

Grandfather, father, and son.—The grandfather gave the father a piece of land, on which he immediately built a house, and continued in possession thirty years, without paying any rent or acknowledgment, sometimes residing in the house with his family, and at other times letting it, and receiving the rent. Held that the son, who ceased to be a part of his father's family fifteen years after the building of the house, was entitled to the settlement which the father gained by residing in the house. 3 M. & S. 22.

As to what purchase shall be considered as amounting to the value of 30*l.* it has been held, that an acre of land purchased for 25*l.* on which the purchaser erects a tenement, and makes other improvements, so as to enable him to sell the whole for more than 30*l.* is an estate of sufficient value. So also, a lease of fifty years of a cottage worth 5*l.* a year, at sixpence a year rent, and which after twenty years sold for 30*l.* is an estate of sufficient value. So also, where a man purchased a house and curtilage for 30*l.* but paid only 9*l.* the remainder being paid for him by a friend, to whom he mortgaged the premises as a security, and who, after the expiration of four years, entered under his mortgage and turned out the purchaser; this was held an estate of sufficient value. So also, the mortgagee of a term for 15*l.* to whom 30*s.* were due, and 18*l.* 10*s.* more by bond and simple contract, who, on the death of the mortgagor, takes out administration as a principal creditor, thereby acquires an estate of sufficient value to gain a settlement. Parol evidence may be given of the value, though the consideration is expressed in the deed.

The residence must be in the parish, but need not be on the estate; nor need the forty days be all at one time, although the estate is held in common between the pauper, his mother, and his sisters.

By the recent act settlements gained by estate are only to be retained so long as the party inhabits within ten miles of the parish where such estate is situate. Should he cease to reside within that distance, but afterwards return to the parish and become chargeable, he may be removed. See post, VII.

V. Any person may go into any parish to work in time of harvest, or at any other time, so that he carry with him a certificate from the minister of the parish, and one of the churchwardens, and one of the overseers, that he hath a dwelling, and hath left his family, and is declared an inhabitant there; and such certificate-person shall not gain a settlement in the parish in which he goes to work. 13 & 14 C. 2. c. 12. §. 3.

If any person whatever shall come into any parish to inhabit, and shall bring and deliver to the churchwardens or overseers a certificate, under the hands and seals of the churchwardens and overseers of any other parish, or the major part of them, or under the hands and seals of the overseers only of any place where there are no churchwardens, to be attested respectively by two or more credible witnesses, thereby owning and acknowledging the person or persons, mentioned in the said certificate to be inhabitants legally settled in that parish; every such certificate, having been allowed of and subscribed by two or more justices of the peace within the parish or place from whence any such certificate shall come, shall oblige the said parish or place to receive and provide for the person mentioned in the said certificate, together with his or her family, as inhabitants of that parish; whenever he, she, or they shall happen to become chargeable to, or be forced to ask relief of, the parish, to which such certificate was given. And then, and not before, it shall be lawful for any such person, and his or her children, though born in that parish, (see ante, IV. 1.) not having otherwise acquired a legal settlement there, to be removed, conveyed, and settled in the parish or place, from whence such certificate was brought. 8 & 9 Wm. 3. c. 30.

No person whatever, who shall come into any parish by such certificate, shall gain any settlement therein, unless he shall take a lease of a tenement of the value of 10*l*.; (see ante, IV. 6.) or shall execute some annual office, being legally placed therein, which head of settlement is now abolished. See ante, IV. 7.—See also ante, IV. 8 & 9.

The witnesses, who attest the execution of such certificates, or one of them, shall make oath before the justices who allow the same, that he saw the parish officers sign and seal the certificate, and that the names of the witnesses, attesting the same, are of their own proper hand-writing; and the said justices shall also certify, that such oath was made before them; and then such certificate shall be taken to be fully proved; and shall be evidence without further proof. 3 Geo. 2. c. 29. § 8. The overseers, or other persons removing back any certificated persons, shall be reimbursed such reasonable charges as they may have been put to, in maintaining and removing such persons, by the parish officers of the parish or place to which they are removed; the said charges being first ascertained by a justice of the peace of the county or place to which such removal shall be made; to be levied by distress, &c. § 9.

The parish officers cannot be compelled to grant a certificate; and, if granted, it is not binding, unless signed by the majority of them; and parol evidence may be given, that those who signed were not officers of the parish; but if signed by the majority, a mistake in its direction is not material. And if a certificate be lost, and the parish officers refuse to grant another, yet the pauper cannot, on that account, be removed, though actually chargeable. The justices may attest a certificate as witnesses, as well as allow it as justices; and if it appear to have been legally allowed, it shall be intended to have been well attested; but unless the allowance, which is discretionary in the justices, be signed, the certificate is invalid: if, however, a certificate be above thirty years old, the allowance thereof, written in the margin and signed, is sufficient, although there is no certificate of one of the witnesses; and one of the witnesses may attest the signing of the other.

A certificate, after its delivery to the parish officers as the statute requires, virtually includes all the legitimate children of the person certified, who are born while the certificate continues in force; and if it promise to provide for the parties as man and wife, the certifying parish cannot afterwards controvert the fact of their marriage. See ante, IV. 3. So if it be given to a woman, stating that she is unmarried and with child, and promise to provide for the child she then goes with, they cannot object that such child is not settled in their parish because born a bastard in another. See ante, IV.; 1 & 7 T. R. 362.

Persons residing under a certificate cannot be removed until some one or more of them become actually chargeable; and therefore, that one of the family is likely to become chargeable is no cause of removing them; and it is only the individual person who receives relief that shall be removed; but relief afforded by a parishioner is not sufficient, although he is reimbursed by the parish officers.

A certificate is only conclusive upon the parish granting it, with respect to that parish to which it is granted, although it is prima facie evidence as to others; and it is only conclusive as between them as to the facts stated in it. But see 1 East, 438.

A certificate is discharged by the removal of the pauper to the parish that gave the certificate; or by the pauper's voluntary return to the certifying parish; or by quitting the parish to which he was certified, if it appear that he meant to abandon the certificate; or by an order of removal from a third parish to the certifying parish; or by a second certificate. The court, however, will not presume a certificate to be discharged; and, therefore, a clear ground of discharge must be shown.

VI. It has already been noticed, (see ante, IV. 4.) that by 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12. § 1. upon complaint by the churchwardens and overseers to one justice within forty days, of a person coming to reside on a tenement under 10*l*. a year, any two justices of the division might, on his being likely to become chargeable to the parish, remove such person to the place of his last legal settlement. And, by § 3. of the said act, if such person refused to go, or returned back, when sent, he might be committed to the House of Correction as a vagabond; and if the parish officers of his own parish refused to receive him, they might be indicted for their default.

This provision had long been considered as equally cruel and impolitic: see 1 Comm. c. 9. and the notes there: and was at length remedied by the interference of the legislature.

By 35 Geo. 3. c. 101. the first (and consequently the third) section of this stat. 13 & 14 C. 2. were repealed; and the reason assigned in the preamble of the 35 Geo. 3. was, that, "many industrious poor persons chargeable to the parish, &c. where they live, merely from want of work there, would, in any other place where sufficient employment is to be had, maintain themselves and families, without being burdensome to any parish; and that such poor persons are, for the most part, compelled to live in their own parish, and not permitted to inhabit elsewhere, under pretence that they are likely to become chargeable to the parish where they go for employment: although their labour might, in many instances, be very beneficial to such parish."—This preamble also stated, that the remedy intended to be applied by the granting of certificates, under 8 & 9 Wm. 3. c. 30 (see ante, V.) had been found very ineffectual:—The statute then enacted, "That no poor person should, in future, be removed, by virtue of any order of removal, from the parish or place where such poor person should be inhabiting, to their last settlement, until such person should have become actually chargeable to the parish or place in which they should inhabit, when they might be removed by two justices, in the same manner, and subject to the same appeal, and with the same powers, as might have been formerly done, with respect to persons likely to become chargeable."

Stat. 35 Geo. 3. c. 101. did not repeal 33 Geo. 3. c. 54 and therefore, where an unemancipated daughter was delivered of a bastard child in the township of I. during her father's residence there, under a certificate acknowledging him to be a member of a friendly society, established under 33 Geo. 3. c. 54. it was held, that such certificate extended, not only to him, but to all the members of his family also, that the daughter therefore was, at the time of her delivery, residing in the township under the authority of 33 Geo. 3. c. 54. and that by § 25 of that act the settlement of the child followed that of the mother. 2 B. & A. 149.

Persons convicted of larceny or other felony, rogues, vagabonds, idle and disorderly persons, and reputed thieves—as also unmarried women with child—should be considered as actually chargeable. Stat. 35 Geo. 3. c. 101. § 5, 6.

By the same statute, justices were empowered to suspend the removal of sick persons; the charges incurred by such suspension to be borne by the parish to which they are removable. § 2, 3. See ante, IV. 1, 2.

By stat. 19 Geo. 3. c. 124. § 1, 3. where any order of removal or vagrant pass should be suspended, any justice of the place, within which such removal or pass should be made, might direct the execution thereof, and payment of the charges, &c. Order of removal (or vagrant pass), suspended on account of sickness or other infirmity, might be suspended for the same period with respect to every other person named in it actually being of the household or family of such sick person. By § 4. of the same act, one magistrate might examine a pauper as to his settlement, and report the same to petty sessions, who should then adjudge the settlement of such pauper.

By 52 Geo. 3. c. 160. the settlement of paupers, being in gaol on meane process, who may have relief ordered them under that act, shall be ascertained by one justice, who shall make an order of removal to the proper parish, but which order shall be suspended whilst the pauper debtor remains in prison, and the parish where the pauper is settled shall pay the expenses.

By 54 Geo. 3. c. 170. § 10. churchwardens and overseers, or others having the management of the poor, may employ any person to remove paupers, ordered by magistrates to be removed.

By stat. 59 Geo. 3. c. 12. § 3. reciting that poor persons born in Scotland, Ireland, Jersey, Guernsey or Man, frequently become chargeable to parishes in England, and that no provision is made for the removal of such persons, unless they have committed some act of vagrancy, and been adjudged rogues and vagabonds, in which case they could not be removed without having suffered whipping or imprisonment, it is enacted, that two justices may cause any such poor person, not having committed any act of vagrancy, (and his wife and children not having gained a settlement,) to be removed by pass in manner directed by 17 Geo. 2. c. 5. (See Vagrants.) And if such pauper is adjudged a vagabond, he may be either whipped or imprisoned, or removed without suffering such punishment.

A single woman living in service with her master, is not removable, even since the act 35 Geo. 3. c. 101. against the consent of herself and her master, though adjudged by the order of removal to be with child, and therefore chargeable; that act not extending to make persons removable who were not proper objects of removal before, but only to make certain descriptions of persons excepted out of the act, liable to be removed, though not in fact chargeable, if otherwise proper objects of removal. 3 East, 563.

Officers refusing to receive a pauper, removed by warrant of two justices, shall forfeit 5*l.* to the use of the poor, to be levied by distress. Stat. 3 Wm. 3. c. 11. § 10.

Persons, who shall unlawfully return to the parish from whence they are legally removed, shall be deemed idle and disorderly persons, and may be committed to the House of Correction for one month. Stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 5. See Vagrants.

It seems that nearly all the determinations, as to orders for removal of persons likely to become chargeable, now apply, mutatis mutandis, as to the removal of those who are actually so.

One who is resident on an estate granted to him for lives, in consideration of two guineas fine and one shilling rent, cannot be removed therefrom, though actually chargeable. 5 East, 40.

The first step which the parish officers are to take, in order to procure the removal of a pauper chargeable to their parish, is to make a complaint to a justice of the peace; for the complaint is the foundation of the justice's jurisdiction. The order of removal, therefore, must state not only a complaint, but that it is upon complaint of the parish officers, and show in certain the persons, with their names, who are become chargeable; and the order cannot remove more persons than the officers have complained of.

The next proceeding is the Examination; for this order must state that the removal was made on due examination; it need not, however, state that the examination was on oath, but ought to show that the pauper was summoned and heard; but even this is not, in all cases, absolutely necessary. The examination must be taken before two justices, and it must be by the same two justices who signed the order; and therefore an order stating it, in the alternative, to have been taken "before us or one of us," is bad. The two justices also must sign the order in the presence of each other, and the justices of one county cannot make an order of removal on an examination taken and transmitted to them by justices of another county, although such examination be verified by oath. An order signed by two justices separately, and in different counties, is not void, but only voidable on appeal.

An order of justices removing M. F., wife of P. F., a Scotchman, who never gained a settlement in England, and their children, to her last legal settlement, which order was stated on the face of it to be under the examination of the husband, and with the consent of him and his wife, was held good. 5 East, 113.

An order for removing the wife and daughters of a pauper to the place of their settlement, is supported prima facie by showing that the parish to which the removal was made was the place of the wife's settlement before the marriage, and throws the burden of proof on the appellant, that the husband was settled in another parish. 13 East, 311.

The pauper being a settled inhabitant of A., subsequently acquired a settlement in the township of B.; the latter township afterwards ceased to exist as a place capable of maintaining its own poor: held, that the previous settlement in A. having been extinguished, the pauper could not be removed thither from a third township as to the place of his last legal settlement. Quære, Whether, in such a case, a removal to the parish of which the township of B. formed a part, would not be good. 2 B. & A. 162.

The mutiny acts enable two justices to take the examination of a soldier respecting his settlement, and direct them to give an attested copy of it, which is to be by him delivered to the commanding officer in order to be produced when required, and the acts make such attested copy evidence; no other attested copy than that given to the soldier is evidence; but the original examination is admissible evidence. 5 T. R. 704; 6 T. R. 534.

The next proceeding is the Adjudication; for an order of removal cannot be good, if it omit to adjudge that the persons complained of actually became chargeable to the parish complaining, and that they are last legally settled in the parish to which they are intended to be removed. An order, removing nurse children to their derivative settlement, is good, without stating the death of the parent, or adjudging the place, to which they are removed, to be the settlement of their parents. The order must state that the justices are justices of the peace for, and not in, the county; but it need not state that they were of the division where the pauper lives; and it is enough to name the county in the margin of the order, for the margin of an order of removal is part of the order itself; if, however, two counties are named, and it state them to be justices of the counties aforesaid, it is bad.

The power given to a justice, on a pauper's returning to the parish from whence he was removed, cannot be exercised, unless a previous charge be made on oath against the pauper who returns; and it seems that, previous to the repeal of stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12. this offence must have been proceeded against under stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 5. only; for an order of removal does nothing more than prevent the party thereby removed from returning in a state of vagrancy.

If an order of removal be made, and the parish, to which the pauper is thereby removed, neglect to appeal to the next general or quarter sessions, pursuant to stats. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12; 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11. § 10, such order becomes conclusive, and no new settlement can be gained but by some act subsequent to such removal; but it is only conclusive between those two parishes and the persons who are mentioned in the order. To render an order thus final, for want of an appeal, it must not only be a legal order, but it must be subsisting; for if it be deserted, or made to an improper place, the neglect to appeal will have no effect. But see 7 T. R. 200.

And subsequently, the court held that an order of removal executed and unappealed against, was conclusive as to the pauper's settlement at the time of such order, even as between third parishes not parties to the former order. 11 East, 388.

The parish, in whose favour the order is made, may by consent abandon it without appealing; and, after such order being cancelled by consent of both parties before the time of appeal, another order made by them, removing the pauper to a different parish, is good. 12 East, 359.

If an order of removal be appealed against, and reversed, two justices may remove the pauper back to the parish from whence he was sent; but if the order be confirmed, it is then conclusive that the appellant parish is the place of the pauper's last legal settlement; and of course he cannot be removed to any other parish, on any settlement gained previous to the confirmation of the order. But if an order of removal be reversed on appeal, the respondent parish may remove the pauper to a third parish on a settlement gained previous to the former removal; for an order reversed is only conclusive as to the appellant parish; and a bad order reversed, not on the merits, but merely for want of form, is not conclusive on either parish.

By the late act a notice in writing must be given to the parish to which the order is made, before the pauper is removed. See post, VII.

VII. 1. The Provisions of the recent Statute (4 & 5 Wm. 4. c. 76.) relating to the Commissioners and the Assistant Commissioners.—By § 1. his majesty, by warrant under the royal sign manual, may appoint three fit persons to be commissioners to carry the act into execution, and also at pleasure remove any of the commissioners for the time being, and upon any vacancy in the said number of commissioners, either by removal or otherwise, appoint some other fit person to the said office; and, until such appointment, the continuing commissioners may act as if no such vacancy had occurred.

§ 2. The said commissioners shall be styled "The Poor-Law Commissioners for England and Wales;" and the said commissioners, or any two of them, may sit as a board of commissioners for carrying the act into execution; and, acting as such board, are empowered, by summons under their hands and seal, to require the attendance of all persons they may think fit to call before them upon any matter connected with the administration of the laws for the relief of the poor, and also to make any inquiries as to any such matter, and also to administer oaths, and examine all such persons upon oath, and to enforce the production upon oath of books, contracts, agreements, accounts and writings, or copies thereof respectively, in anywise relating to any such matter, or to substitute a declaration for an oath: provided, no person shall be required, in obedience to any summons, to travel more than ten miles from his abode: provided also, that nothing therein contained shall authorize the said commissioners to act as a court of record, or to require the production of the title, or of any papers or writings relating to the title of any lands, tenements or hereditaments not being the property of any parish or union.

§ 3. § 52. after reciting that "a practice has obtained of giving relief to persons or their families, who, at the time of applying for or receiving such relief, were wholly or partially in the employment of individuals, and the relief of the able-bodied and their families is in many places administered in modes productive of evil in other respects, and difficulty may arise in case any immediate and universal remedy is attempted to be applied in the matters aforesaid," enacts, that after the passing of the act, the commissioners may declare to what extent and for what period the relief to be given to able-bodied persons or to their families, in any particular parish or union, may be administered out of the workhouse of such parish or union, by payments in money, or with food or clothing in kind, or partly in kind and partly in money, and in what proportions, to what persons or class of persons, at what times and places, on what conditions, and in what manner such out-door relief may be afforded; and all relief contrary to the regulations of the commissioners, is to be disallowed; but overseers, &c. may delay the operation of such regulations under special circumstances, and make report thereof to commissioners. If commissioners disapprove of delay, they may fix a day from which all such relief shall be disallowed. provided, that in case overseers, &c. shall depart from the regulations in any particular instance of emergency, and shall, within fifteen days after every such departure, report the same, and the grounds thereof, to the commissioners, and the commissioners shall approve of such departure, or if the relief so given shall have been given in food, temporary lodging, or medicine, and shall have been so reported as aforesaid, then the relief so granted, if otherwise lawful, shall not be subject to be disallowed.

to such guardians of the poor or select vestry, according to the respective provisions of the acts under which they shall be appointed; and no overseer of the poor shall give any further or other relief or allowance from the poor-rate than such as shall be ordered by such guardians or select vestry, except in cases of urgent necessity, in which cases he is hereby required to give such temporary relief as each case shall require, in articles of absolute necessity, but not in money, and whether the applicant for relief be settled in the parish where he shall apply for relief or not: provided, that in case such overseer shall refuse to give such necessary relief in any such case of necessity to poor persons not settled nor usually residing in the parish to which such overseer belongs, any justice of the peace may order the said overseer, by writing under his hand and seal, to give such temporary relief in articles of absolute necessity, as the case shall require, but not in money; and in case such overseer shall disobey such order, he shall, on conviction before two justices, forfeit not exceeding 5*l*. provided, that any justice of the peace shall be empowered to give a similar order for medical relief (only) to any parishioner, as well as out-parishioner, where any case of sudden and dangerous illness may require it; and any overseer shall be liable to the same penalties as aforesaid for disobeying such order; but it shall not be lawful for any justice to order relief to any person from the poor-rates of any such parish, except as therein before provided.

§ 59. In all cases where any relief shall have been given by way of loan, or where any relief, or the cost price thereof, shall be treated as a loan, under the rules of the commissioners, or the provisions of the act, any justice, upon the application of the overseers or guardians of the parish or upon providing such relief, and upon proof of the same having been given to or on account of any such person, his wife or family as aforesaid, and of the same, or any part thereof, still remaining due, may issue a summons, requiring such person, as well as the master or employer of such person, or some person on his behalf, to appear before any two justices, at a time and place to be named in such summons, to show cause why any wages due, or which may become due, from such master or employer, should not be paid over, in whole or in part, to such overseers or guardians, and if no sufficient cause be shown to the contrary, or if such person, or some one on his behalf, shall not appear on the return of such summons, then the said justices shall, by order under their hands, direct the master or employer for the time being from whom any wages shall be due or become due to such poor person, to pay, either in one sum or by instalments as the said justices shall think fit, taking into consideration the circumstances of such poor person and his family, out of such wages, to such overseers or guardians, the amount of such relief, or so much thereof as shall be unpaid.

mother, of any poor child, from their liability to relieve and maintain such poor child in pursuance of the 43 Eliz. c. 2.

§ 57. Every man who after the passing of the act shall marry a woman having a child or children at the time of such marriage, whether such child or children be legitimate or illegitimate, shall be liable to maintain such child or children as a part of his family, and shall be chargeable with all relief, or the cost price thereof, granted to or on account of such child or children until such child or children shall respectively attain the age of sixteen, or until the death of the mother of such child or children; and such child or children shall, for the purposes of the act, be deemed a part of such husband's family accordingly.

§ 78. 8. The Provisions repealing, altering, or affecting Settlements.

§ 64. After the passing of the act no settlement shall be acquired by hiring and service, or by residence under the same, or by serving an office.

§ 65. No person under any contract of hiring and service not completed at the time of the passing of this act shall acquire, or be deemed or adjudged to have acquired, any settlement by reason of such hiring and service, or of any residence under the same.

§ 66. After the passing of the act no settlement shall be acquired or completed by occupying a tenement, unless the person occupying the same shall have been assessed to the poor-rate, and shall have paid the same, in respect of such tenement, for one year.

§ 67. After the passing of the act no settlement shall be acquired by being apprenticed in the sea service, or to a householder exercising the trade of the seas as a fisherman or otherwise, nor by any person now being such an apprentice in respect of such apprenticeship.

§ 68. No person shall be deemed, adjudged, or taken to retain any settlement, gained by virtue of any possession of any estate or interest in any parish, for any longer or further time than such person shall inhabit within ten miles thereof; and in case such person shall cease to inhabit within such distance, and thereafter become chargeable, such person shall be liable to be removed to the parish wherein previously to such inhabitancy he may have been legally settled, or in case he may have subsequently to such inhabitancy gained a legal settlement in some other parish, then to such other parish.

§ 61. And after the period at which any rule, order, or regulation of the commissioners shall come into operation for the binding of poor children apprentices, in addition to such assent or consent, order or allowance of justices, as are now required by law, such justices or any one justice are and is hereby authorized and required to examine whether the rules, orders, or regulations of the said commissioners then in force for the binding of poor children apprentices, have been complied with, and to certify the same at the foot of every such contract or indenture, and of the counterpart thereof, in such form and manner as the said commissioners by such rules may direct, and until so certified no such contract or indenture of apprenticeship shall be valid: provided, that nothing in the act, or in any rule of the commissioners, shall affect the jurisdiction of any justices of the peace over any master or apprentice during the period of apprenticeship.

9. As to Illegitimate Children.

§ 69. After the passing of the act so much of any acts of parliament as enables any single woman to charge any person with having gotten her with any child of which she shall then be pregnant, or as renders any person so charged liable to be apprehended or committed, or required to give security, on any such charge, or as enables the mother of any bastard child or children to charge or affiliate any such child or children on any person as the reputed or putative father thereof, or as enables any overseer or guardian to charge or make complaint against any person as such reputed or putative father, and to require him to be charged with or contribute to the expenses attending the birth, sustentation, or maintenance of any such child or children, or to be imprisoned or otherwise punished for not contributing thereto, or as in any way renders such reputed or putative father liable to punishment or contribution as such, or as enables churchwardens and overseers, by the order of any two justices of the peace, confirmed by the sessions, to take, seize, and dispose of the goods and chattels, or to receive the annual rents or profits of the lands of any putative father of bastard children, and so much of any such act or acts as renders an unmarried woman with child liable as such to be summoned, examined, or removed, or as renders the mother of any bastard liable as such to be imprisoned or otherwise punished, shall, so far as respects any child which shall be likely to be born or shall be born a bastard after the passing of the act, or the mother or putative father of such child, is thereby repealed.

By § 70. securities and recognizances for indemnity of parishes against children likely to be born bastards, are declared null and void; and persons in custody for not giving indemnity are to be discharged.

§ 72. When any child shall thereafter be born a bastard, and shall by reason of the inability of the mother of such child to provide for its maintenance become chargeable to any parish, the overseers or guardians of such parish, or the guardians of any union in which such parish may be situate, may, after diligent inquiry as to the father of such child, apply to the next general quarter sessions of the peace within the jurisdiction of which such parish or union shall be situate, after such shall have become chargeable, for an order upon the person whom they shall charge with being the putative father of such child to reimburse such parish or union for its maintenance and support; and the court to which such application shall be made shall proceed to hear evidence thereon, and if it shall be satisfied, after hearing both parties, that the person so charged is the father of such child, it shall make such order upon such person as to such court shall appear to be reasonable under the circumstances of the case: provided, that no such order shall be made unless the evidence of the mother of such bastard child shall be corroborated in some material particular by other testimony to the satisfaction of such court: provided also, that such order shall in no case exceed the actual expense incurred or to be incurred for the maintenance and support of such bastard child while so chargeable, and shall continue in force only until such child shall attain the age of seven years: provided also, that no part of the monies paid by such putative father in pursuance of such order shall be paid to the mother of such bastard child, nor in any way be applied to the maintenance and support of such mother.

By § 73. no such application shall be heard at such sessions unless fourteen days' notice shall have been given under the hands of such overseers or guardians to the person intended to be charged with being the father of such child of such intended application; and in case there shall not, previously to such sessions, have been sufficient time to give such notice, the hearing of such application shall be deferred to the next ensuing general quarter sessions: provided always, that whenever such application shall be heard, the costs of the maintenance of such bastard child shall, in case the court shall think fit to make an order thereon, be calculated from the birth of such bastard child, if such birth shall have taken place within six calendar months previous to such application being heard; but if such birth shall have taken place more than six calendar months previously to such application being heard, then from the day of the commencement of six calendar months next preceding the hearing of such application: provided also, that if upon the hearing of such application the court shall not think fit to make any order thereon, it shall order that the full costs and charges incurred by the person so intended to be charged in resisting such application shall be paid by such overseers or guardians.

§ 74. If such person so intended to be charged shall not appear by himself or his attorney at the time when such application shall come on to be heard before such court, according to such notice, such court shall nevertheless proceed to hear the same, unless such overseers or guardians shall produce an agreement under the hand of such person to abide by such order as such court shall make thereon without the hearing of evidence by such court: provided always, that such court may, notwithstanding such agreement, require that evidence shall be given in support of such application, if it thinks fit, before such order is made.

By § 75. the party summoned, if suspected of intending to abscond, may be required to enter into a recognizance for his appearance.

10. Regulations touching Removals and Appeals.

§ 79. After the 1st Nov. 1831, no poor person shall be removed or removable, under any order of removal from any parish or workhouse, by reason of his being chargeable to or relieved therein, until twenty-one days after a notice in writing of his being so chargeable or relieved, accompanied by a copy or counterpart of the order of removal of such person, and by a copy of the examination upon which such order was made, shall have been sent, by post or otherwise, by the overseers or guardians of the parish obtaining such order, or any three or more of such guardians, to the overseers of the parish to whom such order shall be directed: provided, that if such overseers or guardians as last aforesaid, or any three or more, shall by writing under their hands agree to submit to such order, and to receive such poor person, it shall be lawful to remove such poor person according to the tenor of such order, although the said period of twenty-one days may not have elapsed: provided, that if notice of appeal against such order of removal shall be received by the overseers or guardians of the parish from which such poor person is directed in such order to be removed within the said period of twenty-one days, it shall not be lawful to remove such poor person until after the time for prosecuting such appeal shall have expired, or, in case such appeal shall be duly prosecuted, until after the final determination of such appeal.

§ 80. The overseers or guardians of the parish giving such notice of appeal, or their attorney, or any other person authorized by them, shall, until such appeal shall have been heard and decided, at all proper times have free access to such poor person for the purpose of examining him touching his settlement; and in case it shall be necessary for the more effectual examination of such person that he should be taken out of the removing parish, such overseers or guardians shall be permitted to remove him therefrom for the time which may be necessary for that purpose: provided, that the expense of such removal, and of his maintenance during the same, shall be defrayed by the appellant parish.

§ 81. After the 1st Nov. 1834, in every case where notice of appeal against such order shall be given, the overseers or guardians of the parish appealing against such order, or any three or more, shall, with such notice, or fourteen days at least before the first day of the sessions at which such appeal is intended to be tried, send or deliver to the overseers of the respondent parish a statement in writing under their hands of the grounds of such appeal; and it shall not be lawful for the overseers of such appellant parish to be heard in support of such appeal unless such notice and statement shall have been so given as aforesaid: provided, that it shall not be lawful for the respondent or appellant parish, on the hearing of any appeal, to go into or give evidence of any other grounds of removal, or of appeal against any order of removal, than those set forth in such respective order, examination, or statement as aforesaid.

§ 82. The parish losing the appeal shall pay such costs as the court may direct, which, after refusal to pay, may be recovered from the overseer in the same manner as any penalties or forfeitures are by the act recoverable.

§ 83. If either of the parties shall have included in the order or statement sent as hereinbefore directed any grounds of removal or of appeal which shall in the opinion of the justices determining the appeal be frivolous and vexatious, such party shall be liable, at the discretion of the said justices, to pay the whole or any part of the costs incurred by the other party in disputing any such grounds, such costs to be recovered in the manner hereinbefore directed as to the other costs incurred by reason of such appeal.

§ 84. The costs of relief are to be paid by the parish to which poor persons are decided to belong. But relief under suspended order is not to be recoverable unless notice be sent of such order.

POPE, Papa.] A term anciently applied to some clergymen in the Greek church; but by usage particularly appropriated in the Latin church to the bishop of Rome, and who formerly had great authority in these kingdoms. As to the encroachments of the See of Rome, it is said to be the general opinion, that Christianity was first planted in this island by some of the eastern church; which is very probable, from the ancient Britons observing Easter always on the fourteenth day of the month, according to the custom of the east; but the Saxons, being converted about the year 600, by persons sent from Rome, and wholly devoted to the interest thereof, it could not be expected that such an opportunity, of enlarging the jurisdiction of that see, should be wholly neglected; and yet there are few instances of the papal power in England before the Norman conquest; though four or five persons were made bishops by the pope at the first conversion, and there was an instance or two of appeals to Rome, &c. But Pope Alexander II. having favoured and supported William I. in his invasion of this kingdom, made that a handle for enlarging his encroachments, and, in this king's reign, began to send his legates hither. Ermenfroy, bishop of Sion, was the first who had ever appeared in that character in any of the British islands. And, afterwards, Paschal II. prevailed with Henry I. to give up the donation of bishoprics. In the reign of Stephen, the pontifical authority was permitted to make further encroachments: appeals to the pope, which had been always strictly prohibited, became now common in every ecclesiastical controversy. And in the reign of Henry II. Pope Alexander III. exempted all clerks from the secular power: indeed, this king at first strenuously withstood those innovations; but, on the death of Becket, who, for having violently opposed the king, was slain by some of his servants, the pope got such an advantage over him, that he was never able to execute the Constitutions of Clarendon. And, not long after this, by a general excommunication of the king and people for several years, because they would not suffer an archbishop to be imposed on them, John was reduced to such straits, that he surrendered his kingdoms to Pope Innocent III. to receive them again, and hold them of him under the rent of a thousand marks. And in the reign of Henry III., partly from the profits of our best church benefices, which were generally given to Italians, and others residing at the court of Rome, and partly from the taxes imposed by the pope, there went yearly out the kingdom 70,000*l.* sterling; a great sum in those days: the nation being thus burdened, and under necessity, was obliged to provide for the prerogative of the prince, and the liberties of the people, by many strict laws. And hence, in the reign of Edward I. it was declared in parliament, that the pope's taking upon him to dispose of English benefices to aliens, was an encroachment not to be endured; and this was followed by the 25 Edw. 3. st. 6, called the statute of provisors against popish bulls, and disturbing any patron to present to a benefice, &c. See also the 12 Rich. 2. c. 15; 16 Rich. 2. c. 5; 2 Hen. 4. c. 3, 4; 7 Hen. 4. c. 8; 3 Hen. 5. c. 4; 25 Hen. 8. c. 21; 28 Hen. 8. c. 16. The maintaining by writing, preaching, &c. the pope's power here in England is made a præmunire upon the first conviction, and high treason on the second. 5 Fitz. c. 1. In the construction of which statute it has been held, that he who, knowing the contents of a popish book, written beyond the sea, brings it over, and secretly sells or conveys it to a friend; or having read the book, or heard of its contents, doth after in discourse allow it to be good, &c. is in danger of the statute; but not he who, having heard thereof, buys and reads the same. Selden's Janus Anglor.; Davis, 90, &c.; Dyer, 282; 2 Inst. 550. See further, tit. Bull. Præmunire.

POPULAR ACTION. An action given by statute to any one who will sue for a penalty. See titles Action, Information, Limitation of Actions.

PORT, portus.] A harbour or place of shelter, where ships arrive with their freight, and customs for goods are taken. The ports in England are London, Ipswich, Yarmouth, Lynn, Boston, Hull, Newcastle, Berwick, Carlisle, Chester, Milford, Cardiff, Gloucester, Bristol, Bridgwater, Plymouth, Exeter, Poole, Southampton, Chichester, and Sandwich; all which are declared lawful ports, et infra corpus comitatûs: to these ports there are certain members belonging, and a number of creeks, where, commonly, officers are placed, by way of prevention of frauds in the customs; but these are not lawful places of exportation or importation, without particular licence from the port or member under which they are placed. Lex Mercat. 132. See further, titles Harbours and Havens.

PORTER, in the circuit of justices; an officer who carries a white, or silver rod, before the justices in eyre, so called à portando virgum. 13 Edw. 1. c. 41. See Vergers. There is also a porter bearing a verge before the justices of either bench. Conell.

PORTERAGE. A kind of duty formerly paid at the Custom-house to those who attended the water-side, and belonged to the package-office; and these porters had tables set up, ascertaining their dues for landing of strangers' goods, and for shipping out the same. Merch. Dict. This duty, along with some others, has been recently abolished. See Package.

PORTERS AND PORTERAGE. Porters are persons employed to carry messages or parcels, &c.

In London they are divided into different classes. The 39 Geo. 3. c. 58. enacts, that the following rates shall be the maximum charge upon all parcels not exceeding 56*lbs.*

weight, in London, Westminster, Southwark, and the suburbs, viz.:

	s.	d.
For any distance not exceeding $\frac{1}{2}$ of a mile	0	3
Not exceeding $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile	0	4
Not exceeding 1 mile	0	6
Not exceeding $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile	0	8
Not exceeding 2 miles	0	10

And so on in like manner the additional sum of 3d. for every further distance, not exceeding $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile.

Tickets to be made out at the inns, and given to the porters, who are to deliver them with the parcels; and any innkeeper not making out such tickets, to forfeit not exceeding 40s., nor less than 5s.; porters not delivering, or defacing the same, to forfeit 40s.; and if they make any overcharge, they are to forfeit 20s. Parcels brought by coaches to be delivered within six hours, under a penalty not exceeding 20s., nor less than 10s. Parcels brought by waggons to be delivered within twenty-four hours, under a like penalty. Parcels directed to be left till called for, to be delivered to those to whom the same may be directed, on payment of the carriage, and 2d. for warehouse room, under like penalty. If parcels be not sent for till the expiration of a week, 1d. more for warehouse rent may be charged. Parcels not directed to be left till called for, to be delivered on demand, under the above penalty. Misbehaviour of porters may be punished by a fine, not exceeding 20s., nor less than 5s. The porters of London have the exclusive privilege of taking up and carrying goods within the city; and the employment of any one else may be punished by fine.

PORTERS, Tackle-house.] Are regulated by the city of London. They have the privilege of performing the labour of unshipping, landing, carrying, and housing the goods of the South Sea Company, the East India Company, and all other goods, except from the east country—the produce of the British plantations, and Ireland, and goods coastwise. They give bond for 500*l.*, to make restitution in case of loss or damage, and are limited to rates, fixed by the corporation.

PORTERS, ticket.] Are persons appointed by the city of London; and have granted them the exclusive privilege of unshipping, loading, and housing pitch, tar, soap, ashes, wainscot, fir poles, masts, deals, oars, chests, tables, flax, and hemp, brought to London from the east country; also iron, cordage and timber, and all goods of the produce of Ireland and the British plantations, and all goods coastwise, except lead. They are freemen of the city, give security in 100*l.* for fidelity, and have their names and numbers engraved on a metal badge. They are under the tackle porters; who may, in performing the business of the port, employ other labourers, if ticket porters be not at hand. Any person may bring goods into London; but he is liable to a fine, if he either take up or carry any within the city.

PORTGREVE, or PORTREVE, portgrevius; Sax. port-gerefe; urbis vel portus præfectus.] A magistrate in certain sea-coast towns; and as Camden, in his Britannia, says, the chief magistrate of London was anciently so called, as appears by a charter of King William the Conqueror.

Instead of the portgreve, Richard I. ordained two bailiffs; but, presently after him, King John granted them a mayor for their yearly magistrature. See London.

PORTION. That part of a person's estate which is given or left to a child.

If a term of years settled to raise a daughter's portion is so short, that the ordinary profits of the land are not sufficient, the Court of Chancery may order timber to be felled, &c. to make up the money at the time appointed. Prec. Ch. 27.

A sale of lands has been also decreed for payment of portions devised to be paid at a certain time out of the rents and profits, where they were not judged sufficient for raising the money; although the land subject to the portions was given to others in remainder. Ibid. 396. See Treat. of Equity, lib. 1. c. 6. § 18; lib. 2. c. 8. § 6, 7; Vin. Abr. tit. Portions; ante, tit. Marriage; and post, tit. Trustees, Uses, Will, &c.

PORTIONER, portionarius.] Where a parsonage is served by different ministers alternately, the ministers are called portioners; because they have but their portion, or proportion, of the tithes or profits of the living; the term portion is also applied to that allowance which a vicar commonly has out of a rectory or impropriation. See 27 Hen. 8. c. 28.

PORTMEN. The burgesses of Ipswich are so called. So also are the inhabitants of the cinque ports, according to Camden.

PORTMOTE, from portus, and gemote, conventus.] A court kept in haven-towns, or ports; and is called the portmote court. 43 Eliz. c. 15. The portmote, or portmannmote, i. e. portmen's court, is said to be held not only in port towns, as generally rendered, but in inland towns—the word port in Saxon signifying the same with city.

PORTSALE. A public sale of goods to the highest bidder; or of fish presently on its arrival in the port or haven. See Stat. Antig. 35 Hen. 8. c. 7.

PORTSOKA, or PORTSOKNE. The suburbs of a city, or any place within its jurisdiction; from the Saxon port, civilitas, and soca, jurisdictio. Somner's Gavelkind, 135. Henry III. granted by charter to the city of London—Quantum murdri, &c. infra urbem, et in portsokne, viz. within the walls of the city, and the liberties without the walls. Placit. temp. Ed. 1.

PORTUYS, portuas, portuos, porthose.] A breviary. Cowell; Blount. See 3 & 4 Edw. 6. c. 10. where portuyses are enumerated with mass books, &c., and prohibited to be imported.

POSSE. An infinitive mood, used substantively, to signify a possibility; such a thing is in posse, that is, such a thing may possibly be; but, of a thing in being, we say it is in esse.

POSSE COMITATUS. The power of the county, according to Lambard, includes the aid and attendance of all knights, and other men above the age of fifteen, within the county; because all of that age are bound to have harness, and by the statute of Winchester; but ecclesiastical persons, and such as labour under any infirmity, are not compellable to attend. Persons able to travel are required to be assistant in this service. It is used where a riot is committed, a possession is kept on a forcible entry, or any force or rescue made contrary to the commandment of the king's writ, or in opposition to the execution of justice. 2 Hen. 5. c. 8.

But with respect to writs that issue, in the first instance, to arrest in civil suits, the sheriff is not bound to take the posse comitatus, to assist him in the execution of them. See Escape. Though he may, if he pleases, on forcible resistance to the execution of the process. See 2 Inst. 193; 3 Inst. 161.

Sheriffs are to be assisting to justices of the peace in suppressing riots, &c. and raise the posse comitatus, by charging any number of men to attend for that purpose, who may take with them such weapons as shall be necessary; and they may justify the beating, and even killing, such rioters as resist, or refuse to surrender; and persons refusing to assist herein, may be fined and imprisoned. See 17 Rich. 2. c. 6, 13 Hen. 4. c. 7; 2 Hen. 5. c. 8; Lamb. 313, 318; Crompt. 62; Dalt. c. 46; 2 Inst. 193.

Justices of peace, having a just cause to fear a violent resistance, may raise the posse in order to remove a force in making an entry into or detaining lands; and a sheriff, if need be, may raise the power of the county to assist him in the execution of a precept of restitution; therefore, if he make a return thereto, that he could not make a restitution by reason of resistance, he shall be amerced. See Forcible Entry, Sheriff.

Also it is the duty of a sheriff, or other minister of justice, having the execution of the king's writs, and being resisted in endeavouring to execute the same, to raise such a power as may effectually enable them to quell such resistance; though it is said not to be lawful for them to raise a force for the execution of a civil process, unless they find resistance. 2 Inst. 193; 3 Inst. 161.

It is lawful for a peace officer, or a private person, to assemble a competent number of people, and sufficient power to suppress rebels, enemies, rioters; but there must be great caution, lest, under a pretence of keeping the peace, they cause a greater breach of it; and sheriffs, &c. are punishable for using heedless violence, or alarming the country in these cases, without just grounds. See further, Contempt, Riot, Sheriff.

POSSESSIO FRATRIS. Formerly where a man had a son and a daughter by one venter, (i. e. wife,) and a son by another venter, and died; if the first son entered and died without issue, the daughter should have the land, as heir to her brother; although the second son, by the second venter, was heir to the father. But if the eldest son died without issue, not having made an actual entry and seisin, the younger brother, by the second wife, as heir to the father, should enjoy the estate, not the sister. Co. Litt. 11, 15.

Lands were settled on a man, and the heirs of his body, and he had issue a son and a daughter by one woman, and a son by another, and died, and then the eldest son died, before any entry made on the lands either by his own act, or by the possession of another; the younger brother should inherit, he claiming as heir of the body of the father, and not generally, as heir to his brother; yet, if the eldest brother entered, and, by his own act, gained the possession; or if the lands were leased for years, or in hands of a guardian, there the possession of the lessee or guardian vested the fee in the elder brother, and then, on his death, the sister should inherit, as heir to her brother, for there was possessio fratris. 3 Rep. 42.

There could be no possessio fratris of a dignity; in such case the younger brother was heres natus. Lord Grey, being created a baron to him and his heirs, had issue a son and a daughter by one venter, and a son by another; and, after his death, the eldest being possessed of the barony, and dying without issue, it was adjudged, that the younger brother, and not the sister, should have it. Cro. Car. 437.

Now, by the recent statute altering the law of inheritance, the descent of the heir is to be traced from the person last entitled to the land, whether he has had seisin or not. See Descent.

POSSESSION, possessio, quasi pedis positio. Is either actual, where a person actually enters into lands or tenements descended or conveyed to him; or, in law, when lands, &c. are descended to a man, and he hath not actually entered into them. So before, or till an office is found of lands escheated to the king by attainder, he hath only a possession in law. Bract. lib. 2, c. 17.

Possession, beyond the memory of man, establishes a right; but if by the knowledge of man, or proof of record, &c. the contrary is made out, though it exceeds the memory of man, this shall be construed within memory. Co. Litt. 115. A long possession the law favours, as an argument of right, although no deed can be shown, rather than an ancient deed, without possession. Co. Litt. 6. Continued possession is a violent presumption of a good title, and where two persons enter into and claim the same land, the possession will always be adjudged in him who has right, &c. 2 Inst. 256, 323.

He who is out of possession, if he brings his action, must make a good title: and to recover any thing from another, it is not sufficient to destroy the title of him in possession, but you must prove your own better than his. Vaugh. 8, 58, 60.

In an action against a person for digging of cony-burrows in a common, &c. it was held that the action, being grounded on the possession of the tenement to which the common belonged, the plaintiff need not show a title; and in this case the defendant may be a stranger; besides the title is not traversable, but ought to be given in evidence upon the trial of the issue. 3 Salk. 12.

A defendant in trespass, &c. for taking cattle damage feasant, has been allowed to justify the taking on his possession, without showing his title; the matter of justification being collateral to the title of the land. 2 Mod. 70; 3 Salk. 220. See Trespass.

In replevin, if defendant had the possession, it is a good bar against the plaintiff if he has no title; but there cannot be a return, unless he shows a property in the goods. See Replevin.

Action of the case lies for shooting at and frightening away ducks from a decoy pond, which is in the plaintiff's possession, without showing that he had any property in them. 3 Salk. 9.

A man on a lease and release of lands, &c. is in possession to all intents, except bringing trespass, which cannot be without actual entry, pedis positio. 2 Lil. Abr. 335. And to make possession good on entry, the former possessor and his servants, &c. are to be removed from the land; and if possession be lost by entry of another, it must be regained by re-entry, &c. Pasch. 1650.

A person in possession may bring an action, for loss of his shade, shelter, fruit, when trees are injured; and he in reversion for spoiling the trees. 3 Lev. 209. One, in defence of his lawful possession, may assemble his friends to resist those who threaten to make an unlawful entry into a house, &c. 5 Rep. 91. There is an unity of possession, when, by purchase, the seignory and tenancy become in one man's possession. Kitch. 134. See 16 Vin. Abr. 454, 460; 3 Comm. c. 10; and further, titae. Ejectment, Entry, Writ of Right; and other appropriate titles.

Important alterations have been made in the rules of law relating to the possession of lands by the 3 & 4 Wm. 4. c. 27, which will be found under the title Limitation of Actions, II.

POSSIBILITAS. Is taken for an act wilfully done, and Impossibilitas for a thing done against our will. Leg. Alfred. cap. 38; Ll. Canuti, c. 60; Leg. Sax. Fdm. scior. c. 88.

POSSIBILITY. Is defined to be an uncertain thing, which may or may not happen. 2 Lil. Abr. 336. And it is either near or remote; as, for instance, where an estate is limited to one, after the death of another, this is a near possibility; but that one man shall be married to a woman, and then that she shall die, and he be married to another, this is a remote or extraordinary possibility. And the law doth not regard a remote possibility, that is never likely to be. 15 H. 7. 10; Hardr. 417; 2 Rep. 50.

Where a lease is made for life, the remainder to the right heirs of J. S. this is good; for by common possibility J. S. may die during the life of tenant for life. 2 H. 7. 13; 3 Shep. Abr. 36.

A man made a lease to his brother for life, and that if he married, and his wife should survive, then she should have it for her life; the lessee, before he married, made a feoffment of the lands to another, and afterwards the lessor levied a fine to him; then the lessee married, and died, and his wife survived. And it was held, that the remainder to the wife for life was gone by this feoffment, and the possibility of her having it was included in the fine, which was likewise barred. Moor. 554.

A testator, possessed of a lease for years, devised the profits thereof to W. R. for life, remainder to another; and afterwards the devisee for life entered with the assent of the executor, and then he in remainder for life assigned all his interest to another, and after the devisee for life died; it was resolved that this assignment was void, because, whilst the devisee for life was living, he in remainder had only a possibility to have the term: for the devisee for life had an interest in it sub modo, and might have survived the whole term. 4 Rep. 64.

The devise of the possibility of a term is void; as where a term is devised to A. for life, remainder to B., and B. devises this remainder to C. and dies, and then A. dies; this devise to C. is void, and the executors of B. shall have it. 3 Lev. 427. See Remainder, Will.

A possibility founded on a trust differs from a mere possibility; the first may be devised, but the other cannot. Moor, 808.

At common law, a possibility could not be granted or assigned; but where such possibilities are real interest, they will be attended to accordingly in equity. Thus, a covenant for a valuable consideration to settle or convey a possibility, when it arises, will be enforced. See Treat. Eq. 202; and titles Assignment, Release.

A mere possibility could be only bound or extinguished at law by estoppel, by a fine, or recovery; Pollex, 54; or in equity by contract. 2 P. Wms. 182. 191; see 1 Madd. Ch. 437; 3 Mer. 671. But where a possibility is coupled with an interest, as where the person is fixed and ascertained, it may not only be bound by estoppel or contract, but may be released, pass under the bargain and sale of commissioners of bankrupt, or be devised, though it cannot be granted or transferred by the ordinary rules of the common law. 10 Rep. 46. If an heir apparent levied a fine of lands, and survived his ancestor, he was bound by estoppel, and his right extinguished. Sir W. Jones, 456. It was held by the late master of the rolls, that where by deed indented a man represents himself as the owner of an estate, and affects to convey it for valuable consideration, having at the time no possession or interest in the estate, and where nothing therefore can pass, whatever be the nature of the conveyance, if by any means he afterwards acquire an interest in the estate, he is estopped in respect of the solemnity of the instrument from saying, as against the other party to the indenture, contrary to his own averment in it, that he had no such interest at the time of its execution. A conveyance by lease and release will operate as an estoppel; and where the release can have the benefit of the conveyance at law, a court of equity will not interfere in his behalf. 2 Sim. & Stu. 519, afterwards affirmed by the lord chancellor; see 2 B. & Ad. 282.

Contingent and executory estates, and possibilities accompanied with an interest, are devisable. Bur. 1131; 2 Eden's C. C. 142; 1 Bl. Rep. 605; 1 Hen. Bl. 30; 3 East, 88; 17 Ves. 182. But such an interest is not devisable where the person who is to take is not in any degree ascertainable before the contingency happens; as where there was "a devise to two equally, or to the survivor of them, and to be disposed of by her, the survivor, as she might by will devise," the will of one of such devisees made during their joint lives, although the survivor, was held inoperative. 2 M. & S. 164.

As to the alienation of expectancies, see Tail.

POST. A swift or speedy messenger to carry letters. See Post-Office.

PENNY POST. Letters or parcels are conveyed daily by the establishment, originally called the penny-post, to and from all places within the bills of mortality, and ten miles or more distance from the general post-office, in London. See 9 Ann. c. 10; 5 Geo. 3. c. 25; 34 Geo. 3. c. 17; 41 Geo. 3. (U. K.) c. 7. § 3; 45 Geo. 3. c. 11. § 4. under which the original rate of 1d. is in all cases advanced to 2d. and in some to 3d.

POST, writ of entry in. A writ given by the statute of Marlbridge, (52 Hen. 3.) c. 30; which provided, that when the number of alienations or descents exceeded the usual degrees, a new writ should be allowed, without any mention of degrees at all. And accordingly, this writ was framed, which only alleged the injury of the wrong-doer, without deducing all the intermediate titles from him to the tenant: stating it in this manner; that the tenant had no legal entry unless after, or subsequent to, the ouster or injury done by the original disposessor; "non habuit ingressum nisi post in- trusionem quam Gulielmus in illud fecit." 3 Comm. 182. This writ is now, as well as the other writs of entry, prospective, abolished. See Entry.

POST CONQUESTUM, after the Conquest. Words inserted in the king's title, by King Edward I. and constantly used in the time of Edward III. Claus. 1 Edw. 3. in dorsi. m. 39.

POST DIEM. Where a writ is returned after the day assigned, the custos breviarum hath a fee of 4d. whereas he hath nothing if it be returned at the day.

POST DISSEISIN. Was a writ that lay for him who, having recovered lands or tenements by a force of novel disseisin, was again disseised by the former disseisor; it is now abolished. See Assise of Novel Disseisin.

POSTEA. The return of the judge, before whom a cause was tried, after a verdict, of what was done in the cause; and is endorsed on the back of the ni si prius record. It began thus in Latin, postea, die et loco, &c., in English, afterwards (i. e. after joining issue and awarding the trial), on the day and at the place of trial named, the plaintiff and defendant appear. See Pleading, Practice, Record, Trial.

POSTERIORITY, posterioritas.] Signifies the being or coming after, and is a word of comparison and relation in tenures, the correlative whereof is priority. As a man holding lands or tenements of two lords, holds of his ancient lord by priority, and of his latter lord by posteriority. Staundf. Prærog. 10, 11; 2 Inst. 392. See Priority, Tenure.

POST-FINE. A duty that was paid to the king for a fine formerly acknowledged in his court, paid by the cognisee after the fine was fully passed. See Fine of Lands, I.

POST-HORSES. The duties upon horses let for hire for travelling post are regulated by the 4 Geo. 4. c. 62.

POSTHUMOUS CHILD. A child born after his father's death, &c.

By 10 & 11 Wm. 3. c. 16. posthumous children are enabled to take estates by remainder, in settlements, in the same manner as if born in their father's lifetime, though no estate be limited to trustees to preserve them till they come in esse. See Infant, II., Remainder.

POST-MAN. See Pre-audience.

POST-NATUS. The second son, or one born afterwards: often mentioned in Bracton, Glanville, Fleta, and other ancient writers. In another sense it is distinguished from ante-natus, in the case of aliens becoming subjects; and as to post-nati and ante-nati, it was solemnly adjudged, that those who after the descent of the crown of England to King James I. were born in Scotland, were not aliens here in England. But the ante-nati, or those born in Scotland, before the descent, were aliens here, in respect of the time of their birth. Calvin's case. Children of persons attainted of treason, born after the king's pardon, may inherit lands; though not those born before, &c. Co. Lit. 391. See Alien, Attainder, Descent, &c.

POST-OFFICE. The office for the conveyance of letters through the kingdom, as well from foreign parts, as from place to place within Great Britain. This was attempted by the parliament in 1643; an office was erected first in 1657, during the usurpation, and after the restoration established by 12 Car. 2. c. 35. See 1 Comm. 321.

The rates of letters have been from time to time altered, and some further regulations added by 9 Ann. c. 10; 6 Geo. 1. c. 21; 28 Geo. 2. c. 13; 5 Geo. 3. c. 25; 7 Geo. 3. c. 50; 28 Geo. 3. c. 9; 39 Geo. 3. c. 76; 41 Geo. 3. (U. K.) c. 7; 42 Geo. 3. c. 81. 101; 45 Geo. 3. c. 11; 46 Geo. 3. c. 73. 92; 48 Geo. 3. c. 116; 55 Geo. 3. c. 87; and penalties are imposed in order to confine the carriage of letters to the public office only, except in some few cases. See Carrier.

By 46 Geo. 3. c. 92. letters may be conveyed to and from places, not being post-towns, and charged with extra prices.

Many attempts were made by post-masters in country towns, to charge 4d. and 1d. a letter on delivery, at the houses in the town, above the parliamentary rates, under the pretence, that they were not obliged to carry the letters out of the office gratis. But it was repeatedly decided, that such a demand is illegal, and that they are bound to deliver the letters to the inhabitants, within the usual and established limits of the town, without any addition to the rate of postage. 3 Wils. 443; 2 Black. Rep. 906; 5 Burr. 2709; 2 Roll. Rep. 906; Comp. 182.

By 7 Geo. 3. c. 50. enforced by 42 Geo. 3. c. 81. persons employed in the post-office, secreting any letters containing securities for money, &c. are punished as felons guilty of a capital offence: as are also persons procuring such offence.

It seems that it is not a felony within 7 Geo. 3. c. 50. § 1. for a person employed in the post-office, to steal out of a letter entrusted to his care, a draft on a London banker, purporting to be drawn in London, but actually drawn about ten miles from London, on an unstamped paper.

It seems also that § 2. of the same act does not apply to persons employed in the post-office; and that such a person therefore who steals a letter out of the post-office, is not guilty of felony under that act. 3 Bosc. & Pull. 311.

By the 4 & 5 Hm. 1. c. 11. the conveyance of newspapers between the united kingdom and the colonies, and also between the former and foreign parts, has been regulated.

By § 3. newspapers liable to the stamp duty and duly stamped may be sent through any general post office in Great Britain or Ireland to any of the colonies free of postage; and newspapers published in such colonies and sent to the united kingdom are to be delivered also free of postage.

By § 4. newspapers of the united kingdom may be sent to any foreign post free of postage, and newspapers printed in any foreign kingdom and brought by packet boats (if printed in the language of the state from which they are forwarded but not otherwise) may be delivered by the general post within the united kingdom free of postage. There is a proviso attached to the clause, that before newspapers are permitted to go free to and from any foreign state, satisfactory proof must be given to the postmaster general, that newspapers from or to persons in Great Britain and Ireland are allowed to pass by the post within such foreign state free of postage; and until such proof be furnished the postmaster general may charge 2d. for the conveyance of a newspaper to any foreign port to be paid when the same shall be put into the post office, and likewise 2d. on the delivery of any foreign newspaper within the united kingdom in addition to the postage charged by the foreign post office.

§ 5. empowers the postmaster general, with the consent of the treasury, whenever it shall be deemed expedient, again to impose the respective rates of 2d. for the conveyance of any newspaper from or to the united kingdom.

By § 6. newspapers are to be sent in covers open at the sides, and by § 7. must be posted within seven days after publication.

§ 9. authorises the postmaster general, with the consent of the treasury, to contract with the editors of unstamped publications for forwarding the same by post, on payment of a yearly sum for each publication.

By 6 Geo. 4. c. 20. § 10. any deputy, clerk, letter-carrier, letter-sorter, post-boy, or rider, or any other officer or person employed in receiving, stamping, sorting, &c. or delivering letters or packets, or in any business relating to the post office, wilfully embezzling, purloining, secreting, or destroying, or permitting, &c. any other person so to do, printed notes or proceedings in parliament, printed newspaper, or any other printed paper, sent by the post without cover, or in covers open at the sides, is declared guilty of a misdemeanor and punishable by fine and imprisonment.

By the 52 Geo. 3. c. 143. § 2. if any officer, or person employed by or under the post office of Great Britain, shall secret, embezzle, or destroy, any letter or packet with which he shall have been entrusted in consequence of such employment, or which shall have come to his hands or possession whilst so employed, containing the whole or any part of any bank note, &c. or warrant, draft, bill, or promissory note whatsoever for the payment of money; or shall steal and take out of any letter or packet with which he shall have been entrusted, or which shall have come to his hands or possession, the whole or any part of such bank note, &c. he is guilty of a capital felony.

By § 4. aiders, abettors, and accessories before the fact, are also guilty of felony punishable with death, and they may be tried and convicted either before or after the conviction of the principals.

By § 3. of the above statute, stealing letters from the possession of any person employed to convey letters sent by the post, or from any post office bag, or mail, is declared to be a capital offence.

By the 42 Geo. 3. c. 81. § 4. any person secreting or detaining, or after request refusing to deliver up any mail or bag of letters or any letter sent by the post, or put into any post office, and which shall have been found or picked up or by accident or mistake left with or at his house, is guilty of a misdemeanor punishable with fine and imprisonment.

It was determined so long ago as 13 Will. 3. in the case of Lane v. Cotton, by three judges of the Court of K. B. though contrary to Lord C. J. Holt's opinion, that no action could be maintained against the post-master general, for the loss of bills or articles sent in letters by the post. 1 Ld. Raym. 646; 1 Com. Rep. 100. A similar action was brought against Lord Le Despenser and Mr. Carteret, postmaster-general in 1778, to recover a bank note of 100l. which had been sent by the post, and was lost. Lord Mansfield delivered the opinion of the court, that there was no resemblance, or analogy, between the post-masters and a common carrier; and that no action for any loss in the post-office could be brought against any person, except him by whose actual negligence the loss accrued. Comp. 754. 765. For this reason, it is recommended by the secretary of the post-office, to cut bank notes, and to send one half at a time. This is the only safe method of sending bank notes; as the bank would never pay the holder of that half which had been fraudulently obtained.

As to rates of postage, &c. in Ireland, see 54 Geo. 3. c. 119; 55 Geo. 3. c. 103. and for the establishment and regulations 43 Geo. 3. c. 28. and Irish act 23 & 24 Geo. 3. c. 17.

The privilege of letters coming free of postage to and from members of parliament was claimed by the House of Commons in 1660, but dropped, on a private assurance that it should be allowed. And accordingly a warrant used to be issued to the postmaster-general to allow the same, till at length it was expressly confirmed by 4 Geo. 3. c. 24. which, and 24 Geo. 3. st. 2. c. 37; 35 Geo. 3. c. 53. add many new regulations; rendered necessary by the great abuses crept into the practice of franking. This privilege of franking is still further regulated by 42 Geo. 3. c. 63. and 46 Geo. 3. c. 61. and is by several acts extended to public offices and boards in particular departments of government.

The preamble of the ordinance made in 1657, states that the establishing one general post-office, besides the benefit to commerce, and the convenience of conveying public despatches, "will be the best means to discover and prevent many dangerous and wicked designs against the commonwealth." The policy of having the correspondence of the kingdom under the inspection of government is still continued; for by a warrant from one of the principal secretaries of state, letters may be detained and opened. 1 Comm. 322. edit. 1793, n. 28. But by 9 Ann. c. 10. § 40, if any person shall, without such authority, wilfully detain or open any letter or packet delivered to the post-office, he shall forfeit 20l. and be incapable of future employment in the post-office. It has been decided, that no person is subject to this penalty but those who are employed in the post-office, 5 T. R. 101. And see 24 Geo. 3. st. 2. c. 37. § 4, 5. as to opening foreign letters suspected to contain prohibited goods; and 35 Geo. 3. c. 62; 17 Geo. 3. st. 2. c. 53. enabling the postmaster-general to open and return letters to foreign parts in consequence of certain political emergencies.

POST TERMINUM. The return of a writ, not only after the return thereof, but after the term; on which the custos breviarum takes a fee. It is also used for the fee so taken.

POSTULATION, postulatio. A petition. Formerly when a bishop was translated from one bishopric to another, he was not elected to the new see; for the canon law is electus non potest elegi; and the pretence was, that he was married to the first church, which marriage could not be dissolved but by the pope; thereupon, he was petitioned, and consenting to the petition, the bishop was translated, and this was said to be by postulation: but this was restrained by 16 R. 2. c. 5. See Bishops, Pope.

Postulations were made on the unanimous voting any person to a dignity or office, of which he was not capable by the ordinary canons or statutes, without special dispensation; and by the ancient customs, an election could be made by a majority of votes; but a postulation must have been nemine contradicente.

POUND, parcus. Generally any place inclosed, to keep in beasts; but especially a place of strength to keep cattle which are distrained, or put in for any trespass done by them, until they are replevied or redeemed. In this signification, it is called pound overt and pound covert; a pound overt is an open pound, usually built on the lord's waste, and which he provides for the use of himself and tenants, and is also called the lord's or the common pound; and a backside, yard, &c. whereto the owner of beasts impounded may come to give them meat, without offence, is a pound overt: a pound covert is a close place, which the owner of the cattle cannot come to, without giving offence; such as a house, &c. Kitch. 144; Terms de Ley; Co. Lit. 96.

There is a difference between a common pound, an open pound, and a close pound, as to cattle impounded: for where cattle are kept in a common pound, no notice is necessary to the owner to feed them; but if they are put into any other open place, notice is to be given; and he is then also bound to feed them; and if beasts are impounded in a pound close, as in part of the distrainer's house, stable, &c. he is to feed them at his peril. Co. Lit. 47. A distress of household goods, or dead chattels, which are liable to be stolen, or damaged by the weather, ought to be impounded in a pound covert; else the distrainer must answer for the consequences; and for this purpose, under 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. any person distraining for rent may turn any part of the premises upon which a distress is taken into a pound, pro hac vice for securing such distress. See Distress, II.

A common pound belongs to a township, lordship, or village, and ought to be in every parish kept in repair by them who have used to do it time out of mind; the oversight whereof is to be by the steward in the leet, where any default herein is punishable. Dyer, 288; Noy, 52.

The 2 Wm. & M. st. 1. c. 5. gives treble damages and costs against persons guilty of pound-breach, (or rescous of goods distrained for rent,) and also against the owners of the goods, if afterwards found to have come to their possession. It is no answer to an action on this statute for a pound-breach that the rent and demand were tendered after the distress and impounding. 5 T. R. 482.

A pound keeper is bound to receive every thing offered to his custody, and is not answerable whether the thing were legally pounded or not. 1 T. R. 62.

POUNDAGE. A subsidy of twelve-pence in the pound, anciently granted to the king, on the value of all merchandise exported or imported. See Customs on Merchandise; Taxes.

POUND-BREACH. If a distress be taken and impounded, though without just cause, the owner cannot break the pound, and take away the distress; if he doth, the party distrained may have his action, and retake the distress wherever he finds it: and for pound-breaches, &c. action of the case lies, whereon treble damages may be recovered. Co. Lit. 261; 2 Wm. & M. st. 1. c. 5; 7 Wm. 3. c. 22. Also pound-breaches may be inquired of in the sheriff's tourn; as they are common grievances, in contempt of the authority of the law. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 10. § 56.

It has been doubted whether this is an indictable offence when unaccompanied by a breach of the peace. 4 Leon. 12; 3 Burr. 1701. 1781. But as pound-breach is considered a greater offence, at common law, than even a rescue of the goods distrained, and is no doubt an injury and insult to public justice, it seems to be equally indictable as such at common law. Mirror, c. 2. § 26; 2 Chit. C. L. 204. n. (b).

POUND IN MONEY, [from the Sax. pund, i. e. pondus.] twenty shillings: in the time of the Saxons it consisted of 240 pence, as it doth now: and 240 of those (silver) pence weighed a pound, but 720 scarce weigh so much at this day. Lambard, 219.

POUR FAIR PROCLAIMER, [que null inject Fines ou Ordures en Fosses, ou Rivers, pres Cities, &c.] An ancient writ directed to the mayor or bailiff of a city or town, requiring them to make proclamation, That none cast filth into places near such city or town to the nuisance thereof and if any be cast there already, to remove the same; founded on the 12 R. 2. c. 13; F. N. B. 176. Indictments for nuisances now supply the place of this writ. See Nuisance.

POURPARTY, pro pars, proprietia, propartia, Fr. pour-part; pro parte. That part or share of an estate first held in common by parceners, which is by partition allotted to them. Thus it is contrary to pro indiviso: for to make pourparty is, to divide the lands that fall to parceners, which before partition they hold jointly, and pro indiviso. Old Nat. Brev. 11. See Parceners.

POURPRESTURE, pourprestura, from the Fr. pourpris, conseptum, an inclosure. Any thing done to the nuisance or hurt of the king's demesnes or the highways, &c. by inclosure or buildings: endeavouring to make that private which ought to be public. Glanv. l. 9. c. 11; 1 Inst. 38. 272. See Nuisance.

Crompton in his Jurisd. 152, defines it thus: pourpresture is properly when a man taketh unto himself, or incroacheth any thing he ought not, whether it be in any jurisdiction, land, or franchise; and generally when any thing is done to the nuisance of the king's tenants. See Kitch. 10; Manwood's Forest Laws, c. 10; Glanv. l. 9. c. 11.

Skene de verbor. signif. verbo pourpresture, makes three sorts of this offence; one against the king, a second against the lord of the fee, the third against a neighbour by a neighbourhood. See 2 Inst. 38 & 272. Et Lib. Niger in Scac. 37 & 38. That against the king happens by the negligence of the sheriff or deputy, or by the long continuance of wars, inasmuch as those who have lands near the crown lands take or inclose a part of them, and add it to their own.

Pourpresture against the lord is, when the tenant neglects to perform what he is bound to do for the chief lord, or in any wise deprives him of his right. Cowell.

Pourpresture against a neighbour is of the same nature: it is mentioned in the Monast. l. tom. 848; and in Thorn. 2628.

POUR SEISIR TERRES, le fème que tient en doner, &c. An ancient writ whereby the king seized the land which the wife of his tenant, who held in capite, deceased, had for her dowry, if she married without his leave. It was grounded on the statute of the king's prerogative, c. 3. See F. N. B. 174. This writ does not now lie. See 12 Car. 2. c. 24. abolishing these and other feudal effects of tenures.

POURSUIVANT, from the Fr. poursuivre, i. e. persequi. The king's messenger attending him, to be sent on any occasion or message; as for the apprehending a person accused or suspected of any offence: those employed in martial causes are called pursuivants at arms. See Herald.

The rest are used upon other messages in time of peace, and especially in matters touching jurisdiction. Nicholas Upton De Militari Officio, l. 1. c. 11. mentions the ancient form of making these pursuivants, and tells us that they were called milites linguarum; because their chief honour was in custodiâ linguarum, and he divides them into cursores equitantes and prosecutores. Cowell.

POURVEYANCE, or PURVEYANCE. The providing necessities for the king's house.

The profitable prerogative of purveyance and pre-emption, was a right enjoyed by the crown, of buying up provisions and other necessities, by the intervention of the king's purveyors, for the use of his royal household, at an appraised valuation, in preference to all others, and even without consent of the owner; and also, of forcibly impressing the carriages and horses of the subject, to do the king's business on the public roads, in the conveyance of timber, baggage, and the like, however inconvenient to the proprietor, upon paying him a settled price.

This prerogative prevailed pretty generally throughout Europe, during the scarcity of gold and silver, and the high nominal valuation of money consequential thereupon. In those early times, the king's household (as well as those of inferior lords) was supported by specific renders of corn and other victuals from the tenants of the respective domains; and there was also a continual market kept at the palace gate to furnish viands for the royal use. 4 Inst. 273. And this answered all purposes, in those ages of simplicity, so long as the king's court continued in any certain place. But when it removed from one part of the kingdom to another, (as was formerly very frequently done,) it was found necessary to send purveyors beforehand, to get together a sufficient quantity of provisions and other necessities for the household: and lest the unusual demand should raise them to an exorbitant price, the powers beforementioned were vested in these purveyors, who, in process of time, greatly abused their authority, and became a great oppression to the subject, though of little advantage to the crown, ready money, in the open market, (when the royal residence was more permanent, and specie began to be plenty,) being found upon experience to be the best provender of any. Wherefore, by degrees, the powers of purveyance have declined in foreign countries as well as our own; and having fallen into disuse here during the suspension of monarchy, King Charles II. at his restoration consented, by 12 Car. 2. c. 24. to resign entirely these branches of his revenue and power: and the parliament, in part of recompence, settled on him, his heirs and successors, for ever, the hereditary excise of fifteen pence per barrel on all beer and ale sold in the kingdom, and a proportionable sum for certain other liquors. 1 Comm. 287.

By this stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24. it is provided, "That no person, by colour of buying or making provision or purveyance, shall take any thing of any subject, without the full and free consent of the owner, obtained without menace of force," &c.

Temporary acts were subsequently passed suspending this statute in favour of the king's royal progresses, viz. 13 Car. 2. c. 1. c. 8; 1 Jac. 2. c. 10; and in favour of the navy and ordnance, 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 20.

POURVEYOR, or PURVEYOR, provisor, derived from the Fr. pourvoir, i. e. providere. The officer of the king or queen, or other great personage, who provided corn and other victual for their house. See Magna Charta, c. 22. 3 Ed. c. 7 & 8; 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 20. Articuli super chartas, 28 E. 1. c. 2. c. 2. and other statutes. The name of purveyor was so odious in times past, that by 36 Edw. 3. c. 2. the heinous name of purveyor was changed into buyer: but the office is restrained by 12 Car. 2. c. 24. See ante, Purveyance.

POW-DIKE. To perversely and maliciously cut down or destroy the pow-dike in the fens of Norfolk and Ely is felony, by 22 Hen. 8. c. 11.

POWER.

An authority which one man gives another to act for him; a term commonly applied to a reservation made in a conveyance for persons to do some certain acts; as to make leases, raise portions, or the like. 2 Lill. Abr. 339.

Powers are either common law authorities, declarations, or directions operating only on the conscience of the persons in whom the legal interest is vested; or declarations or directions deriving their effect from the statutes of uses. A power given by a will to A. to sell an estate, and a power given by an act of parliament to sell estates, as in the instance of the land-tax redemption acts, are both common law authorities. The estate passes by force of the will or act of parliament, and the person who executes the power merely nominates the party to take the estate. A power of attorney is also a common law authority; but the estate is not in this, as in the other cases, actually transferred by the instrument creating the power. It is a mere authority to execute a conveyance in the place of the principal; and the estate, therefore, must be conveyed by the attorney, with the same solemnities as would have been requisite upon a transfer executed by the principal himself. A power to dispose of an estate or sum of money, if the legal interest is vested in another, is a power of the second sort. The legal interest is not divested by the execution of the power, but equity will compel the person seised of it to clothe the estate created with the legal right. Syngden on Powers, 1.

I. Of the creation and different kinds of powers, and by what words they may be raised.

II. Of the construction and execution of powers.

I. Powers deriving their effect from the statute of uses are either given to a person who has an estate limited to him by the deed creating the power, or who had an estate in the land at the time of the execution of the deed, or to a stranger to whom no estate is given, but the power is to be exercised for his own benefit, or to a mere stranger to whom no estate is given, and the power is for the benefit of others. The two first may be distinguished into two kinds, 1st, Appendant or appurtenant; 2d, Collateral or in gross. The third, it should seem, is a power in gross. The latter are termed powers simply collateral.

1. Powers appendant or appurtenant are so termed because they strictly depend upon the estate limited to the person to whom they are given. Thus, when an estate for life is limited to a man, with a power to grant leases in possession, a lease granted under the power may operate wholly out of the life estate of the party executing it, and must in every case have its operation out of his estate during his life. And this, as well as every other power which enables the party to create an estate which will attach on an interest actually vested in himself, is a power appendant or appurtenant.

2. Powers collateral, or in gross, are powers given to a person who had an interest in the estate at the execution of the deed creating the power, or to whom an estate is given by the deed, but which enable him to create such estates only as will not attach on the interest limited to him. Of necessity, therefore, where a man seised in fee settles his estate on others, reserving to himself only a particular power, the power is collateral, or in gross. A power to a tenant for life to appoint the estate after his death amongst his children, a power to jointure a wife after his death, a power to raise a term of years to commence from his death, for securing younger children's portions, are all powers collateral, or in gross, the estates to be created by them cannot in any event affect the life-estate of donee, and are, therefore, correctly termed collateral, or in gross, nevertheless, they are considered as emoluments annexed in privity to his estate, or as a part of his old dominion, and it even seems that a power to a perfect stranger who has no estate limited to him, to charge the estate for his own benefit, would be deemed a power in gross.

A power may, with reference to the different estates in the land over which it rides, have different aspects; it may, in regard to one, be a power appendant, in respect to the other, a power in gross. Thus, where an estate is settled to A. for life, remainder to B., in tail, remainder to A. in fee, and A. has a power to jointure his wife after his death, this power is collateral, or in gross, as to the estate for life, but appendant or appurtenant as to the remainder in fee. It may affect the latter, but can never attach on the former.

2. A power simply collateral, is defined by Sir Matthew Hale to be a power given to a party who has not, nor never had, any estate in the land. As where such power is given to a stranger. Hard. 415. This definition, however, is not correct. It is certainly clear, that if a man seised in fee reserve a power of revocation to himself, such power is a power in gross, and part of his old dominion; but although he might formerly have been owner of the estate, the power will be simply collateral, unless his interest existed at the time of the execution of the deed, so that by the revocation he would acquire an estate. Again, it should seem that a power to a perfect stranger to charge the estate for his own benefit would not be deemed a power simply collateral. A power of this nature may be thus defined: a power to a person not having any interest in the land, and to whom no estate is given, to dispose of, or charge the estate in favour of some other person. Sugden on Powers, 46.

Powers which are given to mere strangers, that is, to persons who have neither a present nor future estate or interest in the land, are said to be collateral to the land; those which are reserved to a person, who has either a present or future estate or interest in the land, are said to be relating to the land; and these again are subdivided into two classes, powers annexed to the estate in the land; and powers in gross. Powers annexed are, where a person has an estate in the land, and the estate to be created by the power is to take effect in possession during the continuance of the estate to which the power is annexed; such is the power usually given in settlements to tenants for life, when respectively in possession, to make leases. Powers in gross are, where the person to whom they are given has an estate in the land; but the estate to be created under or by virtue of the power, is not to take its effect till after the determination of the estate to which it relates; such are the powers usually inserted in settlements, to jointure an after-taken wife. 1 Inst. 342. b. in n.

In conveyances to an use, a man may direct or model the use as he pleases, and the 27 Hen. 8. c. 10. executes the possession to the use: therefore he may annex powers to estates, which cannot be annexed to them by a conveyance at the common law. Co. Litt. 237. a; Mo. 610. And, therefore, to the limitation of an use for life, he may annex a power to make leases for years, or lives, or to make a jointure to a wife. Mo. 381; 2 Lev. 58. Or to grant annuities, raise portions, &c. Mo. 381. Or to make a jointure, and also a lease to commence after his death, for portions, &c. Hard. 413. So, he may annex a power of revocation of all uses limited, and to make a limitation of new uses, and this will not be repugnant. Co. Litt. 237. a.

So, a power may be annexed to an estate by another deed, executed at the same time, though it be not in the same conveyance by which the estate is conveyed. 1 Vent. 279. So, a man may give a power or authority by will, which is a naked authority, not annexed to an estate: as, if he devises to A. for life, and afterwards that it shall be at his disposal to any of his children then living; he hath but an estate for life, with a naked power to dispose, in the manner directed by the will. 1 Salk. 24; 3 Salk. 276. So, he may give a power to a stranger, which is a naked collateral power, and annexed to an estate; or a power in gross, which takes effect after his estate is determined. Hard. 415.

If a power be to A. or his assigns, to make leases, &c. the power runs with the estate to the assignee in deed, or in law. 1 Vent. 340; 2 Jon. 110. So, in all cases a power coupled with an interest may be assigned: as, a power to a lessor, and his assigns, to cut down trees. 2 Mod. 317.

If a man, seised in fee, covenant to stand seised to the use of himself for life, with power to make leases, remainder to another in fee, the power is not well raised, Ch. Ca. 161: if the consideration of the covenant does not extend to the power to make leases, Mo. 145; 1 Co. 175; Raym. 218. So, upon such covenant, he cannot reserve a power to make leases, jointures, or for preferment of younger children, &c. Mo. 381. 383.

No precise form of words is necessary for the valid creation of powers which are mere declarations of trust, and therefore any words, however informal, clearly indicating an intention to give or reserve a power, are sufficient for the purpose. Anon. Mo. 608; 2 Ro. Abr. 262. (B.) pl. 3; 2 Vern. 377. The same rule prevails as to common law authorities, created either by will, 2 Ves. 175; 3 Ves. jun. 513; or by deed.

Thus if a power be to demise or lease, though the intent is, that he declare the uses of the first settlement for life or years; for the lease does not take effect by demise, but by declaration of the uses. Mo. 611. So, if a man expresses the power only by implication, it is well; as, provided that he shall not have power to alien, &c. otherwise than to make a jointure and leases for twenty-one years, it is a good power to make a jointure and leases. 1 Leo. 148. So, if a devise be to A. for life, to set, let, and make estates out of it as I might, and afterwards to his daughter in tail; A. has power to make leases, it being the custom of the country where the land lies to let for lives or years, 2 Rol. 261. l. 35.

A power, being executory, may be restrained or enlarged by a subsequent deed: as, if a power be general, to revoke; by a covenant afterwards, that he will not revoke without the consent of B. the power is restrained. Jon. 411. So, if the consideration, upon which the power was founded, does not extend to the person to whom the lease is made, the lease shall be void: as, if a man covenant, in consideration of natural affection, to stand seised to the use of himself for life, &c. with power to make leases, &c. a lease to a stranger is void: for he is not within the consideration. 2 Rol. 260. l. 30. So, if a power at its creation be, to make leases to a person to whom the consideration does not extend, it will be void, though the lease be executed to a person within the consideration. 2 Rol. 260. l. 35. But a man cannot annex a power of revocation to a feoffment or grant, for that will be void. 1 Inst. 237. a; Mo. 610.

Powers of revocation of uses of lands are very frequent, and merely voluntary conveyances, but have of late been disallowed in marriage settlements, doubts having arisen whether such settlements are not fraudulent within the 27 Eliz. c. 4; T. Jones, 94, 95. Powers of revocation in their creation are to be construed favourably; and, therefore, no express or technical words are necessary to the creating of such powers, but any expression which denotes an intent to reserve such power will be sufficient. 2 Vern. 376; 3 Krb. 26. But if such power be once executed, that is, the old uses over the whole estate revoked, and new uses limited, such new uses cannot be revoked, without an express reservation of a power for such purpose. Pre. Ch. 474; 2 Burr. 1136; 2 Ves. 211. A power of revocation may extend to all the limitations, or be restricted to a particular estate, limited by the conveyance; as where the use is to A. for life, remainder over, with power to revoke the estate for life only, this seems to be a good power. 2 Rol. 262. pl. 1. See further, Fonblanque Treat. Eq. lib. 2. c. 6. § 6, 7. and the notes there.

A power of appointment or revocation may be reserved either in the body of the deed or by indorsement before the execution of it; Cro. Jac. 156; 2 Keb. 809; or by a deed of even date with the settlement. 1 Keb. 134.

No particular solemnities are by law required to the execution of powers. A power may be reserved to be executed by a simple note in writing, or by will unattested, or attested by only one or two witnesses; and this although the subject over which it rides is real estate. But a man cannot reserve such a power to himself by his own will, for that would be simply an evasion of the statute of frauds. 2 Ves. jun. 204.

II. A Power shall be expounded strictly; therefore if a man has power to make leases generally, this extends to make leases in possession only, and not in reversion. 2 Roll. 261. c. 5; Cro. Jac. 318; Yelv. 222; Ray. 248; 1 Ld. Raym. 267; 2 Salk. 357; 1 Lev. 168; 6 Co. 33 a; Mo. 199; 1 Leo. 35; 3 Leo. 131. Nor a lease to commence in futuro. Raym. 248; 1 Leo. 35; Yelv. 222; Cro. Jac. 318; Mo. 494. So if the power be to make leases for two or three lives, he cannot make a lease to one not in esse; as to the son of B. not born, &c. Raym. 163. So, if the power be to make leases in possession, he cannot make a lease of land in reversion, though it be to commence in presenti. 1 Sid. 101, Ch. Ca. 18.

So, if part of a lease be in reversion, the whole lease shall be void. 3 Salk. 276; 2 East. 376. So if the power be to make leases in possession, or in reversion, he cannot make a lease in possession, and another lease of the same land in reversion; but his power to lease in reversion extends only to make leases of the land which was not then in possession. 1 Ld. Raym. 269; 2 Salk. 357. So a power to make a lease of three lives, or three years in possession, or for two lives or thirty years in reversion, warrants only a concurrent lease for two lives; for a lease for lives cannot commence at a future day. 1 Ld. Raym. 269; 2 Salk. 537.

Devise to the use of H. J. for life, without impeachment of waste, &c., remainder to the use of plaintiff for life, with power to make leases for two or three lives, &c. or for the term of twenty-one years, so as there be reserved the best rent without taking any sum or sums of money or other thing, for or in lieu of a fine; and H. J. by indenture, 15th of October, leased for fourteen years, to be computed, as to the meadow land, from the 13th of February last; the pasture from the 25th of March last; and the messuage from the 12th of May last; under a yearly rent, payable to lessor and such other person as should be entitled to the freehold and inheritance, half-yearly, on the 11th of November and the 25th of March: first payment to be made on the 11th November next ensuing; and lessee covenanted with lessor, his heirs and assigns, for payment to lessor and such other person, &c. of the rent at the days and times, &c.: Held, that the lease for fourteen years was warranted by the power to lease for twenty-one. And that the reservation of the first half-year's rent, payable at the end of twenty-seven days, was not taking a sum of money for a fine, being in consideration of a preceding occupation. 3 M. & S. 382.

But if a power be annexed to the estate of land in reversion, to make leases generally, he may make a lease in presenti of the reversion, 1 Ler. 168; though the power be to make leases in possession, Ch. Ca. 18; 1 Lev. 108; 1 Sid. 260, 261. So, if a fine be to the donee for fifteen years, afterwards to B. for life, &c. with power to lease for three lives, or twenty-one years in possession, he may make a lease during the fifteen years of land in lease at the time of the fine when such lease expires. 2 Roll. 260. l. 50; Cro. Jac. 347; 1 Roll. 12; 2 Roll. 216. So, if husband and wife lease pursuant to the 32 Hen. 8. c. 28. and then, by act of parliament, the estate is settled to the husband for life, with power to lease for three lives, or twenty-one years; he may make leases of the reversion during the first lease by the husband and wife. 2 Roll. 261. l. 15; 1 Lev. 36; cont. Dyer. 357 a. So, if a power be to make leases in reversion for three lives, &c. he may lease for three lives, when there is another life in esse, though the power does not say, to make leases of the reversion, for there is no prejudice. 2 Roll. 261. l. 30. So he may make a lease for years determinable upon three lives, to commence after the end of the former lease in esse. 8 Co. 70. See Lease, I. 2.

If tenant for life, with power to lease, make leases not in conformity with the power, and die bequeathing his personality to the next remainder-man, the executors may refuse to pay it to him, unless he either confirms the leases or indemnifies the executors. Vernon v. Egmont, 1 Bligh, 554.

Where the intention is clear, a power may enable the disposition of a fee, although no words of inheritance are used; as where a testator gives a power to sell lands, the donee may sell the inheritance, because the testator gives the same power he himself had. 1 Mod. 189. So a general power to dispose of an estate in favour of a particular object will authorize the limitation of a fee, although no words of inheritance are contained in the power. 1 Mod. 189; 1 Freem. 149, 163, 176; 2 Lev. 104; Carth. 232. And see 7 East, 521.

At law a particular power of charging lands will not authorize a limitation of the fee as a security for the sum to be raised. 1 Lev. 150; Hard. 395; 1 Ch. Ca. 103. But it should seem that at this day, if a clear intention appeared to execute the power, equity would consider such an execution as that in the above case a substantial, although defective execution, and would relieve against the defect in favour of the mortgagee; and it has been ruled, that in equity an unlimited power to charge an estate will authorize a disposition of the estate itself in trust to sell and divide the money among the objects. 5 Ves. 445.

Whatever is an equitable ought to be deemed a legal execution of a power; and the reason is obvious, for powers were originally in their nature equitable, but are, by the Statute of Uses, transferred to common law. See 2 Burr. 1147; 1 Comp. 266.

There is a distinction between the non-execution of a power, and a defective execution of a power; for though a court of equity will, under certain circumstances, help the latter, it will never aid the former, because so to do would be repugnant to the nature of a power, which always leaves it to the free will and election of the party, to whom the power is given to execute it or not; for which reason equity will not compel the execution of a power, or construe the act as done, when there is no evidence of the intention of the party to do it. 2 P. Wms. 490; and see Sugden on Powers. The declaration of such intent is, however, a sufficient ground for the interference of a court of equity. 2 Vern. 69. A covenant in a marriage settlement, referring to a power, or to the estate on which the power attaches, is, in respect of the consideration, a sufficient indication of an intent to execute such power. 2 Freem. 256; 2 Vern. 379. See 2 P. Wms. 222; Gillb. Rep. 166; Ambl. 3.

The interference of courts of equity, in cases of a defective execution of a power, proceeds upon the same principles as those on which those courts will supply any defect in the surrender of a copyhold estate, and is therefore bound by the same considerations. Treat. Eq. l. 314 n. See Copyhold.

In Bath and Montague's case (3 Ch. Ca. 69, 93.) it is said by the two chief justices, that if the party appear to have intended to execute his power, and is prevented by death, equity shall interpose to effectuate his intent, for it is an impediment by the act of God; and the case of Smith v. Ashton (1 Ch. Ca. 264; Finch. Rep. 273.) is relied on as an authority to such an effect; but this not being an original opinion of the learned chief justices, and founded only on the case cited, can be carried no farther than that case warrants; upon reference to the circumstances, it will be found to afford an authority rather against than in support of the notion, that where a man is only preparing to execute a power, and dies before he does execute it, the preparatory steps amount to such an execution as equity will make effectual; for it is ob-servable that the court, in Smith v. Ashton, directed an issue to try whether the notes or instructions for the will, from which the intent of the donee of the power was inferred, were part of his will; which issue would have been unnecessary, if the court could have relieved on the ground of preparatory measures only; the relief afforded in that case must therefore be referred to the result of the issue, which was, that the notes or instructions were part of the will. Treat. Eq. i. 315, in n.

It is said that equity will relieve the defective execution of a power to make leases; but this must be understood of such leases as are not derived under powers limited in their nature to a particular mode of execution; for in the construction of powers, originally in their nature legal, courts of equity must follow the law, be the consideration ever so meritorious; for instance, in the case of powers by tenant in tail, to make leases under the statute, if not executed in the requisite form, no consideration, however meritorious, will avail. So with respect to defective executions of powers under the Civil List Act, or powers under particular family entails, equity can no more relieve from them than it can from defects in a common recovery. The principle upon which the rule of construction is founded in these cases is, that there is nothing to affect the conscience of the remainderman. Comp. 257.

In the case of defective execution of powers, it is not necessary, in order to induce the interference of a court of equity, that the consideration should be strictly valuable; but it is sufficient that it be meritorious; i. e. founded on some moral obligation. Treat. Eq. i. 316, in n.

As to the 54 Geo. 3. c. 168. by which deeds made before the passing of the act for executing powers by deeds to be signed and sealed by the party, are declared valid, though the attestation does not mention the signature. See Deeds, II. 6.

Though equity will not, even in favour of creditors, execute a power which the party himself has omitted to execute; yet, if a power be executed in favour of a volunteer, though a child, it seems agreed by all the cases, that the money shall be assets for the benefit of creditors. 2 Vern. 319; 1 Atk. 495; 2 Ves. 1. Nor can a power be so framed as to protect an appointment under it from payment of the debts of the person appointing. 2 Ves. 640. See Executor, V. 6.

By the 1 Wm. 4. c. 46. § 1. no appointment made in future in exercise of any power to appoint property among several persons, shall be invalid in equity, on the ground that a nominal share only is appointed to any object of the power. But this shall not affect any provision by which the amount of the share is declared by the deed. § 2. Nor alter the force of the appointment. § 3. The object of this act is to restore the law to its original state, and to put the equitable rule on the same footing as the rule at law, with respect to appointments; so that the doctrine of illusory appointments should no longer exist in a court of equity. The authority assumed in that respect was always looked on as dangerous, inasmuch as it depended almost entirely on the arbitrary distinctions taken by each individual judge; and it proved to be inconvenient, because it was extremely difficult to draw the line between illusory and substantial appointments, the judges having found it impossible to fix a rule on account of the varying circumstances which might make it applicable to the very next case that might be brought before them. This act therefore takes away the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery (in that respect), and restores the doctrine of appointment to its original state at common law. By this provision a fruitful source of litigation is removed, and a parent or trustee is enabled to act so as best to meet the exigencies of a family, and to give to children aid and provision in proportion to their actual wants:—but the power must be exercised in order to exclude any object in favour of them. In future creations of powers it is probable that the parties will be careful to declare what shall be the smallest sum or share of the fund which any one object shall take under an exercise of the power. See Jemmett's Introduction to the Acts relating to the Administration of Law in Courts of Equity, passed in the session of 1830.

It is agreed in the books that a wife may, without her husband, execute a naked authority, whether given before or after coverture, and though no special words are used to dispense with the disability of coverture; and the rule is the same where both an interest and an authority pass to the wife, if the authority is collateral to, and doth not flow from the interest; because then the two are as unconnected as if they were vested in different persons. Finch. Rep. 348. As too a feme covert may, without her husband, convey lands in execution of a mere power or authority, so may she, with equal effect, in performance of a condition where land is vested in her on condition to convey to others. W. Jones, 137, 138. The reason why in these instances the wife may convey without her husband, seems to be, that he can receive no prejudice from her acts; but a great one might arise to others, if his concurrence should be essential. 1 Inst. 112, a. n. n. And it has long been finally settled, that a married woman may execute a power, whether appendant in gross or simply collateral. 1 *Roll. PRACTICE. This term is sometimes applied, in an unfavourable sense, to signify fraud or bad practice. Thus clandestine proceedings are said to be by practice.

PRACTICE OF THE COURTS.

By this is understood the form and manner of conducting and carrying on suits or prosecutions at law or in equity, civil or criminal, through their various stages, from the commencement of the process to final judgment and execution, according to the principles of law and the rules laid down by the several courts.

Though the knowledge of this practice is to be acquired chiefly by experience, it is founded on the original structure and progressive improvements of our laws. Several modern treatises have been written on the practice of the several courts of King's Bench, Common Pleas, Chancery, and Exchequer; some of which are by no means liable to the censure passed on former productions of that nature by the learned and ingenious writer from whom the following abridgement is extracted. The nature of this dictionary precludes the possibility of entering into any thing like a general account on so complicated a subject, the various points of which are incidentally noticed under the several heads to which they apply.

Some idea of the visible practice of the courts is given under Motion in Court, and which the following summary may serve further to illustrate. It is taken from a work which would probably have secured to its author a fame more adequate to his deserts, had not the splendour of the Commentaries obscured all inferior exertions of ingenuity and elegance. See Eunomus, Dial. 2. § 23, 40.

It must be owned, (says that writer,) that the knowledge of practice can be acquired only by practice; though, as its rules depend on principles, it is as much a science as any other part of the law. It is impossible even to recollect those rules, and often difficult to investigate them. The very few books of any credit that have been written on this subject are written on a loose and unconnected plan, and after all, speak only to the learned. This branch of law was, until of late years, more than any other, destitute of any elementary treatise.

The following idea of practice, given by the author of Eunomus, is new, and, it is believed, accurate as far as it goes: it may afford a pleasing view of the rationale of practice even to adepts; but it is chiefly adapted to the instruction of those who are first setting out in the profession; who, either from lectures in the university, or their now private studies, have a tolerable notion of the general principles of law; though they may have barely set foot in Westminster Hall, and consequently have but little idea of the practice of a court. It arises on the following case:—

A person who has a cause of complaint, either for a right detained, or an injury done, is determined to bring his Action; and, by his attorney, takes out Process against the party complained of; in consequence of which, the latter (who is called the defendant) puts in Bail: either common or special, as the case requires. The defendant being thus secured, the plaintiff declares in proper form the nature of his cause; the defendant answers this declaration; and the charge and defence, by due course of Pleading, (in the course of which may be introduced a Demurrer on either side,) are brought to one or more plain simple facts: these facts arising out of the pleadings, and thence called Issues, come next to a Trial by Jury, who, having heard the Evidence on an issue before them, find (let it be supposed) a Verdict for the plaintiff, on which verdict Judgment is afterwards entered. The plaintiff's costs of suits are then taxed by the officer of the court; and the judgment is put in Execution, by laying on the defendant's effects the Damages given by the jury, and the Costs allowed by the court; which being done, there is an end of the suit, and both parties are once more out of court. [By referring to the titles in this dictionary, distinguished by italic words in the above sentence, further information on each head will be obtained.]

But the practice of a court in civil suits arises, in a great measure, from the interruption in the above regular stages and course of a cause. Those regular stages (as to the time and manner of carrying them on) are themselves the legitimate offspring of the established practice of the court where the cause is brought: when they are pursued, the course of the proceeding runs on smooth and silent, transacted by the attorneys in the cause and the officers of the court, without ever being heard of in open court; and the method of transacting this business is that practice, the knowledge of which more immediately concerns the attorneys and officers. The irregularities and informalities, that push a cause out of its course, must be redressed by the interposition of the court; and it is this kind of business that furnishes and makes up a great part of the visible practice of the courts of law in term time.

It was above stated, that the attorney first takes out process against the defendant, in order to make him appear. But this process may be irregular, and then it will produce motions to set it aside; as, for instance, where the defendant is a privileged person it may not only be irregular, but highly oppressive; and then it grounds a motion for an attachment against the parties executing the process, as for a contempt of the court. This is a general motion, and may, as the oppression which produces it, arise in any stage of the cause. The suit itself, as well as the process, may be irregular, and then it will occasion a motion to stay proceedings in a cause: as where the parties have agreed to compromise the matters in difference, and a release is not executed; for the release, when executed, may be pleaded in bar of the action. The first process may be regular, and the bail may not, and thence arise various motions, either to discharge the defendant on common bail, where it appears from the affidavit that he is not liable to give special bail, or, where the affidavit to hold to bail is defective, to set aside a judge's order, made at his chambers, relating to the bail; which kind of motion may be made on other grounds. If the bail is regular in the manner of putting it in, but suspicious as to the competency of the bail, the plaintiff gives notice, and the defendant moves to justify bail in open court.

The declaration may furnish several motions; as to the delivery of it; its frame and structure; or the neglect of it by the defendant. Perhaps it cannot be delivered in the common form, the party absconding to avoid it; and then the plaintiff moves that some other service of the declaration may be sufficient. The declaration being delivered, the defendant may apprehend it to be immoderately prolix and impertinent; in which case he will move to strike out some counts in the declaration. The court usually, upon this, order it to be referred to the master of the plea office, and the master's report is the ground of the rule afterwards made. A motion for the master's report is another motion, that may arise in various parts of a cause. In an action that is in its nature transitory, if the declaration lays the cause of action in one county, and it did in reality arise in another, the defendant may avail himself of that circumstance, and upon affidavit apply to the court for the plaintiff to change the venue, (that is, the place where the cause of action is declared to have happened,) from the first county to the latter. The venue may likewise be changed from any county in England, wherever the cause of action arose, to that of Middlesex, where the court sits, if the defendant is privileged as attendant on that court. Where the jury, and not the venue, is to be changed, as where the material evidence arises in the place laid, but no jury, competent special cause is laid, disinterested, (as in case of a county cause about a bridge, or the like,) it is usual to move for a trial in the adjoining county, upon entering a suggestion on the roll. See Venus, Trial. A suggestion on the roll is sometimes entered for other purposes; as where the sheriff who regularly returns the process is partial. See Coroner, Jury, Sheriff.

If a declaration is substantially defective, the defendant, instead of answering, demurs to it. See Demurrer. If, on the other hand, the declaration is delivered, and is unexceptionable, and the defendant neglects to answer it in due time, the plaintiff may have judgment by default; but if the plaintiff is over hasty in signing this judgment, the court will interpose on a motion to set it aside; in consequence of which the defendant will be at liberty to plead. The motion to set aside a judgment obtains in other instances; and the motion for judgment as in case of a nonsuit arises on another ground, as will be shown hereafter; and see Nonsuit.

When the defendant comes to plead to the declaration, instead of making, in due time, a plain denial of the charge, called the general issue, (but see now Issue), he may find it necessary to vary the common course, either by enlarging the time or the manner of pleading: he may therefore move for time to plead, which being a matter of indulgence, the court, on the equity of the case, may refuse or grant; and grant without or upon terms. At common law a defendant could only plead a single matter, but this was remedied by statute; (see Pleading); and, if necessary, the defendant accordingly moves the court for leave to plead several matters, which he mentions. Sometimes this expedient is an afterthought, and then, as it tends to delay the plaintiff, the defendant moves for leave to withdraw the general issue, and to be at liberty to plead specially; sometimes he moves the contrary.

The plea, replication, rejoinder, &c. are at length settled on record, and come to an issue, which remains to be settled by a jury; in order to which all the record down to the issue, which it includes, is transcribed from what is called the plea-roll, and which is only part of a large bundle, comprehending the cases of many other persons, and never stirs out of the custody of the court. That manuscript is called the nisi prius roll; as the nisi prius roll, after it is returned from the trial, assumes the name of the postea. See Pleading, Nisi Prius, Postea, Record.

Between the issue and the trial, several motions may happen which may either put off the trial or not; of the latter kind, and at this stage, is a motion by the defendant for leave to pay money into court. See Money into Court.

Many circumstances may make it necessary to postpone a trial, or vary the common forms of examination. The necessary witnesses in the cause may reside altogether abroad, or being there for a time, may not be likely to return at the regular time of the trial. In the first case the court is moved for a commission to examine witnesses on interrogatories, which are settled here, sent over, and, with their answers properly attested, are sent back, and read in evidence at the trial. See Depositions. In the latter case the trial is delayed on motion, to put it off for the absence of a material witness. But if, by this delay, the other party is likely to lose evidence that is ready at the time; either in case a witness is so old and infirm, as not to be likely to survive the arrival of the evidence on the other side; or in case his necessary business obliges him to leave England before the trial can come on; in this case, a motion is made by the party affected, to examine such witness de bene esse; that is, to admit the depositions so taken as evidence, if the person cannot afterwards be examined at the trial. If a witness, under none of these capacities, being duly summoned, neglect to attend, he is liable to an action on the statute (5 Eliz. c. 9) for damages; or the court will punish him criminally for the contempt on a motion for an attachment. See Evidence, II. 2. Motions may also arise respecting written evidence, as for leave to inspect and take copies of corporation books; or for an order to produce them at the trial.

Not only the witnesses in a cause, but the jury, may occasion particular applications to the court: so may the nature of the cause in question; and so may the course of judicature itself. The nature of the cause sometimes requires the jury to see the very spot where the matter in dispute arises; in which case, after issue joined, the court is moved for a view. See Jury, I; View. In cases also where the cause is either of a nature to exceed the apprehension, or to inflame the passions of a common jury, a special jury will be moved for. See Jury, I. Sometimes the cause is apparently likely to be very long, intricate, and important, either in its value or its consequences; from whence arises a motion for a trial at bar. See Trial.

When the cause is brought to the assizes, the jury sworn, and the witnesses examined, the trial goes on, or it does not; if it goes on, either a verdict is given, or it is not; if a verdict is given, it is either for the plaintiff or the defendant. The jury may be sworn, and the witnesses may be in part examined; and yet the trial may stop; because the parties may then, or at any time, compromise the matter in difference, or agree to refer it to arbitrators; in either case, a rule is made at the assizes (called an order of nisi prius), and motion is afterwards made, to make the order of nisi prius a rule of court. See Award, VI.

But the cause may go on, and yet not get to a verdict; for if the plaintiff does not prove his case, the defendant calls no evidence; and, instead of a verdict on either side, there is a nonsuit. Wherever a verdict is given, the plaintiff at least must give evidence to maintain his declaration. Where evidence is produced on both sides, the verdict is given for the plaintiff or defendant, according to the superior weight of evidence. See Jury, III.

Here closes the trial; and from this period it is that the record assumes the name of the postea; and if the trial is decisive, neither the law nor the fact being afterwards controverted, the postea is delivered by the proper officer to the attorney of the victorious party to sign his judgment; but in many cases, after a verdict given, there is room to question its validity; in which case the postea remains in the custody of the court. The verdict may be exceptionable, either from misdirection of a judge in point of law, or the misbehaviour of the jury; in which case, a motion may be made to set it aside: as it may on other grounds; as from its being clearly contrary to evidence, or in the damages given greatly exceeding the injury sustained; on both which accounts a new trial may be moved for. See Trial. If the verdict itself stands unimpeached, yet some original defect may appear on the face of the record, which shows that no verdict ought to have been given; or though given, no judgment can be had on it; and when this happens, the motion is in arrest of judgment. See Judgment, III.

Supposing the verdict and record to stand clear of all objections, the judgment follows of course; and after judgment, execution; the purpose of which execution is, to levy the damages assessed by the jury, and the costs allowed by the court. The execution, however, may, for a short time, be interrupted, in case any objection arises to the taxation of costs, and then a motion may be made, for the master to review his taxation: this, and every act of the master, being liable to be reviewed on appeal to the court; though a judgment of ordinary stages of practice, he is invested with original and competent jurisdiction. If the sheriff, or his officers, misbehave in respect to the execution, (as in any other service of a writ,) this may produce a motion for an attachment against them.

When execution is over, the cause is over; but a cause may, on many occasions, come much sooner to an end, and in a direction very different from what has been mentioned; it may come sooner to a trial, or it may come to execution without a trial.

In the case put at setting out, and, in the general exposition of the case, it has been supposed that the defendant pleaded to the declaration: but it was intimated, that if he neglected to plead, judgment would be had against him by default; in consequence of this default of a plea, the truth of the fact is confessed, and cannot be afterwards litigated, as on a trial; but this judgment, though it operates so as to preclude the defendant from controverting the fact, which is the cause of action, does not go to a confession of the damages laid in the declaration, which must be ascertained on a writ of inquiry. See Judgment, I. In this course of proceeding, motions may arise to set aside the judgment and writ of inquiry issued thereon, as irregular; to execute a writ of inquiry before a judge, instead of a sheriff, where it is a matter of importance; and sometimes for a new writ of inquiry, for excessive damages, in the same manner as for a new trial on those grounds. See Trial.

There are two cases, however, where the admission of the defendant silences all future enquiry, either as to the truth of the fact, or the quantity of the damages; that of a direct confession of the action; and a warrant of attorney to confess a judgment: this latter occasions a motion very often; for where it is above a year standing, motion must be made for leave to file the warrant of attorney, on affidavit of the defendant being still alive, and the debt unpaid. And motions may be made to set aside the warrant of attorney, if not regularly executed. See Judgments acknowledged for Debts.

A matter may come sooner to a trial, by means of an issue directed by the court; which obtains, in a court of law, principally where a question of civil right is involved, in a criminal prosecution for a misdemeanor: in which case it is the usual lenity of the court to suspend the latter till the former has been tried: or where a court of equity directs facts to be inquired of at law, and does not rest the case on depositions. See Feigned Issue.

What has been said relates merely to the practice of the courts in civil suits; and, in general, concerns the trial of a cause. To give a full or general idea of practice, it may be necessary to establish a distinction between such motions, as are in their nature previous to the trial itself, or subsequent to it. Of the former sort, are motions to stay proceedings in a cause; motions relating to bail; to declarations; to the time and manner of pleading: for changing venues; special juries; and many others above particularized. Of the latter sort necessarily are motions to set aside verdicts; for new trials; in arrest of judgment; on writs of inquiry; and others, that are easily classed according to this division. There are some motions that in the abstract are of an ambiguous nature, and may arise in any part of the cause, either before or after a trial; as motions for an attachment, for a master's report, and others.

Every motion hitherto has been supposed to have some relation to the trial of a cause: there are some few entirely independent of it; as a motion for a prohibition; applications for summary relief, under various statutes, relating to articles of clerks; to attornies; insolvent debtors; and others of that stamp. See Motion in Court.

Part of the visible practice of the court also arises from causes directed out of chancery; special verdicts and writs of error; all of which are argued at the bar, and determined by the judges.

Until recently, the practice of the courts of common law, at Westminster, differed in many respects, each court adhering to the course that had been pursued, and to the decisions which had been made by its own judges; but, with a view to render the practice of all the courts uniform, the common law judges have, by various statutes, been invested with the power of making and promulgating general rules, applicable to all the courts alike. Several series of rules have accordingly been issued, and, so far as they extend, the practice of the courts is assimilated; but there are still many proceedings untouched by these rules, in which each court follows its former mode of procedure.

The practice of courts of equity may be deduced in a manner similar to the above, by attending to the several stages, from the filing of the bill to the execution of the decree. See Chancery.

The crown business, or criminal practice, of which the court of King's Bench has exclusive jurisdiction, does not admit of the application of the same idea: much the greatest part of it is independent of any solemn trial; and the trials themselves are too simple to endure much interruption, or to be broken out into many points of practice. This crown practice may be divided into such matters as originally commence in that court, and such as are removed into it from other inferior jurisdictions. Of both which kinds, taken together, are motions for an habeas corpus; mandamus (though this, and the motion for a quo warranto, in cases relating to corporations, partake of a civil as well as a criminal nature); to exhibit articles of the peace; motions relating to the discharge of recognizances; to remove indictments, orders of attachment, convictions, made by justices, &c. from their common ordinary course of proceeding, by writ of certiorari, into this court, on some foundation of complaint against the justice. The visible practice, that occasions this removal, and very simple in their kind, though infinitely diversified as to their objects, viz. the general motion to remove the indictment, or conviction by certiorari; motion to quash the indictment, &c. when it is removed. In the case of an indictment removed hither on a demurrer, it is set down to be argued; or motion is made to quash it before trial; or motion in arrest of judgment; or motion for judgment after the trial.

But the most extensive jurisdiction is involved in matters of original cognizance, whether it regards indictments or informations; or such matters as are entirely independent of either, or any solemn trial; such as begin and end on motions.

There is little or no difference between an indictment commenced in this court, or removed from another jurisdiction, as to motions concerning them. As to informations, though altogether the creature of this court, they admit but of three motions; the application to the court to grant it: when granted, and tried, a casual motion in arrest of judgment, on grounds arising from the record itself: or, where the charge in the information and the verdict are both incontestible, the motion for judgment.

To recapitulate all in a few words:—Practice in general, it appears, is either in civil or crown causes. In civil causes, it is either independent of a trial, or relative to it: if relative to it, it arises from something applied for either before or after a trial. In crown causes, the only distinction made was, either as it concerned the original jurisdiction of the court, or such as is exercised, as it were, on appeal. "And unless (concludes the writer, from whom the foregoing sketch has been extracted and abridged,) I was to read over to you a hundred (he might have added or more) rules of court, and the several cases and books on this subject, (which, by the bye, I would not wish any enemy I have to do,) I cannot undertake to be more explicit on this subject."

PRÆCEPTORIES, præceptoria. A kind of benefices, having their name from being possessed by the more eminent Templars, whom the chief master by his authority created and called Præceptores Templi. And of these præceptories there are recorded sixteen, as belonging to the Templars in England, viz. Cressing Temple, Balshal, Shingay, Newland, Yevely, Witham, Templebruere, Willington, Rotheley, Ovenington, Temple Combe, Trebigh, Ribstane, Mount St. John, Temple Norton, and Temple Harst. Mss. Angl. ii. 543. But some authors say, these places were cells only, subordinate to their principal mansion in the Temple in London. See Stat. Antiq. 32 Hen. 8. c. 24.

PRÆCIPE, command. See Original.

PRÆCIPE IN CAPITE. The writ of right for the king's immediate tenants in capite, when they were deforced of lands or tenements. 3 Comm. c. 10. See Writ of Right.

PRÆCIPE, QUOD REDDAT, Command that he render. See Fine of Lands, Recovery.

PRÆCIPITUM. A punishment inflicted on criminals, by casting them from some high place. Malm. lib. 5. p. 155.

PRÆFECTUS VILLÆ. Is the same as præpositus villæ, i. e. the mayor of a town. Leg. Ed. Confess. c. 28.

PRÆFINE. That fine which, on suing out the writ of covenant on levying fines, was paid before the fine was passed. See Fine of Lands.

PRÆMUNIRE,

CORRUPTED from, or apparently synonymous with, præmoneri, "to be forewarned;" and therefore, according to the proverb, fore-armed. See Du Cange in v. The writ so called, or the offence whereon the writ is granted; the one may be understood by the other. The offence is of a nature highly criminal, though not capital, and more immediately affecting the king or his government. It is named, from the words of the writ, preparatory to the prosecution thereof, "Præmunire facias A. B.—Cause A. B. to be forewarned—that he appear before us to answer the contempt wherewith he stands charged;" which contempt is particularly recited in the preamble to the writ. It took its original from the exorbitant power claimed and exercised in England by the pope; and was originally ranked as an offence immediately against the king; because it consisted in introducing a foreign power into this land, and creating imperium in imperio, by paying that obedience to papal process, which constitutionally belonged to the king alone, long before the Reformation in the reign of Henry VIII. See 4 Comm. c. 8.

The church of Rome, under pretence of her supremacy, and the dignity of St. Peter's chair, took on her to bestow most of the ecclesiastical livings, of any worth in England, by mandates, before they were void; pretending therein great care to see the church provided of a successor before it needed. Whence these mandates or bulls were called gratiæ expectativæ or provisiones, whereof see a learned discourse in Duarenus de Beneficiis, lib. 3. c. 1. These provisions were so common, that at last it was necessary to restrain them by the laws of the land.

In the 35th year of Edward I. was made the first statute against papal provisions, 35 Edw. 1. st. 1; being, according to Coke, the foundation of all the subsequent statutes of præmunire. It recites, that the abbots, priors, and governors had, at their own pleasure, set divers impositions upon the monasteries and houses in their subjection; to remedy which, it was enacted, that in future religious persons should send nothing to their superiors beyond the sea; and that no imposition whatever should be taxed by priors aliens. By 25 Edw. 3. st. 5. c. 22. it was enacted, that if any one purchased a provision of an abbey or priory, he should be out of the king's protection. And by 25 Edw. 3. st. 6. (c. 2.); 27 Edw. 3. st. 1. c. 1; 38 Edw. 3. st. 1. c. 4; and 2. c. 1, 2, 3, 4, it was enacted, that the court of Rome should not present or collate to any bishopric or living in England; and that whoever disturbed any patron in the presentation to a living, by virtue of a papal provision, such person should pay fine and ransom to the king, at his will; and be imprisoned till he renounced such provision. The same punishment was inflicted on such as should cite the king, or any of his subjects, to answer in the court of Rome. By 3 Rich. 2. c. 3; 7 Rich. 2. c. 12, it was enacted, that no alien should be capable of letting his benefice to farm, in order to compel such as had crept in, at least to reside on their preferments; and that no alien should be capable of being presented to any ecclesiastical preferment, under the penalty of the statutes of provisors. By 12 Rich. 2. c. 15. all liegemen of the king, accepting of a living by any foreign provision, were put out of the king's protection, and the benefice made void; to which 13 Rich. 2. st. 2. c. 2. adds banishment and forfeiture of lands and goods; and by c. 3. of the same statute, it was enacted, that any person bringing over any citation or excommunication from beyond sea, on account of the execution of the foregoing statutes of provisors, should be imprisoned, forfeit his lands and goods, and moreover suffer pain of life and member.

In the writ for the execution of these statutes, the words præmunire facias being used to command a citation from the party, have denominated in common speech, not only the writ but the offence itself of maintaining the papal power, by the name of præmunire. The 16 Rich. 2. c. 5. which is the statute generally referred to by all subsequent statutes, is accordingly usually called the statute of præmunire. It enacts, that whoever procures at Rome or elsewhere, any translations, processes, excommunications, bulls, instruments, or other things, which touch the king, against him, his crown and realm, and all persons aiding and assisting therein, shall be put out of the king's protection; their lands and goods forfeited to the king's use; and they shall be attached by their bodies to answer to the king and his council; or process of præmunire facias shall be made out against them as in other cases of provisors. By 2 Hen. 4. c. 3. all persons who accept any provision from the pope, to be exempt from canonical obedience to their proper ordinary, were also subjected to the penalties of præmunire. This is said to be the last ancient statute concerning this offence till the Reformation.

But by 2 Hen. 4. c. 4. whoever shall put in execution bulls purchased by those of the order of Cisteraux, to be discharged of tithes, shall incur the like penalty; they were also further restrained by 6 Hen. 4. c. 1; 7 Hen. 4. c. 8; 9 Hen. 4. c. 8; and 3 Hen. 5. c. 4; by which the statutes above mentioned are enforced and explained; and by 23 Hen. 8. c. 2. § 22. whoever shall sue for or execute any licence, dispensation, or faculty from the see of Rome; and by 28 Hen. 8. c. 16. (by which all bulls, briefs, &c. obtained from Rome, are made void,) whoever shall use, allege, or plead the same in any court, unless they were confirmed by this statute, or afterwards by the king, shall incur the like penalty. Vide Reg. 54; 3 Inst. 127.

The penalties of præmunire have been since applied to other offences, some of which bear more, some less, and some no relation to this original offence, as shall be hereafter noticed.

Whenever it is said, that a person, by any act, incurs a præmunire, it is meant to express, that he thereby incurs the penalties which, by the different statutes above mentioned are inflicted for the offences therein described. See 4 Comm. c. 8; 1 Inst. 391. in n. 2.

Having said thus much generally, we may proceed further to consider the subject under the following heads:

I. What Offences, besides those already specified, come under the Notion of a Præmunire.

II. Of the Punishment in a Præmunire.

I. At the time of the Reformation, the penalties of præmunire were extended to more papal abuses than before; as the kingdom then entirely renounced the authority of the see of Rome, though not all the doctrines of the Roman church. And therefore, by the statutes 24 Hen. 8. c. 12; 25 Hen. 8. c. 19, 21. to appeal to Rome from any of the king's courts, which (though illegal before) had at times been connived at; to sue to Rome for any licence or dispensation, or to obey any process from thence, are made liable to the pains of præmunire. And, in order to restore to the king, in effect, the nomination of vacant bishoprics, and yet keep up the established forms, it is enacted by 25 Hen. 8. c. 20. that if the dean and chapter refuse to elect the person named by the king, or any archbishop or bishop to confirm or consecrate him, they shall fall within the penalties of the statutes of præmunire.

Exercising the jurisdiction of a suffragan, without the appointment of the bishop of the diocese, is also made a præmunire, by 26 Hen. 8. c. 14; which sets forth at large how suffragans are to be nominated, &c. See Bishops.

Also by 5 Eliz. c. 1. to refuse the oath of supremacy will incur the pains of præmunire; and to defend the pope's jurisdiction in this realm, is a præmunire for the first offence, and high treason for the second. Lastly, to contribute to the maintenance of a Jesuit's college, or any popish seminary, or whatever, beyond sea, or any person in the same; or to contribute to the maintenance of any Jesuit or popish priest in England, is by 27 Eliz. c. 2. made liable to the penalties of præmunire.

Thus far the penalties of præmunire seem to have kept within the proper bounds of their original institution,—the depressing the power of the pope; but they being pious of no inconsiderable consequence, it has been thought fit to apply the same, as already hinted, to other heinous offences.

Detraging from the king's common law courts, is said to have been an high offence at common law, and is made a præmunire by many ancient statutes; for, by 27 Ed. 3. c. 1. of provisors, If any subject draw any out of the realm in plea, whereof the cognizance pertains to the king's court, or of things whereof judgments be given in the king's courts, or sue in any other court to defeat or impeach the judgments given in the king's courts, he shall be warned to appear, &c.

in proper person, at a day, containing the space of two months; at which if he appear not, he and his proctors, &c. shall be put out of the king's protection, his lands and chattels forfeited, his body imprisoned, and ransomed at the king's will, &c. See also 16 Rich. 2. c. 5.

In the construction of these statutes it hath been held, that certain commissioners of sewers, for summoning one before them who had got a judgment at law, and imprisoning him till he would release it, were guilty of a præmunire. 2 Bulst. 295; 8 Inst. 125; Cro. Jac. 336.

Also suits in the admiralty or ecclesiastical courts within the realm for matters which, upon the face of the libel itself, appear to belong only to the cognizance of the temporal courts, are said to be within 16 Rich. 2. by force of the words, "or elsewhere." 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 19. § 14, 19.

And it hath been formerly holden, that even suits in a court of equity, to relieve against a judgment at law, were within the danger of these statutes; especially if they tended to controvert the very point determined at law, or to relieve in a matter relievable at law. 4 New. Abr. 140.

By 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 8. § 40. to molest the possessors of abbey lands, granted by parliament to Henry VIII. and Edward VI. is a præmunire. So likewise is the offence of acting as a broker or agent in any usurious contract, where above 10 per cent. interest is taken, by 13 Eliz. c. 8. To obtain any stay of proceedings, other than by arrest of judgment or writ of error, in any suit for a monopoly, is likewise a præmunire by 21 Jac. 1. c. 9. § 4. To obtain an exclusive patent for the sole making or importation of gunpowder or arms, or to hinder others from importing them, is also a præmunire by the 1st Car. 1. c. 21. On the abolition, by 12 Car. 2. c. 24. of purveyance, and the prerogative of pre-emption, or taking any victual, beasts, or goods for the king's use, at a stated price, without consent of the proprietor, the exertion of any such power for the future was declared to incur the penalties of præmunire. See Purveyance. To assert, maliciously and advisedly, by speaking or writing, that both or either house of parliament have a legislative authority without the king, is declared a præmunire by 13 Car. 2. st. 1. c. 1. So, to conspire to avoid the seizure or forfeiture, upon the importation of cattle, as mentioned in 20 Car. 2. c. 7. By the Habeas Corpus Act also, 31 Car. 2. c. 2. it is a præmunire, and incapable of the king's pardon, besides other heavy penalties, to send any subject of this realm a prisoner into parts beyond the seas. See Habeas Corpus. By 1 W. & M. st. 1. c. 8. persons of eighteen years of age, refusing to take the new oaths of allegiance, (and formerly of supremacy, see Nonjurors, Oaths.) upon tender by the proper magistrate are subject to the penalties of a præmunire; and, by 7 & 8 Wm. 3. c. 4. serjeants, counsellors, proctors, attorneys, and all officers of courts, practising without having taken the oaths of allegiance, (and formerly of supremacy, and subscribed the declaration against popery,) are guilty of a præmunire, whether the oaths be tendered or not. See Oaths. By 6 Ann. c. 7. to assert maliciously and directly, by preaching, teaching, or advised speaking, that the then pretended Prince of Wales, or any person other than according to the acts of settlement and union, hath a right to the throne of these kingdoms; or that the king and parliament cannot make laws to limit the descent of the crown; such preaching, teaching, or advised speaking, is a præmunire; as writing, printing, or publishing the same doctrines amount to high treason. By 6 Ann. c. 23. if the assembly of peers of Scotland, convened to elect their sixteen representatives in the British parliament, shall presume to treat of any other matter, save only the declaration, they incur the penalties of a præmunire. The 12 Geo 3. c. 11. subjects to the penalties of the statute of præmunire all such as knowingly and willingly solemnize, assist, or are present at, any forbidden marriage of such of the descendants of the body of King George II. as are by that act prohibited to contract matrimony without the consent of the crown. See King, Marriage.

II. THE punishment of this offence may be learned from the foregoing statutes, which are thus shortly summed up by Coke: "That from the conviction, the defendant shall be out of the king's protection, and his lands and tenements, goods and chattels, forfeited to the king; and that his body shall remain in prison at the king's pleasure; 1 Inst. 129; or (as other authorities have it, during life;" 1 Bulst. 199. both which amount to the same thing; as the king, by his prerogative, may any time remit the whole, or any part of the punishment; 2 Bulst. 299; except in the case of transgressing the statute of Habeas Corpus. These forfeitures, here inflicted, do not (by the way) bring this offence within the general definition of felony; being inflicted by particular statutes, and not by the common law. But so odious, Sir Edw. Coke adds, was this offence of præmunire, that a man who was attainted of the same, might have been slain by any other man, without danger of law: because it was provided by 25 Edw. 3. st. 6. c. 22. that any man might do to him as to the king's enemy, and any man may lawfully kill an enemy. However, the position itself, that it is at any time lawful to kill an enemy, is by no means tenable: it is only lawful by the law of nature and nations, to kill him in the heat of battle, or for necessary self-defence. And to obviate such savage and mistaken notions, the 5 Eliz. c. 1. provides, that it shall not be lawful to kill any person attainted in a præmunire; any law, statute, opinion, nor exposition of law to the contrary notwithstanding. But still such delinquent, though protected, as a part of the public, from public wrongs, can bring no action for any private injury, how atrocious soever; being so far out of the protection of the law, that it will not guard his civil rights, nor remedy any grievance which he, as an individual, may suffer. 1 Inst. 130. And no man, knowing him to be guilty, can with safety give him comfort, aid, or relief. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 19. See 4 Comm. c. 8.

If the defendant be condemned on his default of not appearing, whether at the suit of the king or party, the same judgment shall be given as to the being out of the king's protection and the forfeiture; but instead of the clause, that the body shall remain in prison, there shall be awarded a capiatur. Co. Litt. 129 b; 3 Inst. 125, 218.

A statute, by appointing that an offender shall incur the penalty and danger mentioned in 16 Ric. 2. c. 5. does not confine the prosecution for the offence to the particular process thereby given. 1 Vent. 173.

It is holden, that the statute of præmunire, which gives a general forfeiture of all the lands and tenements of the offender, extends not to lands in tail. Co. Litt. 130.

It is said, the statute of præmunire doth not extend to the forfeiture of rents, annuities, farms, &c. or any other hereditaments that are not within the word terræ. 3 Inst. 126.

This suit need not be by original in B. R.; for if defendant be in custodiâ Marescalli, the suit may be against him by bill; and defendants cannot be sued in any other court when they are in custodiâ Marescalli. And if a defendant come not at the day, &c. or if he appears and pleads, and the issue be found against him, or he demurs in law, &c. judgment shall be given, that he shall be out of protection, &c. 3 Inst. 124.

If tenant in tail is attainted in a præmunire, he shall forfeit his lands only during life; and afterwards the issue in tail shall inherit. 11 Rip. 56.

A person, being seized in fee of lands, was indicted for a præmunire upon 13 Eliz. c. 2; but before conviction he made an entail of his lands, and it was adjudged, that the attainder should relate to the time of the offence, and that was before he entailed the lands, and not the time of the judgment, which was afterwards; and the freehold being in him at the time of the attainder, shall not be divested without an inquisition under the great seal. Cro. Car. 123. 172.

It hath been adjudged, that a pardon of all misprisions, trespasses, offences, and contempts, will pardon a præmunire. Cro. Jac. 336; 2 Bulst. 299.

The defendant in a præmunire must regularly appear in person, whether he be a peer or commoner, unless he is dispensed with by some writ or grant for that purpose; but in the case of Sir Anthony Mildmay, he was allowed to plead a pardon to a præmunire by attorney; but it has been thought, that there was some clause to this effect in the pardon. 3 Inst. 125; 1 Roll. Rep. 190; 2 Bulst. 290.

On an indictment of a præmunire, a peer of the realm shall not be tried by his peers. 12 Co. 92.

On an information on the 6 Geo. 1. c. 18. (now repealed) for setting up a bubble called the South Sea, it was determined that the court was not obliged by that act to give the whole judgment, as in case of a præmunire, against a defendant, but only such parts of it as in their discretions they should think fit; and accordingly a fine of 5*l.* was set on the party convicted, and judgment that he should remain in prison during the king's pleasure. 2 Ld. Raym. 361.

Numerous as the statutes are which denounce the penalties of a præmunire, prosecutions for this offence have been for some time unheard of in our courts. In the State Trials there is only one instance of such a prosecution, in which case the penalties of a præmunire were inflicted upon some persons, for refusing to take the oath of allegiance in the reign of Charles the Second. 2 Harg. St. Tr. 463; 2 Deacon's Crim. Dig. 1053.

PRÆPOSITUS ECCLESIAE. A church reeve, or churchwarden; see that title.

PRÆPOSITUS VILLÆ. Sometimes is used for the constable of a town, or petit constable. Crompt. Jurisd. 205. Yet the same author, 194, seems to apply it otherwise; for there quatuor homines præpositi are those four men, who must appear for every town, before the justices of the forest in their circuit. It is sometimes used for an head or chief officer of the king, in a town, manor, or village, or a reeve. See Receus. Animalia et res inventæ coram ipso (præposito) et sacerdote ducenda erant. LL. Edw. Confessor. cap. 28. This præpositus villæ, in our old records, does not answer to our present constable, or head-borough of a town; but was no more than the reeve, or bailiff of the lord of the manor, sometimes called serviens villæ.

By the laws of Henry I. the lord answered for the town where he was resident; where he was not, his dapifer, or senechal, if he were a baron: but if neither of them could be present, then præpositus et quatuor de unaquodque villa, i. e. the reeve and four of the most substantial inhabitants were summoned. See Brady's Glossary to Introduction to English History, page 57. in voc. Præpositus.

PRAYERS OF THE CHURCH. See Common Prayer.

PREACHING. Every beneficed preacher, residing on his benefice, and having no lawful impediment, shall in his own cure, or some neighbouring church, preach one sermon every Sunday of the year: and if any beneficed person be not allowed to be a preacher, he shall procure sermons to be preached in his cure by licensed preachers; and every Sunday, whereon there shall not be a sermon, he or his curate is to read one of the homilies: no person, not examined and approved by the bishop, or not licensed to preach, shall expound the scripture, &c.; nor shall any be permitted to preach in any church, but such as appear to be authorised thereto, by showing their licence; and churchwardens are to note in a book the names of all strange clergymen who preach in their parish; to which book every preacher is to subscribe his name, the day he preached, and the name of the bishop of whom he had licence to preach. Can. 44, 45. 49.

If any person licensed to preach, refuses to conform to the ecclesiastical laws, after admonition, the licence of every such preacher shall be void: and if any parson preach doctrine contrary to the word of God, or the Articles of Religion, notice is to be given of it to the bishop by the churchwardens, &c. So likewise of matters of contention and impugning the doctrine of other preachers in the same church; in which case, the preacher is not to be suffered to preach, except he faithfully promise to forbear all such matter of contention in the church, until the bishop hath taken further order thereon. Can. 53, 54.

No minister shall preach or administer the sacrament in any private house, unless in times of necessity, as in case of sickness, &c. on pain of suspension for the first offence, and excommunication for the second; which last punishment is also inflicted on such ministers as meet in private houses, to consult on any matter tending to impeach the doctrine of the church of England. Can. 71, &c.

PREAMBLE, [præmiun, from the preposition præ, before, and ambulo, to walk.] The beginning of a statute is called the preamble; which is a key to the intent of the makers of the act, and the mischiefs which they would remedy by the same. See Statute.

The preamble to an act reciting the existence of certain outrages, and making provision against them, is admissible evidence to prove an introductory averment in an information for a libel. 4 M. & S. 532.

PRE-AUDIENCE. In the courts, is of considerable consequence; the following short table of precedence, which usually obtains among counsel, is taken from 3 Comm. c. 3. p. 97. in n.

1. The king's premier serjeant (so constituted by special patent.)
2. The king's ancient serjeant, or the eldest among the king's serjeants.
3. The king's advocate-general.
4. The king's attorney-general.
5. The king's solicitor-general. } But see below.
6. The king's serjeants.
7. The king's counsel, with the queen's attorney and solicitor, and those who have patents of precedence. See Barrister.
8. Serjeants at law.
9. The recorder of London.
10. Advocates of the civil law.
11. Barristers.

By special order of the prince regent, 14th December, 1814, Nos. 4 and 5, now take precedence before Nos. 1 and 2. 6 Taunton, 424.

In the Court of Exchequer, two barristers appointed by the lord chief baron, called the post-man and the rub-rum. (from the places in which they sit,) have also a precedence in motions. See Motion in Court.

PREBEND, [præbenda.] The portion which every prebendary of a cathedral church receives, in right of his place, as one of the chapter of the dean, for his maintenance; as canonica portio is properly used for that share, which every canon receiveth yearly out of the common stock of the church. And præbenda is a several benefice arising from some temporal land, or some church appropriated towards the maintenance of a clerk, or member of a collegiate church; and is commonly named of the place where the profit arises.

Præbenda, strictly taken, is that maintenance which doth præbetur to another; but now it signifies the profits belonging to the church, divided into those portions called præbenda, and is a right of receiving the profits for the duty performed in the church sufficient for the support of the parson in that divine office where he resides. Decret. 11 De Præbend.

The spirituality and temporality make a prebend, but the spirituality is the highest and most worthy; and a person is not a complete prebendary, to make any grant, &c. before installation and induction. Dyer, 221.

Prebends are simple and dignitary.

A simple prebend hath no more than the revenue for its support; but a prebend with dignity hath always a jurisdiction annexed; and for this reason the prebendary is styled a dignitary, and his jurisdiction is gained by prescription.

Prebends are some of them donative; and some are in the gift of laymen; but in such case they must present the prebendary to the bishop, and the dean and chapter inducts him, and places him in a stall in the cathedral church, and then he is said to have locum in choro. At Westminster, the king collates by patent, and, by virtue thereof, the prebendary takes possession without institution or induction. 2 Rot. Abr. 356.

As a prebend is a benefice without cure, &c. a prebend and a parochial benefice are not incompatible promotions; for one man may have both without any avoidance of the first: for though prebendaries are such as have no cure of souls, yet there is a sacred charge incumbent on them in those cathedrals where they are resident, and they are obliged to preach by the canons of the church; and it is not lawful for a prebendary to possess two prebends in one and the same collegiate church. Rot. Abr. 361.

Prebendaries are said to have an estate in fee-simple in right of their churches, as well as bishops of their bishoprics, deans of their deaneries, &c.

Corpus Præbendæ, is that which is received by a prebendary above the profits which are always for his daily maintenance. See further, tits. Chapter, Clergy, Dean.

PREBENDA and PROBANDA were also in old deeds used for provisions, provand or provender. Pro equo suo unum bushel avenarum pro præbenda capiendâ. Coucher Book in Dutchy Office, i. 65. Cowell.

PREBENDARY, præbendarius.] He who hath a prebend; so called, not a præbenda audiendum et consilium episcopo, &c. but from receiving the prebend: and if a manor be the body of a prebend, and is evicted by title paramount, yet the prebend is not destroyed. 3 Rep. 75.

There is a golden prebendary of Hereford, otherwise called præbendarius episcopi, who is one of the twenty eight minor prebendaries there, and has, ex officio, the first canon's place that falls. he was anciently confessarius of the cathedral church, and to the bishop, and had the offerings at the altar; whereby, in respect of the gold commonly given there, he had the name of golden prebendary. Blount.

PRECARIAL. Days-works, which tenants of some manors were bound, by reason of their tenure, to do for their lord in harvest; and, in divers places, are still vulgarly called bond days for bond-days, which, in the Saxon, die præcarie sunt. For ladden is to pray or intercede. This custom is plainly set forth in the great book of the Customs of the Monastery of Battle, tit. Appellerham, fol. 60. Cowell.

PRECEDENCE. The commonalty of the realm, like the nobility, are divided into several degrees; and as the Lords, though different in rank, yet all of them are peers in respect of their nobility; so the commoners, though some are greatly superior to others, yet all are in law peers, in respect of their want of nobility. 2 Inst. 29. See 1 Comm. c. 12.

The rules of precedence, in England, are reduced by Blackstone to the following table:—in which those marked * are entitled to the rank here allotted them, by 1 H. 8. c. 10,—those marked †, by 1 H. 8. c. 10,—those marked ‡, by letters-patent 2, 10, and 11 H. 1. c. 1, which see in Sidd. Tr. of Hon. 11. c. 4, and 11. c. 11,—those marked §, by ancient usage and established custom, for which see (among others) Canden's Britannia, tit. Ordines, Mills's Catalogue of H. 11. edit. 1610, and Chamberlayne's Present State of England, b. 3. c. 3.

PRECEDENT CONDITIONS. See Condition, IV.

PRECEDENTS. Authorities to follow in determinations in courts of justice.

Precedents have always been greatly regarded by the sages of the law. The precedents of the courts are said to be the laws of the courts; and the court will not reverse a judgment, contrary to many precedents. 4 Rep. 93; Cro. Eliz. 65; 2 Inst. Abr. 314. But new precedents are not considerable; precedents without judicial decision on argument are of no moment; and an extrajudicial opinion given in or out of court, is no good precedent. Vaugh. 169, 382, 399, 429.

It has been held that there can be no precedent in matters of equity, as equity is universal truth; but, according to Lord Keeper Bridgman, precedents are necessary in equity to find out the reasons thereof for a guide; and, besides the authority of those who made them, it is to be supposed they did it on great consideration, and it would be strange to set aside what has been the course for a long series of time. 1 Mod. 307. If a man doubt whether a case be equitable, or no, in prudence he will determine as the precedents have been; especially if made by men of good authority and learning. Ibid. See Chancery, Equity.

Lord C. Talbot said, he thought it much better to stick to the known general rules, than to follow any one particular precedent, which may be founded on reasons unknown to us. Such a proceeding would confound all property. Cases in Chan. in Talbot's Time, 26, 27, 196.

PRECE PARTIUM. When a suit is continued by the prayer, assent, or agreement of both parties. See 13 Ed. 1. st. 1. c. 27.

PRECEPT, præceptum.] Is diversely taken in law; as sometimes for a command in writing by a justice of peace, or other officer, for bringing a person or records before him; of which there are many examples in the table of the Register Judicial. And in this sense it seems to be borrowed from the customs of Lombardy, where præceptum significeth scriptura vel instrumentum. Notom. in verb. Feudal. & lib. 3. Commenta. in Libros Feudor' in Præfatione. Sometimes it is taken for the provocation, whereby one man incites another to commit a felony, as theft, murder, &c. Stamdf. Pl. Cor. 105; Bracton, lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 9, calls it præceptum or mandatum. Whence we may observe three divisions of offending in murder, præceptum, fortia, consilium; præceptum being the instigation used beforehand; fortia the assistance in the fact, as to help to bind the party murdered or robbed; consilium, advice either before or in the fact. The civilians use mandatum in this case. Concil.

PRE-CONTRACT, mentioned in 2 & 3 Edw. 6. c. 23.] A contract made before another contract; the term hath relation especially to marriage. See Marriage.

PREDIAL TITHES, decimæ prædiales.] Are those which are paid of things arising and growing from the ground only, as corn, hay, fruit of trees, and such like. See 2 & 3 Edw. 6. c. 13; 2 Inst. 649; 2 Comm. c. 3; and tit. Tithes.

PRE-EMPTION, præ-emptio.] The first buying of a thing; it was a privilege heretofore allowed the king's purveyor, but abolished by 12 Car. 2. c. 24. See Purveyance.

PREGNANCY, plea of.] Where a woman is capitally convicted, and pleads her pregnancy, though this is no cause to stay the judgment, yet it is to respite the execution till she is delivered. See Execution of Criminals.

PREMISES, or PREMISSES. That part in the beginning of a deed, the office of which is to express the grantor and grantee, and the land, or thing granted or conveyed. 5 Rep. 55. See Conveyance; Deed, II.

No person, not named in the premises, can take any thing by the deed, though he be afterwards named in the habendum, because the premises of the deed make the gift; therefore, when the lands are given to one in the premises, the habendum cannot give any share of them to another, because that would be to retract the gift made and consequently, to make a deed repugnant in itself. Thus, for instance, if a charter of feoffment be made between A. of the one part, and B. and D. of the other part, and A. gives land to B. habendum to B. and D. and their heirs; D. takes nothing by the habendum, because all the lands were given to B., consequently D. cannot hold those lands which are given before to another; but in this case, if the habendum had been to B. and D. and their heirs, to the use of B. and D.; this had been a good limitation of a use; consequently, the statute of uses would carry the possession to the use, and B. and D. thereby become joint-tenants. Co. Lit. 6 a; 9 Co. 47 b; Hob. 275, 313; 2 Rol. Abr. 65; Cro. Jac. 564; Cro. Eliz. 58; 13 Co. 54; Poph. 126.

If lands be given to a husband, habendum to him and his wife, and to the heirs of their two bodies, the wife takes nothing, because she was not mentioned in the premises; therefore shall take nothing of that which was before given entirely to her husband. 2 Rol. Abr. 67.

But there are four exceptions to this rule: 1. If the lands be given in frank-marriage, the woman, who is the cause of the gift, may take by the habendum, though she be not named in the premises; as if lands be given to J. S., habendum maritagium und cum the woman who is daughter of the donor, this is a good estate in frank-marriage to them both; because the gift being totally on her account, it is necessary to the creation of the estate in the husband that the wife should take. Co. Litt. 21; Plowd. 158; Cro. Jac. 456; Poph. 126; 2 Rol. Abr. 67.

2. In grants of copy of court-roll; as if a copy-holder surrenders to his lord, without limiting any use, and then the lord grants it in this manner; J. S. cepit de Domino, habendum to the said J. S. and his wife, and the heirs of their bodies begotten, this is a good estate-tail in the wife; for these customary grants that are made in pursuance of a former surrender, are construed according to the intention of the parties, as wills are; besides, the custom of the manor is the rule for the exposition of such sorts of grants, and, in many manors, such form is usual. Poph. 126, 126; Cro. Jac. 434; 2 Rol. Abr. 67; Cro. Eliz. 323.

3. A man not named in the premises may take an estate in remainder by limitation in the habendum. 2 Rol. Abr. 68; Hob. 319; Cro. Jac. 564.

4. In wills; for if a man devises lands to J. S. habendum to him and his wife, this is a good devise to the wife; because, in construction of wills, the intention of the deviser is chiefly regarded; and wherever that discovers itself it shall take place, though it be not expressed in those legal forms that are required in conveyances executed in a man's life. Plowd. 158, 414; 2 Rol. Abr. 68.

PREMIUM, præmium.] A reward. Among merchants it is used for the money the insured gives the insurer for insuring the safe return of any ship or merchandise. See Insurance.

PRENDER. The power or right of taking a thing before it is offered; from the French prendre, i. e. accipere; hence the phrase of law, it lies in render, but not in prender. Rep. 1.

PRENDER DE BARON, to take a husband.] It was used for an exception to disable a woman from pursuing an appeal of murder, against one who had killed her former husband. St. P. C. lib. 3. c. 59.

PREPENSED, præpensus.] Forethought; as prepensed malice is malitia præcogitata, which makes killing murder; and when a man is slain on a sudden quarrel, if there were malice prepensed formerly between the parties, it is murder, or as it is called by the statute, prepensed murder. See Homicide, III. 3.

PREROGATIVE, from præ and rogo, to ask or demand, before or above others.] A word of large extent, including all the rights which, by law, the king hath as chief of the kingdom, and as intrusted with the execution of the laws. The king, by virtue of his prerogative, is exempted from the payment of taxes collected personally from the subject, and not mingled with the price of the commodity, before it is known by whom it is to be made use of; therefore an express assent upon government service is not liable to pay the post-borne duty. 3 East's Rep. K. B. 519.

A palace being kept in a constant state of preparation to receive the king, with his officers and guards residing and doing duty there at all times, and some of the royal family having apartments there, is privileged as a royal palace against the intrusion of the sheriff for the purpose of executing process against the goods of a person having the use of certain apartments there. 10 East's Rep. 578. See further, ut King, V.

PREROGATIVE COURT, Curia Prærogativa Archiepiscopi Cantuariensis.] The court wherein all wills are proved, and all administrations taken which belong to the archbishop by his prerogative; that is, in case where the deceased had goods of any considerable value out of the diocese wherein he died; and that value is ordinarily 5*l.* except it be otherwise by composition between the archbishop and some other bishop, as in the diocese of London it is 10*l.*; and if any contention grow between two or more, touching such will or administration, the cause is properly decided in this court, the judge whereof is termed Judex Curie Prærogativæ Cantuariensis, the Judge of the Prerogative Court of Canterbury. See Courts Ecclesiastical; Will.

The archbishop of York hath also the like court, which is termed his exchequer, but inferior to this in power and profit. 4 Inst. 335. As to the prerogative of the archbishop of Canterbury or York, see the book intitled De Antiquitate Britannicæ Ecclesiæ Cantuariensis Historia, especially the eighth chapter, p. 25. Cowell.

PRESBYTER. A priest, elder, or honourable person. Indori. lib. 7.

PRESBYTERIUM. A presbytery, that part of the church where divine offices are performed, applied to the choir or chancel, because it was the place appropriated to the bishop, priest, and other clergy; while the laity were confined to the body of the church. Mon. Ang. i. 243.

PRESBYTERIAN. A member of the Church of Scotland. See Dissenters, Nonconformists.

PREScription,

PRESCRIPTION.] A title acquired by use and time, and allowed by law; as when a man claims any thing because he, his ancestors, or they whose estate he hath, have had or used it all the time whereof no memory is to the contrary; or it is where for continuance of time, ultra memoriam hominum, a particular person hath a particular right against another. Kitch. 104; Co. Litt. 114; 4 Rep. 32.

According to Lord Coke, prescriptio est titulus ex usu et tempore substantiam capiens ab auctoritate legis. 1 Inst. 113 b. And a prescription must have a lawful commencement, and peaceable possession and time are inseparably incident to it. Co. Litt. 113.

Blackstone classes title by prescription among the methods of acquiring real property by purchase; as when a man claims no other title to what he claims than that he, and those under whom he claims, have immemorially used to enjoy it.

Every species of prescription by which property is acquired or lost, is founded on this presumption, that he who has a quiet and uninterrupted possession of any thing for a certain number of years, is supposed to have a just right, without which he would not have been suffered to continue in the enjoyment of it; for a long possession may be considered as a better title than can commonly be produced, as it supposes an acquiescence in all other claimants, and that acquiescence also supposes some reason for which the claim is forborne. 1 Domat. 461.

As to customs or immemorial usages in general, with the several requisites and rules to be observed, in order to prove their existence and validity, see Custom.

I. Of the Distinction between a Prescription and a Custom or Usage, and who may prescribe.

II. What sort of things may be prescribed for.

III. For what length of time a Prescription must be claimed.

IV. How Prescriptive Rights may be lost.

I. CUSTOM is properly a local usage, and not annexed to any person; such as a custom in the manor of Dale, that lands shall descend to the youngest son. Prescription is merely a personal usage; as, that such an one and his ancestors, or those whose estate he hath, have used time out of mind to have such an advantage or privilege. 1 Inst. 113. As for example: If there be an usage in the parish of Dale that all the inhabitants of that parish may dance on a certain close at all times for their recreation (which is held to be a lawful usage, 1 Lev. 176; see post, II.), this is strictly a custom, for it is applied to the place in general, and not to any particular persons; but if the tenant, who is seised of the manor of Dale in fee, alleges that he and his ancestors, or all those whose estate he hath in the said manor, have used time out of mind to have common of pasture in such a close, this is properly called a prescription; for this is an usage annexed to the person of the owner of his estate. 2 Comm. c. 17.

The difference between prescription, custom, and usage, is also thus stated: Prescription hath respect to a certain person, who by intendment may have continuance for ever; as, for instance, he and all they whose estate he hath in such a thing, this is a prescription.

Custom is local, and always applied to a certain place; as, time out of mind there has been such a custom in such a place, &c. And prescription belongeth to one or a few only; but custom is common to all. Usage differs from both, for it may be either to persons or places; as to inhabitants of a town, to have a way, &c. 2 Nels. Abr. 1277.

A custom and prescription are in the right; usage is in possession; and a prescription that is good for the matter and substance, may be bad by the manner of setting it forth; but where that which is claimed as a custom, in or for many, will be good, that regularly will be so when claimed by prescription for one. Godb. 54.

All prescription must be either in a man and his ancestors, or in a man and those whose estate he hath; which last is called prescribing in a quo estate. 4 Rep. 32.

Prescriptions properly are personal, therefore are always alleged in the person of him who prescribes; viz. that he, his ancestors, or all those whose estate he hath, &c.; or of a body politic or corporation, they and their predecessors, &c. Also a person may prescribe, quod ipse et predecessores sui, and all they whose estate, &c.; for there is a perpetual estate, and a perpetual succession, and the successor hath the very same estate which his predecessor had, which continues, though the person alters, like the case of ancestor and heir. 3 Salk. 279.

Previous to the recent act of the 2 & 3 Wm. 4. c. 71. a prescription must always have been laid in him that was tenant of the fee. A tenant for life, for years, at will, or a copyholder, could not prescribe, by reason of the imbecility of their estates. 4 Rep. 31, 32. For as prescription was deemed usage beyond time of memory, it was absurd that they should pretend to prescribe for any thing whose estates commenced within the remembrance of man. And therefore the copyholder must have prescribed under cover of his lord's estate, and the tenant for life under cover of the tenant in fee-simple. As, if tenant for life of a manor would prescribe for a right of common as appurtenant to the same, he must have prescribed under cover of the tenant in fee-simple, and have pleaded that John Stiles and his ancestors had immemorially used to have this right of commons appurtenant to the said manor, and that John Stiles demised the said manor, with its appurtenances, to him the said tenant for life. 2 Comm. c. 17.

Now by the fifth section of the above act it is no longer necessary to claim in the name of the owner of the fee. See post.

Where a person would have a thing that lies in grant by prescription, he must prescribe in himself and his ancestors, whose heir he is by descent; not in himself and those whose estate, &c. (unless the que estate is but a conveyance to the thing claimed by prescription); for he cannot have their estate that lies in grant without deed, which ought to be shown to the court. Co. Litt. 113.

Parishioners cannot generally prescribe, but they may allege a custom; and inhabitants may prescribe in a matter of easement, way to a church, burying-place, &c. 2 Saund. 325; 1 Lev. 253; Cro. Eliz. 441; Cro. Car. 419; 2 Rol. 290.

A custom for all the inhabitants of a parish to play at all kinds of lawful games, sports, and pastimes, in a certain close, at all seasonable times of the year, at their free will and pleasure, is good. But a similar custom for all persons, for the time being in the said parish, is bad. 2 H. Black. Rep. 393. See post, II.

A prescription may be laid in several persons, where it tends only to matters of easement or discharge; though not where it goes to matter of interest or profit in alieno solo, for that is a title, and the title of one doth not concern the other; therefore several men, having several estates, cannot join in making a prescription. 1 Mod. 74; 3 Mod. 250.

Where a man prescribes for a way to such a close, he must show what interest he hath in the close. Aliter, if he prescribes for a way to such a field; because that may be a common field by intendment. Latch. 160.

Plaintiff declared that the occupiers of the adjoining field have, time out of mind, repaired the fences, which being out of repair, his beasts escaped out of his own ground and fell into a pit; it is good, without showing any estate in the occupiers; but it had not been so if the defendant had prescribed. 1 Ventr. 264.

It should seem that a prescription by the owner of land, adjoining to a wood, to take underwood there growing to repair the fence belonging to the wood, is not good; for of common right the making of the hedge doth appertain to the owner of the wood; and the prescription is no more than to take wood in the lands of another, to make the hedges of the same land in which the wood groweth, which cannot be a good prescription, for it sounds only in charge, and not to the profit of him who prescribes. 1 Leon. 313.

Estates gained by prescription are not of course descendible to the heirs general, like other purchased estates, but are an exception to the rule. For, properly speaking, the prescription is rather to be considered as an evidence of a former acquisition, than as an acquisition de novo; and therefore if a man prescribes for a right of way in himself and his ancestors, it will descend only to the blood of that line of ancestors in whom he so prescribes; the prescription in this case being indeed a species of descent. But if he prescribes for it in a que estate, it will follow the nature of that estate in which the prescription is laid, and be inheritable in the same manner, whether that were acquired by descent or purchase; for every accessory followeth the nature of its principal. 2 Comm. c. 17. p. 266.

II. NOTHING but incorporeal hereditaments can be claimed by prescription; as a right of way, a common, &c.; but no prescription can give a title to lands and other corporeal substances, of which more certain evidence may be had. Dr. & St. Dial. 1. c. 8; Finch. 152. For a man shall not be said to prescribe that he and his ancestors have immemorially used to hold the castle of Arundel; for this is clearly another sort of a title; a title by corporal seisin and inheritance, which is more permanent, and therefore more capable of proof than that of prescription. But as to a right of way, a common, or the like, a man may be allowed to prescribe, for of these there is no corporal seisin, the enjoyment will be frequently by intervals, and therefore the right to enjoy them can depend on nothing else but immemorial usage. See Common Pew, &c.

A prescription cannot be for a thing which cannot be raised by grant; for the law allows prescription only in supply of the loss of a grant, and therefore every prescription presupposes a grant to have existed. Thus the lord of a manor cannot prescribe to raise a tax or toll upon strangers; for as such claim could never have been good by any grant, it shall not be good by prescription. 1 Ventr. 387.

A grant may enure as a confirmation of a prescription; and the prescription continue unaltered by a new charter, &c. where the charter is not contrary to the prescription. Moor. 818, 830. But in some cases it is intended that a prescription shall begin by grant; and as to prescriptions in general, the law supposes a grant or purchase originally. Cro. Eliz. 709; Co. Litt. 113.

What is to arise by matter of record cannot be prescribed for, but must be claimed by grant, entered on record; such as, for instance, the royal franchises of deadlands, felons goods, and the like. These not being forfeited till the matter on which they arise is found by the inquisition of a jury, and so made a matter of record, the forfeiture itself cannot be claimed by any inferior title. But the franchises of treasure-trove, waifs, estrays, and the like, may be claimed by prescription; for they arise by private contingencies, and not from any matter of record. Co. Litt. 114. See Franchises.

Among things incorporeal which may be claimed by prescription a distinction must be made with regard to the manner of prescribing; that is, whether a man shall prescribe in a que estate, or in himself and his ancestors. For if a man prescribe in a que estate (that is, in himself and those whose estate he holds), nothing is claimable by this prescription but such things as are incident, appendant, or appurtenant to lands; for it would be absurd to claim any thing as the consequence or appendix of an estate with which the thing claimed has no connexion; but if he prescribe in himself and his ancestors, he may prescribe for any thing whatsoever that lies in grant; not only things that are appurtenant, but also such as may be in gross. Litt. § 153; Finch. L. 134. Therefore a man may prescribe, that he, and those whose estate he hath in the manor of Dale, have used to hold the advowson of Dale as appendant to that manor; but if the advowson be a distinct inheritance, and not appendant, then he can only prescribe in his ancestors. So also a man may prescribe in a que estate for a common appurtenant to a manor; but if he would prescribe for a common in gross, he must prescribe in himself and his ancestors. 2 Comm. c. 17.

A person may make title by prescription to an office, a fair, market, toll, way, water, rent, common, park, warren, franchise, court-leet, waifs, estrays, &c. But no person can prescribe against an act of parliament, or against the public good, religion, &c. Nor can one prescription be pleaded against another, unless the first is answered or traversed; or where one may stand with the other. Lutw. 381; Raym. 232; 2 Rol. Abr. 264; 2 Inst. 167; 7 Rep. 28; Cro. Car. 432; 1 Bulst. 115; 2 Lil. 346.

The word easement is a genus to several species of liberties which one may have in the soil of another, without claiming any interest in the land itself; but where the thing set forth is a prescription was to catch fish in the water of another, &c. and no instance could be given of a prescription for such a liberty by the word easement, a rule was made to set the prescription right, and to try the merits. 1 Med. 302. See further, tit. Easement.

In trespass for breaking the plaintiff's close, the defendant prescribed that the inhabitants of such a place, time out of mind, had used to dance there at all times of the year for their recreation, and so justified; issue being taken on this prescription, defendant had a verdict: it was objected against it, that a prescription to dance in the freehold of another, and spoil his grass, was ill, especially as laid in the defendant's plea, viz. at all times of the year, and not at seasonable times, and for all the inhabitants, who, though they may prescribe in easements which are necessary, as a way to a church, &c. they cannot in easements for pleasure only; but adjudged that the prescription is good, issue being taken on it, and found for the defendant, although it might have been in demurrer. 1 Lev. 175. See ante, I.

A custom that the farmers of such a farm have always found ale, &c. to such a value, at perambulations, was held bought, because it is no more than a prescription in occupiers, which is not good in matter to charge the land. 2 Lev. 161.

Prescription by the inhabitants of a parish to dig gravel in such a pit, the soil of W. R., it was doubted whether this was good or not, though it was to repair the highway; but the inhabitants may prescribe for a way, and, by consequence, for necessary materials to repair it. 2 Lutw. 1346. Sed quid? And see Gatewood's case, 6 Co. 60. where prescription for common for every inhabitant of an ancient messuage in a parish is held not to be good.

Defendant pleaded that within such a parish all occupiers of a certain close habent, et habere consueverunt, a way leading over the plaintiff's close to the defendant's house; this was held ill, for it is not like a prescription to a way to the church or market, which are necessary, et pro bono publico. 2 Ventr. 186.

A man may claim a fold-course, and exclude the owner of the soil by prescription. 1 Saund. 153. But a diversity of opinion is taken where a prescription takes away the whole benefit of the close of the land; and where a particular profit is reserved; in one case it is good, in the other void. 1 Leon. 11.

If a person prescribes for common appurtenant, it is ill, unless it be for cattle levant et couchant, &c. And the reason is, because by such a prescription the party claims only some part of the pasture, and the quantum is ascertained by the levant et couchant, the rest being left to the owner of the soil; therefore, if he who thus prescribes should put more cattle than are levant et couchant on his tenement, it is a trespasser. Noy, 145; 2 Saund. 324.

A prescription to have common, the jury found it to be, paying every year a penny. Here the prescription is entire, and the payment of one penny is parcel; which ought to be entirely alleged in the prescription in the plea, or it will be ill. Cro. Eliz. 563, 564. But where the payment is a toll, it is good from the prescription, a prescription may be good without alleging it. Cro. Eliz. 405.

Common for cattle levant et couchant, or a right of common without stint, cannot be claimed by prescription, as appurtenant to a house without any curtilage or land. 5 T. R. 390.

It was a question, whether a toll, independent of markets and fairs, might be claimed by prescription, without showing that the subject hath some benefit; and some arguments were brought for it, from an authority in Dyer, 352. Though by Holt, this prescription cannot be good, because there was no recompense for it; and every prescription to charge the subject with a duty, must import some benefit to him who pays it; or else some reason must be shown why the duty is claimed. 4 Mod. 319.

A prescription for toll, in respect of goods sold in a market by sample, and afterwards brought into the city to be delivered, cannot be supported. 4 Taunt. 410.

A court-leet is derived out of the hundred; and if a man claims a title to the leet, he may prescribe that he and his ancestors, and all those whose estate he hath in the hundred, time out of mind, had a leet. Co. Litt. 125.

There may be a prescription for a court to hold pleas of all actions, and for any sum or damage; and it will be good. Jenk. Cent. 327. If a court held by prescription is granted and confirmed by letters-patent, this doth not destroy the prescription; but it is said the court may be held by prescription as before. 2 Rol. Abr. 271.

He had a manor in Lucy, in order to establish an exclusive right of cutting sea-weed on rocks below low watermark, must prove either a grant from the king, or the exclusive possession of such privilege for so long a time as to confer on him a title by prescription. The possession required to establish a prescription must be long, continued, and peaceable, by the laws of England, the civil law, and those of Norway, France, and Jersey. Knapp. 50.

Every prescription is taken strictly; and a man ought not to prescribe to that which the law, of common right, gives. 3 Leon. 13; Noy, 20.

III. Previous to the act of the 2 & 3 Wm. 4. c. 71. to constitute a prescription, the enjoyment must have existed time out of mind, or in other words, must have commenced antecedent to the reign of Richard I. Bract. l. 2. c. 22; 3 Lev. 160; 1 Comm. 75; 2 Id. 263. But in order to prevent disputes as to rights which had been long and peaceably enjoyed, the courts interpreted an enjoyment of an incorporeal right for even twenty years as presumptive evidence that the right had existed time out of mind, and consequently that period was held a sufficient foundation for establishing a prescriptive right, unless its origin could be proved. 10 East, 476; 2 Brod. & Bing. 403; Comp. 215; 2 Wils. 23.

By the above statute, intituled "An Act for shortening the Time of Prescription in certain Cases," the first section, after reciting that "the expression 'time immemorial, or time whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary,' is now by the law of England in many cases considered to include and denote the whole period of time from the reign of King Richard I. whereby the title to matters that have been long enjoyed is sometimes defeated by showing the commencement of such enjoyment, which is in many cases productive of inconvenience and injustice, enacts, "that no claim which may be lawfully made at the common law, by custom, prescription, or grant, to any right of common or other profit or benefit to be taken and enjoyed from or upon any land of our sovereign lord the king, his heirs or successors, or any land being parcel of the duchy of Lancaster or of the duchy of Cornwall, or of any ecclesiastical or lay person, or body corporate, except such matters and things as are therein specially provided for, and except tithes, rent, and services, shall, where such right, profit, or benefit shall have been actually taken and enjoyed by any person claiming right thereto without interruption for the full period of thirty years, be defeated or destroyed by showing only that such right, profit, or benefit was first taken or enjoyed at any time prior to such period of thirty years, but nevertheless such claim may be defeated in any other way by which the same is now liable to be defeated; and when such right, profit, or benefit shall have been so taken and enjoyed as aforesaid for the full period of sixty years, the right thereto shall be deemed absolute."

lute and indefeasible, unless it shall appear that the same was taken and enjoyed by some consent or agreement expressly made or given for that purpose by deed or writing."

By § 2. "no claim which may be lawfully made at the common law, by custom, prescription, or grant, to any way or other easement, or to any watercourse, or the use of any water, to be enjoyed or derived upon, over, or from any land or water of our said lord the king, his heirs or successors, or being parcel of the duchy of Lancaster or of the duchy of Cornwall, or being the property of any ecclesiastical or lay person, or body corporate, when such way or other matter as herein last before mentioned shall have been actually enjoyed by any person claiming right thereto without interruption for the full period of twenty years, shall be defeated or destroyed by showing only that such way or other matter was first enjoyed at any time prior to such period of twenty years, but nevertheless such claim may be defeated in any other way by which the same is now liable to be defeated; and where such way or other matter as herein last before mentioned shall have been so enjoyed as aforesaid for the full period of forty years, the right thereto shall be deemed absolute and indefeasible, unless it shall appear that the same was enjoyed by some consent or agreement expressly given or made for that purpose by deed or writing."

For the third section of the act, relating to the use of light, see Lights.

§ 4. Each of the respective periods of years therein-before mentioned shall be deemed to be the period next before some suit or action wherein the claim or matter to which such period may relate shall be brought into question, and that no act shall be an interruption, within the meaning of the statute, unless the same shall have been submitted to or acquiesced in for one year after the party interrupted shall have had notice thereof, and of the person making or authorizing the same.

§ 5. In all actions upon the case and other pleadings, wherein the party claiming may now by law allege his right generally, without averring the existence of such right from time immemorial, such general allegation shall still be sufficient, and if the same shall be denied, all the matters in the act mentioned and provided, applicable to the case, shall be admissible in evidence to sustain or rebut such allegation; and in all pleadings to actions of trespass, and in all other pleadings wherein before the act it would have been necessary to allege the right to have existed from time immemorial, it shall be sufficient to allege the enjoyment thereof as of right by the occupiers of the tenement in respect whereof the same is claimed for such of the periods mentioned in the act as may be applicable to the case, and without claiming in the name or right of the owner of the fee, as is now usually done; and if the other party shall intend to rely on any proviso, exception, incapacity, disability, contract, agreement, or other matter therein-before mentioned, or on any cause or matter of fact or of law not inconsistent with the simple fact of enjoyment, the same shall be specially alleged and set forth in answer to the allegation of the party claiming, and shall not be received in evidence on any general traverse or denial of such allegation.

§ 6. In the several cases mentioned in and provided for by the act, no presumption shall be allowed or made in support of any claim, upon proof of the exercise or enjoyment of the right or matter claimed for any less period of time or number of years than for such period or number mentioned in the act as may be applicable to the case and to the nature of the claim.

§ 7. provided, that the time during which any person otherwise capable of resisting any claim to any of the matters before mentioned shall have been or shall be an infant, idiot, non compos mentis, feme covert, or tenant for life, or during which any action or suit shall have been pending, and which shall have been diligently prosecuted, until abated by the death of any party or parties thereto, shall be excluded in the computation of the periods herein-before mentioned, except only in cases where the right or claim is thereby declared to be absolute and indefeasible.

§ 8. provided, that when any land or water upon, over, or from which any such way or other convenient watercourse or use of water shall have been enjoyed or derived hath been or shall be held under any term of life, or any term of years exceeding three years from the granting thereof, the time of the enjoyment of any such way or other matter as therein last before mentioned, during the continuance of such term, shall be excluded in the computation of the said period of forty years, in case the claim shall within three years next after the end or sooner determination of such term be resisted by any person entitled to any reversion expectant on the determination thereof.

The act does not extend to Scotland or Ireland. As to prescriptions of modus decimandi, see Tithes.

IV. Formerly a man might, by the common law, have prescribed for a right which had been enjoyed by his ancestors or predecessors at any distance of time, though his or their enjoyment of it had been suspended for an indefinite series of years. Co. Litt. 113. But by the statute of limitations, 32 Hen. 8. c. 2, it is enacted that no persons shall make any prescription by the seisin or possession of his ancestor or predecessor, unless such seisin or possession hath been within threescore years next before such prescription made.

And the remedy for such rights, so far as it depends upon real actions, is further abridged by the abolition of real actions by the 3 & 4 Wm. 4. c. 27. § 36. See Limitation of Actions, II. 1.

Where a profit of any kind, to be taken out of lands, has not been taken for a vast number of years, and the lands have been enjoyed without yielding it to a third person, the consequence is, that the title to such profit, whatever its nature shall be presumed to be, is discharged. 3 Blgh. 215. But a title gained by prescription or custom, is not lost by mere interruption of possession for ten or twenty years, unless there be an interruption of the right, as by unity of possession of right of common, and the land charged therewith of an estate equally high and perdurable in both. Co. Litt. 114 b. An unity of possession merely suspends, there must be an unity of ownership to destroy a prescriptive right. Canham v. Fisk, 2 Cr. & Jerv. 186. Thus if a person, having a right of common by prescription, takes a lease of the land for twenty years, whereby the common is suspended, he may, after the determination of the lease, claim the common again by prescription, for the suspension was only of the enjoyment, not of the right. Co. Litt. 113 b. A prescriptive right may be lost by the destruction of the subject-matter; 4 Rep. 88; but not by an alteration of the quality of the thing to which a prescription is annexed. Hob. 394 Rep. 86 a, 87 a. An ancient grant, without date, does not necessarily destroy a prescriptive right; for it might be either before time of memory, or in confirmation of such prescriptive right, which is matter to be left to a jury. 2 Bl Rep. 989. It seems that a release of a right of way, or a right of common, will not be presumed by mere non-user for a less period than twenty years, although it is otherwise as to lights. Moore v. Rawson, 3 B. & Cr. 339. See Lights.

The right to hold courts for the determination of civil suits, granted by the king's charter to the stewards and suitors of a court of ancient demesne, was held not to be lost by a non-user of fifty years. 5 B. & A. 691; Id. 692 n.

Formerly a prescription could not run against the king, fr nullum tempus occurrit regi. 2 Roll. 264. 1. 40; Comm Dig Prescription, F. 1. And liberties and franchises were excepted in the 9 Geo. 3. c. 16. limiting the claims of the crown for sixty years; but see the 32 Geo. 3. c. 58. The recent statute of the 2 & 3 Wm. 4. c. 71. it will be seen, applies equally to the crown as to the subject.

PRESENCE. Sometimes the presence of a superior magistrate takes away the power of an inferior. 9 Rep. 118. And the presence of one may serve for all the feoffees or grantees, &c. 3 Rep. 26. When the presence of a man in the place where an offence is done, may make him guilty, see Accessary.

PRESENTATION, presentatio] The act of a patron, offering his clerk to the bishop of the diocese, to be instituted in a church or benefice of his gift, which has become void. See Advocatus, Patron.

PRESENTEE. The clerk presented to a church by the patron. In 13 Rich. 2. st. 1. c. 1. the king's presenter is he whom the king presents to a benefice.

PRESENTMENT. The old term for presentation to a church. See that title.

In its more modern and now usual sense it signifies a denunciation of jurors, or some officers, &c. (without any information, of an offence, inquirable in the court where it is presented. Lamb. Eiren. lib. 4. c. 5. Or it may be defined to be an information made by the jury in a court, before a judge who hath authority to punish an offence. 2 Inst. 79.

The presentment is drawn up in English by the jury, and differs from an indictment in that an indictment is drawn up at large, and brought engrossed to the grand jury to find. 1 Litt. Abr. 353.

A presentment, generally taken, is a very comprehensive term; including not only presentments, properly so called, but also inquisitions of office, and indictments by a grand jury. A presentment, properly speaking, is the notice taken by a grand jury of any offence from their own knowledge or observation, without any bill or indictment laid before them, at the suit of the king. Lamb. Eiren. lib. 4. c. 5. As to the presentment of a nuisance, a libel, and the like; upon which the officer of the court must afterwards frame an indictment before the party presented can be put to answer it. 2 Inst. 739. An inquisition of office is the act of a jury, summoned by the proper officer to inquire of matters relating to the crown, upon evidence laid before them. See Inquest. Some of these are in themselves convictions, and cannot afterwards be traversed or denied; and therefore the inquest or jury ought to hear all that can be alleged on both sides. Of this nature are all inquisitions of felo de se; and formerly of felo in persons accused of felony; of deodands, and the like; and presentments of petty officers in the sheriff's tourn or court-leet, whereupon the presiding officer may set a fine. Other inquisitions may be afterwards traversed or examined; as particularly the coroner's inquisition of the death of a man, when he finds any one guilty of homicide; for in such cases the offender so presented must be arraigned upon this inquest, and may dispute the truth of it, which brings it to a kind of indictment.

There are also presentments of justices of peace in their sessions of offences against statutes, in order to their punishment in superior courts; and presentments taken before commissioners of sewers, &c. Presentments are made in courts-leet and courts-baron, before stewards; and in the latter of surcintors, grants, &c. Also by constables, churchwardens, surveyors of the highways, &c. of things belonging to their offices. See Cophold, Surrender.

By the 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 38. after the passing of that act no petty constable shall be required at any petty sessions or elsewhere to make, nor shall any high constable be required at any general gaol delivery, great sessions, or general or quarter sessions of the peace in England, to deliver any presentment respecting —

PRESIDENT, præsides.] The king's lieutenant in any province; as President of Wales, &c.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL. Is the fourth great officer of state. See Precedence. He is as ancient as the reign of King John; and hath sometimes been called Principalis Consiliarius, and other times Capitalis Consiliarius. During the reign of Queen Elizabeth the office remained dormant. It appears to have been exercised in the reign of James I. and was revived by Charles II. See Privy Council.

The office of president of the council has been always granted by letters-patent under the great seal durante bene placito, and this officer is to attend on the king, to propose business at the council-table; and report to his majesty the transactions there; also he may associate the lord chancellor, treasurer, and privy seal, at naming of sheriffs; and all other acts limited by any statute, to be done by them. 21 Hen. 8. c. 20. PRESSING for the sea-service. See Impressing Seamen.

PRESSING TO DEATH. See Mute.

PRIEST. A duty in money that was to be paid by the sheriff on his account, in the exchequer, or for money left or remaining in his hands. See 2 & 3 Edw. 6. c. 4.

PRESTATION-MONEY, præstatia, a paying or performing.] Is a sum of money paid by archdeacons yearly to their bishop pro exteriore jurisdictione—Et sunt quatuor à præstatione muragii. Chart. Hen. 7. Burgens. Mount-Gomer. Præstatia was also anciently used for purveyance. See Philip's book on that subject, p. 222.

PREST-MONEY, from the French prest, promptus, expeditus; for that it binds those who receive to be ready at all times appointed, being meant commonly of soldiers. See 18 Hen. 6. c. 19; 7 Hen. 7. c. 1; 2 & 3 Edw. 6. c. 2.

PRESUMPTIO. Was anciently taken for intrusion, or the unlawful seizing of any thing. Leg. Hen. 1. c. 11.

PRESUMPTION, presumptio.] A supposition, opinion, or belief previously formed. Co. Litt. 6, 375; Wood's Inst. 599.

Though presumption is what may be doubted of, yet it shall be accounted truth, if the contrary be not proved. 2 Litt. Abr. 354. But no presumptions ought to be admitted against the presumption of law, and wrong shall never be presumed. Co. Litt. 232, 273.

Where the law intrusts persons with the execution of a power, the court will presume in favour of their execution of that power; though if they make a false return, whereby the party and justice are abused, they may be punished. 12 Mod. 382.

Presumptions are said to be either juris et de jure, or juris, or hominis vel judicii. The presumption juris et de jure is that where law or custom establishes the truth of any point, on a presumption that cannot be traversed on contrary evidence; thus a minor, or infant under age with guardians, is deprived of the power of acting without their consent, on a presumption of incapacity which cannot be traversed. The presumptio juris is a presumption established in law till the contrary be proved, as the property of goods is presumed to be in the possessor: every presumption of this kind must necessarily yield to contrary proof. The presumptio hominis vel judicis is the conviction arising from the circumstances of any particular case.

PRESUMPTIVE EVIDENCE. See Evidence, Felony, Homicide, &c.

PRESUMPTIVE HEIRS. Such persons who, if the ancestor should die immediately, would, in the present circumstances of things, be his heirs; but whose right of inheritance may be defeated by the contingency of some nearer heir being born. See Descent, I.

PRETENDED TITLES, buying or selling. See Champerly, Maintenance.

PRETENSED RIGHT, jus prætensum. Where one is in possession of land, and another who is out of possession claims and sues for it; here the pretended right or title is said to be in him who so claims and sues for the same. See Mod. Cas. 302.

PRETIUM AFFECTIONIS. An imaginary value put on a thing by the fancy of the owner in his affection for it. See Bell's Scotch Dict.

PRETIUM SEPULCHRI. See Mortuary.

PRICE. See Agreement, Consideration, &c.

PRIDE GAVEL, from prid, the last syllable of lamprid, and gavel, a rent or tribute.] In the manor of Rodeley, in the county of Gloucester, is a rent paid to the lord by certain tenants in duty and acknowledgment to him for the privilege of fishing for lampreys or lamprids in the river Severn. See Tayl. Hist. Gavelk. 112.

PRIESTS. In general signification, are any ministers of a church; but in our law this word is particularly used for ministers of the Church of Rome. See Papists.

PRIMAGE. A duty at the waterside, due to the master and mariners of a ship; to the master for the use of his cables and ropes, to discharge the goods of the merchant; and to the mariners for lading and unlading in any port or haven: it is usually about 12d. per ton, or 6d. per pack or bale, according to custom. See Merch. Dict.

PRIMATE. An archbishop who has a distinguishing rank from all other archbishops and bishops. See Bishops.

PRIMER-FINE. On suing out the writ or præcipe, called a writ of covenant, there was due to the king, by ancient prerogative, a primer-fine, or a noble for every five marks of land sued for: that was, one-tenth of the annual value. See Fine of Lands, I. 1.

PRIMICERIUS. The first of any degree of men; sometimes it signifies the nobility. Primicerius totius Angliæ, the nobility of England. See Mon. Angl. i. 838.

PRIMIER SEISIN, prima seisin. The first possession, or seisin; heretofore used as a branch of the king's prerogative, whereby he had the first possession, that is, the entire profits for a year of all the lands and tenements, whereof his tenant (who held of him in capite) died seised in his demise as of a fee, his heir being then at full age, until he did homage, or, if under, until he were of age. See Staundf. Prærog. cap. 9, and Bracton, l. 4. tr. 3. c. 1. All the charges arising by primer seisins were taken away by the 12 Car. 2. c. 24. See Tenures.

PRIMIER SERGEANT. The king's first serjeant at law. See Precedence.

PRIMO BENEFICIO. The first benefice in the king's gift, &c. See Beneficio prius, &c.

PRIMOGENITURE, promogenitura. The title of an elder son or brother in right of his birth: the reason of which Coke says, is, Qui prior est tempore, potior est jure; affirming moreover, that, in King Alfred's time, knights' fees descended to the eldest son; because, by the division of such fees between males, the defence of the realm might be weakened. And Dodderidge, in his Treatise of Nobility, saith, (p. 119,) it was anciently ordained, That all knights' fees should come unto the eldest son by succession of heritage; whereby he, succeeding his ancestors in the whole inheritance, might be the better enabled to maintain the wars against the king's enemies, or his lords; and that the soccage should be partible among the male children, to enable them to increase into many families for the better furtherance in, and increase of husbandry. See Cowell, and Leg. Alfred. Dodd. Treat. Nobil. 119. See Descent.

PRINCE, princeps. Sometimes taken at large for the king himself; but more properly for the king's eldest son, who is called Prince of Wales. See King, II.

It is said by some writers, that the king's eldest son is Prince of Wales by nativity; but others say, that he is born Duke of Cornwall, and afterwards created Prince of Wales, though from the day of his birth he is styled Prince of Wales, a title originally given by Edward I. to his son. His titles are, Prince of Wales, Duke of Cornwall, and Earl of Chester.

Before Edward II., who was the first Prince of Wales, and born at Caernarvon, in that principality, (his mother being sent there big with child by Edward I., to appease the tumultuous spirit of the Welch,) the eldest son of the king was called lord prince; but prince was a name of dignity long before that time in England. See Staundf. Prærog. c. 22, 75. See 27 Hen. 8. c. 26; 28 Hen. 8. c. 3. And Stow's Annals, p. 303.

In a charter of King Offa, after the bishops had subscribed their names, we read Brordanus patricius, Bimmanus princeps, and afterwards the dukes subscribed their names. And in a charter of King Edgar, in Mon. Angl. tom. 3. p. 302. Ego Edgarus Rex rogatus ab episcopo meo Deorivolve, et princepe meo Alfredo, &c. And in Matt. Paris, p. 155: Ego Habbenus princeps Regis pro viribus assensum præbeo, et ego Turketinus dux concedo.

As Duke of Cornwall, and likewise Earl of Chester, the Prince of Wales is to appoint the sheriffs, and other officers, in those counties. The Prince of Wales, besides the revenues of the principality of Wales, duchy of Cornwall, &c. has also an income settled on him, from time to time, by parliament. See 33 Geo. 3. c. 78; 50 Geo. 3. c. 6, enabling the prince to make leases of land, parcel of the duchy of Cornwall; and 35 Geo. 3. c. 125, for preventing the accumulation of debts by any future heir-apparent of the crown, and for regulating his mode of expediture from the time of his having a separate establishment.

PRINCIPAL, principulum. Is variously used in our law; as an heir loom, &c.

The word principal was also sometimes anciently used for a mortuary, or corse-present. See Mortuary.

In Urchenfield, in the county of Hereford, certain principals, as the best beast, the best bed, the best table, &c. pass to the eldest child, and are not liable to partition.

The chief person in some of the inns of Chancery is called principal of the house. See Cowell.

PRINCIPAL AND ACCESSARY. See Accessory, Agent, Indictment.

PRINCIPAL CHALLENGE. A species of challenge to jurors for suspicion of partiality. This takes place where the cause assigned carries with it prima facie evident marks of suspicion, either of malice or favour. See Jury, I.

PRINTING. By the 39 Geo. 3. c. 79. § 23—33, certain restrictions are imposed on printers and others, for the preventing of treasonable and seditious publications. Printers, letter-founders, and printing-press makers, are to register their names with the clerk of the peace. The name and abode of the printer is to be printed at the beginning and end of every book, and on the front of every paper printed; and one copy thereof is to be kept by the printer, with the name of his employer written thereon, and to be produced on demand any time within six months after the time of printing. One justice of peace may empower a peace officer to search for presses and types suspected to be illegally used; which may be seized, together with any printed papers found on the premises. The king's printer, the public presses in the universities, and papers printed by authority of parliament, or other public boards, are excepted from the operation of this act. See 39 & 40 Geo. 3. c. 95; 41 Geo. 3. c. 80; 51 Geo. 3. c. 65. See also Books, Libel, Literary Property, Newspapers.

PRINTS AND ENGRAVINGS. See Literary Property.

PRIOR. Was in dignity next to the abbot, or the chief of a convent, &c. See Abbat.

PRIORS ALIENS, priores alieni.] Were certain religious men, born in France and Normandy, governors of religious houses erected for foreigners here in England; but were suppressed by Henry V., and afterwards their livings were given to other monasteries and houses of learning, and especially towards the erecting of the king's colleges at Cambridge and Eton. 2 Inst. 584. See Stow's Annals, 582; 1 Hen. 5. c. 7.

PRIORITY, prioritas.] An antiquity of tenure, in comparison of another less ancient. Old Nat. Br. 91.

Crompt., in his Jurisd. fol. 117, useth this word in the same signification. The lord of the priority shall have the custody of the body, &c. and fol. 120, if the tenant hold by priority of one, and by posteriority of another, &c. To which effect, see also F. N. B. 142. and tit. Posteriority.

PRIORITY OF DEBTS AND SUITS. See Abatement, Action, Pleading, &c.—As to payment of debts by an executor in order of priority; see Forster, V. 6. As to priority of mortgages, see Mortgage, III.

There is no priority of time, in judgments; for the judgment first executed shall be first paid; but it is otherwise, if the goods be merely seized, and not sold. 1 T. R. 729. See Execution, Judgment.

Wherever any suit on a penal statute may be said to be actually depending, it may be pleaded in abatement of a subsequent prosecution, being expressly averred to be for the same offence. Neither will it be any exception to such a plea, that the offence in a subsequent prosecution is laid on a day different from that in the former. Neither doth a mistake in such a plea of the very day, whereon the suit pleaded as prior was commenced, seem to be material on the issue of nil tibi record, if it appear in truth to have been commenced before the other, and for the same matter.

And if two informations be exhibited on the very same day, it seems that they may mutually abate one another; because there is no priority to attach the right of the suit in one informer more than in the other. Also it seems, that an information or bill the same day that they are filed, may be so far said to be depending before any process sued on there, that they may be pleaded in abatement of any other suit on the same statute. And from the same reason it seems also, that a writ of debt may be so pleaded in abatement of any other suit on the same statute; and from the same reason it seems also that a writ of debt may be so pleaded after it is returned; because then it seems to be agreed, that it may be properly said to be depending; and whether it may not also be so pleaded before it be returned, seems questionable; because, according to some opinions, a writ may be said to be depending as soon as purchased. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 26. § 63. See Idem.

These points of law, where Hawkins seems to doubt, are now, in general, pretty clearly settled, according to what appeared to be his opinion.

PRISAGE, prisagium.] That share which belongs to the king or admiral, out of such merchandises as are taken at sea, by way of lawful prize, which is usually a tenth part. See 51 Eliz. c. 5.

PRISAGE OF WINES was an ancient duty or custom on wines, payable at certain ports, except London, Southampton, &c. It was where the king claimed out of every ship or vessel laden with wine, containing twenty tons, or more, two tons of wine, the one before, the other behind the mast, at his price, which was twenty shillings for each ton; but this varied according to the custom of places; and at Boston every bark laden with ten tons of wine or above paid prisage. This word has long been out of use, the duty being afterwards called butlerage, because the king's chief butler received it. See Customs on Merchandise.

By 43 Geo. 3. c. 156. the treasury were empowered to purchase the duties of prisage and the butlerage in Great Britain, and a contract for that purpose with the Duke of Grafton was confirmed by 46 Geo. 3. c. 79. By 46 Geo. 3. c. 94. the treasury of Ireland were empowered to contract for the purchase of the duties of prisage and butlerage in that country from the Earl of Ormond. By 50 Geo. 3. c. 101. the contract was confirmed; and by 51 Geo. 3. c. 15. the duties were abolished.

PRISE. See Prize.

PRISO. A prisoner taken in war. Hoveden, p. 541.

PRISON, prisona.] A place of confinement for the safe custody of persons, in order to their answering any action, civil or criminal. See Gaol.

PRISON BREAKING. See Gaol, III.

PRISONER, prisonarius, Fr. prisonnier.] A man may be a prisoner on matter of record, or of fact: prisoner on matter of record, is he who, being present in court, is by the court committed to prison; and the other is on arrest, by the sheriff, &c. Staudf. P. C. 34, 35. See Debtors, Gaol, II.; Execution, III. 4.

PRIVATEERS. A kind of private men of war, the persons concerned wherein administer, at their own costs, a part of a war, by fitting out these ships of force, and providing them with all military stores; and they have instead of pay, leave to keep what they take from the enemy, allowing the admiral his share, &c.

Privateers may not attempt any thing against the laws of nations; as to assault an enemy in a port or haven, under the protection of any prince or republic, whether he be friend, ally, or neuter; for the peace of such places must be inviolably kept. Therefore by a treaty made between King William and the states of Holland, before a commission shall be granted to any privateer, the commander is to give security, if the ship be not above 150 tons, in 1500*l.*, and if the ship exceed that burden, in 3000*l.*, that they will make satisfaction for all damages which they shall commit in their courses at sea, contrary to the treaties with those states, on pain of forfeiting their commissions; and the ship is made liable. Lex Mercat. 177, 178.

Besides these private commissions, there are special commissions for privateers, granted to commanders of ships, &c. who take pay, and are under a marine discipline; and if they do not obey their orders, may be punished with death. And the wars in latter ages have given occasion to princes to issue these commissions, to annoy the enemies in their commerce, and hinder such supplies as might strengthen them, or lengthen out the war; and likewise to prevent the separation of ships of greater force from their fleets or squadrons. See Admiralty, Letters of Marque.

PRIVATION, privatio.] A taking away or withdrawing; most commonly applied to a bishop or rector, when, by death, or other act, they are deprived of their preferments; it seems to be an abbreviation of the word deprivation. Co. Litt. 239.

PRIVEMENT ENSIENT, or ensient. The term to signify a woman being with child, but not quick with child. Wood's Inst. 662.

PRIVIES, from the Fr. prich, i. e. familiaris.] Those who are partakers, or have an interest in any action or thing, or any relation to another; as every heir in tail is privy to recover the land entailed, &c. Old Nat. Br. 117.

There are five several kinds of privies, viz. privies of blood, such as the heir to the ancestor; privies in representation, as executors or administrators to the deceased; pri-vies in estate, between donor and donee, lessor and lessee, &c.; privies in respect of contract; and privies on account of estate and contract together. 3 Rep. 23, 123; 4 Rep. 123; Latch, 260.

It is also said that there are three sorts of privies and privities; in estate, in blood, and in law.

Privies in blood are intended of privies in blood inheritable, and in this in three manners, viz. inheritable as general heir, or as special heir, or as general and special heir.

Privies in estate, as joint tenants, baron and feme, donor and donee, lessor and lessee, &c.

Privies in law are, when the law, without blood or privity of estate, casts the lands on one, or makes his entry lawful; as lord by escheat, lord who enters for mortmain, lord of villein, &c. 8 Rep. 42 b; Jo. 92.

The author of the New Terms of the Law maketh many sorts of privies, viz. privies in estate, privies in deed, privies in law, privies in right, and privies in blood. See Perkins, 831, 832, 833. Coke, lib. 3. f. 23, and lib. 4, 123, 124, mentions four kinds of privies, viz. privies in blood, as the heir to his father; privies in representation, as executors or administrators to the deceased; privies in estate, as he in reversion, and he in the remainder, when land is given to one for life, to another in fee, for that their estates are created both at one time: the fourth is privy in tenure, as the lord by escheat, that is, when the land escheateth to the lord for want of heirs. Cowell.

If a fine were levied, the heirs of him who levied it were termed privies. See Fine of Lands, l. If a lessor grants his reversion, the grantee and lessee are privies in estate: privies in contract extend only to the persons of the lessor and lessee; and where the lessee assigns all his interest, here the lessor and lessee remain privy in contract, but not in estate, which is removed by the assignment. 3 Rep. 23.

Privies, in respect of estate and contract, appear where the lessee assigns his interest; but the contract between the lessor and lessee, as to action of debt, continues, the lessor not having accepted of the assignee. 3 Lev. 295.

If the lessor grants over his reversion, or if the reversion escheat, now between the grantee, or the lord by escheat, and the lessee, there is privity in estate only.

Privity of contract only is personal privity, and extends only to the person of the lessor, and to the person of the lessee; as when the lessee assigned over his interest, notwithstanding his assignment, the privity of the contract remained between them, though privity of the estate be removed by the act of the lessee himself; and the reason of this is,

1st, Because the lessee himself shall not prevent by his own act such remedy, which the lessor had against him by his own contract; but when the lessor granted over his reversion, there, against his own grant, he cannot have remedy, because he has granted the reversion to the other, to which the rent is incident.

2dly, The lessee may grant the term to a poor man who shall not be able to manure the land, and who will by indigence, or for malice, permit it to lie fresh, and then the lessor shall be without remedy, either by distress, or by action of debt, which shall be inconvenient, and will concern in effect every man, (because, for the most part, every man is a lessor, or a lessee); and for those two reasons all the cases of entry by tort, eviction, suspension, and apportionment of the rent are answered, for in such cases it is either the act of the lessor himself, or the act of a stranger; and in none of the cases, the sole act of the lessee himself shall prevent the lessor of his remedy, for that it will introduce such inconvenience as has been said. See Lease, l. 3.

Privity of contract and estate together, is between the lessor and lessee himself. 3 Rep. 23.

Where there are privies in contract, and the privity is altered by assignment of an executor, &c. before any rent due, and after the privity of estate, by the assignment of the executor's assignee, nothing remains whereby to maintain any action. Latch. 260.

There are likewise privies in deed, or in law; where the deed makes the relation, or the law implies it, in case of escheats to the lord, &c. And only parties and privies shall take advantage of conditions of entry on lands, &c. Co. Litt. 516.

If I deliver goods to a man, to be carried to such a place, and he, after he hath brought them thither, steal them, it is felony; because the privity of delivery is determined as soon as they are brought thither. Staudf. Pl. Cor. lib. 1. cap. 15, 25.

Privies inheritable, as heir general, shall take benefit of the infancy; as if infant tenant in fee-simple makes feoffment, and dies, his heir shall enter. The same law of h.m. who is heir general and special, and also of him that is heir special, and not general. But privies in estate (unless in some special cases) shall not take advantage of the infancy of the other. 8 Rep. 42, b. 43.

Merchants privy are opposed to merchant strangers in 2 Edw. 3. c. 9, 15.

PRIVILEGE,

PRIVILEGIUM.] Is defined by Cicero, in his oration pro domo sua, to be lex privata homini irrogata. It is, says another, jus singulare, whereby a private man, or a particular corporation, is exempted from the rigour of the common law. It is sometimes used in law for a place which hath some special immunity. Kitchin. 118.

Privilege is either personal or real: a personal privilege is that which is granted to any person, either against or beyond the course of the common law in other cases; as, for example, privilege of parliament.

A privilege real is that which is granted to a place, as to the universities, that none of either may be called to Westminster Hall, on any contract made within their own precincts, or prosecuted in other courts: and one belonging to the Court of Chancery cannot be sued in any other court, certain cases excepted, and if he be, he may remove it by writ of privilege, grounded on the statute 18 Edw. 3. Cowell. Officers of that court are to be sued in the Petty Bag Office.

Privilege is an exemption from some duty, burden, or attendance, to which certain persons are entitled, from a supposition of law, that the stations they fill, or the offices they are engaged in, are such as require all their care; that therefore, without this indulgence, it would be impracticable to execute such offices, to that advantage which the public good requires. Bac. Ab. Privilege.

I. Of Privilege in Suits, allowed Officers and Attendants in the Courts of Justice; and see titles Attendants, l. 3. (a); Attorney.

II. Of the Privilege of Peers and Members of Parliament; in addition to what is said under titles Parliament, Peer.

III. Of the Proceedings in Courts, by and against Persons entitled to Privilege of Parliament.

I. THE officers, ministers, and clerks of the courts in Westminster Hall are allowed particular privileges in respect of their necessary attendance on those courts; they are regularly to sue and be sued in the courts they respectively belong to, and cannot (except in certain cases, be impleaded elsewhere; which privilege arises from a supposition of law, that the business of the court, or their clients' causes, would suffer by their being drawn into another than that in which their personal attendance is required. 2 Inst. 551; 4 Inst. 71; Vaugh. 154; Dyer, 337, a. pl. 30.

An attorney was formerly entitled to sue in his own court, by attachment of privilege in the King's Bench and Common Pleas, or by capias of privilege in the Exchequer, and to be sued by bill in all the courts; but these privileges have been taken away by the uniformity of process act (2 Wm. 4. c. 39. But he still retains his privilege of freedom from arrest, it being declared by the 19th section of the act, that nothing therein contained shall subject any person to arrest, who, by reason of any privilege, usage, or otherwise, may now, by law, be exempt therefrom. An attorney, therefore, can now only be sued by serviceable process, viz. by writ of summons. It is supposed, however, that he still retains the privilege he possessed, of being sued in the court of which he is an attorney; and that there is nothing in the act to take away his privilege of laying the venue in Middlesex, when he is plaintiff. But see 7 B. & B. 683, and Tidd's New Pr. 65; Dax's Exch. Pr. 15.

It is also said, that an attorney is entitled to have his cause tried at bar. These privileges are allowed not so much for the benefit of attorneys, as of their clients; and are therefore confined to attorneys who practise, or at least have practised within a year; and they are never allowed against the king; but actions qui tam are not considered as the king's actions. Neither are they allowed to attorneys, as against each other; it being a general rule, that there can be no privilege against privilege. But this rule only applies to attorneys of the same court; for where they are of different courts, the plaintiff is entitled to his privilege. It is also settled, that an attorney shall not be allowed his privilege, where he sues, or is sued in autre droit, as executor or administrator; or jointly with his wife, or other person who is not privileged; or where there would otherwise be a failure or defect of justice; as where an appeal, which only lies in the Court of King's Bench, is brought against an attorney of the Common Pleas, or such an attorney is in the actual custody of the marshal: but where an attorney of the Common Pleas puts in bail to an action depending in the Court of King's Bench, he does not thereby lose his privilege; but may plead it in that action, or in any other brought against him, by the bye: for it would be absurd, that he who founds an action on that of another, should be in a better condition than the original plaintiff. Yet where an attorney, having put in bail, waives his privilege, by pleading in chief, in one action, it is construed to be a waiver of privilege, in all other actions brought against him by the bye, during the same term.

The attachment of privilege, at the suit of an attorney, was in nature of a latitat, and the time allowed for declaring was the same as upon a latitat, or other process in trespass.

The bill against an attorney was a complaint in writing, describing the defendant as being present in court; and generally concluded with a prayer of relief, though the declaration upon the bill was not demurrable for want of it. Formerly, the bill against an attorney could only have been filed in term time, sedente curia, and not in vacation. But afterwards it might be filed in vacation, as well as in term time, though if it be filed in vacation, otherwise than to avoid the statute of limitations, the plaintiff was not allowed his costs, if the action were settled before the ensuing term.

In practice, it was usual to file the bill on stamped parchment, with the clerk of the declarations, in the King's Bench office; and to deliver a copy of it, on stamped paper, to the defendant, with notice thereon to plead in four days. And if the bill were filed, and a copy thereof delivered, four days exclusive before the end of the term, including Sunday, the defendant must have pleaded as of that term, the plaintiff having entered a rule to plead, and demanded a plea; but if the bill were not filed, and a copy delivered within that time, the defendant was entitled to an imparlance. See Pleading.

The rest of the proceedings, by and against attorneys, were, and continue the same, as in other cases; only that they are not bound to pay for copies of the pleadings.

Where J. S. was arrested in B. R., and after the arrest he procured himself to be made an attorney of C. B., and prayed his privilege, it was disallowed, because it accrued pendente lite. 2 Rol. Rep. 115.

If an attorney lays his action in London, the court will change the venue on the usual affidavit; for, by not laying it in Middlesex, he seems regardless of his privilege, and is to be considered in the same light as an unprivileged person. 2 Vent. 47; Salk. 668.

An attorney sued by bill jointly with a person having privilege of parliament does not lose his privilege. 8 T. R. 585.

As to other persons than attorneys claiming privilege, the following cases are deserving notice:—

Anderson, Ch. J., of C. B., brought trespass by bill for breaking his house in the city of Worcester, against a citizen of that city; the mayor and commonalty came and showed a charter granted by Edward VI., and demanded consuance of pleas; but it was refused, because the privilege of that court, of which the plaintiff was a chief member, is more ancient than the patent; for the justices, clerks, and attorneys, ought to be there attending their business, and shall not be impeached or compelled to implead others elsewhere; and this privilege was given the court on the original erection of it. 3 Leon. 149.

In debt against the warden of the Fleet, by bill of privilege, he refused to appear; the court doubted how they could compel him, as they could not forejudge him the court, he having an inheritance in his office; but it being surmised that he made a lease of his office, it was held that he should not have his privilege, for that the lessee, and not he, was the officer during the lease. 2 Leon. 173.

So, if the marshal of B. R. grants his place for life, the grantor has no privilege during that time. 1 Vent. 65.

A clerk of B. R. was sued in an inferior court for a debt under 5*l.*, and had a writ of privilege allowed; for the 21 Jac. 1. c. 23. never intended to take away the privilege of attorneys. Palm. 403.

Until the passing of the 2 Wm. 4. c. 39. many persons in the Court of Exchequer, such as the officers in the several sides of the courts, accountants to the king, &c. could only be sued in that court by bill, and might sue by capias of privilege. 1 Y. & J. 199; 1 Price, 96. But, by that act, such distinctions (so far at least as regards the commencement of proceedings) have been abolished.

A latitat being sued out against the commissioners of the Treasury, the puisne baron of the Exchequer came into the Court of B. R., and brought the Red Book of the Exchequer, which is deemed a record in that court; and thereby it appeared, that the treasurer had privilege of being sued only in that court; and the patent being produced in court which constituted the defendants, &c. and granted them the office of treasurer of England, their privilege was allowed without putting them to bring a writ of privilege: the court grounding themselves on the record before them. 2 Show. 299.

In debt in B. R. against J. S. he pleaded to the jurisdiction, That none of the privy chamber ought to be sued in any other court, without the special licence of the lord chamberlain of the household, and that he was one of the privy chamber; on demurrer to this plea, the court overruled it with great resentment, and awarded a respondeus oster. Raym. 34; 1 Keb. 137.

It was agreed, that the privilege of the Court of C. B., which sergeants claimed, extended only to inferior courts, not to the courts in Westminster Hall; and that a serjeant may be sued in any of these, because he is not confined to that court alone, but may practise in any other court; but it is otherwise as to attorneys or flacers, who cannot practise in their own name in any other court but such as they respectively belong to: and that a serjeant at law is to be sued by original, not by bill of privilege. 2 Lev. 129; 3 Keb. 42; Moor. 296, S. C.

So, in an action by bill brought in C. B., against a serjeant at law, he pleaded that he ought to have been sued by original, and not by bill; and on demurrer the court held, that the cases of a serjeant and prothonotary's clerk were on the same footing, neither of them being bound to personal attendance, as prothonotaries and attornies were; that therefore he ought to have been sued by original; and accordingly gave judgment for the defendant. Trin. 7 Geo. 2. Serjeant Girdler's case.

J. S. being arrested by a writ out of C. B. brought his writ of privilege as clerk of the Crown Office; but, it appearing that he was only clerk to a clerk of that office, and not an immediate clerk of the office, a supersedeas to the writ of privilege was granted on motion; the court having agreed, that he had no more privilege than an attorney's clerk. 2 Show. 287.

A serjeant at law, or barrister, as well as an attorney, or other privileged person, whose attendance is necessary in Westminster Hall, may lay his action in Middlesex, though the cause of action accrued in another county; and the court on the usual affidavit will not change the venue. Stil. 460; Moor. 64; 2 Show. 242.

On a motion to discharge a rule which had been obtained for changing the venue, it appeared, that the plaintiff was a barrister and master in chancery; and the court held that he had privilege, by reason of his attendance, to lay his action in Middlesex, therefore discharged the rule. 2 Raym. 1556.

As to the obstruction of public justice, by means of pretended privileged places, see Arrest. The following is a fuller statement of the statute there referred to.

By the 8 & 9 Wm 3. c. 27. § 15. for preventing the many ill practices used in privileged places to defraud persons of their debts; the pretended privilege of White Friars, the Savoy, Salisbury Court, Ram Alley, Mitre Court, Fuller's Rents, Baldwin's Gardens, Montague Close, the Minories, Mint, Clink, or Deadman's Place, are taken away. And the sheriffs of London or their officers are enabled to take the posse comitatus, and such other power as shall be requisite, and enter such privileged places to make any arrest on legal process, and in case of refusal to break open doors.

The 9 Geo. 1. c. 28. enacts, That if any person within Suffolk Place, or the Mint, or the pretended limits thereof, wilfully obstruct persons executing any writ, &c. or abuse any person executing the same, whereby he receive damage or bodily hurt, the person offending shall be transported. And on complaint to three justices, &c. by any person who shall have a debt owing from any one who resides in the Mint, having a legal process taken out for recovery thereof, if the debt be above 50*l.* on oath thereof, the justices are empowered to issue their warrant to the sheriff of Surry, to raise the posse, and to enter the pretended privileged place, and arrest the party. See also 11 Geo. 1. c. 22. enforcing the above penalties.

II. In an indictment for treason or felony, trespass vi et armis, assault or riot, process of outlawry shall issue against a peer; for the suit is for the king, and the offence is a contempt against him; but in civil actions between party and party regularly a capias or exigent lies not against a lord of parliament. 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 109; 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 44. § 16. See post, III. and Outlawry.

But if a peer of parliament was convicted of a disseisin with force, a capias pro fine and exigent issued, for the fine was given by statute, in which no person is exempted. Cro. Eliz. 170; see Dyer, 314.

So, in debt on an obligation against the Earl of Lincoln, who pleaded non est factum, which being found against him, the judgment was ideo capiatur; on a writ of error brought by him, it was objected that a capias does not lie against a peer. sed non allocatur; for by this plea found against him a fine is due to the king, against whom none shall have any privilege. Cro. Eliz. 503.

An information was exhibited in B. R. against the Earl of Devonshire, for striking in the king's palace; which being in time of parliament, he insisted on his privilege, and refused to plead in chief, but sent in his plea of privilege, to which there was a demurrer, and the plea over-ruled, and he was fined 30,000*l.* Comb. 49.

A member of the House of Commons may be convicted, upon an indictment in B. R., for a libel, in publishing in a newspaper the report of a speech delivered by him in that house, if it contain libellous matter, although it be a correct report of such speech. 1 M. & S. Rep. 273.

Peers are punishable by attachment for contempts in many instances; as for rescuing a person arrested by due course of law; for proceeding in a cause against the king's writ of prohibition; for discharging other writs, wherein the king's prerogative, or the liberty of the subject, are nearly concerned; and for other contempts which are of an enormous nature. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 22. § 33.

If a peer be returned on a jury, on his bringing a writ of privilege he may be discharged; also it seems the better opinion, that without such writ he may either challenge himself, or be challenged by the party. Dyer, 314; Moor. 767; 9 Co. 49; Co. Lit. 177, 1 Jon. 153. See Jury.

So if a peer be made steward of a base court, or ranger of a forest, he may, from the dignity of his person, and the presumption that he is engaged in the more weighty affairs of the commonwealth, exercise these offices by deputy; though there are no words for this purpose in his creation. 2 Co. 49 a.

So if a licence be granted to a peer to hunt in a chase or forest, he may take such a number of attendants with him as are suitable to his dignity. 2 Co. 49 b.

Formerly, if a peer brought an appeal, the defendant should not be admitted to wage battle, by reason of the dignity of his person. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 45. § 5.

III. There were, formerly, two ways of proceeding against peers of the realm, and members of the House of Commons: first, by original writ; and, secondly, by bill, under the provisions of the 12 & 13 Wm. 3. c. 39.

But now, by the uniformity of process act, 2 Wm. 4. c. 39. the proceedings by original are, in effect, abolished in personal actions; and the only process now against peers (since they cannot be taken on capias) is by writ of summons under the act. In personal actions, wherein it is intended to proceed against a member of parliament according to the provisions of the 6 Geo. 4. c. 16. § 10. the process is to be by writ of summons, in the form in the schedule of the 2 Wm. 4. c. 39. (marked No. 6); and which process and a copy thereof shall be in lieu of the summons, or original bill and summons, and copy thereof, mentioned in the statute of 6 Geo. 4. c. 16. The process is directed to the defendant, commanding him, that within one calendar month next after personal service on him, he cause an appearance to be entered in the court in which he is sued, in an action on promises, (or debt, or as the case may be,) at the suit of the plaintiff, and the defendant is thereby informed that an affidavit of debt for the sum of £ hath been filed, pursuant to 6 Geo. 4. c. 16; and that unless he pay some, or compound for the debt sought to be recovered, or enter into such bond as by the act is provided, and cause an appearance to be entered for him within one month after service thereof, he will be deemed to have committed an act of bankruptcy from the time of service thereof.

If a peer, having privilege of parliament, be in the king's Bench prison, a declaration may be filed against him, as being in custody of the marshal, and no summons need be issued. 5 T. R. 361.

Where a peer was sued jointly with others, by bill of Middlesex, the court set aside the proceedings as against the peer. Briscoe v. Egremont, (E.) & al. Term Rep. K. B. Trin. 54 Geo. 3. 88.

All further proceedings against peers of the realm, and members of the House of Commons, are the same as against other persons; only it should be remembered, that as no capias lies against them in civil actions, they cannot be taken in execution, unless where the judgment is obtained upon a statute-staple, or statute-merchant, or upon the statute of Acton Burnel; in which case a capias lies, even against peers of the realm; and see ante, II.

The Court of C. B. refused to grant an attachment against a peer for not paying money awarded, though the defendant consented it should issue on condition it should lie in the office for a certain time. 7 T. R. 171. And so against a member of parliament. Id. 448.

Lord Stourton brought a bill against Sir Thomas Meers, to compel him to a specific performance of articles for purchasing Lord Stourton's estate. Sir Thomas, in his defence, insisted that there were defects in Lord Stourton's title to the estate; and it being ordered that Lord Stourton should be examined on interrogatories touching his title; it was objected, that Lord Stourton, being a peer, ought to answer on honour only; but it was ruled by Lord Harcourt, that though privilege did allow a peer to put in his answer on honour only, yet this was restrained to an answer; and as to all affidavits, or where a peer is examined as a witness, he must be on oath; and that this examination on interrogatories, being in a cause wherein his lordship was plaintiff, to force the execution of an agreement, as his lordship would have equity, so he should do equity; and allow the other side the benefit of a discovery, and that in a legal manner; and accordingly ordered Lord Stourton to put in his examination on oath. 1 P. Wms. 145.

Peers, in suits of equity, are entitled to a letter missive, which method was introduced on a presumption that peers would pay obedience to the chancellor's letter; and is founded on that respect which is due to the peerage. Jenk. 107. If the lord doth not appear on the letter, a subpoena, on motion, is awarded against him; because no subsequent process can be awarded but on a contempt to the great seal; and the chancellor's letter is only ex gratia. If, on the service of the subpoena, the peer doth not appear, or if he appears and does not put in his answer, no attachment can be awarded against him, because his person cannot be imprisoned; but the proceedings must be by sequestration, unless cause, &c.; and this is regularly made out, on affidavit made of the service of the latter and subpoena, though sometimes it is moved for without, since the peer may show want of service at the day assigned to show cause why the sequestration should not issue; and this order for a sequestration is never made absolute without an affidavit of the service of the order to show cause, and a certificate of no cause shown. 2 Fant. 342. See Chancery.

A sequestration was granted, unless cause, against Lord Clifford, for want of an answer; he afterwards put in an answer, which being reported insufficient, it was moved for a sequestration absolutely, an insufficient answer being as no answer; but the court thought it a hardship, in the case of a peer or member of the House of Commons, that a sequestration, which in some respects is in nature of an execution, should be the first process against them; therefore allowed, that in case of an answer which is reported insufficient, the plaintiff is to move again de novo for a sequestration nisi. 2 P. Wms. 385. See 3 Atk. 740.

It was moved for a sequestration nisi, for want of an answer, against a menial servant of a peer, as the first process for contempt, in the same manner as in the case of the peer himself; and though the motion was granted by the master of the rolls, yet the registrar refused to draw it up, as thinking it against the course of the court; which being moved again before the chancellor, his lordship, on reading the 12 & 13 Wm. 3. c. 3. likewise granted the motion, it appearing to be both within the meaning and words of the statute; and if it were not so, as it was plain no attachment would lie against their persons, consequently there would be no remedy against them, and they would have a greater privilege than their lord, if the process against such menial servant were to be a subpoena. 1 P. Wms 535.

PRIVILEGED DEBTS. This term is applied to such debts as an executor may pay in preference to all others, such as sick-bed and funeral expenses, mournings, servants' wages, &c. See Executor, Funeral Expenses.

PRIVILEGIUM CLERICALE; or, in common speech, the benefit of clergy. See Clergy, Benefit of.

PRIVILEGIUM Property, propter.] A man may have a qualified property in animals scilicet natura, propter privilegium; that is, he may have the privilege of hunting, taking and killing them, in exclusion of other persons. 2 Comm. c. 25. p. 394. See Game.

PRIVITY, privitas.] Private familiarity, friendship, inward relation. If there be lord and tenant, and the tenant holds of the lord by certain services, there is a privity between them in respect of the tenure. Cowell. See Privies.

PRIVY, from the French privé, familiaris.] Signifies him who is partaker, or hath an interest in any action or thing. Old Nat. Brev. 117. See Privies.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

CONSILIIUM REGIS, PRIVATUM CONSILIUM.] A most honourable assembly of the king himself and his privy councillors, in the king's court or palace, for matters of state. 4 Inst. 53.

This is the principal council belonging to the king, and is generally called, by way of eminence, The Council. According to Coke's description of it at length, it is a noble, honourable, and reverend assembly of the king and such as he wills to be of his privy council, in the king's court or palace. The king's will is the sole constituent of a privy councillor; and this also regulates their number, which, of ancient time, was twelve or thereabouts. Afterwards it increased to so large a number that it was found inconvenient for secrecy and despatch; and therefore King Charles II. in 1679 limited it to thirty, whereof fifteen were to be the principal officers of state, and those to be councillors virtute officii; and the other fifteen were composed of ten lords and five commoners of the king's choosing. But since that time the number has been much augmented, and now continues indefinite. At the same time also the ancient office of lord president of the council was revived in the person of Anthony Earl of Shaftesbury. See President of the Council.

Next to the lord president of the council the lord privy seal sits in council, the secretaries of state, and many other lords and gentlemen; and in all debates of the council the lowest delivers his opinion first, and the king declares his judgment last; and thereby the matter of debate is determined. 4 Inst. 55.

Privy councillors are made by the king's nomination without either patent or grant; and, on taking the necessary oaths, they become immediately privy councillors, during the life of the king that chooses them, but subject to removal at his discretion.

As to the qualifications of members to sit at this board,—any natural-born subject of England is capable of being a member of the privy council, taking the proper oaths for the security of the government, and the test for security of the church. But, in order to prevent any persons under foreign connections from insinuating themselves into this important trust, it is enacted by the Act of Settlement, 12 & 13 Wm. 3. c. 2. that no person born out of the dominions of the crown of England, unless born of English parents, even though naturalized by parliament, shall be capable of being of the privy council.

A previous article was also introduced into the same Act of Settlement, "That all matters relating to the government, properly cognizable in the Privy Council, should be transacted there; and all the resolutions taken thereupon should be signed by such of the privy council as should advise and consent to the same."

The insertion of this article was caused by a very remarkable alteration which had been silently wrought in the practice of the executive government. According to the original constitution of our monarchy, the king's privy council consisted of the great officers of state, and of such others as he should summon to it, bound by an oath of fidelity and secrecy, by whom all affairs of weight, whether as to domestic or exterior policy, were debated, for the most part, in the royal presence, and determined (subordinately of course to his pleasure) by the vote of the major part. It could not but happen that some councillors, more eminent than the rest, should form juntos or cabals for more close and private management, or be selected as more confident advisers of their sovereign; and the very name of a CABINET COUNCIL, as distinguished from the larger body, may be found as far back as the reign of Charles I. But the resolutions of the crown, whether as to foreign alliances, or the issuing orders and proclamations at home, or any other overt act of government, were not finally taken without the deliberation and assent of that body whom the law recognized as the sworn and notorious advisers of the monarch. This was first broken in upon after the Restoration, and especially after the fall of Clarendon, a strenuous assertor of the rights and dignities of the privy council. "The king (as Clarendon complains in his life) had in his nature so little reverence and esteem for antiquity, and did in truth so much condemn old orders, forms, and institutions, that the objection of novelty rather advanced than obstructed any proposition." He wanted to be absolute on the French plan, for which both he and his brother, as the same historian tells us, had a great predilection, rather than obtain a power a little less arbitrary, so far at least as private rights were concerned, on the system of his three predecessors. The delays and the decencies of a regular council, the continual hesitation of lawyers (whose cowardice renders them as unfit for crime as for virtue), were not suited to the temper, talents, or designs of the king; and it must indeed be admitted that the privy council, even as it was then constituted, was too numerous for the practical administration of supreme power. Thus, by degrees, it became usual for the ministry (or cabinet) to obtain the king's final approbation of their measures before they were laid for formal ratification before the council. It was one object of Sir William Temple's short-lived scheme in 1679 to bring back the ancient course, the king pledging himself, on the formation of his new privy council, to act in all things by its advice.

During the reign of William III. this distinction of the CABINET from the PRIVY COUNCIL, and the exclusion of the latter from all business of state, became more fully established. This, however, produced a serious consequence as to the responsibility of the advisers of the crown; and at the very time when the controlling and the chastising power of parliament was most effectually recognized, it was silently eluded by the concealment in which the objects of its inquiry could wrap themselves. Thus, in the instance of a treaty, which the House of Commons might deem mischievous and dishonourable, the chancellor setting the great seal to it would of course be responsible; but it is not so evident that the first lord of the treasury, or others more immediately advising the crown on the course of foreign policy, could be liable to impeachment, with any prospect of success, for an act in which the participation could not be legally proved. By this it is not meant that evidence might not possibly be obtained which might affect the leaders of the cabinet (as in the instance of Oxford and Bolingbroke); but that the cabinet itself, having no legal existence, and its members being surely not amenable to punishment in their simple capacity of privy councillors, which they generally share in modern times with a great number even of their adversaries, there is no tangible character to which responsibility is attached,—nothing except a signature or the setting of a seal from which a bad minister could entertain any further apprehension than that of losing his post and reputation.

This very delicate question as to the responsibility of the CABINET (or MINISTRY, as they are usually termed), was canvassed in parliament on the introduction of the then chief justice of the King's Bench (Ellenborough) into that select body in 1806. It is difficult to comprehend how an article of impeachment for acting as a Cabinet Minister could be framed; and as a privy councillor has not (it is conceived) a right to resign his place, it would apparently be unjust and illegal to presume a participation in culpable measures from the mere circumstance of his continuing to hold it.

It may be that no absolute corrective is practicable for this apparent deficiency in our constitutional security; but it is expedient to keep it well in mind, because all ministers speak loudly of their responsibility, and are apt, on the faith of this guarantee, to obtain a previous confidence from parliament, which they may in fact abuse with impunity; for should the bad success or detected guilt of their measures raise a popular cry against them, and censure or penalty be demanded by their opponents, they will infallibly shroud their persons in the dark recesses of the Cabinet, and employ every art to shift off the burden of individual liability.

William III., from his reserved disposition, as well as from the great superiority of his capacity for business, was far less guided by any responsible councillors than the spirit of our constitution requires. In the business of the treaties for the partition of the Spanish monarchy, in 1698 and 1700 (which, whether rightly or otherwise, the House of Commons reckoned highly injurious to the public interest), he had not even consulted his Cabinet; nor could any of the ministers, except the Earl of Portland and Lord Somers, be found to have had any concern in the transaction; for though the house made the treaties one article of those impeachments against Lord Oxford and Lord Halifax, they were not in fact any further parties to it than by being in the secret; and the former had shown his usual intractability by objecting to the whole measure. This whole proceeding was undoubtedly such a departure from sound constitutional usage as left parliament no control over the executive administration. It was endeavoured to restore the ancient principle (by the article in the Act of Settlement on which this discussion has arisen); but whether it were that real objections were found to stand in the way of this article, or that ministers shrunk back from so definite a responsibility, it was repealed a very few years afterwards by stat. 4 Ann. c. 8., 6 Ann. c. 7. in fact, before it came into operation, as its commencement was to have taken place on the access of the House of Hanover.

The plans of government are therefore discussed and determined in a CABINET COUNCIL; forming, indeed, part of the larger body, but unknown to the law by any distinct character or special appointment. It has been suggested (though not on clear foundations) that this change has greatly augmented the direct authority of the Secretaries of State, especially as to the interior departments, who communicate the king's pleasure, in the first instance, to subordinate officers and magistrates, in cases which (at least down to the time of Charles I.) would have been determined in council. Proclamations and orders still emanate, as the law requires, from the privy council; and on some rare occasions, even of late years, matters of domestic policy have been referred to their advice. It is in general understood, however, that no councillor is to attend except when summoned; so that, unnecessarily numerous as the council has become (sometimes to gratify vanity by a titular honour, all members once called to the privy council being always afterwards addressed as Right Honourable), the special meetings consist only of a few persons besides the actual ministers of the cabinet, and give the latter no apprehension of a formidable resistance. Yet there can be no reasonable doubt that every councillor is as much answerable for measures adopted by his consent, and especially when ratified by his signature, as those who bear the name of ministers, and who have generally determined upon them before he is summoned.—See Hallam's History of England from Henry VII. to George II. chap. xvi.

The duty of a privy councillor appears from the oath of office, which consists of seven articles:—1. To advise the king according to the best of his cunning and discretion. 2. To advise for the king's honour and good of the public, without partiality, through love, affection, need, doubt, or dread. 3. To keep the king's counsel secret. 4. To avoid corruption. 5. To help and strengthen the execution of what shall be there resolved. 6. To withstand all persons who would attempt the contrary. And, lastly, in general, 7. To observe, keep, and do all that a good and true councillor ought to do for his sovereign lord. 4 Inst. 54.

The power of the privy council is to inquire into all offences against the government, and to commit the offenders to safe custody, in order to take their trial in some of the courts of law. But their jurisdiction herein is only to inquire, and not to punish; and the persons committed by them are entitled to their habeas corpus by 16 Car. 1. c. 10. as much as if committed by an ordinary justice of the peace. By the same statute the Court of Star-chamber, and the Court of Requests, both of which consisted of privy councillors, were dissolved; and it was declared illegal for them to take cognizance of any matter of property belonging to the subjects of this kingdom. But, in Plea-tation or Admiralty causes, which arise out of the jurisdiction of this kingdom; and in matters of lunacy or idiocy, being a special power of the prerogative; with regard to these, although they may eventually involve questions of extensive property, the privy council continue to have cognizance, being the court of appeal in such cases; or, rather, the appeal lies to the king's majesty himself in council; which is, in fact, a court of justice, which must at least consist of three privy councillors. See 3 P. Wms. 108; 1 Comm. c. 5. Never also a question arises between two provinces in America, or elsewhere, as concerning the extent of their charters and the like, the king in his council exercises original jurisdiction therein, upon the principles of feudal sovereignty. And so likewise when any person claims an island or a province, in the nature of a feudal principality, by grant from the king or his ancestors, the determination of that right belongs to his majesty in council; as was the case of the Earl of Derby, with regard to the Isle of Man, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth; and the Earl of Cardigan and others, as representatives of the Duke of Montague, with regard to the Island of St. Vincent, in 1764. But from all the commons of the crown, excepting Great Britain and Ireland, an appellate jurisdiction (in the last resort) is vested in the same tribunal; which usually exercises its judicial authority in a committee of the whole privy council, who hear the allegations and proofs, and make their report to his majesty in council, by whom the judgment is finally given. See 3 Inst. 182; 4 Inst. 53. And see the powers recently given to a judicial committee of the privy council, post.

Formerly the court of privy council could not decree in perpetuum in England, unless in certain criminal matters. See Hardwicke's argument in Peck v. Baltimore, where the jurisdiction of the council and Chancery upon questions arising on subject-matters abroad, was very fully discussed. 1 Peck 141. But now see § 18 of the 38 & 39 Geo. 4. c. 11, post.

The privileges of privy councillors, as such (abstracted from their honorary precedence, see tit. Precedence), consisted formerly principally in the security which the law gave them against attempts and conspiracies to destroy their lives. For by 3 Hen. 7. c. 14. if any of the king's servants of his household conspired or imagined to take away the life of a privy councillor, it was felony, though nothing were done upon it. The reason of making this statute, Coke says, was because such a conspiracy was, just before this parliament, made by some of King Henry VII.'s household servants, and great mischief was like to have ensued thereupon. 3 Inst. 38. This extended only to the king's menial servants. But the 9 Ann. c. 16, went further, and enacted, that any person who unlawfully attempted to kill, or unlawfully assaulted, and struck or wounded any privy councillor in the execution of his office, should be a felon without benefit of clergy. This statute was made upon the daring attempt of the Sieur Guiscard, who stabbed Mr. Harley, afterwards Earl of Oxford, with a penknife, when under examination for high crimes in a committee of the privy council. Both of these statutes, however, were repealed by the 9 Geo. 4. c. 31; and any attempt or assault of the above description upon a privy councillor now stands on the same footing as attempts and assaults upon other individuals.

Anciently, if one did strike another in the house of a privy councillor, or in his presence, the party offending was to be fined. 4 Inst. 53.

The dissolution of the privy council depends upon the king's pleasure; and he may, whenever he thinks proper, discharge any particular member, or the whole of it, and appoint another. By the common law also it was dissolved ipso facto by the king's demise, as deriving all its authority from him. But now, to prevent the inconveniences of having no council in being at the accession of a new prince, it is enacted by the 6 Ann. c. 7. § 8. that the privy council shall continue for six months after the demise of the crown, unless sooner determined by the successor. See 1 Comm. c. 5.

It is consistent with safety for a privy councillor to give the king counsel when demanded; and the best counsel is ever given to a prince when the question is evenly poised, so as the councillor cannot discern which way the king himself inclines; resolution should never precede deliberation, nor execution go before resolution: and when, on debate and deliberation, any matter is well resolved by the council, a change of it on some private information is neither safe nor honourable. 4 Inst.

The court of privy council is of great antiquity: the government in England was originally by the king and privy council, though at present the king and privy council only intermeddle in matters of complaint on sudden emergencies, their constant business being to consult for the public good in affairs of state. 4 Inst. 53.

The lords and commons assembled in parliament have often transmitted matters of high concern to the king and privy council; and acts of the privy council, whether orders or proclamations, were of great authority. Henry VIII. procured an act of parliament to be made, that, with the advice of his privy council, he might set forth proclamations, which should have the force of acts of parliament; but that statute was repealed in the reign of Edward VI.

Acts of the privy council continued of great authority until the reigns of King Charles I. & II.; and by these were controversies sometimes determined touching lands and rights, as well as the suspension of penal laws, &c. But this seemed to be contrary to the 25 Edw. 3. st. 5. c. 4. And by the 16 Car. 1. c. 10. § 3. it is declared, that neither the king nor the privy council have authority by petition, &c. to determine or dispose of lands, &c. of any subject.

By 6 Ann. c. 6. the privy council of Scotland was absorbed in the British privy council; it being in that act provided, that the queen and her successors should have but one privy council in or for the kingdom of Great Britain; and that such privy council should have the same powers and authorities as the privy council of England lawfully had used and exercised at the time of the union with Scotland, and none other. See Liberty.

The king, with advice of his council, publishes proclamations binding to the subject; but they are to be consonant to, and in execution of, the laws of the land.

It is in the power of the privy council to inquire into crimes against government; they may commit persons for treason, and other offences against the state, in order for their trial in other courts; and any of the privy council may lawfully do it. See Commitment, I.

By 33 Hen. 8. c. 23. persons examined by the privy council, on treasons, &c. done within or without the realm, might be tried before the commissioners of oyer and terminer, appointed by the king in any county of England. This statute, so far as it related to treason committed within the kingdom, was repealed by the 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 10; and was wholly repealed by the 9 Geo. 4. c. 31.

By the 2 & 3 Wm. 4. c. 92. the powers of the High Court of Delegates, both in ecclesiastical and maritime causes, by virtue of the 25 Hen. 8. c. 19, and the 8 Eliz. c. 5. were transferred to his majesty in council.

By the 3 & 4 Wm. 4. c. 41. for the better administration of justice in his majesty's privy council, it is enacted that the president for the time being of his majesty's privy council, the lord chancellor, and such of the privy council as shall hold the office of the lord keeper or first lord commissioner of the great seal of Great Britain, lord chief justice of the King's Bench, master of the rolls, vice-chancellor of England, lord chief justice of the Common Pleas, lord chief baron of the Exchequer, judge of the prerogative court of Canterbury, judge of the high court of admiralty, and chief judge of the court in bankruptcy, and also all persons members of his majesty's privy council who shall have been president thereof or held the office of lord chancellor of Great Britain, or shall have held any of the other offices herein-before mentioned, shall form a committee of his majesty's said privy council, and shall be styled "the judicial committee of the privy council;" provided that his majesty, by his sign manual, may appoint any two other persons, being privy councillors, to be members of the said committee.

§ 2. All appeals or applications in prize suits, and in all other suits or proceedings in the courts of admiralty, or vice-admiralty courts, or any other court in the plantations in America and other his majesty's dominions abroad, which may, by any law, statute, commission, or usage, be made to the high court of admiralty in England, or to the lords commissioners in prize cases, shall be made to his majesty in council; and such appeals shall be made in the same manner and form and within such time wherein such appeals might, if the act had not been passed, have been made to the said high court of admiralty, or to the lords commissioners in prize cases respectively; and all laws or statutes in force with respect to any such appeals or applications shall apply to any appeals to be made in pursuance of this act to his majesty in council.

§ 3. All appeals or complaints in the nature of appeals whatever which, either by virtue of this act, or of any law, statute, or custom, may be brought before his majesty, or his majesty in council, from or in respect of the determination, sentence, rule, or order of any court, judge, or judicial officer, and all such appeals as are pending and unheard, shall from the passing of this act be referred by his majesty to the said judicial committee of his privy council, and that such appeals, causes, and matters shall be heard by the said judicial committee, and a report or recommendation thereon shall be made to his majesty in council for his decision thereon as heretofore, in the same manner and form as has been heretofore the custom with respect to matters referred by his majesty to the whole of his privy council or a committee thereof, (the nature of such report or recommendation being always stated in open court.)

§ 4. His majesty may refer to the said judicial committee for hearing or consideration any such other matters whatsoever as he shall think fit, and such committee shall thereupon hear or consider the same, and shall advise his majesty thereon in manner aforesaid.

§ 5. No matter shall be heard, nor any order, report, or recommendation be made, by the said judicial committee, in pursuance of the act, unless in the presence of at least four members of the said committee; and no report or recommendation shall be made to his majesty unless a majority of the members of such judicial committee present at the hearing shall concur in such report, &c.: provided that nothing therein contained shall prevent his majesty, if he shall think fit, from summoning any other of the members of his said privy council to attend the meetings of the said committee.

By § 6. in case the king directs the attendance of any judge, a member of the committee, the other judges of the court to which he belongs to make arrangements with regard to the business of the court.

§ 7. It shall be lawful for the said judicial committee, in any matter which shall be referred to such committee, to examine witnesses by word of mouth, (and either before or after examination by deposition,) or to direct that the depositions of any witness shall be taken in writing by the registrar of the said privy council, to be appointed by his majesty as herein-after mentioned, or by such other person or persons, and in such manner, order and course as his majesty in council or the said judicial committee shall appoint and direct; and the said registrar and such other person or persons so to be appointed shall have the same powers as are now possessed by an examiner of the high court of chancery or of any court ecclesiastical.

§ 8. The judicial committee may order any particular witnesses to be examined, and as to any particular facts; and his majesty, on the recommendation of the committee, may remit causes for rehearing; and further, on any such remitting or otherwise, direct that one or more feigned issue or issues shall be tried in any court in any of his majesty's dominions abroad, for any purpose for which such issue or issues shall to his majesty seem proper.

§ 9. Every witness who shall be examined in pursuance of this act shall give his or her evidence upon oath, or if a Quaker or Moravian upon solemn affirmation, which oath and affirmation respectively shall be administered by the said judicial committee and registrar, and by such other person or persons as his majesty in council or the said judicial committee shall appoint; and every such witness who shall wilfully swear or affirm falsely shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and shall be punished accordingly.

§ 10. The judicial committee may direct one or more feigned issue or issues to be tried in any court of common law, and either at bar, before a judge of assize or at the sittings for the trial of issues in London or Middlesex, and either by a special or common jury, in like manner and for the same purpose as is now done by the High Court of Chancery. And § 11. may direct depositions to be read at the trial of such issue; and deeds to be produced, and facts to be admitted. And § 12. may make such orders as to the admission of evidence as are made by the Court of Chancery. And § 13. may direct new trials of issues; and paid evidence of any witness's testimony may be received who is dead, or become incapable.

By § 14. the powers, &c. of 13 Geo. 3. c. 63. and 1 Wm. 4. c. 22, with regard to examination of witnesses upon interrogatories, may be exercised by the judicial committee.

By § 15. costs of any appeals, &c. to be in the discretion of the committee.

§ 16. The orders or decrees of his majesty in council made in pursuance of any recommendation of the said judicial committee, in any matter of appeal from the judgment or order of any court or judge, shall be enrolled, for safe custody, in such manner, and the same may be inspected and copies thereof taken under such regulations, as his majesty in council shall direct.

§ 17. The committee may refer matters to the registrar in same manner as matters are by the Court of Chancery referred to a master.

§ 18. The king may appoint a registrar, and direct his duties.

§ 19. It shall be lawful for the president for the time being of the said privy council to require the attendance of any witnesses, and the production of any deeds, evidence, or writings, by writ to be issued by such president in such and the same form, or as nearly as may be, as that in which a writ of subpoena ad testificandum, or of subpoena duces tecum, is now issued by his majesty's court of King's Bench at Westminster; and every person disobeying any such writ so to be issued by the said president shall be considered as in contempt of the said judicial committee, and shall also be liable to such and the same penalties and consequences as if such writ had issued out of the said court of King's Bench, and may be sued for such penalties in the said court.

§ 20. All appeals to his majesty in council shall be made within such times respectively within which the same may now be made, where such time shall be fixed by any law or usage, and where no such law or usage shall exist, then within such time as shall be ordered by his majesty in council; and subject to any right subsisting under any charter or constitution of any colony or plantation, his majesty in council may alter any usage as to the time of making appeals, and make any order respecting the time of appealing to his majesty in council.

§ 21. Decrees for courts abroad to be carried into effect as the king in council shall direct. Act not to abridge powers of privy council.

§ 22. His majesty may direct the East India Company to bring on appeals from the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut courts to a hearing; and § 23. orders made on such last-mentioned appeals are to have effect notwithstanding death of parties, &c.; and by § 24. his majesty is empowered to make orders for regulating the mode, &c. of such appeals.

By § 25. his majesty is empowered to appoint one of the barons of the Court of Exchequer to sit in equity in the absence of the chief baron; and § 26. two judges of the court of bankruptcy are to act for the chief judge of the court of review during his attendance at the said judicial committee.

§ 28. The said judicial committee shall have the same power of punishing contempts and of compelling appearances, and his majesty in council shall have the same powers of enforcing judgments, decrees, and orders, as are now exercised by the High Court of Chancery, or the Court of King's Bench, (and both in personam and in rem.) or as are given to any court ecclesiastical by the 2 & 3 Wm. 4. c. 93; and all such powers as are given to courts ecclesiastical, if of punishing contempts or of compelling appearances, shall be exercised by the said judicial committee, and if of enforcing decrees and orders shall be exercised by his majesty in council, in such and the same manner as the powers in such act given, and shall be of as much force as if the same had been thereby expressly given to the said committee or to his majesty in council.

§ 29. Subject to such orders as his majesty in council shall make, the present registrar of the high court of admiralty, if he shall so think fit, either in person or by deputy, may attend the hearing by the said judicial committee of all causes and appeals which, but for this act or the said last-mentioned act, would have been heard by any court or commission which such registrar was entitled to attend, in person or by deputy, by virtue of his offices of registrar of the high courts of admiralty, delegates, and appeals for prizes; and likewise, subject to any order of his majesty in council, transact and do all acts and things that are necessary, or heretofore done by the said registrar or his deputies in respect of such causes and appeals.

§ 31. Provided, that nothing therein contained shall impeach or render void any treaty or engagement already entered into by his majesty, or restrain him from acceding to any treaty, with any foreign prince, potentate, or power, in which treaty it shall be stipulated that any persons other than the said judicial committee shall hear and adjudicate appeals from his majesty's courts of admiralty in causes of prize.

PRIVY SEAL, privatum sigillum.] A seal which the king useth to such grants or things as pass the great seal 2 Inst. 554. See Keeper of the Privy Seal.

No protection can be granted under the privy seal, but under the great seal: but a warrant of the king under the privy seal to issue money out of his coffers, is sufficient; though not under the privy signet. 2 Inst. 555; 2 Rep. 17; 2 Rol. Abr. 183. The privy seal is sometimes used in things of less consequence, that never pass the great seal; as to discharge a recognizance, debt, &c. But no writ shall pass under the privy seal, which toucheth the common law. 2 Inst. 555. Matters of the privy seal are not issuable, or returnable in any court, &c. 3 Nels. Abr. 211. See Grant of the King, Treason, 7, &c.

By the 2 Wm. 4. c. 49. the offices of the clerks of the signet and privy seal are to be abolished as soon as vacancies occur in them.

PRIVY VERDICT. See Jury.

PRIZE MONEY. By the 2 & 3 Wm. 4. c. 53. all former acts relating to army prize money have been repealed, and the law consolidated and amended. This statute enacts, that all captures hereafter made by the army shall be divided according to such general rule of distribution as his majesty shall direct. Deserters are not to be entitled to prize money; and shares not claimed within six years after being paid as directed by the act to the treasurer of Chelsea Hospital, are declared forfeited, unless upon good cause shown and allowed.

PRIZES, captio; præda; from the Fr. prendre.] A booty taken from an enemy in time of war; generally applied to the cases of capture at sea.

The prize courts in the admiralty, and the courts of lords commissioners of appeals, have the sole and exclusive jurisdiction over the question of prize or no prize, and who are the captors, notwithstanding any of the prize acts; and if they pronounce a sentence of condemnation, adjudging also who are the captors, the courts of common law cannot examine the justice or propriety of it, even though, perhaps, they would have put a different construction on the prize acts. And the same courts have power to enforce their decrees. 4 T. R. 382.

Now, by the 2 & 3 Wm. 4. c. 92. the powers of the lords commissioners, commonly called "the high court of delegates," have been transferred to his majesty in council. See Privy Council. And see further as to naval prizes, Admiralty, Navy, II.

Where an admiral appointed to the command of an expedition from this country, was instructed to put himself and his fleet under the command of the admiral commanding the station, if his co-operation should be necessary, and did accordingly put himself and his fleet under such command, and was directed by the admiral of the station, whilst he remained with him, to consider himself under his command, and to attend to all his orders and signals whilst the fleets were on the same station, and the admiral of the station did several acts forwarding the objects of the expedition, and issued orders relating thereto; but in consequence of ill health, left the station with the ships under his command, and sailed for

England, and at the time the enemy's fleet agreed to surrender was out of sight, and not in a situation to have afforded the least assistance, and the enemy's fleet surrendered the day after he sailed: Held that the admiral of the station was not entitled to his share of distribution of prize as commander-in-chief of the expedition at the time of capture, but the admiral appointed to the command of it was. 4 M. & S. 105.

No action lies against the commander of a British ship of war for seizing and detaining a vessel on suspicion of her being hostile prize, although he afterwards dismiss the vessel without libelling in the Court of Admiralty: and though he detained the vessel partly on suspicion of matters which were cases only of forfeiture, if she were British. 6 Taunton, 439.

PRO. A preposition, signifying for, or in respect of a thing; as pro consilio, &c. And in law, pro in the grant of an annuity pro consilio, showing the cause of the grant, amounts to a condition: but in a feoffment, or lease for life, &c. it is the consideration, and doth not amount to a condition; and the reason of the difference is, because the state of the land by the feoffment is executed, and the grant of the annuity is executory. Plowd. 412. See Condition, Grant.

PROBATE. To claim a thing as a man's own. Leg. Canut. c. 44.

PROBATE OF TESTAMENTS, probatio testamentorum.] The exhibiting and proving wills and testaments before the ecclesiastical judge, delegated by the bishop, who is ordinary of the place where the party dies. If all the deceased's goods, chattels, and debts owing to him, were in the same diocese, then the bishop of the diocese, &c. hath the probate of the testament; but if the goods and chattels were dispersed in divers dioceses, so that there were any thing out of the diocese where the party lived, to make what is called bona notabilia, then the archbishop of Canterbury or York is the ordinary to make probate by his prerogative. Blount. See Executor, V. 3.

The probate of a will is usually made in the spiritual court, and is done by granting letters testamentary to the executor under seal of the court, by which the executor is enabled to bring any action, &c. And if such letters testamentary are granted to the party who exhibits the will, merely on his oath, by swearing that he believeth it to be the last will of the deceased, this is called proving it in common form; and such a probate may be controverted at any time; but if the executor, besides his own oath, produces witnesses to prove it to be the last will of the deceased, and this in the presence of the parties who claim any interest, or in their absence, if they are summoned, and do not appear; this is termed a probate per testes, which cannot be questioned after thirty years. 2 Nels. Abr. 1301.

On an issue, whether the deceased made an executor or no, the probate of the will was adjudged good proof. 2 Lill. Abr. 375. And where the probate of a will is produced in evidence at a trial, the defendant cannot say that the will was forged, or that the testator was non compos mentis; because it is directly against the seal of the ordinary in a matter where he had a proper jurisdiction: but the defendant may give in evidence that the seal itself was forged, or that the testator had bona notabilia, or he may be relieved on appeal. 1 Lev. 235; Raym. 405; 1 Strange, 481. The probate is evidence only in questions relating to the personal estates; as a will relating to real estate only need not be proved. See Executor, Will.

As the judge of the spiritual court only can determine the validity of wills for things personal; therefore the probate of such a will is undeniable evidence to a jury, and may not be controverted at common law. 1 Ld. Raym. 262. See further, Evidence, I.

When probate is to be granted of a will, wherein a legacy is interlined in a different hand, and supposed to be forged, the executor has no remedy but in the spiritual court, where the will ought to be proved, with a special reservation as to that clause. 1 P. Wms. 388.

By 21 Hen. 8. c. 5. which first settled the fees to be taken by a registrar and judge in the probate of wills, it is enacted, that if the officer takes more than his due fees, he shall forfeit 10l. to be divided between the king and party grieved.

The power of granting probates and administration of the goods of dying persons, for wages or work done in the king's docks and yards, shall be in the ordinary of the diocese where the person dieth; or in him to whom power is given by such ordinary, to the exclusion of the prerogative court, &c. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16.

By several acts of parliament, stamps are imposed on the probates of wills and letters of administration, according to the value of the property of the deceased. By these acts the expense of probates for the wills of soldiers and sailors is made very small. See Navy, II. and further, Will.

PROBATOR. An accuser, or approver, or one who undertakes to prove a crime charged upon another.

The word was strictly meant of an accomplice in felony, who, to save himself, confessed the fact, and accused any other principal or accessory, against whom he was bound to make good the charge by duel, or trial by the country, and then was pardoned life and members, but yet to suffer transportation. Bracton; Fleta, lib. 2. c. 52. § 42, 44. See Accessary, Approver.

PROCEDENDO, or procedendo in loquell.] A writ which lieth where an action is removed from an inferior to a superior jurisdiction, as the Chancery, King's Bench, or Common Pleas, by habeas corpus, certiorari, or writ of privilege, to send down the cause to the court from whence removed, to proceed on the complaint; it not appearing to the higher court that the suggestion is sufficiently proved, F. N. B. 153; 5 Rep. 68. See 21 Jac. 1. c. 23. So, where a cause has been removed from an inferior court, the court of K. B. will grant a procedendo if the debt or damages appear to be under 40s. Tidd's Pract.

If the party who sues out the habeas corpus or certiorari doth not put in good bail in time (where good bail is required), then there goes this writ to the inferior court to proceed notwithstanding the habeas corpus, &c. Rule, Mich. 1654. § 8.

If a certiorari or habeas corpus, to remove a cause, be returned before a judge, the judge will give a rule thereon to put in good bail by such a day, which if the defendant, on serving his attorney with a copy of the rule, doth not do, then the judge will sign a note or warrant for a procedendo, to remove the cause where the action was first laid, unless to remove the cause where the action was first laid, unless bail is perfected in four days after service of the rule: also if bail be put in at the time, and do not prove good, the judge will grant a rule for better bail to be put in by a certain day, or else to justify the bail already put in: which if defendant doth not do, the judge will then likewise grant a warrant for a procedendo. Tidd's Pract. See Certiorari, Habeas Corpus.

Where bail, put in on removal of a cause in B. R. is disallowed by the court, if the defendant on a rule for it, at purpose, and notice given, refuse to put in better bail such as the court shall approve of, a procedendo may be granted for disallowing the bail makes the defendant in the same condition as if he had put in no bail, and until the bail is put in and filed, the court is not possessed of the cause so as to proceed in it. Mich. 24 Car. B. R.

After a record returned, and the defendant hath filed bail in B. R. on a cause to be removed, a procedendo ought not to be granted; because by giving and filing bail in this court, the bail below is discharged. Sid. 313.

The procedendo removes the suspicion created by the habeas corpus, and a cause once remanded thereby cannot afterwards be removed or stayed before judgment. 21 Jac. 1. c. 23. § 3.

This writ may also be awarded when it appears upon the return of the habeas corpus, that the court above cannot administer the same justice to the parties as the court below. As where an action is brought in London on a custom or bye-law, which is only suable there. See Habeas Corpus, IV. ad fin.

Where an habeas corpus is brought, after interlocutory, and before final judgment, in an inferior court, and the defendant dies before the return of it, a procedendo shall be awarded; because, by 8 & 9 Wm. 3. c. 11. the plaintiff may have a scire facias against the executors, and proceed to judgment, which he cannot have in another court: and by this means he would be deprived of the effect of his judgment, which would be unreasonable. Salk. 352. So where an action was brought in the sheriff's court of London against two partners, and one of them brought a habeas corpus, and put in bail for himself only, a procedendo was granted; for otherwise the plaintiff would have been disabled from going on in either court. 1 Stra. 527.

If an indictment for felony is removed into K. B. from an inferior court in order to issue process of outlawry upon it, and the party accused comes in, the Court of K. B. will award a procedendo to carry the record back. 5 T. R. 478.

PROCEDENDO ON AID PRAYER. If a man pray in aid of the king, in a real action, and aid be granted; it shall be awarded that he sue to the king in Chancery, and the justices in the Common Pleas shall stay until the writ of procedendo de loquell come to them; and if it appear to the judges by pleading, or showing of the party, that the king hath interest in the land, or shall lose rent, &c. there the court ought to say until they have from the king a procedendo in loquell: and then they may proceed in the plea, until they come to give judgment: when the justices ought not to proceed to judgment, without a writ for that purpose. So in a personal action, if defendant pray in aid of the king, the judges are not to proceed till they receive a procedendo in loquell. And though they may then proceed and try the issue joined, they shall not give judgment until a writ comes to proceed to judgment. New Nat. Brev. 342.

PROCEDENDO AD JUDICIUM. A remedial writ in case of refusal or neglect of justice, which issues out of the Court of Chancery, where judges of any subordinate court do delay the parties; for that they will not give judgment, either on the one side or the other, when they ought so to do. In this case a writ of procedendo shall be awarded, commanding them, in the king's name, to proceed to judgment; but without specifying any particular judgment: for that if errors may be set aside in the course of appeal, or by writ of error, or false judgment: and upon further neglect or refusal, the judges of the inferior court may be punished for their contempt by writ of attachment, returnable in the Court of King's Bench or Common Pleas. 3 Comm. c. 7; F. N. B. 153, 154, 240.

If a verdict passed for the plaintiff in an assize of novel disseisin before the justices of assize, and before they gave judgment by a new commission, new justices were made, the plaintiff in assize might sue forth a certiorari, directed to the other justices, to remove the record before the new justices; and another writ to the new justices to receive and inspect the record, and then proceed to judgment, &c. New Nat. Brev. 342, 343.

Where the authority of commissioners of oyer and terminer, &c. or of justices of the peace, is suspended by writ of super-readers, their power may be restored by a writ of procedendo. Regul. 124; 12 Ass. 21; H. P. C. 162.

PROCESS,

Processus, à procedendo ab initio usque ad finem.] Is so called, because it proceeds or goes out, upon former matter, either original or judicial; and hath two significations:

First, It is largely taken for all the proceedings in any action or prosecution, real or personal, civil or criminal, from the beginning to the end. Secondly, That is termed the process by which a man is called into any temporal court, because it is the beginning or principal part thereof, by which the rest is directed; or, taken strictly, it is the proceeding, after the original, before judgment. Britton, 138; Lamb. lib. 4; Crompt. 133; 8 Rep. 157.

I. Of Process in Civil Cases.

II. In Criminal Cases.

I. BLACKSTONE considers process in civil cases as the means of compelling the defendant to appear in court. This is sometimes called original Process, being founded upon the original writ (now abolished in personal actions, see post); and also to distinguish it from mesne or intermediate process, which issues, pending the suit, upon some collateral interlocutory matter; as to summon juries, witnesses, and the like. Finch. L. 436. Meane process is sometimes put in contradistinction to final process, or process of execution; and then it signifies all such process as intervenes between the beginning and end of a suit. 3 Comm. c. 19.

Before the 2 Wm. 4. c. 39. the means of commencing personal actions in the Court of King's Bench, conformable to its jurisdiction, were, first, by original writ, which was three-fold: 1. Against common persons: 2. Against peers of the realm, and members of the House of Commons: 3. Against corporations and hundredors:—Secondly, by bill of Middlesex, or latitat: Thirdly, by attachment of privilege, at the suit of attorneys and officers of the court: and, Fourthly, by bill, which was of three kinds:—1. Against members of the House of Commons: 2. Against attorneys and officers of the court: 3. Against prisoners in custody of the sheriff, or marshal of the King's Bench prison.

In the Common Pleas the means of commencing personal actions were, first, by original writ, issuing out of Chancery; which was either a special original, adapted to the nature of the action, or a common original, in trespass quare clausum fregit. The former, though it might have been had in any case, was only necessary, in the first instance, against peers, corporations, and hundredors; the latter, not requiring personal service, was sometimes used, when the defendant kept out of the way, so that he could not be arrested, or personally served with process: Secondly, by capias quare clausum fregit, founded on a supposed original, which was the common mode of commencing actions in that court, and answered to the bill of Middlesex, or latitat in the King's Bench: Thirdly, by attachment of privilege, at the suit of attorneys and officers of the court: Fourthly, by bill, which was two-fold: 1. Against attorneys and officers: and, 2. Against members of the House of Commons. If a man were in the Fleet, it seems that a plaintiff might have formerly had a bill of debt against him, in the same manner as in the King's Bench against a man in the custody of the marshal. In practice, actions against prisoners in custody of the warden of the Fleet, were commenced in the same manner as those against other persons by original writ.

In the Exchequer of Pleas, the means of commencing personal actions were, first, by subpoena ad respondendum, which was a process directed to the defendant, analogous to the subpoena in Chancery, or on the equity side of the Exchequer: Secondly, by venire facias ad respondendum, which was in the nature of an original writ, and was the process used at common law against persons having privilege of parliament: Thirdly, by quo minus capias, which answered to the bill of Middlesex or latitat in the King's Bench, and capias quare clausum fregit in the Common Pleas: Fourthly, by venire facias or capias of privilege, at the suit of attorneys and officers of the court: and, Lastly, by bill, which was three-fold: 1. Against attorneys and officers: 2. Against members of the House of Commons, on the stat. 12 & 13 Wm. 3. c. 3. § 2: and

3. Against prisoners in custody of the sheriff, &c. or warden of the Fleet.

The process formerly used for the commencement of personal actions in his majesty's superior courts of law at Westminster having been found, by reason of its great variety and multiplicity, very inconvenient in practice, was abolished, and other writs substituted in lieu thereof, by the 2 Wm. 4. c. 39. intitled "An Act for Uniformity of Process in Personal Actions in his Majesty's Courts of Law at Westminster." The writs authorized by that statute, and which are now used for the commencement of personal actions in any of the said courts, in cases to which such writs are applicable, are—

1. A writ of summons, which is of two kinds: First, In ordinary cases, where the action is not of a bailable nature, or it is not intended to hold the defendant to special bail: Secondly, Against members of parliament, to enforce the provisions of the 6 Geo. 4. c. 16. § 10.

2. A writ of capias, when the defendant is at large, or in custody of the sheriff, &c., and it is intended to hold him to special bail.

3. A writ of detainer, when the defendant is in custody of the marshal of the King's Bench, or warden of the Fleet prison, and it is intended to detain him in such custody.

The foregoing being declared by the statute to be the only writs for the commencement of personal actions in any of the courts aforesaid, in the cases to which such writs are applicable, original writs are consequently abolished in personal actions against peers, corporations, and hundredors, as well as against common persons; as is also the mode of commencing such actions by bill against members of the House of Commons, attorneys and officers of the courts, and prisoners in the custody of the marshal or sheriff, &c.; and by attachment, or capias of privilege, at the suits of attorneys and officers of the courts, in cases to which the writs authorized by the statute are applicable; and there is of course an end, in such cases, to the distinction between the proceedings by original writ and by bill. It should be observed, however, that this statute, being confined to personal actions, did not apply to such as were purely real, as the writ of right, formedon, &c.; or to mixed actions, as dower unde nihil habet, quare impedit, ejectment, waste, &c. But by the 3 & 4 Wm. 4. c. 2. § 36. all real and mixed actions are abolished, except the writ of right of dower, writ of dower unde nihil habet, quare impedit, and ejectment. These excepted actions, however, may still be commenced by original writ, and the action of ejectment may be brought, as before the statute, either by original writ in the King's Bench or Common Pleas, or by bill in the King's Bench or Exchequer of Pleas. The action of replevin also, which is a personal action, and other personal actions, commenced in inferior courts, and removed from thence into superior ones, do not seem to be within the statute; for besides that these actions are not commenced in any of the superior courts of law at Westminster, there is a clause in the act (§ 19.) that "nothing therein contained shall extend to any cause removed into either of the said courts, by writ of pone, certiorari, recordare facias loquelam, habeas corpus, or otherwise." The king, not being named in this statute, is not bound thereby, and consequently may proceed by scire facias, which is a judicial writ, issuing out of and under the seal of the Court of Exchequer, for the recovery of a debt due to him on bond, recognizance, or judgment, &c.; or found by inquisition on an outlawry, or extent; or by an original writ of scire facias, to repeal letters-patent. And a subject is not prohibited by the statute from the suing out a scire facias, which is, for some purposes, considered as a personal action to obtain execution on a judgment or recognizance; or a writ of error, which is an original writ for reversing a judgment.

The writs of summons and capias, it will be observed, are only primary, or writs taken out, in the first instance, to compel the defendant to appear, or put in and perfect special bail to the action. But besides these, and consequent upon them, other auxiliary writs are authorized by the statute to be issued for the same purposes.

These writs are, 1. The writ of distringas, which issues where the defendant has not been personally served with the writ of summons, and has not, according to the exigency thereof, appeared to the action, and cannot be compelled so to do without some more efficacious process. 2. The writ of alias or pluries summons, or capias, for continuing the cause, if the defendant has not been served therewith, or arrested thereon. 3. The writs of exigi facias, and proclamation, &c. for outlawing or waiving the defendant, upon the return of non est inventus to a writ of capias, or of non est inventus and nulla bona to a writ of distringas.

When the writ is to be served, it is said to be serviceable; and when the defendant is to be arrested thereon, it is of a bailable nature. See further, Tidd's New Practice.

In real actions a summons, which is a warning to appear in court at the return of the original writ, is given to the defendant by two of the sheriff's messengers, called summoners, either in person, or left at his house or land. Finch. L. 436. This warning on the land is given, in real actions, by erecting a white stick or wand on the defendant's grounds. Dalt. Sher. c. 31. And by the 31 Eliz. c. 3. the notice must also be proclaimed on some Sunday before the door of the parish church.

From the foregoing it appears that process is only meant to bring the defendant into court, in order to contest the suit, and abide the determination of the law. When he appears, then follow the pleadings, &c. between the parties. See that title.

As to the language of the process and records of law, see Pleading, III.; and for further matter, explanatory of the several sorts of writs and processes, various apposite titles throughout the whole of this work.

Original process to call persons into court, &c. must be in the name of the king; and if it issue from the court of King's Bench, it ought to be under the teste of the chief justice, or of the senior judge of the court, if there be no chief justice; and if it issueth from any other court, it is to be under the teste of the first in commission, &c. Dalt. Ch. 132; Finch. 436; Cro. Car. 393.

If process is awarded out of a court which hath not jurisdiction of the principal cause, it is coram non judice and void; and the sheriff executing it will be a trespasser. 2 Leon. 89.

II. THERE is no need of process on an indictment, &c. where the defendant is present in court; but if he hath fled, or secretes himself, in capital cases, or hath not, in smaller misdemeanors, been bound over to appear at the assizes or sessions, still an indictment may be preferred against him in his absence; since, were he present, he could not be heard before the grand jury against it. And, if it be found, then process must issue to bring him into court; for the indictment cannot be tried unless he personally appears; according to the rule of equity in all cases, and the express provision of the 28 Edw. 3. c. 3. in capital ones, that no man shall be put to death without being brought to answer by due process of law.

No process shall regularly issue in the king's name, and by his writ to apprehend a felon or other malefactor, unless there be an indictment or matter of record in the court, upon which the writ issues. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 575.

The proper process on an indictment for any petty misdemeanor, or on a penal statute, is a writ of conne facias, which is in the nature of a summons to cause the party to appear. And if by the return to such writ it appears that the party hath lands in the county whereby he may be distrained, then a distress infinite shall be issued from time to time till he appears. But if the sheriff returns that he hath no lands in his bailiwick, then (upon his non-appearance) a writ of capias shall issue, which commands the sheriff to take his body, and have him at the next assizes; and if he cannot be taken upon the first capias, a second and a third shall issue, called an alias and a pluries capias. But on indictments for treason or felony, a capias is the first process; and for treason or homicide, only one shall be allowed to issue, or two in the case of other felonies, by 25 Edw. 3. c. 14, though the usage is to issue only one in any felony, the provisions of this statute being in most cases found impracticable. 2 Hale's P. C. 195. And so in the case of misdemeanors, it is now the usual practice for any judge of the Court of King's Bench, upon certificate of an indictment found, to award a writ of capias immediately, in order to bring in the defendant. But if he absconds, and it is thought proper to pursue him to an outlawry, then a greater exactness is necessary. For in such case, after the several writs have issued in a regular number, according to the nature of the respective crimes, without any effect, the offender shall be put in the exigent in order to his outlawry, that is, he shall be exacted, proclaimed, or required to surrender at five county courts; and if he be returned quinto cructis, and does not appear at the fifth exaction or requisition, then he is adjudged to be outlawed, or put out of the protection of the law; so that he is incapable of taking the benefit of it in any respect, either by bringing actions or otherwise. See 8 Hen. 6. c. 10; and tit. Outlawry, III.

The punishment for outlawries upon indictments for misdemeanors, is the same as for outlawries upon civil actions (as to which, and the previous process by writs of capias, exigi facias, and proclamation, see title Outlawry), viz. forfeiture of goods and chattels. But an outlawry in treason or felony amounts to a conviction and attainder of the offence charged in the indictment, as much as if the offender had been found guilty by his country. 2 Hale's P. C. 205; 4 T. R. 521. His life is, however, still under the protection of the law, so that though anciently an outlawed felon was said to have caput lupinum, and might be knocked on the head like a wolf, by any one that should meet him; because having renounced all law, he was to be dealt with as in a state of nature, when every one that should find him might slay him; yet now, to avoid such inhumanity, it is holden that no man is entitled to kill him wantonly or wilfully; but in so doing is guilty of murder, unless it happens in the endeavour to apprehend him. 1 Hale's P. C. 497; Bracton, fol. 125. For any person may arrest an outlaw on a criminal prosecution, either of his own head, or by writ of warrant of capias ulagatum, in order to bring him to execution. But such outlawry may be frequently reversed by writ of error; the proceedings therein being (as it is fit they should be) exceedingly nice and circumstantial; and if any single minute point be omitted or misconducted, the whole outlawry is illegal, and may be reversed upon which reversal the party accused is admitted to plead to, and defend himself against, the indictment. See further, Outlawry, V.

The above is the process to bring in the offender after indictment found; during which stage of the prosecution it is that writs of certiorari facias are usually had; though they may be had at any time before trial, to certify and remove the indictment, with all the proceedings thereon, from any inferior court of criminal jurisdiction into the Court of King's Bench, which is the sovereign ordinary court of justice in causes criminal. And this is frequently done for one of these four purposes, either, 1, to consider and determine the validity of criminal appeals or indictments, and the proceedings thereon, and to quash or confirm them as there is cause; or, 2, where it is surmised that a partial or insufficient trial will move, in order to have the prisoner or defendant tried at the bar of the Court of King's Bench, or before the justices of Nisi Prius; or 3, it is so removed, in order to plead the king's pardon there; or 4, to issue process of outlawry against the offender in those counties or places where the process of the inferior judges will not reach him. 2 Hale's P. C. 210. Such writ of certiorari, when issued and delivered to the inferior court for removing any record or other proceeding, as well upon indictment as otherwise, supersedes the jurisdiction of such inferior court, and makes all subsequent proceedings therein entirely erroneous and illegal, unless the Court of King's Bench remands the record to the court below, to be there tried and determined. A certiorari may be granted at the instance of either the prosecutor or the defendant; the former as a matter of right, the latter as a matter of discretion; and therefore it is seldom granted to remove indictments from the justices of gaol delivery, or after issue joined, or confession of the fact, in any of the courts below. 4 Comm. c. 24. See Certiorari.

At this stage of prosecution also it is that indictments found by the grand jury against a peer must in consequence of a writ of certiorari be certified and transmitted into the court of parliament, or into that of the lord high steward of Great Britain; and that in places of exclusive jurisdiction, as the two universities, indictments must be delivered (upon challenge and claim of cognizance) to the courts therein established by charter, and confirmed by act of parliament, to be there respectively tried and determined. 4 Comm. c. 24.

Prior to the 48 Geo. 3. c. 58, it was the practice for any judge of the Court of King's Bench, upon a certificate of any indictment found, to award a writ of capias immediately, in order to bring in the defendant; 4 Comm. 319; but by that statute it is enacted, that when any person is charged with any offence (not being treason or felony) for which he might be prosecuted by indictment or information in the Court of King's Bench upon affidavit thereof made, or on certificate of indictment or information being filed, any judge of the court may issue his warrant to apprehend the party, who shall be thereupon held to bail to answer the charge, or on failure of bail shall be committed; and if any person in custody on any such charge for want of bail, shall not plead within eight days after copy of the indictment or information, and notice to plead, are delivered at the gaol, the prosecutor may enter the plea of not guilty, and proceed to trial; and the party may be convicted or acquitted as if he had actually appeared. By the same act the powers given by the act 13 Geo. 3. c. 31. and 45 Geo. 3. c. 92. for executing in Scotland the warrants of justices of peace in England, is extended to warrants issued by any judge of the Court of King's Bench, as also the Courts of Great Sessions in Wales, and any judge ofoyer and terminer, or other person having authority to issue such warrant. See also the acts 44 Geo. 3. c. 92., 45 Geo. 3. c. 92. and 54 Geo. 3. c. 186. as to persons committing an offence in one part of the United Kingdom, and who shall go into, reside, or be in any other part of the United Kingdom; and see titles Arrest, Justices, &c.

Obstructing the execution of lawful process, is an offence against public justice, of a very high and presumptuous nature, but more particularly so when it is an obstruction of an arrest upon criminal process. And it hath been holden, that the party opposing such arrest becomes thereby particeps criminis, that is, an accessory in felony, and a principal in treason. 4 Comm. c. 10. p. 129. See Accessory, Arrest, Misdemeanor, Privilege, &c.

PROCESSION. In cathedral and conventual churches, the members had their stated processions, wherein they walked in their most ornamental habits, with music, singing hymns, and other suitable solemnity; and in every parish there was a customary annual procession of the parish priest, the patron of the church, with the chief flag or holy banner, and the other parishioners, to take a circuit round the limits of the parish or manor, and pray for a blessing on the fruits of the earth; to which we owe our present custom of perambulation, which in most places is still called processioning and going in procession, though we have lost the order and devotion, as well as pomp and superstition of it. See Perambulation.

PROCESSUM CONTINUANDO. A writ for the continuance of process after the death of the chief justice or other justices in the commission of oyer and terminer. Reg. Orig. 128.

PROCHEIN AMY, proximus amicus.] The next friend or next of kin to a child in his nonage, who in that respect is allowed to deal for the infant in the management of his affairs; as to be his guardian if he holds lands in soccage, and in the redress of any wrong done him. See West. 1. 3 Edw. 1. c. 47; West. 2. 13 Edw. 2. st. 1. c. 15; 2 Inst. 261; and see Infant, V.

Prochein amy is commonly taken for guardian in soccage; but otherwise it is he who appears in court for an infant who sues any action, and aids the infant in pursuit of his action; for to sue, an infant may not make an attorney, but the court will admit the next friend of the infant plaintiff; and a guardian for an infant defendant.

If no guardian is appointed by the father, &c. of an infant, the course of B. R. hath been used to allow one of the officers of the court to be prochein amy to the infant to sue. Terms de Ley; 2 Ld. Abr. 52.

Prochein amy was never before the statute West. 1. and was appointed in case of necessity, where an infant was to sue his guardian, or the guardian would not sue for him. 2 Nels. Abr. 997.

The plaintiff infant may sue by guardian, or by prochein amy; and if the admission is to sue by guardian when it should be by prochein amy, it will be well enough, there being many precedents both ways; but if he is sued, it must be by guardian. Cro. Car. 86, 115; Hut. 92.

If an infant were enloigned or disturbed by his guardian or any other, so that he could not bring assize, his prochein amy should be admitted. 3 Edw. 1. c. 47. So generally, by 13 Edw. 1. c. 15. Since these statutes, the common rule seems to have been that the infant shall sue by prochein amy, and defendant by guardian.

To constitute a prochein amy (or guardian), the person intended, who is usually some near relation, goes with the infant before a judge, at his chambers; or else a petition is presented to the judge on behalf of the infant, stating the nature of the action; or if he is defendant, that he is advised and believes he has a good defence thereto; and praying in respect of his infancy, that the person intended may be assigned him as his prochein amy or guardian, to prosecute or defend the action. This petition should be accompanied with an agreement, signifying the assent of the intended prochein amy or guardian; and an affidavit made by some third person, that the petition and agreement were duly signed. On one or other of these grounds, the judge will grant his fiat, upon which a rule or order is drawn up, with the clerk of the rules, for the admission of the prochein amy or guardian; which admission is either special, to prosecute or defend a particular action, or general, to prosecute or defend all actions whatsoever; though it is said, that by the practice of the Court of King's Bench, a special admission of a guardian to appear in one cause will serve for others. 1 Stra. 304, 305.

But this is now altered by a rule of H. T. 2 Wm. 4. which declares that a special admission of prochein amy or guardian to prosecute or defend for an infant shall not be deemed an authority to prosecute or defend in any but the particular action or actions specified. See further, Tidd's Prac.

PROCHEIN AVOIDANCE. A power to present a minister to a church when it shall become void; as where one hath presented a clerk to a church, and then grants the next avoidance to another, &c. See Admowson, Avoidance.

PROCLAMATION, proclamatio.] A notice publicly given of any thing, whereof the king thinks fit to advertise his subjects; and so it is used in 7 Rich. 2. c. 6. See King, V. 3.

The king's proclamation, reciting that it had been represented that certain outrages had been committed in different parts of certain counties, and offering a reward for the discovery and apprehension of offenders, is admissible evidence to prove an introductory averment in an information for a libel, that divers acts of outrage had been committed in those parts. 4 M. & S. 532.

PROCLAMATION OF COURTS, is used particularly in the beginning or calling of a court, and at the discharge or adjourning thereof, for the attendance of persons and despatch of business.

Before a parliament was dissolved, it was anciently held, that public proclamation was to be made, that if any person had any petition, he should come in and be heard. Lee Constitut. 156. See Parliament.

Proclamation is made in courts baron for persons to come in and claim vacant copyholds, of which the tenants died seized since the last courts; and the lord may seize a copyhold, if the heir come not in to be admitted on three proclamations, &c. 1 Lev. 63. See Copyhold.

PROCLAMATION OF EXIGENTS. On awarding an exigent, in order to outlawry, a writ of proclamation issues to the sheriff of the county where the party dwells, to make three proclamations for the defendant to yield himself, or be outlawed. See Outlawry, III.

PROCLAMATION OF A FINE. Where any fine of land was passed, proclamation was solemnly made thereof in the Court of Common Pleas where levied, after engrossing it, and transcripts were also sent to the justice of assize and justices of the peace of the county in which the lands lay, to be openly proclaimed there. 1 Rich. 3. c. 7. See Fine of Lands, V.

PROCLAMATION OF NUISANCES. Proclamation is to be made against nuisances, and for the removal of them, &c. 12 Rich. 2. c. 13. See Nuisance.

PROCLAMATION OF REBELLION, is a writ whereby a man not appearing upon a subpoena, or an attachment in the Chancery, is reputed and declared a rebel, if he render not himself by a day assigned. See Chancery, Commission of Rebellion.

PROCLAMATION OF RECUSANTS. A proclamation whereby recusants were formerly convicted, on non-appearance at the assizes. See 29 Eliz. c. 6; 3 Jac. 1. c. 4, 5.

PRO CONFESSO. Where a bill is exhibited in Chancery, to which the defendant appears, and is afterwards in contempt for not answering, the matter contained in the bill shall be taken as if it were confessed by defendant. Terms de Ley.

For the former practice with respect to bills taken pro confesso, and the amendments introduced in it by the 1 Wm. 4. c. 36, see Equity.

PROCTOR, procurator.] He who undertakes to manage another man's cause in any court of civil or ecclesiastical law for his fee: Qui aliena negotia gerenda suscipit.

Proctors are officers established to represent in judgment the parties who empower them (by warrant under their hands called a proxy) to appear for them to explain their rights, to manage and instruct their cause, and to demand judgment. 2 Dom. 583.

A proctor is not to act as a justice of peace. 5 Geo. 2. c. 18. See Justices of the Peace, III.

For the regulations as to the admission and acting of proctors in ecclesiastical courts in England, see 53 Geo. 3. c. 127. § 8—11; in Ireland, 54 Geo. 3. c. 68. § 9—13.

The ecclesiastical court cannot entertain a suit for proctors' fees, since they are a temporal duty, for which an action may be maintained in the temporal courts. 1 Ld. Raym. 709. S. C. 1 Salk. 333; 4 Mod. 255.

PROCTORS OF THE CLERGY, procuratores cleri.] They who are chosen and appointed to appear for cathedral or other collegiate churches; as also for the common clergy of every doese to sit in the convocation-house in the time of parliament.

On every new parliament the king directeth his writ to the archbishop of each province for the summoning of all bishops, deans, archdeacons, &c. to the convocation, and generally of all the clergy of his province, assigning them the time and place in the writ; then the archbishop of Canterbury, on his writ received, according to custom directs his letters to the bishop of London, as his provincial dean, first citing him personally, and then willing him to cite in like manner all the bishops, &c. and generally all the clergy of his province, to the place, and against the day prefixed in the writ; but directeth withal that one proctor be sent for every cathedral or collegiate church, and two proctors for the body of the inferior clergy of each diocese; and by virtue of these letters authentically sealed, the bishop of London directs his like letters severally to the bishop of every diocese of the province, citing them in like sort, and willing them not only to appear, but also to admonish the deans and archdeacons personally to appear; and the cathedral and collegiate churches, and the common clergy of the diocese, to send their proctors to the place at the day appointed; and also willeth them to certify to the archbishop the names of every person so warned by them, in a schedule annexed to their letter certificatory; then the bishops proceed accordingly, and the cathedral and collegiate churches, and the body of the clergy, make choice of their proctor; which being done and certified to the bishop, he returneth all at the day. Cowell. See Convocation.

PROCONSULS. A name applied to justices in eyre, or justitarii errantes, in England. Cowell.

PROCURATIONS, procuraciones. Certain sums of money which parish priests pay yearly to the bishop or archdeacon, ratione visitationis: formerly the visitor demanded a proportion of meat and drink for his refreshment, when he came abroad to do his duty and examine the state of the church; afterwards these were turned into annual payments of a certain sum, which is called a procuration, being so much given to the visitor, ad procurandum cibum et potum. And complaints were often made of the excessive charges of the procurations, which were prohibited by several councils and bulls; and that of Clement IV. is very particular, wherein mention is made that the archdeacon of Richmond, visiting the diocese, travelled with one hundred and three horses, twenty one dogs, and three larks, to the great oppression of religious houses, &c.

Procurations are due to the person having of common right; and although originally due by reason of visitation only, yet the same may be due without actual visitation. Co. l. 97.

A libel was brought in the spiritual court for procurations by the archdeacon of York, setting forth, that for ten or twenty years, &c. there had been due and paid to him, so much yearly by a parson, and his predecessors, who suggested for a prohibition that a duty had been payable, but denied the prescription; and that the ecclesiastical court cannot try prescriptions; but it was adjudged that procurations are payable of common right, as tithes are, and no action will lie for the same at common law; if he had denied the quantum, then a prohibition might go. Rayn. 360. See 34 & 35 Hec. 8. c. 19.

These are also called procuras, and it is said there are three sorts of procurations or proxies, ratione visitationis, ratione tithis et parochie, and that the first is of ecclesiastical cognizance, but the two last are triable at law. Hardr. 180.

PROCURATOR. One who hath a charge committed to him by any person; in which general signification it hath been applied to a visitor or lieutenant, who acts instead of another; and we read of procurator regis, and procurator republice, which is a public magistrate; also proxies of lords in parliament are in our law books called procuratores; the bishops are sometimes termed procuratores ecclesiarum; and the advocates of religious houses, who were to solicit the interests and plead the causes of the societies, were denominated procuratores monasterii; and from this word comes the common word proctor. It is likewise used for him who gathers the fruits of a benefice for another man; and procuracy is used in 3 Rich. 2. c. 3. for the writing or instrument whereby he is authorized.

PROCURATORES ECCLESIE PAROCHIALIS. The churchwardens, so called because they were to act as proxies and representatives of the church, for the true honour and interest of it. Paroch. Antiq. 562.

PROCURATORIUM. The procuratory or instrument by which any person or community did constitute or delegate their proctor or proctors to represent them in any judicial court or cause.

PROCURATORY OF RESIGNATION. A term in the law of Scotland, by which the vassal authorizes the fee to be returned to his superior, either to remain the property of the superior, in which case it is said to be a resignation ad remanentiam, or for the purpose of the superior's giving out the fee to a new vassal, or to the former vassal, and a new series of heirs; this is termed a resignation in favour. These are analogous to the surrenders of copyholds in England. See that title, and tit. Tenures.

PRODES HOMINES. A title often given in our old books to the barons of the realm, or other military tenants, who were summoned to the king's council; discreti et fideles (probi) homines, who, according to their prudence and knowledge, were to give their counsel and advice.

PRODITORIE, treasonably. The technical word in indictments for treason when indictments were in Latin.

PROFANENESS, quasi procul à fano. A disrespect to the name of God, and to things and persons consecrated to him. Wood's Inst. 396.

Profaneness is punishable by statute; as for reviling the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, profanely using the name of God in plays, &c.; profaning the Lord's Day; cursing and swearing, &c. See 1 Edw. 6. c. 1; 1 Eliz. c. 1; 3 Jac. 1. c. 21; 1 Car. 1. c. 1; and tits. Blasphemy, Swearing, Sunday.

PROFER, profum, vel proferum, from the French proferer, i. e. producere. The time appointed for the accounts of officers in the exchequer, which was twice in the year. 51 Hen. 3. stat. 5.

As to the profers of sheriffs, though the certain debt of the sheriff could not be known before the finishing of his accounts; yet it seems there was anciently an estimate made of what his constant charge of the annual revenue amounted to, according to a medium, which was paid into the exchequer at the return of the writ of summons of the pipe; and the sums so paid were called profer vicecomitis; but although these profers were paid, if on the conclusion of the sheriff's accounts, and after allowances and discharges had by him, it appeared that there was a surplussage, or that he was charged with more than he could receive, he had his profers paid or allowed him again. Hale's Sher. Account, 32.

Now by the 3 & 4 Wm. 4. c. 99. § 2. it is no longer necessary for sheriffs to make or pay profers; and by § 48. their accounts are hereafter to be audited by the commissioners for auditing the public accounts. See further, tit. Sheriff.

There is a writ de attornato vicecomitis pro profro faciendo. Reg. Orig. 139. And we read of profers in the 32 Hen. 8. c. 21, in which place profer signifies the offer and endeavour to proceed in an action. See Brit. c. 28; Fleta, lib. 1. c. 38.

PROFER THE HALF-MARK. To offer or tender the half-mark. See Half-Mark.

PROFERT IN CURIA. [See Produces in Court.] Where the plaintiff in an action declares on a deed, or the defendant pleads a deed, he must do it with a profert in curia, to the end that the other party may at his own charges have a copy of it; and until then he is not obliged to answer it. 2 Lil. Abr.

382. And if a man pleads by virtue of an indenture, which is lost, on affidavit made thereof the court will compel the plaintiff to show the counterpart, that the defendant may plead thereto. Cro. Jac. 429.

The Court of King's Bench held, that a deed may be pleaded as lost by time and accident without profert; 3 T. R. 151; or destroyed. 3 T. R. 153, n. But if it appear by the record that defendant had oyer of a copy only, it is error. 3 T. R. 153, n.

Where, in setting forth a conveyance, it was stated that a release was cancelled "by the seal of the releasor being taken off and destroyed, or lost," with a profert of the residue of the deed, the Court of Common Pleas held this to be good pleading. 2 K. B. 259.

When he who is party or privy in estate or interest, or who justifies in the right of him who is party or privy, pleads a deed, notwithstanding the party privy claims but part of the original estate, yet he must show the original deed. But where a man is a stranger to a deed, and claims nothing in it, &c. there he may plead the patent or deed, without a profert in curia. 10 Rep. 92, 93.

A man may claim under a deed of uses, without showing it; because the deed doth not belong to him (though he claims by it), but to the covenantees, and he hath no means to obtain it; and for that it is an estate executed by the statute of uses, so as the party is in by law, like to tenant in dower, or by statute, &c. who may have a rent-charge extended, and need not show the deed. Cro. Car. 442. And in things executed, or estates determined, there need not be any profert in curia. 3 Lev. 204.

If profert be made, nothing but the production of the deed will suffice. 4 East, 585. But no profert need be made of a deed which is only inducement to the action. 8 T. R. 571.

No advantage or exceptions shall be taken for want of a profert in curia; but the court shall give judgment according to the very right of the cause, without regarding any such omission and defect, except the same be specially and particularly set down, and shown for cause of demurrer. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16. See Amendment; and also Deed, IV.; Monstrans de Fait; Oyer, &c.

PROFESSION, professio.] Was used particularly for the entering into any religious order, &c. This entering into religion, whereby a man was shut up from all the common offices of life, was termed a civil death. See 1 Comm. 132.

PROFITS. A devise of the profits of lands is a devise of the land itself. Dyer, 210.

A husband deviseth the profits of his lands to his wife until his son came of age; this was held to be a devise of the lands until that time; though if the lands were devised to the son, and that his mother should take the profits of it until he came of age, &c., this would give the mother only an authority, not an interest. 2 Leon. 221.

By devise of profits the lands usually pass, unless there are other words to show the intention of the testator to be otherwise. Moor, 753, 758; 2 Nels. Abr. 1051. See Wills.

PROFITS OF COURTS. The profits arising from the king's ordinary courts of justice make a branch of his revenue. And these consist not only in fines imposed upon offenders, forfeitures of recognizances and amercements levied on defaulters; but also in certain fees due to the crown in a variety of legal matters; as for setting the great seal to charters, original writs, and other forensic proceedings, and for permitting fines to be levied of lands, in order to bar entails, or otherwise to insure titles. As none of these can be done without the immediate intervention of the king, by himself or his officers, the law allows him certain perquisites and profits as a recompense for the trouble he undertakes for the public. These in process of time have been almost all granted out to private persons, or else appropriated to certain particular uses. So that, though our law proceedings are still loaded with their payment, very little of them is now returned into the king's exchequer, for part of whose royal maintenance they were originally intended. All future grants of them, however, by the 1 Ann. st. 2. c. 7. are to endure for no longer time than the life of the prince who grants them. 4 Comm. c. 8. p. 289.

PROHIBITION,

PROHIBITIO.] A writ to forbid any court to proceed in any cause there depending, on suggestion that the cognizance thereof belongeth not to the court. F. N. B. 39. But it is now most usually taken for that writ which lieth for one who is impleaded in the court-christian, for a cause belonging to the temporal jurisdiction, or the consueance of the king's court; whereby as well the party and his counsel, as the judge himself, and the registrar, are forbidden to proceed any further in that cause. Cowell.

The writ of prohibition is the remedy provided by the common law, against the encroachment of jurisdiction; where one is called coram non judice, to answer in a court that has no legal cognizance of a cause; which is enumerated by Blackstone among the grievances cognizable by the courts of common law. See 3 Comm. cap. 7.

As all external jurisdiction, whether ecclesiastical or civil, is derived from the crown, and the administration of justice is committed to a variety of courts; hence it hath been the care of the crown, that these courts keep within the limits and bounds of the several jurisdictions prescribed them; for this purpose the writ of prohibition was framed; which issues out of the superior court of common law to restrain inferior courts, whether such courts be temporal, ecclesiastical, maritime, military, &c. on a suggestion that the cognizance of the matter belongs not to such courts, and in case they exceed their jurisdiction, the officer who executes the sentence, and in some case the judge who gives it, are punishable in such superior courts, sometimes at the suit of the king, sometimes at the suit of the party, sometimes at the suit of both, according to the variety of the case. 2 Inst. 601; F. N. B. 40; 12 Co. 6; 1 And. 279; 2 Jon. 218; Skin. 628.

The reason of prohibitions in general is, that they preserve the right of the king's crown and courts, and the quiet of the subject; that it is the wisdom and policy of the law to suppose both best preserved when every thing runs in its right channel, according to the original jurisdiction of every court; as by the same reason that one might be allowed to encroach, another might; which would produce nothing but confusion in the administration of justice. Show. Par. Ca. t. 3.

So that prohibitions do not import that the ecclesiastical or the inferior temporal courts are alia than the king's courts, but signify that the cause is drawn ad aliud examen than it ought to be; therefore it is always said in all prohibitions, (be the court ecclesiastical or temporal to which it is awarded,) that the cause is drawn ad aliud examen contra coronam et dignitatem regiam. 2 Inst. 602; 1 Roll. Rep. 252; 3 Bulst. 120; Palm. 297.

A prohibition is a writ issuing properly out of the Court of King's Bench, being the king's prerogative writ; but, for the furtherance of justice, it may now also be had, in some cases, out of the courts of Chancery, Common Pleas, or Exchequer; see post, I. It is directed to the judge and parties of a suit in any inferior court, commanding them to cease from the prosecution thereof, upon a suggestion that either the cause originally, or some collateral matter arising therein, does not belong to that jurisdiction, but to the cognizance of some other court. This writ may issue either to inferior courts of common law; as to the courts of the counties palatine or principality of Wales, (but which latter courts are now abolished,) if they hold plea of land or other matters not lying within their respective franchises; to the county courts, or courts baron, where they attempt to hold plea of any matter of the value of 40s.; or it may be directed to the courts christian, the university courts, the court of chivalry, or the Court of Admiralty, where they concern themselves with any matter not within their jurisdiction; as if the first should attempt to try the validity of a custom pleaded, or the latter a contract made, or to be executed, within this kingdom. Or if, in handling of matters clearly within their cognizance, they transgress the bounds prescribed to them by the laws of England; as where they require two witnesses to prove the payment of a legacy, a release of tithes, or the like; in such cases also a prohibition will be awarded. For as the fact of signing a release or of actual payment is not properly a spiritual question, but only allowed to be decided in those courts, because incident or necessary to some original question clearly within their jurisdiction, it ought, therefore, where the two laws differ, to be decided, not according to the spiritual, but the temporal law; else the same question might be determined different ways, according to the court in which the suit is depending; an impropriety, which no wise government can or ought to endure, and which is therefore a ground of prohibition. And if either the judge or the party shall proceed after such prohibition, an attachment may be had against them, to punish them for the contempt, at the discretion of the court that awarded it; and an action will lie against them, to repair the party injured in damages. 3 Comm. c. 7. p. 112, 113.

So long as the idea continued among the clergy, that the ecclesiastical state was wholly independent of the civil, great struggles were constantly maintained between the temporal courts and the spiritual, concerning the writs of prohibition, and the proper objects of it; even from the time of the constitutions of Clarendon, made in opposition to the claims of Archbishop Becket, in 10 Hen. 2. to the time of exhibiting certain articles of complaint to the king by Archbishop Bancroft in 3 Jac. 1. on behalf of the ecclesiastical courts, from which, and from the answers to them signed by all the judges of Westminster Hall, much may be collected concerning the reasons of granting and methods of proceeding upon prohibitions. See 2 Inst. 601-618.

- I. What Courts may grant a Prohibition; and whether the granting it be discretionary, or ex debito justitiæ.
- II. Who have a right to, and may demand, and join in a Prohibition.
- III. Of the Manner of obtaining a Prohibition; and the Decision of the Court thereon.
- IV. In what Cases it may be granted to inferior Temporal Courts or Jurisdictions; and at what Time.
- V. In what Cases to the Spiritual Courts; and at what Time.

I. The superior courts of Westminster, having a superintendency over all inferior courts, may in all cases of innovation, &c. award a prohibition; in this the power of the Court of B. R. has never been doubted, being the superior common law court in the kingdom. F. N. B. 53; 1 Inst. 71. Also the Court of Chancery may award a prohibition; which may issue as well in vacation as in term time, but such writ is returnable into B. R. or C. B. Bro. Prohibition, pl. 6; 4 Inst. 81; 1 P. Wms. 43, 476.

If one be sued in an inferior court for a matter out of the jurisdiction, the defendant may either have a prohibition from one of the common law courts of Westminster Hall; or in regard this may happen in vacation, when only the Chancery is open, he may move that court for a prohibition; but then it must appear by oath, that the fact did arise out of the jurisdiction, and that the defendant tendered a foreign plea, which was refused; and if a prohibition has been granted out of Chancery improvidè, and without these circumstances attending it, the court will grant a supersedeas thereto. 1 P. Wms. 776.

As the jurisdiction of the Court of C. B. is founded on original writs issuing out of Chancery, it hath been doubted, whether this court could, without writ or plea depending, award a prohibition; but this point has been determined, viz. that this court may on a suggestion grant prohibitions, to keep as well temporal as ecclesiastical courts within their jurisdiction, and that without any original writ or plea depending; the common law being, in these cases, a prohibition of itself, and standing instead of an original. Bro. Prohibition, pl. 6; Noy, 153; 12 Co. 58, 108; Bro. Consultation, pl. 3; 4 Inst. 99; 2 Brownl. 17.

Accordingly it hath been adjudged, that a prohibition ought to be granted by C. B. to the court of delegates, for suing there to avoid the institution of a clerk to a church in Lancashire, after induction; though the quare impedit for the church could not be brought in C. B., but only in the county of Lancaster; because the title of the advowson was not questioned by this prohibition, but the intrusion on the common law, of which this court has special care. Moor, 861; 2 Roll. Abr. 317; Hob. 15.

Formerly as to the courts of B. R. and C. B. this difference was made, That in the first of those courts a prohibition might be awarded on a bare surmise, without any suggestion on record; and such writ was only in nature of a commission prohibitory, which was discontinued by demise of the king; but that as to a prohibition issuing out of C. B. the suggestion must have been on record, therefore was considered as the suit of the party, and in which he might have been nonsuited, and was not discontinued by demise of the king. Noy, 77; Palm. 422; Latch. 114. Yet, if insisted on, a prohibition could not be moved for in B. R., till the suggestion were entered on the roll. And indeed it was the constant practice to enter the suggestion on the roll, and to leave a copy thereof with the clerk of the papers previous to the motion. 1 Salk. 130. But now see the recent statute, 1 Wm. 4. c. 21, post.

The Court of C. B. has no power to issue an original writ of prohibition to restrain a bishop from committing waste in the possessions of his see: at least at the suit of an uninterested person. Query, if any court of common law has that power; and if the Court of Chancery has not? 1 Bos. & Pul. 105.

If the king's farmer, or copyholder of the king's manor, be sued in the ecclesiastical court for tithes, on a suggestion in the Court of Exchequer that he prescribes to pay a certain modus in lieu of tithes, he shall have a prohibition, and such modus shall be tried there. Palm. 523-5; Lane, 39; 1 Roll. Abr. 539.

It is laid down, that though a surmise be a matter of fact, and triable by a jury, yet it is in the discretion of the court to deny a prohibition, when it appears to them that the surmise is not true. Hob. 67.

But it hath been held, that awarding a prohibition is a matter discretionary; that is, from the circumstances of the case, the superior courts are at liberty to exercise a legal discretion therein; but not an arbitrary one in refusing prohibition, where in such like cases they have been granted, or where by law they ought to be granted. Winch. 78.

It hath been determined in the House of Lords, that no writ of error will lie on the refusal of a prohibition; but when a consultation is awarded, it is within an ideo consideratum est, and then a writ of error will lie. 1 Ld. Raym. 515.

If the master of a ship sues in the Admiralty for his wages, and a prohibition is moved for, on a suggestion that the contract was made on land, and the court is of opinion that a prohibition ought to be granted; in this case they will not compel the party to find special bail to the action in the court above. Salk. 33; Carth. 518; Cum. 74; 1 Ld. Raym. 576.

If there is judgment against a simonist, who by the assent of parties is to continue for a certain time on the benefice, and who at the expiration of the time refuses to remove, but commits waste, a prohibition to stay waste may be had by the patron, incumbent, or any other person, because that is the king's writ; and any one may pray prohibition for the king, and it is grantable ex debito justitiæ, and not in the discretion of the court. 1 Sid. 65; Hob. 247.

II. The king may sue for a prohibition, though the plea in the spiritual court be between two common persons; because the suit is in derogation of his crown and dignity. F. N. B. 40.

If the ecclesiastical court hold plea of any matter which belongs not to their jurisdiction, it has been already stated, that, on information thereof to the king's courts, a prohibition will issue. 2 Inst. 607. And if a man libels in the spiritual court for a matter which does not appertain to that court, but to the common law, as a matter of frank tenement; yet he himself, against his own suit, may pray a prohibition, and have it. 2 Roll. Abr. 312; 1 Leon. 130; Goulds. 149; 12 Co. 56.

So, where the plaintiff in the spiritual court brought a prohibition to stay his own suit there, for that he suing for tithes by virtue of a lease made by the vicar of A. for three years, the defendant claimed to be discharged of tithes by a former lease and composition by deed; and in this case it was held, that the plaintiff himself may have a prohibition to stay the suit; for the ecclesiastical judges are not to meddle with the trial of leases or real contracts, though they have jurisdiction of the original cause, (viz. the tithes); for the lease is in the realty, and is not merely accidental; and it makes no difference, that the plaintiff brings prohibition to stay his own suit; for if the temporal court has knowledge by any means, that the spiritual court meddles with temporal trials, a prohibition ought to be awarded. Cro. Jac. 351; 2 Bulst. 285; Litt. Rep. 20.

If a vicar sues a parishioner for tithes in the spiritual court, and the parson appropriate appears there pro interesse suo, and prays a prohibition, it shall be granted. 2 Roll. Abr. 312; Cro. Eliz. 251; Keilw. 110.

If lessee for years is sued in the spiritual court for tithes, he in reversion may have a prohibition. Moor. 915; Cro. Eliz. 55.

But no man is entitled to a prohibition, unless he is in danger of being injured by some suit actually depending; therefore, on a petition to the archbishop, or other ecclesiastical judge, no prohibition lies. March. 22, 45. A prohibition quia timet does not lie. Allen. 56.

And a defendant, cited in the ecclesiastical court, must appear before he can apply for a prohibition. 2 D. P. C. 528.

If several libels are exhibited against A. and B. in a matter in which the court hath not consueance, A. and B. cannot join in a prohibition; so if the griefs be several, as some books say. Noy. 131; 1 Leon. 286; Cro. Car. 129.

But where the vicar of A. libelled several persons severally for tithes, who joined in a prohibition, suggesting a modus; though the court held in this case that the prohibition was not regularly brought, being in all their names, when there were several libels; yet inasmuch as this was on a custom, and matter triable at common law, in which the ecclesiastical court was properly prohibited, though not in exact form, they refused to award a consultation; but directed that the parties should put in several declarations, as if there had been several prohibitions. Yelv. 128, 129; Owen. 13.

So if A. libels against B. and C. for defamation, and they sue a prohibition, they shall join in attachment on it; and it is no objection to say, that the defamation was several. 1 Ld. Raym. 127; and see 1 Vent. 266; Raym. 125; Comb. 448.

Where two or more are allowed to join in a prohibition, and one dies, the writ shall not abate; because nothing is to be recovered; they are only to be discharged. Owen. 13.

PROHIBITION, III.

III. The party aggrieved in the court below applies to the superior court, setting forth the nature and cause of his complaint, in being drawn ad aliud examen, by a jurisdiction or manner of process disallowed by the laws of the kingdom; upon which, if the matter alleged appears to the court to be sufficient, the writ of prohibition immediately issues; commanding the judge not to hold, and the party not to prosecute, the plea.

But sometimes the point may be too nice and doubtful to be decided merely upon a motion: and then, for the more solemn determination of the question, the party applying for the prohibition is directed by the court to declare in prohibition; that is, to prosecute an action, by filing a declaration against the other, upon a supposition or fiction (which is not traversable) that he has proceeded in the suit below, notwithstanding the writ of prohibition. And if, upon demurrer and argument, the court shall finally be of opinion, that the matter suggested is a good and sufficient ground of prohibition on a point of law, then judgment with nominal damages shall be given for the party complaining, and the defendant, and also the inferior court, shall be prohibited from proceeding any farther. On the other hand, if the superior court shall think it no competent ground for restraining the inferior jurisdiction, then judgment shall be given against him who applied for the prohibition in the court above, and a writ of consultation shall be awarded; so called, because, upon deliberation and consultation had, the judges find the prohibition to be ill-founded, and therefore by this writ they return the cause to its original jurisdiction, to be there determined, in the inferior court. 3 Comm. c. 7; 2 H. Black. Rep. 533.

Formerly it was necessary to file a suggestion on record, setting forth the ground for prohibition, and to allege contempt in a declaration in prohibition filed before writ issued; but now by the 1 Wm. 4. c. 21. it is not necessary to file any such suggestion, but the application may be made on affidavits only; and in case the party applying shall be directed to declare in prohibition, before writ issued, such declaration shall be expressed to be on behalf of the party only, and not as heretofore on behalf of the party and of his majesty; and shall contain and set forth in a concise manner so much only of the proceeding in the court below as may be necessary to show the ground of the application, without alleging the delivery of a writ or any contempt; and shall conclude by praying, that a writ of prohibition may issue; to which declaration the party defendant may demur or plead such matters, by way of traverse or otherwise, as may be proper to show that the writ ought not to issue, and conclude by praying that such writ may not issue; and judgment shall be given that the writ of prohibition do or do not issue, as justice may require: and the party in whose favour judgment shall be given, whether on nonsuit, verdict, demurrer, or otherwise, shall be entitled to the costs attending the application and subsequent proceedings, and have judgment to recover the same; and in case a verdict shall be given for the party plaintiff in such declaration, it shall be lawful for the jury to assess damages, for which judgment shall also be given; but such assessment shall not be necessary to entitle the plaintiff to costs. § 1.

It has been held, that the above act does not enable the King's Bench, where a party has declared in prohibition and succeeded, to grant him his costs incurred in the ecclesiastical court. 5 B. & Ad. 458.

Leave to declare in prohibition will be granted only when the court inclines to prohibit, not when it inclines to the contrary. 1 Black. Rep. 81; Doug. 620. (528). The party applying for a prohibition has no right to insist on declaring when the court is satisfied that his application is groundless; but the defendant in prohibition may, when the opinion of the court is against him. 1 Burr. 198.

Even in ordinary cases, the writ of prohibition is not absolutely final and conclusive. For, though the ground be a proper one in point of law for granting the prohibition, yet, if the fact that gave rise to it be afterwards falsified, the cause shall be remanded to the prior jurisdiction. If, for instance, a custom be pleaded in the spiritual court, a prohibition ought to go, because that court has no authority to try it; but if the fact of such a custom be brought to a competent trial, and be there found false, a writ of consultation will be granted. For this purpose the party prohibited may appear to the prohibition, and take a declaration, (which must always pursue the suggestion,) and so plead to issue upon it; denying the contempt, and traversing the custom upon which the prohibition was grounded: and, if that issue be found for the defendant, he shall then have a writ of consultation.

The writ of consultation may also be, and is frequently, granted by the court without any action brought; when, after a prohibition issued, upon more mature consideration the court are of opinion that the matter suggested is not a good and sufficient ground to stop the proceedings below. 3 Comm. c. 7.

Where the matter suggested for a prohibition appears on the face of the libel to be out of the jurisdiction of the inferior court, an affidavit of the truth of the suggestion is never insisted on; but if it does not appear on the face of the libel, or if a prohibition is moved for, for more than appears on the face of the libel to be out of their jurisdiction, there ought to be an affidavit. 2 Salk. 549; 1 P. Wms. 65. 477; Andr. 304.

On a rule to show cause why a prohibition should not be granted to stay a suit in the court of the Archdeacon of Lincoln, against one for not going to church, nor receiving the sacrament thrice a year, on suggestion of the statute of Elizabeth, and Toleration Act, and then qualifying himself within that act, and alleging, that he pleaded it below, and they refused to receive his plea; cause was shown that this fact was false, and that the plaintiff was not a dissenter, nor had qualified himself ut supra, and that there was no affidavit of the fact by the plaintiff; by which means any person might come and suggest a false fact, and oust the spiritual court of their jurisdiction; which the court admitted, and, for want of such affidavit, the rule was discharged. 1 Ld. Raym. 1211.

If a plea to an inferior jurisdiction be properly tendered, which they refuse, though this be a good cause for a prohibition, yet an affidavit must be made of the refusal. Skin. 20; Hurd. 406; 3 Keb. 217.

An action was made for a prohibition to the ecclesiastical court of London, for calling a woman whore, on a suggestion that the words were actionable there by the custom of the place; but the court would not grant a prohibition without oath made, that if any such words were spoken, it was in London, and not elsewhere. 4 Mod. 367.

On a libel for calling the plaintiff old thief and old whore, the defendant suggested for a prohibition, that if any such words were spoken, they were spoken at the same time; but this suggestion was held ill, because the words ought to have been fully confessed. 1 Vent. 10.

The 2 & 3 Edw. 6. c. 13. enacted, That, in cases of suits in the ecclesiastical court for tithes, any party suing for any prohibition, before any prohibition should be granted, shall bring and deliver to the hands of some of the judges of the same court, where such party demanded prohibition, the very true copy of the libel depending in the ecclesiastical court, concerning the matter where the party demandeth prohibition, subscribed with the hand of the same party; and under the copy of the libel should be written the suggestion wherefore the party demanded the prohibition.

But this statute, so far as is related to prohibition, was repealed by the 1 Wm. 4. c. 21. § 2.

A prohibition is not to be granted the last day of term; but on motion a rule may be obtained to stay proceedings till the ensuing term. Latch. 7; 3 Roll. Rep. 456.

PROHIBITION, IV.

By 50 E. 3. c. 4. no prohibition shall go after a consultation, unless the libel be enlarged or otherwise changed. And therefore, regularly, where a consultation is awarded upon the merits, the party shall not have another prohibition on the same suggestion. But if a consultation is awarded for want of form in the suggestion or proceeding thereon, another prohibition may be allowed; or if a consultation goes for a collateral matter, as if the plaintiff is nonsuited. So if a consultation goes, and the party against whom it is granted, appeals, the appellee may have a prohibition, though the appellants cannot. So, if after consultation the plaintiff pleads the same matter (which was suggested and found against him at common law) in the spiritual court, which is accepted, and proceeds there for trial, the former defendant may have a new prohibition. See Com. Dig. tit. Prohibition, (K. 3.)

The common form of a prohibition runs thus:

GEORGE, &c. To A. B. &c. Greeting. We prohibit you, that you hold not plea in the Court, &c. of, &c. whereof C. D. complains that T. P. draws him into plea before you, &c. And to the party himself; We prohibit or forbid you E. F. that you follow not the plea in the Court of, &c. whereof C. D. complains that you draw him into the Court, &c.

IV. A PROHIBITION doth lie as well to a temporal court as to the spiritual court, of admiralty, or other court, whose proceedings are different from those in the superior courts of common law, if such temporal court exceed the bounds of its jurisdiction, or take cognizance of matters not arising within its jurisdiction. F. N. B. 45; 2 Inst. 229, 243, 601; 2 Roll. Rep. 379; 1 Roll. Rep. 252; 2 H. Blackst. 100, 107, 533; 6 Parl. Cases, (8vo.) 203.

A prohibition lies to a court of appeal, where it appears they have no jurisdiction over the subject, even after they have remitted the suit to the court below, and awarded costs against the appellant, and though the party applying for the prohibition be the appellant. 1 Term Rep. 552. See post, V. and Com. Dig. tit. Prohibition, D. as to the time when a prohibition shall be granted.

If trespass vi et armis be brought into the county court, a prohibition lies for the plaintiff. F. N. B. 47.

So if one sueth another in a court-baron or other court, which is not a court of record, for charters concerning inheritance or freehold, he shall have a prohibition. F. N. B. 47.

A person having obtained judgment in B. R. for his debt and damages, brought action for recovery of them against the bail in the court of the Tower of London, in which action the party was taken on a capias, and was rescued, after which the plaintiff brought his action on the case in that court for the rescue; and all this appearing to the court of B. R. they granted a prohibition. 1 Roll. Rep. 54.

So where an action of debt was brought in the Marshalsea on a judgment in B. R. a prohibition was granted. 2 Salk. 439.

A suit was surmised to be before the lord president of the marches, for an office, between the grantee of the lord president and a stranger, wherein the only question would be, whether the grant of that office belonged to the lord president; and because in this case he would be as it were both judge and party, a prohibition was granted. 1 Keb. 648.

If there be one entire contract above 40s. and a man sues for it in a court-baron, severing it into small sums under 40s. a prohibition shall be granted, because this is done to defraud the court of the king. 19 Hen. 6. 54; 2 Roll. Abr. 280; F. N. B. 46.

An action was brought in the hundred court for 40s. in which the plaintiff confessed that he was satisfied one shilling, which being done with an intent to give that court jurisdiction, and to defraud the superior courts, a prohibition was granted. Palm. 564.

If there be several contracts between A. and B. at several times for divers sums, each under 40s., but amounting in the whole to a sum sufficient to entitle the superior court to a jurisdiction, they shall be sued for in such superior, and not in an inferior court, which is not of record. 1 Vent. 65.

So in a prohibition to the court of the Honour of Eye, where the case was, one contracted with another for divers parcels of malt, the money to be paid for each parcel being under 40s. he levied divers plaints thereupon in the said court, wherefore the court of K. B. granted a prohibition: because though there be several contracts, yet as the plaintiff might have joined them all in one action, he ought to have so done, and sued in B. R., and not put the defendant to unnecessary vexation, any more than he can split an entire debt into divers, to give the inferior court jurisdiction in fraudem legis. 1 Vent. 73; 2 Keb. 617; 1 Show. 11.

It is laid down by Coke, and admitted in a variety of cases, that no inferior court can hold plea of any transitory action, if not made within the jurisdiction, and that the cause of action must be alleged to arise within such jurisdiction. 2 Inst. 231; 1 Saund. 74; 2 Jon. 230; 1 Show. 10; and see County Court, Courts.

Therefore, in an action on a promise in an inferior court, not only the promise, but the consideration must be alleged to arise within the inferior jurisdiction, and must be so proved on the trial. 1 Roll. Abr. 545.

But if the plaintiff had shown that the money had been lent within the jurisdiction of the court, or if it had been for goods there sold, the plaintiff would have had no need to say that the defendant assumed to pay within the jurisdiction; because the law creates the promise on the creation of the debt, which debt being within the jurisdiction, the promise shall be intended there also. Ld. Raym. 211.

In all cases where inferior courts assume a jurisdiction, or hold plea of a matter not arising within their limits, the party hath his remedy, and may stay their proceedings by prohibition; but such prohibition can only regularly be obtained by its appearing, on oath made, that the fact did arise out of the jurisdiction, and that the defendant tendered a foreign plea, which was refused. 6 Mod. 146; Carth. 402; 1 Salk. 201; 1 P. Wms. 476.

In the case of Mendyke v. Stint it was greatly insisted upon, that though the party neglected to plead to the jurisdiction, yet the matter arising out of the inferior jurisdiction, the superior courts ought to grant a prohibition; for otherwise the parties, their counsel and attorneys, would give a jurisdiction to inferior courts which they were not entitled to by law; but it was otherwise adjudged, and it seems to be now agreed, that after admitting the jurisdiction, or after imparlance, the party cannot apply for a prohibition. 2 Mod. 271.

But these things were agreed by the court.

If any matter appears in the declaration, which sheweth that the cause of action did not arise within the jurisdiction, there a prohibition may be granted at any time. If the subject matter in the declaration be not proper for the judgment and determination of such court, there also a prohibition may be granted at any time. If the defendant, who intended to plead to the jurisdiction, is prevented by any artifice, as by giving a short day, or by the attorney's refusing to plead it, &c. or if his plea be not accepted, or is overruled; in all these cases a prohibition likewise will lie at any time. 2 Mod. 273.

A motion was made for a prohibition, to be directed to the sheriff's court in Bristol, on suggestion that causes of action arising out of the jurisdiction of the sheriff's court ought not to be sued there; and this motion was made in behalf of a defendant in an action, before he had appeared, to stay the proceedings in the court, who proceeded to attach his goods in the hands of a garnishee; and the motion was opposed, because the defendant could not pray a prohibition on suggestion of a matter which he could not plead; and as here he could not plead this before appearance, so he ought not to make such a motion before appearance. And per Holt, a man shall not plead to the jurisdiction until he appear; but if the original cause of action arose out of the jurisdiction of the court, the garnishee may plead it; and of that opinion was Hale, Ch. J.; but if it was debt on a simple contract, it is attachable where the person of the debtor is. 1 Ld. Raym. 346.

So, where a prohibition was moved for to the court of the sheriffs of London to stay proceeding, where they attached the debt of the garnishees, because it arose out of the jurisdiction, it was denied, because the debt was on simple contract, which follows the person of the debtor. Ld. Raym. 347.

Quære, whether the Court of King's Bench can direct a prohibition to the lord chancellor sitting in bankruptcy. 3 B. & A. 123.

Where the lord chancellor has jurisdiction generally, the King's Bench has no authority to revise his order. Ibid.

When the spiritual court incidentally determines any matter of common law cognizance, such as the construction of an act of parliament otherwise than as the common law requires, prohibition lies after sentence; although the objection do not appear on the face of the libel, but is collected from the whole of the proceedings in the spiritual court. 3 East, 472; 5 East, 345.

V. The general grounds for a prohibition to the ecclesiastical courts, are either a defect of jurisdiction, or a defect in the mode of trial. If any fact be pleaded in the court below, and the parties are at issue, the court has no jurisdiction to try it, because it cannot proceed according to the rules of the common law; and in such case a prohibition lies. Or where the spiritual court has no original jurisdiction, a prohibition may be granted, even after sentence. But where it has jurisdiction, and gives a wrong judgment, this is the subject of appeal, and not of prohibition. 2 Term Rep. 4. But when a prohibition is granted after sentence, the want of jurisdiction must appear upon the face of the proceedings of the spiritual court. Ibid. Comp. 422; 4 Term Rep. 382.

In all cases where it appears on the face of the libel that the spiritual court, &c. have not a jurisdiction, a prohibition may be awarded, and is grantable as well after as before sentence; for the king's superior courts have a superintendency over all inferior jurisdictions, and are to take care that they keep within their due bounds. 2 Inst. 602; 2 Roll. Abr. 319; Noy, 137; 1 Sid. 65; Cro. Eliz. 571; Mor. 462, 907; Skin. 299; Carth. 463; March, 153; 2 Roll. Rep. 24; Comb. 356.

But where the court has a natural jurisdiction of the thing, but is restrained by some statute, as by 23 H. 8. c. 9. for not citing out of the diocese, there the party must come before sentence; for after pleading and admitting the jurisdiction of the court below, it would be hard and inconvenient to grant a prohibition. See the authorities supra, and Cro. Car. 97; 2 Show. 145; Vent. 61; 6 Mod. 252; 7 Mod. 137; Godb. 163, 243; 5 Mod. 341; Hell. 19; 12 Co. 76; Salk. 543.

On a motion for prohibition the case was, the defendant libelled in the spiritual court for tithes of faggots made of loppings of trees, and the suggestion for a prohibition was, that these loppings were cut from the stumps of timber trees above the growth of twenty years; and it was alleged, that sentence was given in the spiritual court, therefore the plaintiff comes here too late to have a prohibition; but per Holt, the sentence will not hinder the having a prohibition in any case, but in the case of prohibitions grounded on 23 Hen. 8. c. 9. for citing out of the diocese; but because the plaintiff had not pleaded this matter in the spiritual court, they denied the prohibition, because the spiritual court has a general jurisdiction of tithes; and if any special matter deprives them of their jurisdiction, it must be pleaded there; and if it had been pleaded there, and issue joined on it, and on the trial it had been found not to be silva cædua, it had been well; but if they had refused to admit the plea, a prohibition should have been granted. 2 Ld. Raym. 885.

If a remedy be given in any case by statute in a temporal court, a prohibition lies to the spiritual court, if a suit be there, though the matter be of a spiritual nature; except where the jurisdiction of the spiritual court is saved by the same statute. 1 Inst. 96 b.

If one sues another in the spiritual court for a chattel or debt, the defendant shall have a prohibition. So if he sues for a trespass. F. N. B. 40.

If the spiritual courts take on them to try the boundaries of a parish, a prohibition lies. 2 Roll. Abr. 291; 7 Co. 44; 1 Roll. Rep. 331. Cro. Eliz. 298; 2 Leon. 829; 3 Keb. 286. S. P. because the prescription is the ground thereof.

But if the bounds of two villis lying in the same parish come in question in the spiritual court, no prohibition lies, for such bounds are triable in the ecclesiastical court, though those of parishes are not. 1 Lev. 78.

If a suit be by a parson for tithes, and the defendant plead that the place where, is in another parish, a prohibition lies; because they meddle with that which is out of their jurisdiction, though the original thing be of their cognizance, and this comes in obliquely. 2 Roll. Abr. 282; 1 Show. 10; Noy. 147.

If there be a suit for tithes in the ecclesiastical court, and the tenant pleads that the party who sues is not incumbent, but that J. S. is; and this plea, because it goes to the right of the incumbency, is rejected, a prohibition lies; for by denying the tenant this liberty he might be twice charged for tithes. Cro. Eliz. 228; 3 Leon. 265.

So if the vicar of a parish libels against another to avoid his institution to the church of D., which he supposes to be a chapel of ease appertaining to his vicarage, and the defendant suggests that D. is a parish of itself, and not a chapel of ease; a prohibition will be granted, for they shall not try the bounds of the parish. 2 Roll. Abr. 261.

So if the question be in the court-christian, whether a church be a parochial church or chapel of ease, a prohibition lies. Ibid.

The ecclesiastical courts have cognizance of a way to a church; and for not repairing such way the parties may be proceeded against in the spiritual court. March. 45.

So, if a parson is prevented from carrying away his tithe by the stopping up the usual way, he may have his remedy in the ecclesiastical court, grounded on the statute 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 13. Bulst. 67; 1 Jon. 230.

But if the question be, whether he is to have one way or another, or whether such a way be a highway or not; this cannot be tried in the spiritual court. March. 15; 1 Bulst. 67; 1 Roll. Abr. 287.

So if the churchwardens of a church sue for a way to the church, which they claim to appertain to all the parishioners by prescription, a prohibition shall be granted; for this right being grounded on the prescription, is to be tried in the temporal courts. 2 Roll. Rep. 41, 287.

If a man be admitted, instituted, and inducted, and a suit is commenced in the ecclesiastical court to avoid the institution, supposing it not valid; though the thing be of their cognizance, yet, because the induction, which is temporal, gives a lay right, may depend on it, a prohibition lies. Hob. 15; 1 Lat. h. 205; 1 Bulst. 179; Litt. Rep. 165; Poph. 138; 1 Roll. Abr. 282; 1 Show. Rep. 10.

There are frequent instances of prohibitions being granted to the ecclesiastical courts, to stay suits for fees by chancellors, registrars, and proctors in those courts, on this foundation, that demands for work and labour are properly determinable at common law, and fees cannot be settled by the canon law; and that the spiritual court can only give costs and expenses of suit, but that no action of debt will lie for such costs at common law; and that the profits of an office being temporal, the remedy for them ought to be by quantum meruit, or, in case it be an office of freehold, by assize, the denial of just fees being a disseisin; therefore it seems to be now settled, that neither a proctor nor registrar can sue for fees in the spiritual court, but that the proper remedy is, in case of a fee certain, by an indebitatus assumpsit, or in case of an uncertain fee, by quantum meruit; and in such suits it is not necessary to prove a retainer, that being implied by law. 2 Roll. Rep. 59; 3 Leon. 268; 1 Mod. 176; 2 Keb. 615; 3 Keb. 303, 441, 516; 1 Salk. 333; 4 Mod. 254.

If a legatee takes a bond from the executor for payment of the legacy, and afterwards sues him in the spiritual court for the legacy, a prohibition will be granted; for by taking the obligation the nature of the demand is changed, and becomes a debt or duty recoverable in the temporal court. Yelv. 38; 2 Vern. 31; but 2 Roll. Rep. 160, S. P. contra. And see Legacy, 4.

Matters of freehold and the rights of inheritances are only determinable in the temporal courts; so that if the ecclesiastical courts intermeddle with those, a prohibition lies. F. N. B. 40; 2 Roll. Abr. 286; Litt. Rep. 164.

As in a feoffment of tithes and lands, where there is no livery, if they adjudge the tithes to pass, notwithstanding there is no livery, a prohibition will lie. Cro. Jac. 270; 1 Vent. 41.

Trespass on a glebe, being freehold, cannot be determined in the ecclesiastical court. Bro. Jur. pl. 41.

A parson libelled against the defendant in the spiritual court of York, for having cut elms in the church-yard, and a prohibition was granted, on suggestion that they grew on his freehold. 1 Ld. Raym. 212.

So if a man devises that his lands shall be sold for the payment of his debts, and that the overplus shall be paid to such persons in certain shares, the legatees in this case cannot sue in the ecclesiastical court; for the provisions intended them arise originally out of lands, and their proper remedy in this case is in a court of equity. Dyer, 151, 264; Hob. 265; 2 Roll. Abr. 284, 285; 2 Show. 50; Cro. Car. 16.

But if a rent be devised out of a farm for years, the ecclesiastical courts may hold plea thereof, for the term for years, being only a chattel, is testamentary, consequently the rent devised thereout. 1 Sid. 279; 2 Keb. 5; 1 Lev. 179.

The rights to offices for life in the ecclesiastical courts or courts of admiralty, are determinable at common law; as in the question concerning the validity of two patents, by which the office of registrar to a bishop was granted; it was held, that this should not be tried in the spiritual court, though the subject matter be spiritual; because the office itself, being matter of freehold, is for that reason of temporal cognizance. 2 Roll. Abr. 285, 286; Noy. 91; Latch. 228; Palm. 450; Godb. 390; Cro. Car. 65; 2 Roll. Rep. 306; Raym. 88; 1 Lev. 125; 4 Mod. 27; Comb. 306.

When the right of election to the office of canon-residentary, a freehold office, is in the dean and chapter, a prohibition shall go to the bishop, claiming a right to present by lapse, under pretence of visitatorial authority. 1 T. R. 650.

Preaching without licence is within the act of uniformity, and therefore prohibition lies to a suit in the spiritual court for it. Fort. 345.

A prohibition lay to a suit for marrying without banns or licence, after the passing of the 26 Geo. 2. c. 33, by which it was made felony. 2 Wils. 79.

But prohibition does not lie to a suit in the ecclesiastical court against a Quaker, for repairs of the church, on 7 & 8

Wm. 3. c. 34, though the act gives a remedy before justices of the peace; for the old remedy is not taken away, nor in the case of small tithes, under 7 & 8 Wm. 3. c. 6. Fort. 347.

For more learning on this subject, see Bac. Abr., and 17 & 18 Vin. Abr., and Com. Dig. tit. Prohibition.

PROHIBITIO DE VASTO, DIRECTA PARTI. A judicial writ directed to the tenant, prohibiting him from making waste on the land in controversy, during the suit. Reg. Judic. 21.

A prohibition shall be granted to any one who commits waste, either in the house or buildings of the incumbent of a spiritual living, or who cuts down trees on the glebe, or doth any other waste. Moor. 917.

PRO INDIVISO, as undivided. The possession or occupation of lands or tenements belonging to two or more persons, whereof none knows his several portion; as coparceners before partition. Bract. lib. 5. See Parceners.

PROLES, Lat.] Progeny; such issue as proceeds from a lawful marriage; though if the word be used at large, it may denote others.

PROLOCUTOR OF THE CONVOCATION-HOUSE, prolocutor domus convocationis.] An officer chosen by ecclesiastical persons, publicly assembled in convocation by virtue of the king's writ at every parliament; there are two prolocutors, one of the higher house of convocation, the other of the lower house; the latter of whom is chosen by the lower house, and presented to the bishops of the higher house as their prolocutor, that is, the person by whom the lower house of convocation intend to deliver their resolutions to the upper house, and have their own house especially ordered and governed; his office is to cause the clerk to call the names of such as are of that house, when he sees cause, to read all things propounded, gather suffrages, &c. See further, Convocation.

PROMISE. See Assumpsit.

PROMISSORY NOTES. See Bill of Exchange, Larceny.

PROMOTERS, promotores.] Persons who in popular and penal actions prosecuted offenders, in their name and the king's, as informers, having part of the fines or penalties for their reward; they belonged chiefly to the Exchequer and King's Bench; and Sir Edward Coke calls them turbidum hominum genus. 3 Inst. 181.

TO PROMULGE A LAW, promulgare legem.] To declare, publish, and proclaim a law to the people; and so promulgatus, signifies published or proclaimed. See 6 Hen. 6. c. 4; 1 Com. 45; and tit. Statute.

PRONOTARY. See Prothonotary.

PROOF. The showing the truth of any matter alleged, or the trial, or making out, of any thing, by a jury, witnesses, &c.

Bracton says, there is probatio duplex, viz. viâ vocis, by witnesses; and probatio mortua, by deeds, writings, &c.

Proof, according to Lilly, is either in giving evidence to a jury on a trial, or else on interrogatories, or by copies of records, or exemplifications of them. 2 Lil. Abr. 993. Though where a man speaks generally of proof, it shall be intended of proof by a jury, which in the strict signification is legal proof. 3 Bulst. 56.

Condition of a bond was to pay such money as an apprentice should mispend, on proof made by the confession of the apprentice or otherwise; and it was held, that although generally proof shall be intended to be made on a trial by jury, in this case it being referred to the confession of the party, it is sufficient if he confess it under his hand. Cro. Jac. 381.

It hath been insisted, that the law knows no other proof but before a jury in a judicial way, and that which is on record; but if the proof is modified by the agreement of the parties, that it shall be in such a manner, or before such a person, that modification which allows another manner of proof shall be observed and prevail against the legal construction of the word proof. Sid. 313; 2 Lutw. 436.

In articles the parties bound themselves in the penalty of 100*l.*, &c., to be paid on due proof of a breach; proof at a trial will maintain the action. Lutw. 441. See further, Evidence.

PRO PARTIBUS LIBERANDIS. An ancient writ for partition of lands between coheirs. Reg. Orig. 316. See Parceners.

PROPER FEUDS. See Tenures, I.

PROPERTY, proprietas.] The highest right a man can have to any thing; being used for that right which one hath to lands or tenements, goods or chattels, which no way depend on another man's curtesy.

Before men entered into society there was not any property, but an universal right instead of it; every man might then take to his use what he pleased, and retain it, if he had sufficient power; but when men entered into society, and industry, arts and sciences were introduced, property was gained by various means, for the securing whereof proper laws were ordained.

It seems that the abstract right of property originates in occupancy, or when any thing is separated for private use from the common stores of nature; and this appears agreeable to the reason and sentiments of mankind, prior to all civil establishments. See 2 Comm. c. 1, and note; and this Dictionary, titles Occupant, Liberty, Title.

According to our law, property in lands and tenements is acquired either by entry, descent by law, or conveyance; and in goods or chattels it may be gained many ways, though usually by deed of gift, or bargain and sale. 2 Lil. Abr. 400.

For preserving property the law hath these rules:

1st, No man is to deprive another of his property, or disturb him in enjoying it.

2dly, Every person is bound to take due care of his own property, so as the neglect thereof may not injure his neighbour.

3dly, All persons must so use their right, that they do not, in the manner of doing it, damage their neighbour's property.

There are also three sorts of properties, viz. property absolute, property qualified, and property possessory. an absolute proprietor hath an absolute power to dispose of his estate as he pleases, subject to the laws of the land: the husband hath a qualified property in his wife's land, real chattels and debts; but in her chattels personal, he hath an absolute property. Plowd. 5.

The right of possession of real property, though it carries with it a strong presumption, is not always conclusive evidence of the right of property, which may still subsist in another man; for one man may have the possession, and another the right of possession, which is recovered by possessory actions. So one man might, previous to the abolition of real actions, have had the right of possession, and so not be liable to eviction by any possessory action, and another might have had the right of property which could not be otherwise asserted than by a writ of right. 3 Comm. c. 10. See Limitation of Actions, I. II. and Writ of Right.

If the sea or a river, by violent incursion, carries away the soil or ground in so great a quantity, that he who had the property in the soil can know where his land is, he shall have his land - but if his soil or land be insensibly wasted by the sea or river, he must lose his property, because he cannot prove which is his land. Pasch. 1650. See Occupant.

Property in chattels personal may be either in possession, which is where a man hath not only the right to enjoy, but hath the actual enjoyment of the thing, or else it is a action, where a man hath only a bare right, without any occupation or enjoyment; and of these the former, or property in possession, is divided into two sorts, an absolute and a qualified property. Property in possession absolute may be in all inanimate things, and in all such animals as are naturally tame; a qualified property is had, under certain circumstances, in wild animals, being tamed, or being unable to escape propter impotentiam, as birds in the nest; or may be obtained propter privilegium, by the privilege of hunting, &c. in exclusion of others. So a qualified property exists in the elements of light, air, and water. See 2 Comm. c. 25.

Every owner of goods, &c. hath a general property in them; though a legatee of goods hath no property in the goods given him by will until actually delivered him by the executor, who hath the lawful possession. See Legacy.

And though by a bare agreement a bargain and sale of goods may be so far perfected, without delivery or payment of money, that the parties may have an action of the case for non-performance, yet no property vests until delivery; therefore it is said, if a second buyer gets delivery, he has the better title. 3 Salk. 61, 62.

But if one covenant with me, that if I pay him so much money such a day, I shall have his goods in such a place, and I pay him the money, this is a good sale, and by it I have the property of the goods. 27 Hen. 8. 16. See Agreement, Fraud.

As to property of things in possession or action: In possession, it is, generally, when no other can have them from the owner, or with him, without his act or default, or especially when some other hath an interest with him, or where there is a property also in another as well as in the owner, as by bailment, delivery of things to a carrier or inn-keeper, where goods are pawned or pledged, distrained or leased, &c.; and property in action is when one hath an interest to sue at law for the things themselves, or for damages for them; as for debts, wrongs, &c. and all these things, in possession or action, one may have in his own right, or in the right of another, as executor. Wood's Inst. 314.

A person hath such a special property in goods delivered him to keep, that he may maintain action against strangers who take them out of his possession; so of things delivered to a carrier, and when goods are pawned, &c. Lil. Abr. 400, 401.

A tenant hath only a special property in the trees on the lands demised, so long as they remain part of the freehold, for when they are severed his property is gone. 11 Rep. 82.

An executor or administrator hath the property of the goods of the deceased. But a servant hath neither a general or special property in his master's goods; therefore to take them from his master may be trespass or felony, according to the value and other circumstances. Goldsb. 72. See Apprentice, Larceny, Servant.

If a man hires a horse, he hath a special property in the horse during the time, against all men, even against the right owner, against whom he may have an action if he disturbs him in the possession. Cro. Eliz. 236. But it hath been adjudged, that if a man deliver goods, &c. to another, to keep for a certain time, and then to re-deliver them, if he to whom they were delivered sell them in open market before the day appointed for the re-delivery, the owner may seize them wherever he finds them, because the general property was always in him, and not altered by the sale. Godb. 160; 3 Nels. Abr. 18. And if one delivers a horse or other cattle, or goods, to another to keep, and he kills the horse or spoils the goods, trespass lies against him, for by the killing or spoiling, the property is destroyed. 5 Rep. 13. See Bailment.

If a swarm of bees light upon a tree, they are not the owner's of the tree till covered with his hive, no more than hawks that have made their nests there, &c. But their young ones will be his property, and for them he may have trespass. Dort. & Stud. c. 5; Co. Litt. 145.

A man's geese, &c. fly away out of sight; wherever they go he hath still a property in them. Stamf. lib. 1. c. 16; 3 Shep. Abr. 111.

Wild beasts, deer, hares, conies, &c. though they belong to a man on account of his game and pleasure, none can have an absolute real property in; but if they are inclosed and made tame, there may be a qualified and possessory property in them. See Game.

One may have absolute property in things of a base nature, as mastiff dogs, hounds, spaniels, &c.; but not in things feræ naturæ, unless when dead. Dalt. 371; Finch. 176; 11 Rep. 50; Raym. 16.

Property in lands, goods, and chattels, may be forfeited or lost by treason, felony, outlawry; also of goods by their becoming deadand, waif, estray, &c. Buck. Elem. 77, 78.

PROPERTY IN HIGHWAYS, TURNPIKES, &c. He who hath the land which lies on both sides the highway, hath the property of the soil of the highway in him, notwithstanding the king hath the privilege for his people to pass through it at their pleasure; for the law presumes that the way was at first taken out of the lands of the party who owns the lands lying on both sides the way, and divers lords of manors claim the soil as part of their waste. 2 Lil. Abr. 400. See Highway.

By the 7 Geo. 4. c. 64. § 16. in larceny of materials, tools, implements for making, altering, or repairing highways, they may be described as belonging to the surveyors of the highways for the time being, without specifying their names; and by § 17 such materials, &c. provided for turnpike roads, may be described as belonging to the trustees or commissioners.

PROPERTY BELONGING TO COUNTIES, &c. In larceny of goods provided for or at the expense of a county, riding, or division, it is by the 7 Geo. 4. c. 64. § 15. sufficient to charge them to belong to the inhabitants of such county.

PROPERTY OF PARTNERS. In larceny of the property of partners, it may be stated to belong to one named, and another or others, as the case may be. 7 Geo. 4. c. 64. § 14.

PROPERTY OF THE POOR. So § 16. in larceny of goods provided for the poor, they may be laid to belong to the overseers.

PROPERTY IN SEWERS. In larceny of property under commissioners of sewers, it may be laid as belonging to them. 7 Geo. 4. c. 64. § 18.

PROPERTY ALTERED. A man borrows or finds my goods, or takes them from me; neither of these acts will alter the property. Bro. Propert. 27.

If one, having taken away corn, make it into malt, turn plate into money, or timber into a house, &c. the property of them is altered. Doddridge, Law, 132, 133.

And where goods are generally sold in a market overt, for a valuable consideration, and without fraud, it alters the property thereof. 5 Rep. 83. Except in some particular cases. See Market.

To alter or transfer property is lawful; but to violate property is never lawful, property being a sacred thing which ought not to be violated. And every man (if he hath not forfeited it) hath a property and a right allowed him to defend his life, liberty, and estate; and if either be violated the law gives an action to redress the injury and punish the wrong. 2 Lil. Abr. 400. See Liberty.

By the 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 29. § 57. the owner of property stolen, taken, obtained, converted or received by means of a felony or misdemeanor, or his executors or administrators, shall, on prosecuting the offender, have the property restored; and the court is authorized to award a writ of restitution for that purpose, or to order restitution in a summary manner, except in the case of a valuable security bond fide paid, &c. or taken or received by transfer or delivery, for consideration, and without notice or reasonable cause of suspicion. See further, Restitution.

PROPHECIES, prophetiæ.] The foretelling of things to come in hidden mysterious speeches, whereby commotions have been often caused in the kingdom, and attempts made by those to whom such speeches promised good success, though the words were mystically framed, and pointed only to the cognizance, arms, or some other quality of the parties. But these, for distinction sake, are called false or phantastical prophecies.

False prophecies (where persons pretend extraordinary commissions from God), to raise jealousies in the people, to terrify them from impending judgments, &c. are punishable at common law as impostures; they are reckoned by Blackstone among offences against the public peace, and were punished capitally by the 1 Edw. 6. c. 12. which was repealed in the reign of Queen Mary. And by the 5 Eliz. c. 15. none shall publish or set forth any false prophecy, with an intent to make any rebellion or disturbance, on pain of 10*l.* for the first offence, and a year's imprisonment; and for the second offence, to forfeit all his goods and chattels, and suffer imprisonment during life: the prosecution to be within six months. See 3 Inst. 128, 129. and tit. Conjuratio.

PROPORTION, proportio.] See De Onerando pro Rata Portionis.

PROPORTUM, purport.] Intent or meaning. Cowell.

PROPOUNDEES. The 85th chapter of Coke's 3d Institute is entitled, against Monopolists, Propounders, and Projectors, where it seems to signify the same as Monopolists. Cowell:—rather as Projectors.

PROPRIETARY, proprietaryus.] He who hath a property in any thing, quæ nullius arbitrio est obnoxia; but was heretofore chiefly used for him who had the fruits of a benefice to himself, his heirs and successors, as abbots and priors had to them and their successors. See Appropriations.

PROPRIETATE PROBANDA, proving the property.] A writ to the sheriff to inquire of the property of goods distrained, when the defendant claimeth property on a replevin sued; for the sheriff cannot proceed till that matter is decided by writ; and if it is found for the plaintiff, then the sheriff is to make replevin; but if for the defendant, he can proceed no further. F. N. B. 77; Finch 316, 450; Co. Litt. 145 b. See Replevin.

PRO RATA, pro proportione, in proportion.] As joint-tenants, &c. are to pay pro rata, i. e. in proportion to their estates. The term is also applied to an obligation, where two or more have become bound jointly to pay a sum of money. In such a case each of the obligors is said to be liable pro rata parte, or proportionally; in contradistinction to these obligations by which the obligors are bound jointly and severally, by which each is liable for the whole debt. See Joint-tenants, Parceners.

PROROGUE. To prolong or put off to another day. See Parliament.

PROTECTION, protectio.] Is generally taken for that benefit and safety which every subject hath by the king's laws. Every man who is a loyal subject is in the king's protection; and, in this sense, to be out of the king's protection is to be excluded the benefit of the law. See Præmunire.

In a special signification, a protection of the king is an act of grace, by writ issued out of Chancery, which lies where a man passes over the sea in the king's service; and by this writ (when allowed in court) he shall be quit from all personal and real suits between him and any other person, except assizes of novel disseisin, assize of darrein presentment, attaints, &c. until his return. 2 Lil. Abr. 398.

This term is thus further explained,—viz. Protection is an immunity granted by the king to a certain person, to be free from suits at law for a certain time, and for some reasonable cause; and it is a branch of the king's prerogative so to do. There are two sorts of these protections, one is cum clausula, Volumus; and of that protection there are three particulars; one is called quia profecturus, and is for him who is going beyond sea in the king's service: another is quia moraturus, which is for him who is already abroad in the king's service, as an ambassador, &c.; and another is for the king's debtor, that he be not sued till the king's debt is satisfied. The other sort of protection is cum clausula, Nolumus, &c. which is granted to a spiritual corporation, that their goods or chattels be not taken by the officer of the king for the king's service; it may likewise be granted to a spiritual person single, or to a temporal person. Reg. Orig. 23.

By the common law the king might take his debtor into his protection, so that no one might sue or arrest him till the king's debt were paid. F. N. B. 28; Co. Litt. 131; but by the 25 Edw. 3. st. 5. c. 19. notwithstanding such protection, another creditor may proceed to judgment against him with a stay of execution, till the king's debt be paid; unless such creditor will undertake for the king's debt, and then he shall have execution for both. 3 Comm. c. 19.

On a person's going over sea in the service of the king, writ of protection shall issue to be quit of suits till he return, and then a re-summmons may be had against him; but one may proceed against a defendant having such protection, until he comes and shows the protection in court, and hath it allowed, when his plea or suit shall go sine die, though if after it appears that the party who hath the protection goes not about the business for which the protection was granted, the plaintiff may have a repeal, &c. Terms de Ley; 2 Lil. Abr. 398. And by the 33 Edw. 1. st. 1. the plaintiff may challenge the protection, and aver that the defendant was within the four seas, or not in the king's service, &c.

A protection is to be made for one year, and may be renewed from year to year; but if it be made for two or three years, the justices will not allow it; and if the king grant a protection to his debtor, that he be not sued till his debt is paid; on these protections none shall be delayed; the party is to answer and go to judgment, and execution shall be staid. Co. Litt. 130. See ante, and st. 25 Edw. 3. c. 10.

The king granted a protection to one of his debtors; and on demurrer it was alleged that by the 25 Edw. 3. st. 5. c. 19. protections of this kind are expressly that none shall be delayed on them; and the court ordered, that when it came to execution they would advise; so a respondeas ouster was awarded. Cro. Jac. 477.

In all protections there ought to be a cause shown for granting them; if obtained pending the suit, they are baui; and a person giving bail to an action on arrest, it is said, may not plead his protection; one may not be discharged out of prison, to which he is committed in execution, by protection to serve the king, &c. Nor will a protection be allowed where a person is taken on a capias utlagatum, after judgment; for though the capias utlagatum is at the king's suit in the first place, it is in the second degree for the subject. Latch. 197; 1 Licon. 185; Dyer, 162; Hob. 115.

But in action on assumpsit a protection under the great seal was brought into court, for that defendant was in the wars in Flanders, &c.; and it was allowed, though after an arrest. 3 Lev. 332.

A plaintiff in an action cannot cast a protection; for the protection is for the defendant, and shall be always for him, if it be not in special cases where the plaintiff becomes defendant. New Nat. Br. 62. And no protection shall be allowed against the king. Co. Litt. 131.

A protection to save a default is not good for any place within the kingdom of England; and regularly it lies only where the defendant or tenant is demandable; for the protection is to excuse his default, which cannot be made when he is not demanded. Jenk. Cent. 66, 94.

These protections are now very rarely used: the last instance of one was in 1692, when King William III. granted one to Lord Cutts, to protect him from being outlawed by his tailor. 3 Lev. 332. See Privilege.

B. and all his servants, lands, and tenements, goods and chattels, in, &c. in the county of S. and in, &c. and also all his writings whatsoever: Therefore we command you, that you protect and defend the said A. B. and his servants, &c. aforesaid, not doing to him or them, or any of them, or permitting to be done to them, any injury, damage, or violence, on pain of grievous forfeiture, &c. In testimony of which, &c. for one year to endure. In Witness, &c.

PROTECTION OF AMBASSADORS. See Ambassadors.

PROTECTION OF CHILDREN. See Bastard, Homicide, Parent, Poor.

PROTECTION OF PARLIAMENT. See Parliament, Privilege.

PROTECTION OF THE COURTS AT WESTMINSTER. The protection of the Court of B. R. is allowed for any person who attends his own business in that court, or by virtue of any subpoena. See Arrest, Privilege.

DE PROTECTIONIBUS. The statute allowing a challenge to be entered against a protection, &c. 23 Edw. 1. st. 1. vel temp. incert. See Protection.

PROTEST, protestatio. Hath two applications, one, by way of caution, to call witnesses (as it were), or openly affirm that he doth either not at all, or but conditionally, yield his consent to any act, or unto the proceeding of a Judge in a court, wherein his jurisdiction is doubtful, or to answer on his oath further than by law he is bound. See Plowden, 676; and Reg. Orig. 306.

The other is by way of complaint, as to protest a man's bill. See Bills of Exchange.

Each peer has a right, by leave of the house, when a vote passes contrary to his sentiments, to enter his dissent on the journals of the house, with the reasons of such dissent, which is usually styled his protest. See further, tit. Parliament, V. 1.

PROTESTANT CHILDREN OF JEWS. See Jews.

PROTESTANT DISSENTERS. See further, Dissenters, Non-conformists.

PROTESTANT SUCCESSION. See King, I.

PROTESTATION, protestatio. A defence or safeguard to the party who made it from being concluded by the action he was about to do, that issue could not be joined by it. Plowd. 276. See Pleading.

It was a form of pleading when one did not directly affirm or deny any thing alleged by another, or which he himself alleged. Conell. As, protestando that he made no testament pro placito, that he made not the plaintiff his executor; because if he made no testament, he could make no executor. Heath's Max. 26. cites Pl. C. 276.

Coke defined a protestation to be an exclusion of a conclusion. 1 Inst. 124. For the use of it was to save the party from being concluded with respect to some fact or circumstance which could not be directly affirmed or denied without falling into duplicity of pleading, and which yet, if he did not thus enter his protest, he might be deemed to have tacitly waived or admitted. Thus, where tenure in villenage subsisted, if a villen had brought an action against his lord, and the lord was inclined to try the merits of the demand, and at the same time to prevent any conclusion against himself that he had waived his lordship; he could not in this case both plead affirmatively that the plaintiff was his villen, and also take issue upon the demand; for then his plea would have been double, as the former alone would have been a good bar to the action; but he might have alleged the villenage of the plaintiff, by way of protestation, and then have denied the demand. By this means the future advantage of the plaintiff was saved to the defendant, in case the issue was found in his (the defendant's) favour; for the protestation prevented the conclusion, which would otherwise have resulted from the rest of his defence, that he had enfranchised the plaintiff;

since no villen could maintain a civil action against his lord. Co. Litt. 126. So also, if a defendant, by way of inducement to the point of his defence, alleged (among other matters) a particular mode of seisin or tenure, which the plaintiff was unwilling to admit, and yet desired to take issue on the principal point of the defence, he must have denied the seisin or tenure by way of protestation, and then traverse the defensive matter. So lastly, if an award were set forth by the plaintiff, and he could assign a breach in one part of it (viz. the non-payment of a sum of money), and yet was afraid to admit the performance of the rest of the award, or to aver in general a non-performance of any part of it, lest something should appear to have been performed; he might have saved to himself any advantage he might hereafter make of the general non-performance, by alleging that by protestation, and pleaded only the non-payment of the money. 3 Comm. c. 20. p. 312.

Protestation is said to have been of two kinds, 1st, When a man pleaded any thing which he dared not directly affirm, or could not plead, for fear of making his plea double; as if in conveying to himself by his plea a title, he ought to plead divers descents by divers persons, and he dared not affirm that they were all seized at the time of their death, or although he could do it, yet it would be double to plead two descents, of both which each one by itself must be a good bar, then the defendant ought to have pleaded and alleged the matter, introducing the word protestando; as to say (by protestation) that such a one died seized, &c. and that the adverse party cannot traverse. 2dly, When one was to answer two matters, and yet by law he ought to plead but to one, then in the beginning of his plea he might have said protestando et non cognoscendo such part of the matter to be true, (and then making his plea further,) sed pro placito in hâc parte, &c. and so he might take issue on the other part of the matter; and then he was not concluded by any of the rest of the matter which he hath by protestation so denied. Reg. Plac. 70, 71. See 18 Vin. Abr. tit. Protestation.

In other terms, the use of a protestation in pleading seemed to be this, viz. When one party alleged or pleaded several matters, and the other party could only offer, or take issue on one of them, he protested against the others: in such case should the issue, on trial, be found against the latter party, the record would not be evidence against him in another suit, as to those matters or points, against which he protested; which it otherwise might be, had he admitted, or not protested against them. Dict.

Protestations are now abolished, for by one of the general rules of H. T. 4 Wm. 4. 1831, no protestation shall hereafter be made in any pleading, but either party shall be entitled to the same advantage in that or other actions as if a protestation had been made.

PROTHONOTARY, protonotarius, vel primus notarius. A chief officer or clerk of the Common Pleas and King's Bench; for the first court there are three prothonotaries, and the other hath but one: he of the King's Bench records all civil actions; as the clerk of the Crown Office doth all criminal causes in that court: those of the Common Pleas, since the order 14 Jac. 1. on agreement entered into between the prothonotaries and filicers of that court, enter and enrol all manner of declarations, pleadings, assizes, judgments, and actions: they make out all judicial writs, except writs of habeas corpus and distringas jurator; (for which there is a particular office erected, called the Habeas Corpora Office;) also writs of execution, and of seisin, of privilege for removing causes from inferior courts, writs of procedendo, scire facias, in all cases, and writs to inquire of damages; and all process upon prohibitions, on writs of audita querela, false judgments, &c. They likewise enter recognizances acknowledged in that court, and all common recoveries; and make exemplifications of records, &c. See 5 Hen. 4. c. 14. See further Tidd's Pr.

PROTOCOL, the first copy. The entry of any instrument in the book of a notary or public officer, and which in case of the loss of the instrument may be admitted as evidence of its contents.

PROVENDRY. The lesser part of the altar in the church of St. Mary, Salisbury. 41 E. 3, 5, 6. Termes de la Ley.

PROVER, probator, mentioned in 28 Edw. 1. st. 2; 5 Hen. 4. c. 2. See tit. Approver, and 3 Inst. 129. A man became an approver, and appealed five, and every of them joined battel with him: Et duellum percussus fuit cum omnibus, et probator devicit omnes quinque in duello; quorum quatuor suspendebantur, et quintus clamabat esse clericum et allocatur, et probator pardonatur. Mic. 39 E. 3. coram Rege; Rot. 97. Suff.

PROVINCE, provincia.] An out country, governed by a deputy or lieutenant. Lit. Dict. See Plantation.

It was used among the Romans for a country, without the limits of Italy, gained to their subjection by the sword; whereupon that part of France next the Alps was so called by them, and still retains the name, Provence.

But in England a province is most usually taken for the circuit of an archbishop's jurisdiction; as the Province of Canterbury, and that of York: yet it is mentioned in some of our statutes, for several parts of the realm; and sometimes for a county.

Ireland is divided civilly into four provinces, Ulster, Leinster, Connaught, and Munster; and ecclesiastically into four archbishoprics, Armagh, Dublin, Cashel, and Tuam.

But see now the 3 & 4 Wm. 4. c. 37, under title Ireland.

PROVINCIAL, provincialis.] Of or belonging to a province; also a chief governor of a religious order; as of friars, &c. Stat. Antiq. 4 Hen. 4. c. 17.

PROVISIO, provisio.] Was used for the providing a bishop, or any other person, an ecclesiastical living, by the pope, before the incumbent was dead: it was also called gratia expectativa, or mandatum de providendo: the great abuse whereof produced the statutes of provisors and præmunire. See the latter title.

PROVISIONES. The acts to restrain the exorbitant abuse of arbitrary power, made in the parliament at Oxford 1258, were called provisiones by Rishanger, who continued Mat. Paris, anno 1260; being to provide against the king's absolute will and pleasure. See Mat. Paris sub annis 1244 & 1254. Several statutes are also called provisiones, particularly Stat. Merton, 20 Hen. 3. See also provisions made by the king and his council at Westminster, ann. 43 Hen. 3. A. D. 1259, on which the statute of Marlborough, 52 Hen. 3. was afterwards founded.

PROVISIONES signifies also providentia, or provisions of victual. Conell.

PROVISIONS, selling unwholesome. Is reckoned by Blackstone among offences against public health. To prevent which the 51 Hen. 3. st. 6. and the ordinance for bakers, c. 7. prohibit the sale of corrupted wine, contagious or unwholesome flesh, or flesh that is bought of a Jew; under pain of amercement for the first offence, pillory for the second, fine and imprisonment for the third, and abjuration of the town for the fourth. And by 12 Car. 2. c. 25. § 11. any brewing or adulteration of wine is punished with the forfeiture of 100*l.* if done by the wholesale merchant; and 40*l.* if done by the vintner or retail trader. 4 Comm. c. 18. See Frauds, III., Victuals.

PROVISO. A condition inserted in any deed, on the performance whereof the validity of the deed depends; sometimes it is only a covenant, secundum subjectam materiam. 2 Rep. 70.

Proviso, in the most common acceptation, is that clause in a mortgage, whereby the deed is declared to be void, on payment of principal and interest. See Mortgage.

The word proviso is generally taken for a condition; but it differs from it in several respects; for a condition is usually created by the grantor or lessor, but a proviso by the grantee or lessee; there is likewise a difference in placing the proviso; as if, immediately after the habendum, the next covenant is that the lessee shall repair, provided always that the lessor shall find timber, this is no condition; nor is it a condition, if it comes among other covenants after the habendum, and is created by the words of the lessee; as if the lessee covenants to scour the ditches, proviso, that the lessor carry away the soil, &c. 3 Nels. Abr. 21.

It hath been held, that the law hath not appointed any proper place in a deed to insert a proviso; but that when it doth not depend on any other sentence, but stands originally by itself, and when it is created by the words of the grantor &c. and is restrictive or compulsory, to enforce the grantee to do some act, in such case the word proviso makes a condition, though it is intermixed with other covenants, and doth not immediately follow the habendum. 2 Rep. 70. See Deed.

A proviso always implies a condition, if there be no words subsequent which may change it into covenant: also it is a rule in provisors, that where the proviso is, that the lessee, &c. shall do, or not do a thing, and no penalty is added to it, this is a condition, or it is void; but if a penalty be annexed, it is otherwise. Cro. Eliz. 242; 1 Lev. 155. And where a proviso is a condition, it ought to do the office of a condition, i. e. make the estate conditional, and shall have reference to the estate, and be annexed to it; but shall not make it void without entry, as a limitation will. See Condition.

A lease was made for years, rendering rent at such a day, proviso, if the rent be in arrear one month after, the lease to be void; the question was, whether this was a condition or limitation; for if it was a condition, then the lease is not determined without entry; adjudged, that it was a limitation, though the words were conditional; because it appeared by the lease itself, that it was the express agreement of the parties that the lease shall be void on non-payment of the rent; and it shall be void without entry. Moor, 291. See Ejectment, Lease, Rent.

If a proviso be the mutual words of both parties to the deed, it amounts to a covenant; and a proviso by way of agreement to pay is a covenant, and an action well lies upon it. 2 Rep. 72. See Covenant, I.

Plaintiff conveyed an office to defendant, proviso that out of the first profits he pay plaintiff 500*l.* And it was resolved, that an action of covenant lay on this proviso; for it is not by way of condition or defeasance, but in nature of a covenant to pay the money. 1 Lev. 155. But whether defendant in consideration of 400*l.* granted his lands to plaintiff for ninety-nine years, proviso if he pay so much yearly during the life of S. T. &c. or 400*l.* within two years after his death, then the grant to be void, and there was a bond for performance of covenants; in action of debt brought on the bond, it was adjudged, that there being no express covenant to pay the money, there could be no breach assigned on this proviso. 2 Mod. 38. See qu. and see ante.

In articles of agreement to make a lease, proviso that the lessee should pay so much rent, &c. although there be no special words of reservation of rent, the proviso is a good reservation. Cro. Eliz. 486. And proviso, with words of grant added to it, may make a grant and not a condition. Moor, 174; see 1 And. 19.

When uses are raised by covenant, in consideration of paternal love to children, &c. and after, in the same indenture, there is a proviso to make leases, without any particular consideration, it is void; though such a proviso might be good, if the uses were created by fine, recovery, &c. because of the transmutation of the estate; and for that, in this case, uses arise without consideration. 1 Rep. 176; Moor, 144; 1 Lev. 30. See Use.

In a deed, a proviso, that if the son disturb the other uses, &c. that then a term granted to him, and the uses to the heirs of his body, shall be void; this proviso is sufficient to cease the other uses, on disturbance. 8 Rep. 90, 91. But a proviso to make an estate, limited to one and the heirs male of his body, to cease as if he was naturally dead, on his attempting any act by which the limitation of the land, or any the estate in tail, should be undone, barred, &c. hath been adjudged not good; because the estate tail is not determined by the death of tenant in tail, but by his dying without issue male. Dyer, 851; 1 Rep. 83. See Limitation of Lands.

A testator devised lands to one and the heirs male of his body, proviso, that if he attempt to alien, then his estate to cease and remain to another; the proviso is void. 1 Vent. 523.

A proviso that would take away the whole effect of a grant, as not to receive the profits of lands granted, &c. is void; and so is a proviso which is repugnant to the express words of the grant: in a will, testator made another his executor, provided he did not administer his estate, adjudged this proviso is void for repugnancy. Cro. Eliz. 107; Dyer, 3.

And if a proviso is good at first, and afterwards it happens that there is no other remedy but that which was restrained, the remedy shall be had notwithstanding the restraint. Wood's Inst. 291. Where a proviso is parcel of, or abridgeth a covenant, it makes an exception; when it is annexed to an exception in a deed, it is an explanation; and where added at the end of any covenant, there it extends only to defeat that covenant. 4 Leon. 72, 73; Moor, 105, 471. See Condition, Covenant, Deed.

PROVISO, TRIAL BY. Is where the plaintiff in an action desists in prosecuting his suit, and doth not bring it to trial in convenient time, the defendant in such case may take out the venire facias to the sheriff, which hath in it these words, Proviso, quod, &c. i. e. provided that, if plaintiff take out any writ to that purpose, the sheriff shall summon but one jury on them both, and this is called going to trial by proviso. Old Nat. Br. 159. See Trial.

Process might have been taken out by a defendant in criminal cases by proviso in appeals, in the same manner as in other actions, on default of the appellant, but it may not in indictments, nor in actions where the king is sole party; and it hath been questioned, whether there can be any such process in informations qui tam. 2 Hawk. c. 41. § 10. See 7 & 8 Wm. 3. c. 32; 7 T. R. 661; 2 East, 202, 206; and tit. Trial.

PROVISOR. One who sued to the court of Rome for a provision. See præmunire. It is sometimes also taken for him who hath the care of providing things necessary; a purveyor. Cowell.

PROVISOR MONASTERII. The treasurer or steward of a religious house, who had the custody of goods and money, and supervised all accounts. Cowell.

PROVISOR VICTUALIUM. The king's purveyor, who provided for the accommodation of his court, is so called by our historians. Cowell.

PROVOCATION. To make killing a person manslaughter, &c. See Homicide, III. 2.

PROVOST. The principal magistrate of a royal borough in Scotland. A governing officer of a university or college.

PROVOST MARSHAL. An officer of the king's navy, who hath the charge of prisoners taken at sea; and is sometimes used for like purpose at land. See 13 Car. 2. c. 9. and tit. Marshal.

PROXIES. Persons appointed instead of others, to represent them.

Every peer of the realm, called to parliament, hath the privilege of constituting a proxy to vote for him in his absence on a lawful occasion; but such proxies are by better of the king, and sometimes proxies have been denied by the king; particularly annis 6, 27 and 39 Ed. 3. See Parliament, V. 1.

Proxies are also annual payments made by parochial clergy to the bishop, &c. on visitations. See Procurements.

PRYK, a kind of service or tenure: according to Blount, it signifies an old-fashioned spur, with one point only, which the tenant, holding land by this tenure, was to find for the king.

In the time of Henry VIII, light horsemen in war were called prickers; because they used such spurs or pryks to make their horses go with speed.

PUBERTY, pubertas.] The age of fourteen in men and twelve in women; when they are held fit for, and capable of contracting marriage. See Age, Infant.

PUBLICATION. Is used of depositions of witnesses in a cause in Chancery, in order to the hearing; it signifies the showing the depositions openly, and giving out copies of them, &c. pursuant to the rules of the court. See Chancery, Depositions.—As to the publication of Libels and Wills, see those titles.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS. See Accounts, Public.

In addition to the statutes referred to under the above title, the following acts may be briefly noticed:—

By the 2 Wm. 4. c. 26. the commissioners for auditing the public accounts are to examine and audit the accounts of the receipt and expenditure of the colonial revenues; and a statement of every account is to be transmitted by the commissioners to the lords of the Treasury.

By the 2 & 3 Wm. 4. c. 99. all accounts theretofore examined by the commissioners of public accounts in Ireland, are to be examined and audited by the commissioners for auditing the public accounts of Great Britain.

By the 4 & 5 Wm. 4. c. 15. s. 22. the Treasury may establish regulations for keeping the accounts of the public departments.

PUBLIC ACT of parliament. See Statute.

PUBLIC FAITH, fides publica.] In the reign of Charles I. there was a pretence or cheat, to raise money of the seduced people, upon what was termed the public faith of the nation, to make war against the king, about the year 1642. 17 Car. 1. c. 18.

PUBLIC REVENUE. By the 4 & 5 Wm. 4. c. 15. for regulating the office of the receipt of his majesty's Exchequer at Westminster, the offices of auditor, tellers, clerk of the pells, and the offices subordinate thereto, are abolished, and a new establishment, consisting of a comptroller-general, and other officers, appointed.

By § 8. the tellers are to pay over all moneys, &c. in their hands into the Bank of England, to the credit of his majesty's Exchequer; and an account is to be thereupon opened by the Bank, to be called "The Account of his Majesty's Exchequer." And by § 9. all moneys thereupon payable into the Exchequer are to be hereafter paid into the Bank.

By § 10. whenever money shall be granted by act of parliament, or vote of the commons, for any specified branch of the public service, his majesty, by royal order, under the sign manual, countersigned by the commissioners of the Treasury, may authorize the comptroller to place at the Bank, to the credit of the public accountant to the crown in the respective branch of service, the amount so granted.

By § 12. the commissioners of the Treasury may authorize the comptroller, by warrant under their hands, to transfer from the general fund of the Exchequer at the Bank, to the credit of the officers whose duty it shall be to make payments on account of the several public departments, the requisite sums for carrying on the respective services; and such comptroller, by warrant under his hand, may authorize the Bank to grant credits on account of the sums therein mentioned to the persons therein described.

§ 13. empowers the Treasury, by warrant, to authorize issues of moneys charged on the consolidated fund, &c. without a royal order.

PUBLIC STORES.

By § 23. quarterly statements are to be made by the comptroller to the commissioners for auditing the public accounts of all payments made to the Bank on account of the Exchequer, and of all moneys drawn from it by the accountants; and an annual statement is to be laid before each house of parliament, on the 20th of April, in each year.

By § 24. the annual account made up on each quarter-day, according to the directions of the 10 Geo. 4. shall be ascertained by the receipts and credits at the Bank.

PUBLIC STORES. By the 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 27. the statutes of the 31 Eliz. c. 4. and the 22 Car. 2. c. 5. as to embezzling and stealing the king's naval and military stores, were repealed.

But by the 4 Geo. 4. c. 53. (left unrepealed, as to this particular subject) every person convicted of stealing or embezzling his majesty's ammunition, sails, cordage, or naval or military stores, or of procuring, counselling, aiding, or abetting, any such offender, is liable to be transported for life, or any term not less than seven years, or to be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, for any term not exceeding seven years.

By the 1 Geo. 1. st. 2. c. 25. § 34. the principal officers or commissioners of the navy are empowered to issue search warrants, and inflict summary punishment, by fine and imprisonment, where the value of the goods stolen or embezzled does not exceed 20s.

By the 9 Geo. 3. c. 30. § 5. the above officers of the navy board may exercise the office of a justice of the peace, in causing any person charged with stealing or embezzling any naval stores, to be apprehended, committed, and prosecuted.

By the annual mutiny act, a provision is also made for the punishment of certain persons, such as paymasters and persons employed in the commissariat department, embezzling military stores, by the proceedings of a court martial, which may inflict transportation for life or years, &c.

By the 9 & 10 Wm. 3. c. 41. § 1. (made a public act by the 1 Geo. 1. st. 2. c. 25. § 14.) no person, unless authorized by contracting with the principal officers or commissioners of the navy, ordnance, or victualling office, shall make any stores of war, or naval stores, with the king's mark, or any other stores with the broad arrow, on pain of forfeiting the same, and 200*l.*, with costs, one moiety to the king, and the other to the informer.

By § 2. any person, in whose possession such stores so marked shall be found, and any person concealing such stores, is liable to the same penalty, unless he shall produce a certificate under the hand of three or more of the principal officers or commissioners of the navy, &c. expressing the numbers, quantities, or weights of such goods, and the occasion and reason of the same coming to his possession. But by § 4 & 8. persons are exempted from penalties, who have bought stores sold by order of the commissioners of the navy, or to whom the same have been lent by the navy board, or any chief commander of any of the king's ships at sea, on the occasion of any merchant being in distress or otherwise.

By the 9 Geo. 1. c. 8. § 3. persons having or concealing any timber, thick stuff, or plank, marked with the broad arrow, are liable to the same punishment, as for having, keeping, or concealing any other warlike, naval, or ordnance stores.

The 17 Geo. 2. c. 40. § 10. to remove doubts which had arisen respecting the trial and punishment of offenders under the foregoing statutes, enacts that any judge at the assizes, or justices at the quarter sessions, may try any of the offences mentioned in those acts, and may impose any fine not exceeding 200*l.* on the offender, (one moiety to the king, and the other to the informer) and may mitigate the penalty, and may commit the offender in the manner specified by the last-mentioned act.

By the 39 & 40 Geo. 3. c. 89. § 1, which is the principal statute on this subject, every person (not being a contractor, or employed as mentioned in the act of 9 & 10 Wm. 3. c. 41.)

who shall willingly, or knowingly, sell or deliver, or cause to be sold or delivered, to any other person, or who shall willingly or knowingly receive, or have in his possession, any stores of war, or naval ordnance, or victualling stores, or any goods whatsoever marked in the manner above mentioned, or any canvass marked either with a blue streak in the middle, or in a serpentine form, or any buntin wrought with one or more streaks of raised tape, (the said stores or goods being in a raw or unconverted state, or being new, or not more than one-third worn); and every one who shall conceal such stores shall be deemed a receiver of stolen goods, knowing them to have been stolen, and is liable to be transported for fourteen years, unless such person shall produce a certificate, under the hands of three of the principal officers or commissioners of the navy, ordnance, or victualling boards, expressing the numbers, quantities, or weights of such stores or goods, and the occasion and reason of such stores or goods coming to his possession.

By § 2. persons having possession of any of the said canvass or buntin, (the same not being charged to be new, or not more than one-third worn), and all persons convicted of any offence relating to the making, or having in possession, or concealing any warlike or naval, or ordnance stores, shall—besides forfeiting the same, and the sum of 200*l.*, together with costs of suit—be corporally punished, by whipping and imprisonment, or by any or either of the said ways and means, in such manner and for such space of time as to the judge or justices, before whom such offender shall be convicted, shall seem meet; but the judge or justices may mitigate the said penalty of 200*l.* as they shall see cause.

By § 3. nothing shall extend to exempt any person being a contractor, or employed in manner above mentioned, except only so far as concerns stores or goods marked as aforesaid; which shall be bond fide provided, made up, or manufactured by such person, or by his order, and which shall not have been before delivered into his majesty's stores; unless having been so delivered, they shall have been sold or returned to such person by the commissioners of his majesty's navy, ordnance, or victualling, respectively.

By § 4. if any person shall wilfully and fraudulently destroy, beat out, take out, cut out, deface, obliterate, or erase, wholly, or in part, any of the marks in the said act of the 9 & 10 Wm. 3. or in that act mentioned, or any other mark whatsoever, denoting the property of his majesty in or to any warlike or naval ordnance, or victualling stores, or shall cause or direct any other person so to do, for the purpose of concealing his majesty's property in such stores; such persons shall be guilty of felony, and liable to be transported for fourteen years.

By § 5. if any person convicted of any offence against this act, or the act of 9 & 10 Wm. 3. for which he shall not have been transported, shall be guilty of a second offence, he shall be transported also for fourteen years.

By § 7. the court may mitigate or commute the punishment of transportation, by causing the offender to be publicly whipped, fined, or imprisoned; one moiety of the fine to go to the king, and the other to the informer, and the offender to be imprisoned till the fine be paid.

By §§ 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23. powers are given to the commissioners of the navy, ordnance, and victualling board, and to justices out of sessions, to determine offences in a summary way, where the stores found are not exceeding the value of 20*s.*; but an appeal is given to the quarter sessions from such conviction.

By § 24. nothing contained in the act, as to summary jurisdiction, is to prevent a party accused from being prosecuted as a receiver of stolen goods.

By §§ 25, 26. the commissioners of the navy may sell marked stores, and the buyer be protected by a certificate of such purchase. And persons giving or publishing any false certificate are liable to a penalty of 200*l.*

And by the 55 Geo. 3. c. 127. the provisions of the above acts are further extended to all public stores whatsoever under the care, superintendence, or control of any officer, or person in the service of his majesty, or employed in any public department, or office, either marked with the marks in the above acts specified, or with the broad arrow, and the letters B. By § 11. the clauses, powers, &c. respecting advances and accounts made under the therein recited acts are to extend to advances made by commissioners under that act.

By § 12. after reciting that, "in some cases, advances have been made by the said commissioners towards the completion of public works which yet remain unfinished in consequence of the expense of completing the same having, from unforeseen circumstances, exceeded the sum estimated for the completion thereof, and the capital provided for such completion at the time of the application for such advances, and it is expedient, for the security of the money already expended and advanced on such unfinished works, that in addition to the powers and remedies provided by the said recited acts, or some or one of them, for making calls on the proprietors or shareholders of such unfinished works or undertakings under the circumstances aforesaid, that the said commissioners should have authority, if they should think fit, to make advances in anticipation of such calls, or on the security of a further mortgage of such unfinished works, with a view to the completion thereof;" it is enacted, that in all cases in which the said commissioners have made, or shall hereafter make advances, under the powers of the said recited acts or that act, for any incomplete work or undertaking, which shall, after the expenditure of such advance and the capital provided for the same, remain unfinished in consequence of the expense of perfecting the same exceeding the sum estimated for the completion thereof at the time of the application for such advance, the commissioners may make any further advance for the completion of any such incomplete work, either in anticipation of the calls to which the proprietors or shareholders of such work shall be liable under the provisions of the said recited acts or either of them, or on the security of further mortgages of the same works, or on such other security, and upon such terms and conditions as to the periods of repayment or otherwise, as the said commissioners may direct or appoint; and such further mortgages and other securities shall be entitled to such and the same priority, privileges and advantages as any mortgage or security which may have been previously granted to the said commissioners on such unfinished work.

PUIS DARREIN CONTINUANCE. Was a plea of continuance, pending an action, post ultimum continuationem. It is now abolished; but the new matter may be pleaded, with an allegation that it arose after the last continuance, or the issuing of the jury process, as the case may be. See Pleading.

PUPILLARITY. The age of infants preceding puberty. See that title.

PUR AUTRE VIE. Where lands, &c. are held for another's life. See Occupant.

PURCHASE,

ACQUISITUM, PERQUISITUM, PERQUISITIO. The buying or other acquisition of lands, or tenements, with money, or by gift, deed, or agreement; as distinct from the obtaining them by descent or hereditary right; conjunctum perquisitum is where two or more persons join in the purchase. Litt. § 2; Reg. Orig. 143.

Purchase, taken in its largest and most extensive sense, is thus defined; the possession of lands and tenements, which a man hath by his own act or agreement, and not by descent from any of his ancestors or kindred. In this sense it is contradistinguished from acquisition by right of blood; and includes every other method of coming to an estate, but merely that by inheritance: wherein the title is invested in a person not by his own act or agreement, but by the single operation of law. Litt. § 12; 1 Inst. 18. What is termed in the common law purchase, was by the feudists called conquest, conquestus or conquisitio: and in this sense it was that William I. was called Conquestor or the Conqueror, signifying that he was the first of his family who acquired the crown and realm of England. See 2 Comm. c. 15.

This is the legal signification of the word perquisitio, or purchase; and in this sense it includes the five following methods of acquiring a title to estates: escheat, occupancy, prescription, forfeiture, alienation. See this Dictionary, under those and other titles connected therewith; and further, titles Remainder, Executory Devise, Limitation of Estate, &c.

Mr. Hargrave, after some remarks on the peculiar nature of escheats, observes, that instead of distributing all the several titles to land under purchase and descent, it would be more accurate to say, that the title to land is either by purchase, to which the act or agreement of the party is essential, or by mere act of law: and under the latter to consider, first, descent; and then escheat, and such other titles, not being by descent, as yet like them accrue by mere act of law. 1 Inst. 18 b.

One cometh in by purchase when he comes to lands by legal conveyance, and hath a lawful estate; and a purchase is always intended by title, either from some consideration, or by gift; (for a gift is in law a purchase;) whereas descent from an ancestor cometh of course by act of law; also all contracts are comprehended under this word purchase. Co. Litt. 18; Doct. & Stud. cap. 24.

Purchase in opposition to descent is taken largely; if an estate comes to a man from his ancestors without writing, that is a descent; but where a person takes any thing from an ancestor, or others, by deed, will, or gift, and not as heir at law, that is a purchase. 2 Litt. Abr. 403.

When an estate doth originally vest in the heir, and never was nor could be in the ancestor, such heir shall take by way of purchase; but when the thing might have vested in his ancestor, though it be first in the heir, and not in him at all, the heir shall have it in nature of descent. 1 Rep. 95, 106.

Consistent with the above rule is Mr. Fearn's explanation of the much-contested point, in what case an heir shall be said to take by limitation, and in what by purchase, or, in the language of conveyances, what are words of limitation, and what are words of purchase. See fully this Dictionary, title Remainder: and post, Dio. I. of this title.

I. In what Cases Heirs shall be deemed Purchasers: and of the Effect of their taking by Purchase.

II. Of Purchasers for a valuable Consideration; and how protected or made answerable in Equity. See also this Dictionary, under titles Consideration, Fraud, Mortgage, Trust, &c.

I. PURCHASE, in its vulgar and confined acceptance, is applied only to such acquisitions of land as are obtained by way of bargain and sale for money, or some other valuable consideration. But this falls far short of the legal idea of purchase; for if I give land freely to another, he is in the eye of law a purchaser, and falls within Littleton's definition, for he comes to the estate by his own agreement, that is, he consents to the gift. 1 Inst. 18. A man who had his father's estate settled upon him in tail, before he was born, was also a purchaser; for he took quite another estate than the law of descents would have given him. Nay, even if the ancestor devised his estate to his heir at law by will, with other limitations, or in any other shape than the course of descents would direct, such heir took by purchase. Ld. Raym. 728. Thus if a man having two daughters, his heirs, devised his land to them and their heirs, they took by purchase as joint-tenants; for the estate of joint-tenants, and tenants in common, was different in its nature and quality from that of co-parceners. Cro. Eliz. 431. But previous to the recent statute, 3 & 4 Wm. 4. c. 106, if a man seised in fee, devised his whole estate to his heir at law, so that the heir took neither a greater nor a less estate by the devise than he would have done without it, he was adjudged to take by descent, even though it were charged with incumbrances; that being for the benefit of his creditors, and others, who had demands on the estate of the ancestor. 1 Roll. Abr. 626; Salk. 241; Ld. Raym. 728. If a remainder be limited to the heirs of A., there A. himself takes nothing; but, if he died during the continuance of the particular estate, his heirs shall take as purchasers. 1 Roll. Abr. 627; 1 T. R. 634. But if an estate made to A. for life, remainder to his right heirs in fee, his heirs took by descent; for it is an ancient rule of law, that wherever the ancestor takes an estate for life, the heir could not, by the same conveyance, take an estate in fee by purchase, but only by descent. 1 Rep. 104; 2 Lev. 60; Raym. 334. And if A. died before entry, still his heir took by descent, and not by purchase; for where the heir takes any thing that might have vested in the ancestor, he takes by way of descent. 1 Rep. 98. The ancestor, during his life, beareth in himself all his heirs; and therefore, when once he is, or might have been, seised of the lands, the inheritance so limited to his heirs vests in the ancestor himself; and the word "heirs" in this case is not esteemed a word of purchase, but a word of limitation, enuring so as to increase the estate of the ancestor, from a tenancy for life to a fee simple. Co. Litt. 22. And, had it been otherwise, had the heir (who is uncertain till the death of the ancestor) been allowed to take as a purchaser originally nominated in the deed, as must have been the case if the remainder had been expressly limited to him by name; then, in the times of strict feudal tenure, the lord would have been defrauded by such a limitation of the fruits of his signiory, arising from a descent to the heir. 2 Comm. c. 16, p. 242. See titles Heir, II., Remainder.

The difference in effect, between the acquisition of an estate by descent and by purchase, consists principally in these two points: First, That by purchase the estate acquires a new inheritable quality, and is descendible to the owner's blood in general, and not to the blood only of some particular ancestor

Secondly, That an estate taken by purchase will not make the heir answerable for the acts of the ancestor, as an estate by descent will. For, if the ancestor by any deed, obligation, covenant, or the like, bindeth himself and his heirs, and in this deed, obligation, or covenant, shall be binding upon him, so far forth only as he, or any other in trust for him, had any estate of inheritance vested in him by descent from, or any estate pur autre vie coming to him by special occupancy, as heir to that ancestor, sufficient to answer the charge, whether he remains in possession, or hath aliened it before action brought. See 1 P. Wms. 777; and 1 Wm. 4. c. 47. Therefore if a man covenants, for himself and his heirs, to keep my house in repair, I can then (and then only) compel his heir to perform this covenant, when he has an estate sufficient for this purpose, or assets, by descent from the covenantor; for though the covenant descends to the heir, whether he inherits any estate or not, it lies dormant, and is not compulsory, until he has assets by descent. Finch. Rep. 86. See Assets, Real Estate.

By the late statute above referred to, for the amendment of the law of inheritance, great alterations have been made in the law of descents, and particularly with respect to the cases where an heir shall take by purchase, and where by descent. See Descent.

II. It is the rule of equity, that where a man is purchaser for valuable consideration without notice, he shall not be annoyed in equity; not only where he has a prior legal estate, but where he has a better title or right to call for the legal estate than the other. Treat. Eq. lib. 2. c. 6. § 2. cited 2 Vern. 589; 2 P. Wms. 678, &c.

This rule is founded on an obvious principle of equity. It seems, however, to have been broken in upon by the decisions in Burgh v. Burgh; [Burgh v. Francis]; Finch, 28 and Williams v. Lambe, 3 Bro. C. R. 264. In the former of which cases the court appears to have interposed to the prejudice of a judgment-creditor, without notice of the plaintiff's equity; and in the latter to the prejudice of a purchaser, without notice of the plaintiff's title as dowress. With respect to those instances in which a bona fide purchaser has in equity been postponed, in respect of his conniving at the subsequent fraud of him under whom he derived his title, they are evidently exceptions to the general rule, which is confined to the claim of the purchaser at the time of completing his purchase; a claim which he may forfeit, as to third persons, by subsequent misconduct. Fonblanque's Note on Treat. Eq. ubi sup.; and see Treat. Eq. i. c. 3. § 4, in n. and title Mortgage, III.

It has been said, that by taking a conveyance with notice of a trust, the purchaser himself becomes the trustee, and must not, to serve himself, be guilty of a breach of trust, notwithstanding any consideration paid. 2 Vern. 271. On this proposition seems to be stated too generally; for though an immediate or first purchaser, with notice of an equitable claim in another, shall certainly not be allowed, though a purchaser for valuable consideration, to protect himself against such equitable claim; yet if a person, having notice of an equitable claim in another, purchase from one who had not notice of such claim, he may protect himself by want of notice in his vendor; such protection being necessary to secure to the bona fide purchaser without notice, the benefit of his purchase. Pre. Ch. 51; 1 Atk. 671; Bro. C. R. 66. Neither shall a purchaser, without notice, from a purchaser with notice, be considered in equity as bound by the trust. 2 Vern. 384; Amb. 313. See post. It may be material to remark, that notice is not confined to the time of the contract; for if a person who has a title in equity on the premises, give notice thereof before a full payment of the purchase-money, it is sufficient; 3 P. Wms. 307; 2 Atk. 630; 3 Atk. 304; or before the execution of the conveyance, though the purchase-money be actually paid.

1 Att. 384; Cases in C. 34. As to what is a voluntary settlement within the statute, see 3 Russ. 273.

A voluntary settlement, made in consideration of natural love and affection, has been held void under the construction of 27 Eliz. c. 4. against a purchaser for a valuable consideration; although he had notice of the settlement before all the purchase-money was paid, or the conveyance executed, and though in fact there was no fraud in the transaction. 9 East, 59.

Where there is a general trust, as to pay debts, though the purchaser has notice of them, it seems that he is not obliged to see the purchase-money applied: otherwise if the debts be particular, as for payment of debts in a schedule. Treat. Eq. ii. c. 6. § 2. But though the purchaser be bound to see to the application of the money, as to the schedule debts, he is not bound to see that only so much real estate is sold or mortgaged, as will discharge such debts; unless there be a collusion between the heir and trustee. 1 Vern. 301; 2 Ch. Ca. 115, 221. Neither is he bound to see the payment of legacies, if the estate be charged generally with debts and legacies; for not being in such case bound to see to the discharge of debts, he cannot be expected to see to the discharge of the legacies, which cannot be paid till after the debts. Fonblanque's Note on Tr. Eq. ubi sup. Jebb v. Abbott, 1 Bro. C. R. See 1 Inst. 291, in n. and title Trust.

As a purchaser for valuable consideration has an equal claim to the protection of a court of equity, to defend his possession, as the plaintiff has to the assistance of the court to assert his right, a court of equity will not, in general, compel a purchaser for valuable consideration, without notice of the plaintiff's title, to make any discovery which may affect his own title; but such discovery will be enforced in favour of a doweress. See 1 Vern. 179; 3 Bro. C. R. 264.

Thus an assignee of a lease shall not be forced to discover whether the lease is expired; but lessee for years of consors of a statute has been compelled to discover what estate he had from the consors, to the end that he might be liable to the statute. 8 Vin. 564, pl. 2, cited Treat. Eq. lib. 6. c. 3. § 3.

A purchaser is not compelled to take a title depending upon the words of a will, which were too doubtful to be settled without litigation; and where the title is doubtful, a case will not be directed to the judges as to the title, at the request of the vendor; for even if the judgment were found in favour of the title, it would not bind the purchaser to accept it. Sharp v. Adcock, 4 Russ. 374. If a good title cannot be made to part of the property agreed to be sold, which is material to the enjoyment of the rest, the purchaser is not bound to complete the contract even in the compensation for the defective part. South v. Fletcher, 4 Russ. 302. See further, Snodgrass's Trustees and Purchasers.

PURGATION, perjuratio. The clearing a man's self of a crime, whereof he is publicly suspected, and accused before a court, of which there was formerly great use in England.

Purgation is either canonica or vulgaris. Canonical purgation is that which is prescribed by the canon law, the form whereof, used in the spiritual court, is that the person suspected take an oath, that he is clear of the fact, and that he is not bound by any oath, and bring his neighbours with him to swear, that they believe him to be true. The vulgar purgation, according to the common law, was by fire or ordeal, or by combat, abolished by canon. Stuandy v. Stuandy, 1 Ch. Ca. c. 48. See Ordeal.

The canonical doctrine of purgation, whereby the parties were obliged to answer upon oath to any matter, however trivial, that might be objected against them (though long ago discredited in the Court of Chancery), continued till the middle of the last century to be upheld by the spiritual courts, when by 13 Car. 2. c. 12, it is enacted, that it shall not be lawful for any bishop or ecclesiastical judge, to tender or administer to any person whatsoever, the oath usually called the oath ex officio, or any other oath, whereby he may be compelled to confess, accuse, or purge himself of any criminal matter or thing, whereby he may be liable to any censure or punishment. 3 Comm. 100.

Anciently, upon the allowance of benefit of clergy, the person accused was given to the ordinary, to make his purgation, which was to be by a jury of twelve clerks, before the bishop in person, or his deputy, and there, first the party by his own oath, affirmed his innocency; then there were the oaths of twelve compurgators to their belief of it; then witnesses were to be examined on oath, on behalf of the prisoner only; and lastly, the jury were to bring in their verdict on oath, which usually acquitted the prisoner; otherwise if a clerk,—he was degraded or put in penance. 2 H. & H. 383; Wood's Civ. L. 669. But by the 18 Eliz. c. 7, this kind of purgation was taken away. See further, 4 Comm. 368.

The 13 Car. 2. c. 12, having thus taken away the oath ex officio of persons accusing or purging themselves, &c. some maintain that all the proceedings of purgation on common lawne fall too; others say there is still a legal purgation left, but not canonical. Wood's Inst. 506, 507.

PURLIEU or PURLUE, sometimes written purallee, from Fr. pur, purus, et lieu, locus.] All that ground near a forest, which being added to the ancient forests by King Henry II., Richard I., and King John, was afterwards disafforested and severed by the Charta de Foresta, and the perambulations and grants thereon, by Henry III., so that it becomes purlue, viz. pure and free from the laws and ordinances of the forest. Mamm. For. Laws, par. 2, c. 20.

Purallee is also said to be properly the perambulation whereby the purlieu is disafforested. 33 Edw. 1. st. 5; 4 Inst. 304.

Owners of grounds within the purlieu by disafforestation, may fell timber, convert pastures into arable, &c., inclose them with any kind of inclosure, erect edifices and dispose of them as if they had never been afforested; and a purlieu-man may as lawfully hunt, to all intents, within the purlieu, as any man may in his own grounds which were never afforested; he may keep his dogs within the purlieu unexpediated; and the wild beasts belong to the purlieu-man ratione soli, so long as they remain in his grounds, and he may kill them. 4 Inst. 303.

If the purlieu-man chase the beasts with greyhounds, and they fly towards the forest for safety, he may pursue them to the bounds of the forest; and if he then do his endeavour to call back and take off his dogs from the pursuit, although the dogs follow the chase in the forest, and kill the king's deer there, this is no offence, so as he enter not into the forest, nor meddle with the deer so killed; and if the dogs listen on the deer before he recover the forest, and the deer drag the dogs into the forest, in such case the purlieu-man may follow his dogs and take the deer. 4 Inst. 303, 304.

And notwithstanding purlieus are absolutely disafforested, it hath been permitted, that the ranger of the forest shall, as often as the wild beast of the forest range into the purlieu, with his bounds recede them back to the forest. 4 Inst. See further, Derr, Forest.

PURLIEU-MEN. Those who have ground within the purlieu, and being able to dispend forty shillings a year freehold, who, on these two points, are licensed to hunt in their own purlieus, observing what is required. Mamm. For. Laws, 151, 157, 180, 186. See Purlieu.

PUTAGE, putagium, from the French putaine, Italian putta, meretrix.] Fornication.

By the feudal laws, if any heir female under guardianship were guilty of this crime, she forfeited her part to her co-heirs; or if she were an only heiress, the lord of the fee took it by escheat. Spelman, Cowell.

PUTURA, q. polura.] A custom claimed by keepers in forests, and sometimes by bailiffs of hundreds, to take man's meat, horse meat, and dog's meat, of the tenants and inhabitants within the perambulation of the forest, hundred, &c.; and in the liberty of Knaresburgh it was long since turned into the payment of 4*d.* in money by each tenant. *MS. de temp. QUADRAGESIMALIA. In former days it was the custom for people to visit their mother church on Midlent Sunday, and to make their offerings at the high altar, as the like devotion was again observed in Whitsun-week. But as the procession and oblations at Whitsuntide were sometimes commuted into a rated payment of pentecostals, so the Lent or Easter offerings were changed into a customary rate called quadragesimalia and denarii quadragesimales, also laetare Jerusalem, from those words in the hymn for the day. Dict.

QUADRANS. A fourth part of a penny; before the reign of Edward I. the smallest coin was a sterling or penny, marked with a cross, by the guidance whereof a penny might be cut into halves for a halfpenny, or into quarters or four parts for farthings; till, to avoid the fraud of unequal cutting, that king coined halfpence and farthings in round distinct pieces. Mat. West. anno 1279.

QUÆ PLURA. A writ which lay where an inquisition had been taken by an escheator of lands, &c. of which a man died seized, and all the land was supposed not to be found by the office or inquisition; this writ was therefore to inquire of what more lands or tenements the party died seized. *Reg. QUAKERS, tremuli.] From their pretending to tremble or quake in the exercise of their religion.

In consequence of the claim advanced by Mr. Pease, who had been returned one of the members for the southern division of the county of Durham, to take his seat upon making his solemn affirmation and declaration instead of taking the usual oaths, the House of Commons, on the 8th of February, 1833, appointed a select committee to report such precedents as they could discover bearing upon the subject. Their report, which was brought up on the 11th, presents a full detail of the various enactments which the statute books contained in reference to the Quakers, since they originally attracted the notice of the legislature. The first which they quoted was an act passed in 1674 (the 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 1), by which it was declared, that any person refusing to take an oath when lawfully tendered, should for the first offence be fined 5*l.*, and if three times convicted, should suffer the penalty of banishment. By a subsequent act (the 15 Car. 2. c. 4. § 16), the further penalty of transportation was affixed to the offence. It was not till the year 1689, that by the 1 W. & M. c. 18 (commonly called the Toleration Act), the affirmation of Dissenters from the Church of England, who scrupled to take an oath, was legally recognized. This act, however, only exempted such persons from the pains and penalties of the statutes against Papists and Non-conformists, and that only on their subscribing a certain declaration of allegiance, and a profession of their faith in the Trinity. It was by the act 7 & 8 Wm. 3. c. 34, passed in 1697, that Quakers were first permitted to substitute their solemn affirmation instead of the usual oath, in civil causes, in the courts of justice. The act, which was to be in force only for seven years, was by a subsequent enactment (13 Wm. 3. c. 4), passed in 1702, continued for the further period of eleven years; and in 1714 (by the 1 Geo. 1. c. 6. § 1), it was made perpetual. The next statute in order was the 8 Geo. 1. c. 6, passed in 1722, by which the forms of the declaration of allegiance and of the solemn affirmation were altered. But the most decisive enactment bearing upon the subject before the committee, was the 22 Geo. 2. c. 46, passed in 1749, by which it was declared, "that in cases wherein by any act or acts of parliament now in force, or hereafter to be made, an oath is or shall be allowed, authorized, directed, or required, the solemn affirmation or declaration of any of the people called Quakers, in the form prescribed, &c. shall be allowed and taken instead of such oath, although no particular or express provision be made for that purpose in such act or acts." It was, however, at the same time provided, that no Quaker should, by virtue of this act, be qualified or permitted to give evidence in any criminal cases, or to serve on juries, or to bear any office or place of profit in the government. It was not until the 9 Geo. 4. c. 32, passed in 1829, that Quakers and Moravians were for the first time allowed to make their solemn affirmation instead of the usual oath in giving evidence "in any case whatsoever, criminal, or civil."

The decision came to by the House of Commons upon the report of the select committee was in favour of Mr. Pease's claim, who accordingly took his seat on the following day, upon making his affirmation and declaration.

From the report of the committee, it appears that there is only one other case on the journals in which the question of the admissibility of a Quaker to take his seat on affirmation came before the House, namely, that of John Archdale, Esq. returned for Chipping Wycombe, in 1699. This gentleman made his claim by a letter to the Speaker, dated "Tuesday, the 3d of the eleventh month, called January, 1698-9," which was read to the House the same evening. The House after hearing it, ordered that it should be taken into consideration on the Friday following, and that Mr. Archdale should be in attendance on the morning of that day. The act of 7 & 8 Wm. 3. legalizing the affirmation of a Quaker, in certain cases, was at that time in force; but the decision came to by the House, nevertheless, was an order that the Speaker should issue his warrant to the clerk of the crown to make out a new writ for the borough of Chipping Wycombe.

Quakers continued inadmissible to serve on juries, and to places of profit in the government, until the passing of the 3 & 4 Wm. 4. c. 39, introduced into the Commons by Lord Morpeth, whereby Quakers and Moravians are permitted to make their solemn affirmations or declarations instead of taking oaths, in all places and for all purposes whatsoever where an oath is or shall be required, either by the common law or by act of parliament.

By the same act, the form of affirmation to be taken by Quakers and Moravians, instead of the oath of abjuration, is altered, and is hereafter to be made in the words thereby prescribed.

The same provision is contained in the above act as well as in all former statutes declaring persons making false affirmations liable to the punishments enacted against perjury.

Quakers refusing to pay tithes or church rates, justices of peace are to determine them, and order costs, &c. 7 & 8 Wm. 3. c. 34. § 4; 1 Geo. 1. c. 6. Quakers may be committed to prison for non-payment of tithes, on stat. 27 H. 8. c. 20, which is not repealed by 7 & 8 Wm. 3. which gives another remedy. 1 Ld. Raym. 323. See Tithes.

In the Militia Acts and the several acts for raising men for defence of the realm, provisions are introduced for relieving Quakers against the operation of them by the payment of certain fines; the tenets of the Quakers preventing them from serving in war.

QUALE JUS. A judicial writ, which was brought where a man of religion had judgment to recover land before execution was made of the judgment; it went forth to the escheator between judgment and execution, to inquire what right the religious person had to recover, or whether the judgment were obtained by collusion between the parties, to the intent that the lord might not be defrauded. Reg. Judic. 8, 16, 46; Stats. Westm. 2; 13 Edw. 1. st. 1. c. 32.

QUALIFIED. Is applied to a person enabled to hold two benefices. See Plurality.

QUALIFIED (or Base) FEE. Is such a one as hath a qualification subjoined thereto. See Estate.

QUALIFIED OATH. An oath where the party swears not simply, but circumstantially.

QUALIFIED PROPERTY. See Possession, Property.

QUAMDIU SE BENE GESSERIT, As long as he shall behave himself well in his office. A clause often inserted in letters-patent of the grant of offices; as in those of the barons of the Exchequer, &c. which must be intended in matters concerning their office; and is nothing but what the law would have implied if the office had been granted for life. 4 Inst. 117. See Judges.

QUANTUM MERUIT, So much as he deserved. Was an action on the case, express or implied, grounded on a promise to pay the plaintiff for doing any thing so much as he deserved or merited.

If a man retain any person to do work or other thing for him; as a tailor to make a garment, a carrier to carry goods, &c. without any certain agreement; in such case the law implies that he shall pay for the same, as much as they are worth, and shall be reasonably demanded; for which quantum meruit until recently might have been brought; and if one sued another on a promise to satisfy him for work done, &c. he must have shown and averred in his declaration how much he deserved for his work. See Pleading, I. 1.

QUANTUM VALEBAT, So much as it was worth. Where goods and ware sold are delivered by a tradesman at no certain price, or to be paid for them as much as they are worth in general, then quantum valebat lay, and the plaintiff was to aver them to be worth so much: so where the law obliges one to furnish another with goods or provisions, as an innkeeper his guests, &c. See Assumpsit, Pleading, I. 1.

Formerly quantum meruit and quantum valebat counts were usually inserted among the other common counts in every declaration in assumpsit; but they were in effect abolished by the rules of H. T. 1 Wm. 4. which prescribed a short form for such of the common counts as are retained.

QUARANTINE, QUARENTAINE, quarantina. A benefit allowed by law to the widow of a man dying seized of lands, whereby she may challenge to continue in his capital messuage or chief mansion-house (not being a castle), by the space of forty days after his decease, in order to the assignment of her dower, &c. And if the heir or any other eject her, she may bring the writ de quarantina habenda; but the widow shall not have meat, drink, &c.; though if there be no provision in the house, according to Fitzherbert, she may kill things for her provision. See Magna Charta, c. 7; Bract. lib. 2. c. 40; F. N. B. 161; and ante, tit. Dower, III.

QUARANTINE. The term of forty days, during which the persons coming from foreign parts, infected with the plague, are not permitted to land or come on shore.

By the 6 Geo. 4. c. 78. all former acts relating to quarantine were repealed, and the existing quarantine regulations depend upon its provisions and the different orders in council issued under its authority. These orders specify what vessels are liable to perform quarantine, the places at which it is to be performed, and the various formalities to be observed. The publication in the Gazette of any order in council with respect to quarantine, is deemed sufficient notice to all concerned, and no excuse of ignorance is admitted for any infringement of the regulations.

The following is a short abstract of the principal clauses of the act.

By § 8. masters of vessels liable to quarantine are to make signals on meeting other vessels at sea, or being within two leagues of the United Kingdom, or Guernsey, &c. on penalty of 100*l.*

And § 9. masters of vessels are to hoist certain signals when plague or infectious disease on board, on penalty of 100*l.*

§ 10. inflicts a penalty on persons hoisting signals when not liable.

By § 11. masters of vessels, on their arrival from foreign parts, are to give to the pilots an account of the places at which they shall have loaded and touched, on penalty of 100*l.* And pilots are to give notice of any proclamation or order in council requiring the performance of quarantine, on penalty of 100*l.*

QUARANTINE.

By § 12. pilot to give notice if any articles be on board liable to quarantine, on penalty of 100*l*.

By § 13. pilots are to bring to at request of officer of customs, on penalty of 100*l*.

By § 14. for better ascertaining whether vessels be actually infected, or the persons on board liable to orders touching quarantine, masters of vessels may be interrogated by the principal officer of the customs at the port where they are going; and refusing to answer interrogatories, &c. shall forfeit 200*l*.

§ 15. Vessels subject to quarantine arriving at any port than that at which it ought to be performed, may be forced to repair to the appointed place. Masters of vessels that have touched at infected places, &c. omitting to disclose the same, or omitting to hoist the prescribed signal, are to forfeit 300*l*.

§ 16. Commanders to deliver up books of health, manifests, and log-book, to the superintendent of quarantine, on penalty of 100*l*.

§ 17. Penalty on masters, &c. quitting vessels, or permitting persons to quit them, or not conveying the same to the appointed places, 400*l*. Penalty on persons coming in such vessels, or going on board, and quitting them before discharged from quarantine, to suffer imprisonment for six months, and forfeit 300*l*.

By § 18. the superintendent of quarantine, &c. may punish disobedience or refractory behaviour in persons under or liable to quarantine, or persons having intercourse with them. Persons refusing to repair to the lazaret or vessel, are to forfeit 200*l*.

§ 19. Persons quitting vessels liable to perform quarantine, &c. may be seized.

By § 20. intercourse with stations allotted for quarantine of vessels, may be prohibited by order in council.

By § 21. if any officer of his majesty's customs, or any other person whatsoever, to whom it shall appertain to execute any order concerning quarantine, shall imbecillate any goods performing quarantine, or be guilty of any other breach or neglect of his duty, he shall forfeit such office or employment as he may be possessed of, and pay two hundred pounds; and if any such officer or person shall desert from his duty when employed as aforesaid, or permit any person, vessel, goods, or merchandize, to depart or be conveyed out of the said lazaret vessel or other place as aforesaid, or if any person authorized to give a certificate of a vessel having duly performed quarantine or airing, shall give a false certificate thereof, every such person shall be guilty of felony, and if any such officer or person shall damage any goods performing quarantine under his direction, he shall be liable to pay 10*l*. damages and full costs of suit to the owner.

By § 25. persons forging or uttering false certificates required by order in council, are declared guilty of felony.

§ 26. inflicts a penalty of 100*l*. on persons landing goods, &c. from vessels liable to perform quarantine, or receiving them, or secreting them from vessels performing quarantine.

The system of quarantine is regulated in Ireland by the Irish act, 40 Geo. 3. c. 79.

Under the former quarantine acts it was held that if a pilot quits the ship contrary to a order of the king in council, he may be indicted for a misdemeanor, and punished by the discretion of the court, on the ground of his violating the direction of a positive prohibitory statute. 4 T. R. 206.

QUARANTINE likewise signifies a quantity of ground, containing forty perches. Leg. Hen. 1. c. 16.

QUARE CLAUSUM FREGIT. See Capius, Common Pleas.

QUARE CUM. Are general words used in original writs, &c. See Original.

QUARE EJECT INTRA TERMINUM. A writ which lay by the ancient law where the wrong-doer or ejector was not himself in possession of the lands, but another who claimed under him. As where a man leased lands to another for years, and after the lessor or reversioner entered and made a feoffment in fee or for life of the same lands to a stranger, there the lessee could bring a writ of ejectione firmæ, or ejectment, against the feoffee; because he did not eject him but the reversioner; neither could he have any such action to recover his term against the reversioner who ousted him, because he was not now in possession. And upon that account this writ was devised upon the equity of Stat. Westm. 2. c. 24. as in a case where no adequate remedy was provided. F. N. B. 198. And the action was brought against the feoffee, for deforcing or keeping out the original lessee, during the continuance of his term; and therein, as in the ejectment, the plaintiff should recover so much of the term as remained; and also should have actual damages for that portion of it whereof he had been unjustly deprived. 3 Comm. c. 11. p. 207.

After the introduction of fictitious ousters, whereby the title may be tried against any tenant in possession (by what means soever he acquired it), and the subsequent recovery of damages, by action of trespass for meane profits, this writ fell into disuse, and it was abolished by the 3 & 4 Wm. 4. c. 27. § 36. See Ejectment.

QUARE IMPEDIT.

A WRIT lying for him who hath purchased an advowson against a person who hinders or disturbs him in his right of advowson by presenting a clerk thereto when the church is void. F. N. B. 32; Stat. Westm. 2. c. 5.

It differs from the obsolete and recently abolished assize of darrein presentment (ultimæ presentationis), because that lay where a man or his ancestors, under whom he claimed, had formerly presented to the church; and this lies for him who is purchaser himself; but in the latter the plaintiff recovers the presentation and damages, as he also did in the former; in the writ of darrein presentment, &c. he recovered only the presentation, not the title to the advowson, as he did in a quare impedit; for which reason the remedy by that assize was discontinued. And where a man might have had assize of darrein presentment, he may have quare impedit. 2 Inst. 356. See Darrein Presentment.

A quare impedit is properly a possessory writ, which lies for the patron of an advowson to restore him to the possession of his advowson and to his right of presentation. At common law it only lay where the patron was hindered from presenting during the vacancy of the church, plenarty being in all cases a good plea. But now by the Statutes of Westminster 2, 13 Edw. 1. and 7 Ann. c. 18. it lies in every case of an usurpation, though the clerk is admitted and instituted, provided it be brought within six months. And if the patron suffers the six months to elapse, he may still, on the next avoidance, bring his writ of quare impedit. By this writ the patron may not only recover the possession of the advowson, but may remove the clerk who has been wrongfully presented, and have his own clerk admitted.

Upon the vacancy of a living, the patron is bound to present within six calendar months, otherwise it will lapse to the bishop. See Advowson, II. But if the presentation be made within that time, the bishop is bound to admit and institute the clerk, if found sufficient; unless the church be full, or there be notice of any litigation. For if any opposition be intended, it is usual for each party to enter a caveat with the bishop, to prevent his institution of his antagonist's clerk. An institution, after a caveat entered, is void by the ecclesiastical law; but this the temporal courts pay no regard to, and look upon a caveat as a mere nullity. But if two presentations be offered to the bishop upon the same avoidance, the church is then said to become litigious; and, if nothing farther be done, the bishop may suspend the admission of either, and suffer a lapse to occur. Yet, if the patron or clerk on either side request him to award a jus patronatus, he is bound to do it. This jus patronatus is a commission from the bishop, directed usually to his chancellor, and others of competent learning, who are to summon a jury of six clergymen and six laymen, to inquire into and examine who is the rightful patron (see tit. Jus Patronatus); and if, upon such inquiry made and certificate thereof returned by the commissioners, he admits and institutes the clerk of that patron whom they return as the true one, the bishop secures himself at all events from being a disturber, whatever proceedings may be had afterwards in the temporal courts. 3 Comm. c. 16.

The clerk refused by the bishop may also have a remedy against him in the spiritual court, denominated a duplex querela, which is a complaint in the nature of an appeal from the ordinary to his next immediate superior; as from a bishop to the archbishop, or from an archbishop to the delegates; and if the superior court adjudges the cause of refusal to be insufficient, it will grant institution to the appellant.

Thus far matters may go on in the mere ecclesiastical course; but in contested presentations they seldom go so far; for upon the first delay or refusal of the bishop to admit his clerk, the patron usually brings his writ of quare impedit against the bishop, for the temporal injury done to his property in disturbing him in his presentation. And if the delay arises from the bishop alone, as upon pretence of incapacity, or the like, then he only is named in the writ; but if there be another presentation set up, then the pretended patron and his clerk are also joined in the action; or it may be brought against the patron and clerk, leaving out the bishop; or against the patron only. But it is most advisable to bring it against all three; for if the bishop be left out, and the suit be not determined till the six months are past, the bishop is entitled to present by lapse, for he is not party to the suit; but if he be named, no lapse can possibly accrue till the right is determined. Cro. Jac. 93. If the patron be left out, and the writ be brought only against the bishop and the clerk, the suit is of no effect, and the writ shall abate; for the right of the patron is the principal question in the cause. Hob. 316; 7 Rep. 25. If the clerk be left out, and has received institution before the action brought (as is sometimes the case), the patron by this suit may recover his right of patronage, but not the present turn; for he cannot have judgment to remove the clerk, unless he be made a defendant and party to the suit, to hear what he can allege against it. For which reason it is the safer and now usual way to insert all three in the writ. See Hob. 320; Jenk. Cent. 200.

Quare impedit will not lie against the ordinary and incumbent, without naming the patron; because at common law the incumbent could not plead any thing which concerned the right of patronage, therefore it is unreasonable that he alone should be named in the writ who could not defend the patronage; but the 25 Edw. 3. st. 3. c. 7. enables him to plead against the king, and to defend his incumbency, although he claims nothing in the patronage; and by that statute he shall plead against any common person, though with this difference, that when the inheritance of the patron is to be divested by judgment in a quare impedit, there he must be named in the writ; but where the next presentation only is to be recovered, he need not be named; yet where the king presents without a title, and his clerk is inducted, the quare impedit is to be against the ordinary and incumbent, for it will not lie against the king; but if he is plaintiff, the writ may be brought against the patron alone, without naming the incumbent. 7 Rep. 25; Cro. Jac. 650; Palm. 306.

By the writ of quare impedit a patron may be relieved not only on his presentation to a church, but to a chapel, prebend, vicarage, &c. And this writ lies of a donative; and the special matter is to be set forth in the declaration. It also lieth for a deanery by the king, although it be elective; and for an archdeaconry; but not for a mere office of the church. Co. Lit. 344; 1 Leon. 205. And the chapter may have a quare impedit against the dean of their several possessions. 40 Edw. 3. 48.

If the quare impedit be for a donative, the writ shall be quare impedit to present to the donative; if of a parsonage, then quare impedit presentare ad ecclesiam; if to a vicarage, ad vicarium; if to a prebend, ad prebendam, &c. 3 Nels. Abr. 35.

The plaintiff in quare impedit must have had an immediate right of presentation, and not merely in reversion or remainder, for it is a possessory action.

If the right of nomination be in one, and the right of presentation in another, and either impede the other in his right, quare impedit lies. 3 T. R. 646.

If a bishop be disturbed to collate where he ought to make a collation, he may have a writ of quare impedit, and the writ shall be quod permittat ipsum presentare, &c. and he shall count on the collation; and if the king be disturbed in his collation by letters-patent, he shall have quare impedit, &c. New Nat. Br. 73.

Grantee of a next avoidance may bring this writ against the patron who granted the avoidance. 39 Hen. 6.

It may be brought by executors for a disturbance in testatoris; and executors, being disturbed in their presentation, may bring quare impedit as well as their testator might. Owen, 99; Lutw. 1.

Husband and wife jointly, or the husband alone, without his wife, may have the writ quare impedit; and if a man who hath an advowson in right of his wife, be disturbed in his presentation, and dies, the wife shall bring it on that disturbance. 14 Hen. 4; 5 Rep. 97.

The heir shall not have quare impedit for a disturbance tempore patris; nor can he have execution on a recovery by the ancestor. Br. Q. In. pl. 7. 9. But by the 13 Edw. 1. c. 5. usurpation of churches during wardship, particular estates of vacancy, &c. shall not bar an heir at full age, reversioner in possession, or a spiritual person in succession, from having writ possessory of quare impedit, &c. as the ancestor or predecessor might have had, if such usurpation had been in their time; and the same form of pleading was directed to be had in darrein presentment and quare impedit.

Where partition is made on record, to present by turns, the coparcener who is disturbed shall not be put to a quare impedit; but may have remedy on the roll by scire facias if it is otherwise on an agreement to present. See 13 Edw. 1. c. 5. § 5. and tit. Parceners.

In pleading a right in coparceners to present to an advowson by turns, it is good to state that the right arose because they did not agree to present, which is synonymous to say, if they could not agree. 1 H. Blackst. 376.

If three coparceners of an advowson do not agree to present on a vacancy, the eldest or her assigns may present to the first turn, and the second and third (or their assigns) to the next turns, according to the order of the birth of the coparceners. 1 H. Blackst. 412.

In quare impedit the defendant pleaded that one M. O. under whom he claimed, being seised in fee of one moiety of the advowson, and entitled to present to one turn in every two turns, presented one I. O. in her proper turn; that the church being afterwards vacant, one P. W. under whom the plaintiff claimed, presented in his proper turn; that the church being again vacant, the plaintiff presented, and that the church being a fourth time vacant, it belonged to the defendant to present. On demurrer to this plea, the court held that the defendant had not shown a title to present, since he had not shown whether the third presentation was by usurpation or by agreement, and that it could not be presumed that the defendant was entitled to present in the first and fourth turn, and the plaintiff in the second and third, since the plea averred that M. O. had presented to the first in her proper turn. And semble, that if it had appeared by the plea that the plaintiff had presented to the third turn by usurpation, he would still have been entitled to the fourth turn by right. Birch v. Lichfield, &c. Bp. 3 Bos. & Pull. 444.

Where a declaration alleged that the advowson had descended to the four copartners, and they not agreeing to present jointly on the first vacancy, the elder sister presented, and afterwards, on two subsequent vacancies, that A. and B. presented in right of the second and third sisters respectively, it was held that it was to be presumed that these presentations were by right, and not by usurpation, and therefore did not turn the estate of the coparceners to a mere right; and that quare impedit was maintainable by a grantee of the fourth coparcener; and it was not necessary for the plaintiff claiming to present in the fourth turn in right of the youngest sister, to show that the presentations in the turns of the other sisters were made by right. 10 B. & C. 584. S. C.; 5 Bing. 171.

Where the founder of a chapel of ease in the township of A. endowed it with lands for the maintenance of a chaplain, and by his will directed that his son should during his life have the nomination and election of the minister, and might by will or deed set down the order or course for the nomination and election of the minister after his death; and in default thereof, then directed that the minister should be nominated and elected "by all the householders or heads of families in the township, and the heirs male of the founder's body, and such other of his kindred or blood as should have any land in the township, or the greater number of them;" and the son not having set down any order or course for the nomination and election of a minister: held, in quare impedit, that the declaration, which averred a nomination and election of a minister by the plaintiffs, "being the greater number of the householders and the heads of families in the township, to whom the nomination and election of the minister then belonged," was ill, even after verdict, for not showing that "the heirs male of the founder's body, and not of his kindred or blood as had lands in the township," concurred in the nomination, or that they were in the minority, or that there were no such persons in existence. Tamworth v. Chester (Bp.), 7 D. & R. 96; 4 B. & C. 555.

If tenant in tail suffer an usurpation, and die, and six months pass, the issue in tail cannot bring quare impedit; but at the next avoidance he may have it within the six months. 40 Assize, 4.

As this writ is all in the possession, the presentment of a grantee of the next avoidance is a good title for the grantor and patron in fee to bring it; and likewise for his heir and other grantees. 9 Hen. 7. c. 23; 5 Rep. 97.

The king cannot remove an incumbent presented, instituted, and inducted, although on an usurpation, but by quare impedit in a judicial way. Cro. Jac. 385. See Advowson, III.

Immediately on the suing out of the quare impedit, if the plaintiff suspects that the bishop will admit the defendant's or any other clerk, pending the suit, he may have a prohibitory writ, called a ne admittas; which recites the contention begun in the king's courts, and forbids the bishop to admit any clerk whatsoever till such contention be determined. See Ne admittas.

In the proceedings upon a quare impedit, the plaintiff must set out his title at length, and prove at least one presentation in himself, his ancestors, or those under whom he claims (except in case of a church created by himself, see post), for he must recover by the strength of his own right, and not by the weakness of the defendants. Vaugh. 7, 8, 5 Bligh, N. S. 126. And he must also show a disturbance before the action brought. Hob. 199. Upon this the bishop and the clerk usually disclaim all title, save only the one as ordinary, to whom is left to defend his own right. And upon failure of the plaintiff in making out his own title, the defendant is put upon the proof of his, in order to obtain judgment for himself on the trial. But if the right be found for the plaintiff, if the church be full, and if full, then of whose presentation; if it be of the defendant's presentation, then the clerk is removable by writ brought in due time: secondly, of what value the living is; and this in order to assess the damages which are directed to be given by the statute of West. 2. 13 Edm. 1. c. 5, see post: thirdly, in case of plenarty upon an usurpation, whether six calendar months have passed between the avoidance and the time of bringing the action; for then it would not be within the statute, which permits an usurpation to be divested by a quare impedit, brought infra tempus semestris. So that plenarty is still a sufficient bar in an action of quare impedit, brought above six months after the vacancy happens, as it was universally by the common law, however early the action was commenced. 2 Inst. 361; 3 Comm. c. 16. See Advowson, III.

In the declaration of the plaintiff it is not sufficient for him to allege that he or such a person from whom he claims, were seised of the advowson of the church, but he must allege a presentation made by one of them; for if he doth not, the defendant may demur to the declaration; and the reason is, that the plaintiff, by joining the last presentation to his own title, is to make it appear that he hath a right to present now as well as then. Cro. Eliz. 518; 5 Rep. 97; Vaugh. 57. But the want of such allegation may be cured by verdict. 2 Stra. 1006. See 3 B. & P. 444.

And if a man, by the king's licence, creates a church which shall be presentable, if he be disturbed to present to it, he may have a quare impedit without alleging a presentation in any person; but anciently it was held he might not, because he could not allege a presentation. 20 Edm. 4. 14; Mallory's Quare Impedit, 153.

The only plea the bishop hath by the common law on a quare impedit is, that he claimeth nothing but as ordinary; he could not counterplead the patron's title, or any thing to the right of patronage, nor could the incumbent counterplead such title, till the 25 Edm. 3. st. 3. c. 7. by which both bishop and incumbent may counterplead the title of the patron; the one, when he collates, by lapse, or makes title himself to the patronage; the other, being persona impersonata, may plead his patron's title, and counterplead the title of the plaintiff. And it has been adjudged, that an incumbent cannot plead to the title of the patronage, without showing that he is persona impersonata on the presentation of the patron. W. Jonas, 4; March. 159. And in a recent case it was held that the bishop cannot counterplead or dispute the patron's title before he has collated. 9 Bing. 681, S. C.; 3 Moore & S. 102.

Several were plaintiffs in a quare impedit, the defendant pleaded the release of one of them pending the writ; and it was resolved that this release shall only bar him who made it, and that the writ shall stand good for the rest. 5 Rep. 97.

In all *quare impedit*s a defendant may traverse the presentation alleged by the plaintiff; if the matter of fact will bear it; but the defendant must not deny the presentation alleged, where there was a presentation. Vaugh. 16, 17. And if a presentation is alleged in the grantor and grantee, the presentation in the grantor is only traversable, for that is the principal. Cro. Eliz. 518.

Quare impedit was brought against two, one of them cast an essoign, and idem dies datus est to the other, &c. Then an attachment issued against them for not appearing at the day, and process continued to the grand cape, which being returned, and the parties not appearing, it was ruled that final judgment should be entered according to the 52 Hen. 3. c. 12. But on motion to discharge this rule, because the defendants were not summoned either on the attachment or grand distress, the summoners being only the feigned names of John Doe and Richard Roe, the judgment was set aside, for the design of the statute was to have process duly executed, and that must be with notice, &c. And where the right is for ever concluded, this being so fatal, the process must never be suffered to be a thing of course. 1 Mod. 248.

Where two defendants in a quare impedit plead several bars, and one of them is found against the plaintiff, and the other with him; he shall not have his writ to the bishop. And if there are many defendants pleading several pleas, the plaintiff shall not have judgment before all the pleas are tried; for though some be for the plaintiff, others may be found against him, and he cannot have judgment without a good title. F. N. B. 30; Hob. 70.

If it be found that the plaintiff hath the right, and hath commenced his action in due time, then he shall have judgment to recover the presentation; and if the church be full by institution of any clerk, to remove him, unless it were filled pendente lite, by lapse to the ordinary, he not being party to the suit; in which case the plaintiff loses his presentation pro hęc vice, but shall recover two years full value of the church from the defendant, the pretended patron, as a satisfaction for the turn lost by his disturbance; or in case of insolvency, the defendant shall be imprisoned for two years; and in other cases half a year's value, and half a year's imprisonment. Stat. Westm. 2. 13 Edm. 1. c. 5. § 3. But if the church remains still void at the end of the suit, then which ever party the presentation is found to belong to, whether plaintiff or defendant, shall have a writ directed to the bishop ad admittendum clericum, reciting the judgment of the court, and ordering him to admit and institute the clerk of the prevailing party; and if upon this order he does not admit him, the patron may sue the bishop in a writ of quare non admittit, and recover ample satisfaction in damages. F. N. B. 38, 47; 1 Mod. 254; 3 Comm. c. 18. See Quare non admittit.

In a quare impedit, though it was found that the church was full of another, who was a stranger to the writ, and it did not appear whether he came in by a better title than that which was found for the plaintiff; it was held that the plaintiff might have a general writ to the bishop, which he is bound by law to execute, or shall be amerced, &c. and he cannot return that the church is full of another; for no issue can be joined between the bishop and the plaintiff, because he has no day in court. 6 Rep. 51; 3 Leon. 136. See ante and post.

But where the plaintiff recovered an advowson in ejectment, and thereupon had a writ to the bishop, there being another incumbent in the church, who was not a party to the action; adjudged, that this writ would not lie without a scire facias to the incumbent. Sid. 93.

If it appears in quare impedit, either in pleading or by confession of the parties, that neither of them have a title, but that it is in the king, the court may award a writ to the bishop for the king to remove the incumbent, and admit idoneam personam ad presentationem regis; but this must be when his title is very plain. Hob. 126, 163; 1 Leon. 323.

In quare impedit the plaintiff and defendant are both actors; so that the defendant may have a writ to the bishop, as well as the plaintiff; but not without a title appearing to the court; wherefore if the defendant never appears, the plaintiff must make out a title for form sake, and so must the defendant, if the plaintiff be nonsuited. Hob. 163.

If the plaintiff, after appearance in a quare impedit, be nonsuited, it is peremptory, because the defendant on title made, whereby he becomes actor, shall have a writ to the bishop; and it is the same in case of a discontinuance. 7 Rep. 27.

It is the nature of a quare impedit to be final, either on a discontinuance or nonsuit; and a man cannot have two suits for the same thing in this case against one person, though he may have several *quare impedit*s against several persons. 7 Rep. 27; Hob. 137.

The parson, patron, and ordinary are sued; the ordinary disclaims, and the parson loseth by default, the plaintiff shall have judgment to recover his presentation, and a writ shall issue to the bishop, &c. with a cesset executio, until the plea is determined between the plaintiff and patron. Vaugh. 6.

In a quare impedit against the archbishop, the bishop, and three defendants; the archbishop pleaded that he claimed nothing but as metropolitan, and the bishop pleaded that he claimed nothing but as ordinary, and the defendants made title; but there was a verdict against them; it was a question whether the writ of execution should be awarded to the archbishop or the bishop; and it was held that where neither of them are parties in interest, it may be directed to either; but if the bishop is party in interest, it must be directed to the archbishop. 6 Rep. 48; 3 Bulst. 174. And if the Archbishop of Canterbury be plaintiff in a quare impedit, the writ must be directed to the Archbishop of York. Shom. 329.

If a defendant pleads ne disturba (that he did not disturb), which is, in effect, the general issue in a quare impedit, this will be only a defence of the wrong with which he stands charged, and is so far from controverting the plaintiff's title, that the plea, as it were, confesses it; and the plaintiff may presently pray a writ to the bishop, or maintain the disturbance in order to recover damages. Hob. 163.

There must be a disturbance to maintain this action. In a quare impedit, the patron declared on a disturbance of him to present 1st November; the incumbent pleaded, that 1st May next after, the presentation devolved on the queen by lapse, and she presented him to the church, &c. And on demurrer the plea was held ill, because the defendant had not confessed and avoided, nor traversed the disturbance set forth in the declaration; and though by the demurrer the queen's title was confessed, it appearing that it was already executed, and the defendant having lost his incumbency by ill pleading, the writ shall not be awarded to the bishop for the queen to present again, but for the patron. 1 Leon. 194.

The courts at Westminster are very cautious not to abate the writ of quare impedit for any want of form, &c. yet if the bishop against whom the writ is brought, or any of the defendants are misnamed, it is good cause of abatement; if the patron be not named in the writ, it may be pleaded in abatement; though death of the patron, pending the writ, doth not abate it if the quare impedit is brought against the bishop, patron, and incumbent; and if the incumbent dies pending the writ, and a disturber present again, and dies, quare impedit would lie on the first disturbance by journey accounts; but the first writ is abated by the plaintiff's death, also if the plaintiff bring a new writ within fifteen days after the abatement, that shall be a continuance of the first writ, and prevent the defendant taking any advantage; but if the writ abate for any fault in the declaration, the defendant shall have a writ to the bishop to admit his clerk; so if judgment is given on demurrer, &c. Cro. Eliz. 324; Cro. Car. 651; 7 Rep. 57; Dyer, 240.

In a plea of quare impedit, days are given from fifteen to sixteen, or from three weeks to three weeks, according to the distance of place; and if the disturber come not in on the great distress, a writ is to be sent to the bishop, that he claim not to the prejudice of the plaintiff for that time; and on recovery, judgment is to be given to the party to recover the presentation and advowson. 52 Hen. 3. c. 12; 2 Roll. Abr. 377.

Though damages are given by stat. West. 2. c. 5. they shall not be had against the bishop where he claims nothing but as ordinary, and is no disturber. 3 Leo. 59. Before this statute, no damages were allowed on a quare impedit, and the king hath none at this day; for although he declares ad damnum, &c. he is not within that statute, because by his prerogative he cannot lose his presentation. 6 Rep. 52. If the plaintiff hath a verdict, and the church is found vacant, the patron may have the fruits of his presentation, and so not be entitled to damages; in which case a remitter de damnis is entered. 3 Leo. 59.

The points to be inquired of, where the jury find for the plaintiff, &c. are, of whom and on whose presentation the church is full; how long since it was void; the yearly value of the church, &c., which being found, damages are to be given accordingly. 6 Rep. 51. See ante.

No costs were recoverable in quare impedit, because of the great damages given by the statute of West. 2. c. 5. until the passing of the recent act of the 4 & 5 Wm. 4. c. 39. By this statute it is enacted, that in all actions of quare impedit brought hereafter in England, Wales, or Ireland, where a verdict shall pass for the plaintiff in any such action, in addition to the damages to which he is by law now entitled, he shall also have judgment to recover his full costs against the defendant therein, to be assessed and levied in such manner as costs in personal actions are by law assessed and levied; and where in any such action the plaintiff shall discontinue or be nonsuited, or a verdict shall be had against him, that then the defendant shall have judgment to recover his full costs and charges against the plaintiff, to be assessed and levied in manner aforesaid.

The act contains an important proviso, declaring that no judgment for costs shall be had against any archbishop, bishop, or other ecclesiastical patron or incumbent, if the judge who shall try the cause, or if there shall be no trial by a jury, the court in which judgment shall be given, shall certify that such archbishop, &c. had probable cause for defending such action; but in no case where the defence to any such action shall be grounded upon a presentation or presentations, collation or collations, previously made to any benefice, shall such presentation, &c. be deemed probable cause for defending such action.

Where judgment is given to have a writ to the bishop in quare impedit, it shall not be reversed on writ of error brought on the whole judgment, though the judgment by the statute for damages be erroneous and reversed. 5 Rep. 58, 59.

Where one recovers in a quare impedit against an incumbent, the incumbent is so removed by judgment, that the recoverer may present without any thing farther; but the incumbent continues incumbent de facto, till such presentation is made; and if the plaintiff in this suit be instituted on a writ to the bishop, the defendant cannot appeal; if he doth, a prohibition lies, because in this case the bishop acts as the king's ministers, not as a judge. 2 Roll. Abr. 265; 1 Roll. Rep. 62.

In a writ of quare impedit, as was also the case in the assize of darrein presentment, and writ of right of advowson, now both abolished (see Writ of Right), the patron only, and not the clerk, is allowed to sue the disturber. But by virtue of several acts of parliament, there is one species of presentation which a remedy to be sued in the temporal courts is put into the hands of the clerks presented, as well as of the owners of the advowson, viz. the presentation to such benefices as belong to Roman Catholic patrons, which, according to their several counties are vested in and secured to the two universities of this kingdom. See 3 Jac. 1. c. 5; 1 W. & M. 12 Ann. 2. c. 14; 11 Geo. 2. c. 17. By the proceedings provided, viz. that besides the writs of quare impedit, which the universities as patrons are entitled to bring, they or their clerks may be at liberty to file a bill in equity against any person presenting to such living and disturbing their right of patronage, or his cestui que trust, or any other person whom they have cause to suspect, in order to compel a discovery of any secret trusts, for the benefit of Papists, in violation of those laws whereby this right of advowson is vested in those learned bodies; and also (by 11 Geo. 2. c. 17.) to compel a discovery whether any grant or conveyance said to be made of such advowson, were made bond fide to a purchaser for the benefit of Protestants, and for a full consideration, without which requisites every such grant and conveyance of any advowson or avoidance is absolutely null and void. This is a particular law, and calculated for a particular purpose; but in no instance, except this, does the common law permit the clerk himself to interfere in recovering a presentation of which he is afterwards to have the advantage. For besides that, he has no temporal right in him till after institution and induction, this exclusion of the clerk from being plaintiff seems also to arise from the very great honour and regard which the law pays to his sacred function. See 3 Comm. c. 16.

The writ of quare impedit must be brought in the Common Pleas, unless the king is plaintiff, who may choose his own court. F. N. B. 33, E.; 11 Rep. 68, b.

It must also be brought in the county where the church is. It commands the disturbers, the bishop, the pseudo-patron, and his clerk, to permit the plaintiff to present a proper person (without specifying the particular clerk) to such a vacant church, which pertains to his patronage; and which the defendants, as he alleges, do obstruct; and unless they so do, then that they appear in court to show the reason why they hinder him. F. N. B. 32.

The process in quare impedit is summons, attachment, and, at common law, distress infinite; but by the Statute of Marlbridge, c. 12. if the defendant makes default at the return of the distringas, the plaintiff may have judgment and a writ to the bishop.

There was no limitation with regard to time within which quare impedit (or any other action touching advowsons) was to be brought; at least none later than the times of Richard I. and Henry III. until the recent statute of the 3 & 4 Wm. 4. c. 27. For the period within which quare impedit (which is one of the few exceptions to the real actions abolished by the above statute) may now be brought under the provisions of that act, see Limitation of Actions, II. See further, Advowson; Juris Utrum, &c.

QUARE INCUMBRAVIT. A writ which lieth against the bishop who within six months after the vacation of a benefice confers it on his clerk, whilst two others are contending at law for the right of presentation, to show why he hath encumbered the church. Reg. Orig. 32.

Or, it is a writ brought after a recovery in quare impedit, (and formerly also in assize of darrein presentment) against the bishop, who thus admits a clerk, notwithstanding the writ ne admittas served on him. See Ne Admittas, Quare Impedit.

If a man had a writ of right of advowson depending between him and another, and the church was void pendent the writ, the plaintiff should not have a quare incumbavit or ne admittas, although the bishop incumbered the church; because the plaintiff should not recover the presentation on this writ, but the advowson; where he hath title to present, he may do it, and have quare impedit if he be disturbed. New Nat. Brev. 108, 109.

This writ may be brought after the six months; and if a plaintiff be nonsuit in a quare incumbavit, he may have another writ, and vary from his first declaration, &c. F. N. B. 48.

After a ne admittas delivered, if the six months pass, the bishop may present his clerk for lapse, and shall not be charged by the writ of quare incumbavit for the presentation; but he cannot admit the clerk of the other man, for that would be against the writ ne admittas delivered to him. F. N. B. 48. But to prevent this he is usually made a defendant in the quare impedit.

If the bishop incumber the church, where there is no dispute about it, yet this writ quare incumbavit lies; but according to the best opinions there ought to be a suit depending, though there is no actual recovery. 18 Edw. 3. 17. Fitz. Quare Impedit, 3.

QUARE INTRUSIT, matrimonio non satisfacto, a writ that lay anciently where the lord proffered convenable marriage to his ward, and he refused, and entered into the land and married himself to another; that is intruded; the value of his marriage not being satisfied to the lord. This is put an end to by the effect of 12 Car. 2. c. 24.

QUARE NON ADMITIT, a writ which lies against a bishop where a man hath recovered his presentation in quare impedit, and the bishop refuses to admit his clerk, on pretence of lapse, &c. See Quare Impedit.

It is requisite in the writ to mention the recovery, and it is to be brought in the county where the refusal was. F. N. B. 47; 7 Rep.; Dyer, 40.

In a quare non admit the plaintiff shall recover damages; and if the plaintiff have judgment in a quare impedit, and a writ is awarded to the bishop; if on this writ the bishop makes a false return, the plaintiff may have quare non admittit against him, and have his damages. Dyer, 260.

King Edward I. presented his clerk to a benefice in Yorkshire, and the archbishop of that province refused to admit him; on which the king brought a quare non admittit, and the archbishop pleaded that the pope had a long time before provided for that church, as one having supreme authority; in that case, therefore, he could not admit the king's clerk: it was adjudged that for his contempt to execute the king's writ the archbishopric should be seized, &c. 5 Rep. 12. See Præmunire.

If the bishop refuse the king's presentee, and afterwards admit him, yet the king shall have quare non admittit for the refusal; and so it is presumed may a common person. New Nat. Brev. 106.

QUARE NON PERMITTIT, an ancient writ which lay for one who had a right to present to a church for a turn against the proprietary. Fleta, lib. 5. c. 6.

QUARE OBSTRUXIT. A writ which lay for him who having a liberty to pass through his neighbour's ground, could not enjoy his right, because the owner had so obstructed it. Fleta, lib. 4. c. 26.

QUARREL, querela; à querendo.] Extends not only to actions personal, but also to mixed; and the plaintiff in them is called querens, and in most of the writs it is said queritur, so that if a man release all quarrels (a man's deed being taken most strongly against himself), yet it is as beneficial as all actions, for by it all actions real and personal are released. 8 Co. 153; 1 Inst. c. 8. § 5, 11. See Release.

QUARRELLING IN CHURCH OR CHURCHYARD. All affrays in a church or churchyard are esteemed very heinous offences, as being indignities to Him to whose service those places are consecrated; therefore mere quarrelsome words, which are neither an affray nor an offence in any other place, are penal here. For it is enacted by the 5 & 6 Edw. 6. c. 4. that if any person shall, by words only, quarrel, chide, or brawl in a church or churchyard, the ordinary shall suspend him, if a layman, ab ingressu ecclesiæ; and if a clerk in orders, from the ministration of his office during pleasure.

The statute also enacted, that if any person in such church or churchyard proceeded to smite or lay violent hands on another, he should be excommunicated ipso facto; or if he struck him with a weapon, or drew any weapon with intent to strike, he should, besides excommunication (being convicted by a jury), have one of his ears cut off, or having no ears, be branded with the letter F. in his cheek. But this portion of the act was repealed by the 9 Geo. 4. c. 31.

QUARTERISARI. To be quartered, or cut into four quarters, in execution. Artic. Richardi Scrope Archiep. Ebor. apud Angl. Sacr. par. 2. 266. Quarterization is part of the punishment and execution of a traitor, by dividing his body into four quarters. See Treason.

QUARTER SEAL. The seal kept by the director of the Chancery in Scotland. It is in the shape and impression of the fourth part of the great seal, and is in the Scotch statutes called the Testimonial of the Great Seal. Gifts of lands from the crown pass this seal in certain cases. Bell's Scotch Dict.

QUARTER SESSIONS. See Sessions of the Peace.

QUARTO DIE POST. The fourth day inclusive after the return of the writ; and if the defendant made his appearance on this day, it was sufficient. The practice with regard to the return of writs is now altered. See Essoign Day of the Term.

QUASH, quassare; French quasser; Latin casum facere.] To overthrow or annul. Bracton, lib. 5. tract. 2. c. 3. nu. 4. If the bailiff of a liberty return any out of his franchise, the array shall be quashed. An array returned by one who hath no franchise shall be quashed. 1 Inst. 156.

The court of B. R. hath power to quash orders of sessions, presentments, indictments, &c. Though this quashing is by favour of the court, and the court may leave the party to take advantage of the insufficiency by pleading, as they generally do where an indictment is for an offence very prejudicial to the commonwealth, as for perjury, &c. 2 Lit. Abr. 410. See further, titles Indictment, Information, &c.

QUASI CONTRACT. An implied contract. See Assumpsit.

QUAY. See Key.

QUEEN, Lat. Regina; Sax. Cwen, i. e. Uxor, a wife; propter excellentiam, the wife of the king.] The queen of England is either queen regent, queen consort, or queen dowager. The queen regent, regnant, or sovereign, is she who holds the crown in her own right; as the first (and perhaps the second) Queen Mary, Queen Elizabeth, and Queen Anne; and such a one has the same powers, prerogatives, rights, dignities, and duties, as if she had been a king. This is expressly declared by 1 Mar. st. 3. c. 1. See further, title King. But the queen consort is the wife of the reigning king; and she, by virtue of her marriage, is participant of divers prerogatives above other women. Finch. L. 86.

She is a public person, exempt and distinct from the king; and not, like other married women, so closely connected as to have lost all legal or separate existence, so long as the marriage continues. For the queen is of ability to purchase lands, and to convey them, to make leases, to grant copyholds, and to do other acts of ownership, without the concurrence of her lord, which no other married woman can do. 4 Rep. 25. She is also capable of taking a grant from the king, which no other wife is from her husband. The queen of England hath separate courts and officers, distinct from the king's not only in matters of ceremony, but even of law. and her attorney and solicitor-general are entitled to a place within the bar of his majesty's courts, together with the king's counsel. See Precedence. She may likewise sue and be sued alone, without joining her husband. She may also have a separate property in goods as well as lands, and has a right to dispose of them by will. In short, she is in all legal proceedings looked upon as a feme sole, and not as a feme covert; as a single, not as a married woman. Finch. L. 86; Co. Lit. 133. For which the reason given is this; because the wisdom of the common law would not have the king (whose continual care and study is for the public, and circa ardua regni) to be troubled and disquieted on account of his wife's domestic affairs, and therefore it vests in the queen a power of transacting her own concerns, without the intervention of the king, as if she was an unmarried woman. 1 Comm. c. 3.

The queen consort is of ability, without the king, to purchase, grant, and make leases; and may sue and be sued alone, in her own name only, by præcipe, not by petition. She may have in herself the possession of personal things during her life, &c. But both her real and personal estate goes to the king after her death, if she doth not in her lifetime dispose of them, or devise them by will. Co. Lit. 3, 31, 133; Finch. 86; 1 Roll. Abr. 912.

By an ancient act, not printed in the common edition of the statutes, but inserted in the statutes of the realm, printed by authority, 32 Hen. 8. c. 51. the kings of this realm are empowered to settle lands in jointure on their queens, who are enabled to accept the same and dispose of the profits thereof. And by the same act it is declared that every queen consort shall be deemed a feme sole, and may sue and be sued accordingly, without the intervention of the king; and that all leases, gifts, &c. by or to the queen shall be valid during her life, &c. In the same edition of the statutes is contained an act, 1 Hen. 8. c. 18. by § 2. of which the then Queen Katherine was declared to have like capacity as if she had been born within this realm.

By 39 & 40 Geo. 3. c. 88. § 8. 9. it is expressly enacted, that the queen consort for the time being may during the joint lives of the king and of such queen consort, by deed or will, dispose of estates purchased by or in trust for her, or vested in her: and also bequeath all her chattels and personal estate as if she were sole: with the exception of places, &c. vested in her only for life.

Acts of parliament relating to her need not be pleaded; for the court must take notice of them, because she is a public person. 8 Rep. 28.

If a tenant of the queen aliens a part of his tenancy to one, and another part to another, the queen may distrain in any one part for the whole, as the king may do. Wood's Inst. 32. And in a quare impedit brought by the queen, some say that plurality is no plea; but see 2 Inst. 361.

By 2 Geo. 2. c. 27. the queen was constituted regent of the kingdom, during the king's absence abroad; to be capable of the office, without taking the oaths, or doing any act required by law to qualify any other.—As to the powers of the queen consort during the regency established by 51 Geo. 3. c. 1. see title King.

The queen hath also many exemptions and minute prerogatives. For instance: she pays no toll; Co. Litt. 133; nor is she liable to any amercement in any court. Black L. 187. But in general, unless where the law has expressly declared her exempted, she is upon the same footing with other subjects, being to all intents and purposes the king's subject, and not his equal.

The queen hath also some pecuniary advantages, which heretofore formed her a distinct revenue, as in the first place, she is entitled to an ancient perquisite called queen's gold (aurum reginae): which is a royal revenue, belonging to every queen consort during her marriage with the king, and due from every person who hath made a voluntary offering or fine to the king, amounting to ten marks or upwards, for, and in consideration of any privileges, grants, licences, pardons, or other matter of royal favour conferred upon him by the king: and it is due in the proportion of one-tenth part more, over and above the entire oil ring or fine made to the king; and becomes an actual debt of record to the queen's majesty by the mere recording of the fine. Pryn. Aur. Reg. 2. As if an hundred marks of silver be given to the king for liberty to take in mortmain, or to have a fair, market, park, chase, or free-warren; there the queen is entitled to ten marks in silver, or (what was formerly an equivalent denomination) to one mark in gold, by the name of queen's gold, or aurum reginae. 12 Rep. 21; 4 Inst. 358. But no such payment is due for any aids or subsidies granted to the king in parliament or convocation; nor for fines imposed by courts on offenders, against their will; nor for voluntary presents to the king; without any consideration moving from him to the subject; nor for any sale or contract whereby the present revenues or possessions of the crown are granted away or diminished. Pryn. 6.

The original revenue of our ancient queens, before and soon after the conquest, seems to have consisted in certain reservations or rents out of the demesne lands of the crown, which were expressly appropriated to her majesty, distinct from the king. It is frequent in Domesday-book, after specifying the rent due to the crown, to add likewise the quantity of gold or other renders reserved to the queen. These were frequently appropriated to particular purposes; to buy wool for her majesty's use, to purchase oil for her lamps, or to furnish her attire from head to foot, which was then only very costly, as one single robe in the fifth year of Henry II. stood the city of London in upwards of fourscore pounds. And, for a further addition to her income, this duty of queen's gold is supposed to have been originally granted; those matters of grace and favour, out of which it arose, being frequently obtained from the crown by the powerful intercession of the queen. There are traces of its payment, though obscure ones, in the book of Domesday and in the great pipe roll of Henry I. In the reign of Henry II. the manner of collecting it appears to have been well understood; and it forms a distinct head in the ancient dialogue of the exchequer written in the time of that prince, and usually attributed to Gervase of Tilbury. From that time downwards it was regulated, claimed, and enjoyed by all the queen consorts of England till the death of Henry VIII.; though after the accession of the Tudor family, the collecting of it seems to have been much neglected. And there being no queen consort afterwards till the accession of James I., a period of near sixty years, its very nature and quantity then became a matter of doubt; and, being referred by the king to the chief justices and chief baron, their report of it was so very unfavourable, that his consort, Queen Ann, (though she claimed it) yet never thought proper to exact it. In 1635, 11 Car. 1, a time fertile of expedients for raising money upon dormant precedents in our old records, the king, at the petition of his queen, Henrietta Maria, issued out his writ for levying it; but afterwards purchased it of his consort at the price of 10,000*l.*, finding it, perhaps, too trifling and troublesome to levy. 19 Rym. Fed. 721. And when afterwards, at the restoration, by the abolition of the military tenures, and the fines that were consequent upon them, the little that legally remained of this revenue was reduced to almost nothing at all, in vain did Mr. Prynne, by a treatise which does honour to his abilities as an antiquary, endeavour to excite Queen Catherine to revive this claim.

Another ancient perquisite belonging to the queen consort, mentioned by all our old writers, and therefore only worthy notice, is this; that on the taking of a whale on the coasts, which is a royal fish, it shall be divided between the king and queen; the head only being the king's property, and the tail of it the queen's. The reason of this whimsical division, as assigned by our ancient records, was to furnish the queen's wardrobe with whalebone. Bracton. l. 3. c. 3: Britton. c. 17; Flet. l. 1. c. 45 & 46; Pryn. Aur. Reg. 127. It is remarked by Mr. Christian, that the reason is more whimsical than the division, as the whalebone lies entirely in the head, which is the king's property.

The revenue of our queens, after the death of the king, is settled from time to time by statute. By the 1 & 2 Wm. 4. c. 11. his majesty is empowered, by indenture or letters patent under the great seal, to grant to her majesty an annuity of 100,000*l.* per annum, to take effect from the decease of his majesty, and continue for life, payable out of the consolidated fund, at the receipt of the Exchequer, free from all taxes or public charges. By § 3. his majesty is empowered to grant Marlborough House, St. James's, and the office of keeper of Bushy Park with the office of housekeeper, and custody of the capital manor of Hampton Court to her majesty for life; and so to her executors, administrators, and assigns for one year after her decease. And see King, V. 2.

Though the queen is in all respects a subject, yet, in point of the security of her life and person, she is put on the same footing with the king. It is equally treason (by the 25 Edw. 3.) to compass or imagine the death of our lady, the king's companion, as of the king himself: and to violate, or defile the queen consort, amounts to the same high crime, as well in the person committing the fact, as in the queen herself, if consenting. If, however, the queen be accused of any species of treason, she shall (whether consort or dowager) be tried by the peers of parliament, as Queen Ann Boleyn was in 28 Hen. VIII.

The husband of a queen regnant, as Prince George of Denmark was to Queen Anne, is her subject, and may be guilty of high treason against her; but, in the instance of conjugal infidelity, he is not subjected to the same penal restrictions. See further, King.

QUEEN DOWAGER. Is the widow of the king, and as such enjoys most of the privileges belonging to her as queen consort. But it is not high treason to conspire her death, or to violate her chastity, because the succession of the crown is not thereby endangered. Yet still, pro dignitate regali, no man can marry a queen dowager without special licence from the king, on pain of forfeiting his lands and goods. This, Coke says, was enacted in parliament in 6 Hen. 6, though the statute be not in print. See 2 Inst. 18; 4 Inst. 51. In Riley's Plac. Parl. 672, the bill, with the royal assent indorsed, is printed; and in Cotton's Abridgment it is cited as nu. 27, of that year. It is not contained in the printed parliament rolls. The queen dowager, though an alien born, shall still be entitled to dower after the king's demise, which no other alien is. Co. Lit. 31. A queen dowager, when married again to a subject, doth not lose her real dignity, as peeresses dowager do their peerage when they marry commoners. For Catherine, queen dowager of Henry V., though she married a private gentleman, Owen ap Meredith ap Theodore, commonly called Owen Tudor, yet by the name of Catherine, Queen of England, maintained an action against the bishop of Carlisle: and so the queen dowager of Navarre, marrying with Edmond, Earl of Lancaster, brother to King Edward I., maintained an action of dower after the death of her second husband, by the name of Queen of Navarre. 2 Inst. 50.

QUEEN ANNE'S BOUNTY. See First Fruits.

QUEEN GOLD, aurum reginae. See Queen.

QUE ESTATE, which estate.] A plea where a man entitling another to land, &c. saith that the same estate such other had he has from him. As, for example, in a quare impedit, the plaintiff alleges that two persons were seised of lands, whereunto the advowson in question was appendant in fee, and did present to the church, and afterwards the church was void, which estate of the two persons he hath now, by virtue wherof he presented, &c. Broke, 175; Co. Lit. 121.

A man cannot plead a que estate in an estate tail, nor can it be pleaded in estates for life, or for years; a que estate of a term may not be pleaded, by reason a term cannot be gained by disseisin, as a fee may; but one may plead a que estate in a term in another person, under whom he doth not claim, and be good; for he is not privy to the estate of the stranger, to know his title. 1 Rep. 46; 1 Lev. 190; 3 Lev. 19; Lutw. 81.

A thing which lies in grant, cannot be claimed by a que estate, directed by itself; yet it may be claimed as appurtenant to a manor, by que estate in the manor. 1 Mod. 232.

A man may not prescribe by a que estate of a rent, advowson, or toll; but he may of a manor, &c. to which these are appendant. 2 Mod. 144; 3 Mod. 82.

A person cannot plead a que estate without showing the deed how he came by it. Cro. Jac. 673. This in case of a rent in gross, or lands, which cannot pass from one man to another without deed. Jenk. Cent. 26. See Prescription.

QUE EST EADEM,

QUE EST LE MESME, } See Quæ est eadem, &c.

QUEM REDDITUM REDDIT. A judicial writ which lay (for him to whom a rent-charge or rent-charge was granted, by fine levied in the king's court,) against the tenant of the land who refused to attorn to him, thereby to cause him to attorn, and pay the rent which he rendereth. Old Nat. Brev. 126; West. Symbol. par. 2, tit. Fines, § 156; Termes de la ley.

Before the statutes 4 & 5 Anne. c. 16. and 11 Geo. 2. c. 19, which have rendered attornment both unnecessary and inoperative, (see Butler's note to Co. Lit. 309, a (1).) there were several writs to compel attornment in certain cases. These were the writs of per quæ servitia, quem redditum reddit, quid juris clamat. The first lay for the conusee in a fine to whom a lord had granted a seignory, the second for the grantee by fine of a rent, to compel the tenant of the land, out of which the rent issues, to attorn, and the third for the grantee by fine of a reversion or remainder, to enforce the attornment of the tenant for life. Even before the statutes which have taken away attornment, the writs were obsolete in cases where fines were levied to uses, when it was held, that the conusees might bring actions, and distrain without attornment. Roscoe on Real Actions, 145.

QUERELA. An action preferred in any court of justice, in which the plaintiff was querens or complainant; and his brief complaint or declaration was called querela, whence our quarrel against any person.

Quiescit esse à querelis, was to be exempted from the customary fees paid to the king or lord of a court, for the purchase of liberty to prefer such an action. But more usually to be exempted from fines and amercements imposed for common trespasses and faults. Paroch. Antiquit. 123. See Kennel's Glossary; and ante, tit. Quarrel.

QUERELA, CORAM REGE ET CONSILIO DISCUTIENDA ET TERMINANDA. A writ whereby one is called to justify complaint of trespass made to the king himself, before the king and council. Reg. Orig. 124.

QUERELA FRESCÆ TORTIÆ. See Fresh Force.

QUEST, quæst.] Inquest, inquisition or inquiry on the oaths of an impanelled jury. Cowell. See Inquest.

QUESTION, or Torture. See Mute.

QUESTMEN. See Churchwardens.

QUESTUS EST NOBIS, Hath complained to us.] The form of a writ of nuisance, which by the equity of the 13 Edw. 1. c. 24. lay against him to whom the house or other thing which occasions the nuisance, is alienated; whereas before the statute this action lay only against him who first levied the thing to the annoyance of his neighbour. Cowell.

QUIA DOMINUS REMISIT CURIAM. See Writ of Right.

QUIA EMPTORES, Statute of. The Stat. West. 3. 18 Edw. 1. st. 1. is so called from the introductory words. See Manors, Statute, Tenures, &c.

QUIA IMPROVIDE. A supersedeas granted in behalf of a clerk of the Chancery, sued against the privilege of that court in the Common Pleas, and pursued to the exigent. So in many other cases where a writ is erroneously or improvidently sued. See Dyer, 33, n. 18.

QUICK WITH CHILD. See Execution of Criminals.

QUID JURIS CLAMAT. A judicial writ issuing out of the record of the fine, which remained with the custos brevivium of the Common Pleas before it was engrossed; and it lay for the grantee of a reversion or remainder when the particular tenant would not attorn. West. Symbol. part 2, tit. Fines, § 118; Reg. Judic. 36, 571. See Quem Redditum Reddit.

QUIT PRO QUO. The mutual consideration and performance of both parties to a contract. Kitch. 184. And as this is the consideration of a good and binding contract or bargain, so that which is contrary to it is what the law calleth Nudum pactum. 4 Rep. 83; Dyer, 98. See Consideration, Agreement.

QUIETARE. To quit, acquit, or discharge, or save harmless.

QUIETE CLAMARE. To quit-claim, or renounce all pretensions of right and title. Bract. lib. 5.

QUIETUS, freed or acquitted. A word made use of in the Exchequer in the discharge given to accountants; usually concluding with abinde recessat quietus, which is called a quietus est. A quietus est granted to the sheriff will discharge him of all accounts due to the king. 21 Jac. 1. c. 5. See Sheriff. And these quietuses are mentioned in the acts of general pardon.

QUIETUS REDDITUS. See Quit-rent.

QUINQUAGESIMA SUNDAY. Shrove-Sunday. So named because it is about the fiftieth day before Easter.

QUINQUE PORTUS. See Cinque Ports.

QUINSIEME, or QUINZIME. See Fifteenth.

Sometimes this word quinzime, or quinzime, is used for the fifteenth day after any feast, as the quinzime of St. John Baptist. 13 Edw. 1. in the preamble.

QUINTAL, or Kintal; quintalus.] A weight of lead, iron, &c., usually 100lbs. at six-score per cent. Cowell. Plonden mentions 200 kintals of wood.

QUINTAINE, quintena.] A Roman military sport or exercise by men on horseback, formerly practised in this kingdom to try the agility of the country youth: it was tilting at a mark made in the shape of a man to the navel, in his left hand having a shield, in his right a wooden sword; the whole made to turn round, so that if it was struck with the lance in any other part but full in the breast, it turned with the force of the stroke and struck the horseman with the sword which it held in its right hand. This sport is recorded by Mat. Paris, anno 1253.

QUINTO EXACT, quintus exactus, mentioned in 31 Eliz. c. 3.] The fifth and last call or requisition of the defendant, who is sued to outlawry, when, if he appear not, he is by the judgment of the coroners returned outlawed; if a woman, waived. See Exigent, Outlawry.

QUI TAM, Who as well.] The plaintiff in a penal action describes himself as one who sues as well for the king as himself for any penalty, half of which is given to the crown, and half to the informer. See Action-Popular, Information.

QUIT-CLAIM, quinta clamantia.] A release or acquitting of a man from any action which the releaser hath, might, or may have against him. Also a quitting of one's claim or title. Bracton, lib. 5. tract. 5. c. 9. num. 8; lib. 4. tract. 6. c. 13. num. 1. See Release.

QUIT-RENT, quietus redditus.] A certain small rent, payable by the tenants of manors in token of subjection, by which the tenant goes quiet and free. In ancient records it is called white-rent, because paid in silver money, to distinguish it from rent-corn, &c. 2 Inst. 19. See Alba firma, Chief-Rents, Rents.

QUOAD HOC. A term often used in law reports to signify, as to the thing named the law is so, &c.

QUOD CLERICI, Beneficial idæ Cancellarij.] A writ to exempt a clerk of the Chancery from the contribution towards the proctors of the clergy in parliament. Reg. Orig. 261.

QUOD CLERICI NON ELIGANTUR IN OFFICIO BALLIVÆ, &c. A writ which lies for a clerk, who, by reason of some land he hath, is made, or about to be made bailiff, headic, reeve, or some such officer. See Clerico infra sacros, &c. Reg. Orig. 117; F. N. B. 261.

QUOD CUM, that whereas.] This being by way of recital, and not positively, is not good in indictments. 3 Salk. 188. See Indictment.

QUOD EI DEFORCEAT. A writ which formerly might have been made by tenant in tail, tenant in dower, by the curtesy, or for term of life, having lost their lands by default, against him who recovered or his heir. Reg. Orig. 171; Stat. Westm. 2. c. 4.

Quod ei deforceat might have been brought against a stranger to the recovery; as if a man recovered by default, and made a feoffment, this writ might be had against the feoffee.

If a woman lost by default and took husband, she and her husband should have the quod ei deforceat; but where tenant in tail lost by default and died, his heirs should not have a writ of quod ei deforceat, but a formedon. And if husband and wife lost by default the land of the wife, which she held for term of life, and the husband died, she might not have this writ, for cui in vita was her remedy; and when one brought quod ei deforceat, he counted that he was seised of the land in his demesne, as of freehold, or in tail, &c. without showing of whose gift he was seised; also he ought to have alleged explees in himself, and then the defendant was to deny the right of the plaintiff, &c. and show how that at another time he recovered the land against the plaintiff by formedon, or other action; and should say, in the end of his plea, quod ipse paratus est ad manutenendum jus et titulum suum prædic. per donum, &c. unde petit judic. &c. New Nat. Br. 347, 348.

If tenant in tail, or such other tenant, who had a particular estate, lost by default, where he was not summoned, &c. he might have had either a writ of disceit or quod ei deforceat. Ibid. See further, 16 Vin. Abr. 145, 148; and tits. Recovery, Writ of Right.

The writ of quod ei deforceat is now abolished by the 3 & 4 Wm. 4. c. 27. § 36.

QUOD PERMITTAT. A writ which lay for the heir of him who was disseised of his common of pasture, against the heir of the disseisor, being dead. Terms de Ley.

And, according to Broke, this writ might have been brought by him whose ancestor died seised of common of pasture, or other like thing annexed to his inheritance, against the deforçant. If a man disturbed by any person in his common of pasture, so that he could not use it, he should have a quod permittat: so of a turbary, piscary, fair, market, &c. New Nat. Br. 272, 273, 275, 276. And a person might have a quod permittat against a disseisor, &c. in the time of his predecessor.

This writ was also abolished by the 3 & 4 Wm. 4. c. 27. § 36.

QUOD PERMITTAT PROSTERNERE. A writ which lay against any person who erected a building, though on his own ground, so near to the house of another, that it hung over, or became a nuisance to it. 2 Lil. Abr. 413.

Formerly, where a man built a wall, a house, or any thing which was a nuisance to the freehold of his neighbour, and afterwards died; in such case he who received any damage thereby sued a quod permittat against the heir of him who did the nuisance, and the form of it was quod permittat prosternere murum, &c. 3 Nels. Abr. 44.

At the common law an assize of nuisance did not lie against the alienee of a wrong-doer, for the purchaser was to take the land in the same condition it was conveyed to him; but by the statute of Westm. 2. c. 24. damages might have been recovered against the person who sold the land, if the nuisance were not abated on request made to him; or against the person to whom he sold it; though this did not extend to the alienee of the alienee. 3 Nels. 46; Lutw. 1588. This writ has long been obsolete, having given way to the action on the case; and by the 3 & 4 Wm. 4. c. 27. § 36. it is likewise abolished. See Nuisance, IV.

QUOD PERSONA NEC PREBENDARIJ, &c. A writ which lay for spiritual persons who were distrained in their spiritual possessions, for payment of a fifteenth with the rest of the parish. F. N. B. 176.

QUO JURE. A writ which lay for him who had land wherein another challenged common of pasture time out of mind; and was to compel him to show by what right or title he challenged it. F. N. B. 128; and Britton, more largely, c. 59; Reg. Orig. 156.

This has long been out of use, as on the claimant's putting his cattle in the owner may bring trespass, when the claimant must plead and prove his title; and it is among the writs abolished by the 3 & 4 Wm. 4. c. 27. § 36. See further, Common of Pasture.

QUO MINUS. A writ which lay for him who had a grant of house-bote and hay-bote in another man's woods against the grantor, making such waste whereby the grantee could the less enjoy his grant. Old Nat. Br. 148.

This writ also lay for the king's farmer in the exchequer against him to whom he sold any thing by way of bargain touching his farm, or against whom he had any cause of personal action. Perkins' Grants, 5. For he supposed, by the vendee's detaining any due from him, he was made less able to pay the king's rent.

Formerly it was allowed only to such persons as were tenants or debtors to the king; afterwards the practice became general for the plaintiff to surmise, that for the wrong which the defendant did him, he was less able to satisfy his debt to his majesty, which surmise gave jurisdiction to the Court of

QUO WARRANTO.

Exchequer to hear and determine the cause. Finch. 66; Old Nat. Br. 148. See Exchequer, Process.

Now, by the Uniformity of Process Act, 2 Wm. 4. c. 39. this process in the Exchequer is abolished, and suits are commenced here, as in the other courts, by writ of summons or capias.

QUONIAM ATTACHIAMENTIA. One of the oldest books of the Scotch law; so called from the first two words of the volume. The Regiam Majestatem is another instance of the like kind.

QUORUM, Lat.] Certain individuals among persons invested with any power, or with the exercise of any jurisdiction, without whom any number of the others cannot proceed to execute the power given by the commission. The word occurs in our statutes, and commissions both of the peace and others, but particularly in commissions to justices of the peace; and a justice of the quorum is so called from the words in the commission, Quorum A. B. unum esse volumus. As where a commission is directed to five persons, of whom A. B. and C. D. to be two: in this case A. B. and C. D. are said to be of the quorum, and the rest cannot proceed without them. See Justices of the Peace, II.

QUORUM NOMINA. In the reign of Henry VI. the king's collectors and other accountants were much perplexed in passing their accounts by new extorted fees, and forced to procure a then late-invented writ of quorum nomina for the allowing and stung out their quietus at their own charge, without allowance of the king. Chron. Angl.

QUOT. One twentieth part of the moveable estate of a person dying in Scotland, anciently due to the bishop of the diocese where he resided. This is prohibited by the Scotch Act, 1701. c. 14.

QUOTA. A tax to be levied in an equal manner.

QUO WARRANTO.

A writ which lies against any person or corporation that usurps any franchise or liberty against the king without good title, and is brought against the usurpers to show by what right or title they hold or claim such franchise or liberty. It also lies for misuser or nonuser of privileges granted; and, by Bracton, it may be brought against one who intrudes himself as heir into land, &c. Old Nat. Br. 149.

A writ of quo warranto is in the nature of a writ of right for the king against him who claims or usurps any office, franchise, or liberty, to inquire by what warrant or authority he supports his claim, in order to determine the right. Finch. L. 322; 2 Inst. 282. It lies also in case of nonuser or long neglect of a franchise, or misuser or abuse of it; being a writ commanding the defendant to show by what warrant he exercises such a franchise, having never had any grant of it, or having forfeited it by neglect or abuse. This was originally returnable before the king's justices at Westminster, but afterwards only before the justices in eyre, by virtue of the statutes of Quo Warranto, 6 Edw. 1; 18 Edw. 1. st. 2; but since those justices have given place to the king's temporary commissioners of assize, the judges on the several circuits, this branch of the statutes hath lost its effect; and writs of quo warranto (if brought at all) must now be prosecuted and determined before the king's justices at Westminster. See 2 Comm. c. 17; and Kydd's Law of Corporations, ii. c. 4. § 3.

The judgment on a writ of quo warranto (being in the nature of a writ of right) is final and conclusive even against the crown. 1 Sid. 86; 2 Show. 47; 12 Mod. 225; Kel. 139. This, together with the length of its process, probably occasioned that disuse into which it is now fallen, and introduced a more modern method of prosecution, by information filed in the Court of King's Bench by the attorney-general, in the nature of a quo warranto, wherein the process is speedier, and the judgment not quite so decisive. This is properly a criminal method of prosecution, as well to punish the usurper by a fine for the usurpation of the franchise, as to oust him, or seize it for the crown; but hath long been applied to the mere purposes of trying the civil right, seizing the franchise, or ousting the wrongful possessor, the fine being nominal only. 2 Comm. c. 17.

This proceeding is now applied to the decision of corporation disputes between party and party, without any intervention of the prerogative, by virtue of the 9 Ann. c. 20. which permits an information in the nature of a quo warranto to be brought, with leave of the court, at the relation of any person desiring to prosecute the same, (who is then styled the relator,) against any person usurping, intruding into, or unlawfully holding any franchise or office in any city, borough, or town corporate; provides for its speedy determination; and directs, that if the defendant be convicted, judgment of ouster (as well as a fine) may be given against him, and that the relator shall pay or receive costs according to the event of the suit.

A quo warranto information against a whole corporation as a body can be brought only by and in the name of the attorney-general. A quo warranto is never granted by leave of the court against persons for usurping a franchise of a mere private nature not connected with public government. R. v. Ogden, 10 B. & C. 230.

A quo warranto information lies under 9 Ann. c. 20. against the bailiff of a borough by prescription, sending members to parliament, though he be not a corporate officer. 1 D. & R. 438; 5 B. & A. 771.

An information in the nature of a quo warranto lies for acting as a trustee under an act of parliament, without due appointment. 1 Stra. 299. Against one for usurping the office of steward of a court leet. Ibid. 621. For erecting a new office. 2 Stra. 836. For the office of constable. Ibid. 1213. For a ferry. Ibid. 1161. But not for erecting a warren. 1 Stra. 687. Nor for the office of churchwarden. Ibid. 1196.

The form of this information is thus:

"A. B. attorney-general of the lord the king, who sues for the lord the king in this behalf, comes here into the court of our said lord the king, before the king himself, at Westminster, on —, in this same term, and for the said lord the king gives the court here to understand and be informed, that —, for the space of — now last past, and more, have used and still do use, without any warrant or royal grant, the following liberties and franchises to wit, —: Of all which liberties, privileges, and franchises aforesaid, the said —, during all the time aforesaid, have usurped, and still do usurp, upon the said lord the king, to the great damage and prejudice of his royal prerogative: Whereupon the said attorney of the said lord the king, for the said lord the king, prays the advice of the court in the premises, and due process of law against the said — in this behalf to be made, to answer to the said lord the king, by what warrant he claims to have, use, and enjoy the liberties, privileges, and franchises aforesaid."

This is the form, whether the information be brought for an usurpation without any original title, or for a subsequent forfeiture, where the original title is not disputed. See Co. Ent. 527—564.

The process usually awarded on the roll against individuals, whether claiming to act as a corporation, or claiming any other franchise, is a venire facias, sometimes with a clause of non omittas, and sometimes without. The entry immediately after the conclusion of the information is thus: "Whereupon the sheriff is commanded, that he cause to come," or "that he omit not, &c. but that he cause to come, &c. to answer," &c.

If the defendants do not appear at the day, the next process awarded is a distringas. Against a corporation, not prosecuted for acting as a corporation, but for usurping other liberties, the first process awarded is a distringas, and the entry on the roll in this form: "Whereupon it is agreed, that the aforesaid mayor and commonalty and citizens of — be distrained by all their lands, &c. so that, &c. to answer to our lord the king in the premises; and the sheriff is commanded, that he detain them in form aforesaid, so that, &c. at such a day." Co. Ent. 586 a.

Though a venire facias and distringas are the process usually awarded on the roll, yet it seems that against individuals who cannot be served with the venire, process of outlawry lies. See Cro. Jac. 528, 531.

When the defendant appears, he may either disclaim or plead as to all the franchises mentioned in the information; or he may plead as to part, and disclaim as to part.

If he disclaim as to all, the entry is in this form:

"The said —, protesting that the information aforesaid is not sufficient in law, and that he is not under any necessity by the law of the land to answer thereto, for plea nevertheless saith, that he never used the aforesaid liberties, privileges, and franchises, nor any of them, nor in the same, or any of them, ever usurped upon the said lord the king, in manner and form as by the said information is supposed, but the same, and every of them, disclaims and disavows; whereupon he prays judgment, and that he may be dismissed by the court." Co. Ent. 527 b.

If he plead as to part, and disclaim as to part, the entry of the disclaimer, after the plea, is in this form:

"And as to the residue of the liberties, privileges, and franchises in the said information above specified, upon the said lord the king supposed to be usurped by the said —, the said — says, that he never used, nor does he now use, the residue," &c. Co. Ent. 529 b.

Where the defendant pleads, the entry is in this form:

"The said —, as to the aforesaid liberty, &c. of —, says, &c. [here he sets out his title to the particular franchise, and so of every other claimed by a distinct title, and concludes his plea as to each, in this manner:] And by this warrant the said — has used, during all the time aforesaid, in the said information mentioned, and still uses the liberties, privileges, and franchises of —, as he well might and at all way; Without this, that the said — has usurped, or now does usurp, the said liberties, &c. on the said lord the king, in manner and form as by the information aforesaid, for the said lord the king, is above supposed: All which the said — is ready to verify, as the court, &c.: Whereupon he prays judgment, and that all and singular the liberties, &c. above by him as aforesaid claimed, may be allowed and adjudged to him, and that he may thereupon be dismissed from this court." See Co. Ent.

The attorney-general then demurs or replies, and the subsequent proceedings are in the same manner as in civil actions.

In a quo warranto to show by what authority a person claimed to have a court lect, and alleging farther, quod usurpavit libertatem sine aliquo concessione, &c. defendant pleaded non usurpavit; and it was objected that this was no good plea; for the answer to quo warranto is either to claim or disclaim; but the better opinion was, that by this plea defendant had answered the usurpation, though it did not show by what title he claimed. Godb. 91.

In quo warranto for using a fair and market, and taking toll, issue was taken whether they had toll by prescription or not, and it was found they had; it was moved in arrest of judgment, that there was a discontinuance, because there was no issue as to the other liberties claimed; but it was held, they were too soon to make this objection, and that there can be no discontinuance against the king before judgment; for by virtue of his prerogative, the attorney-general may proceed to take issue on the rest, or may enter a nolle prosequi; but if he will not proceed, the court may make a rule on him ad replicandum, and then there may be a special entry made of it. Hardr. 504.

The judgment seems to be the same, and subject to the same varieties as on the writ of quo warranto.

If it be given in favour of the defendant, the entry is in this form:—"It is considered that the liberties, &c. be allowed to the said —," or thus: "The said — may use, have, and enjoy all the said, &c.; and that the said — as to the said premises may be dismissed from this Court: Saving always the right of the said lord the king, if hereafter," &c.

This salvo jure for the king, says Coke, serveth for any other title than that which was adjudged, and therefore William de Penrugge, the king's attorney for prosecuting a quo warranto against the abbot of Fischamp for franchises within the manor of Steyning, sine precepto, was committed to gaol. 1 Inst. 282.

On disclaimer by the defendant the attorney-general prays, "That whereas the said —, by his plea, has disavowed and disclaimed all and singular the liberties, &c. above specified, judgment may be given for the king; and that the said —, with the said liberties and franchises, or any of them, may no way intermeddle, but may hereafter be altogether excluded from the same;" and judgment is accordingly given in that form. Co. Ent. 27 b.

With respect to the form of the judgment for the king, when it is given on the defendant's pleading, there has been much difficulty and dispute.

In the year-book of the 15 Edw. 4, this rule is laid down, "That where it clearly appears to the court that a liberty is usurped by wrong, and exercised on no title, either by the king's grant or otherwise, judgment only of ouster shall be entered. But that where it appears that the king or his ancestors have once granted a liberty, and the liberty is forfeited by misuser or nonuser, the judgment shall be, that it be seized into the king's hands." And the reason given for the distinction is, that where the liberty or franchise has been usurped, the king cannot have that which never legally existed; but in cases of an abuser or nonuser of a franchise once lawfully granted, the king resumes that which originally flowed from his bounty; and this course in the latter case, it has been said, is most beneficial for the subject, who, though by forfeiture, misleading, or default, he may lose his liberty, may have recourse to the king's mercy for restitution. See 15 Edw. 4. 7 b; Sawyer's Arg. Quo Warranto, 17; 5 T. R. 551.

From this it would seem that the only cases in which judgment of ouster only ought to be given, is, where there is no colour of title in the defendant; or where a franchise is claimed by prescription, but it is such that by law it cannot be so claimed; or where it is not such a franchise as may subsist in the hands of the crown. See 3 Comm. c. 17. cites Cro. Jac. 259; 1 Show. 280.

So if a man claim to hold a court-baron in virtue of a manor held by a copy of another manor; there judgment of ouster only shall be given, because a copyholder, being only tenant at will, cannot hold a court-baron to have forfeitures, and hold pleas in a writ of right. Cro. Jac. 259.

But where there is a colour of title, but the pleading of the defendant is defective, there is only judgment of seizure, and not of ouster. See 9 Co. 24 a; Co. Ent. 43 a; Sawyer's Arg. 17.

Where grants appear, but either the parties are not capable of taking, or their liberty or privilege granted is not allowable by law, the course has been to enter a mixed judgment both of seizure and ouster. Sawyer's Arg. 17; Co. Ent. 537, 539 a; Palm. 1; 2 Roll. Rep. 113.

In addition to the judgment of seizure or of ouster, or of seizure and ouster, except only in the case of ouster on disclaimer, there is also judgment that the defendants be taken to make fine to the king for the usurpation. And in this respect it seems the judgment in the information differs from that in the writ of quo warranto; for in the latter, it is apprehended, there could be no judgment of capias pro fine. The defendant was in the nature of a plaintiff; he made his claim; if he failed in making it good, the judgment was not capias pro fine, but quod sit in misericordia. Rast. Ent. 540 a. pl. 1.

and they are not replevied, the course is, that judgment final be given, nisi the defendants plead within such a time. Comberbach, 18, 19.

Wherever judgment is given for the king on a quo warranto, for liberties usurped, the judgment is quod extinguantur, and that the usurpers libertates, &c. nullatenus intromittant; and in such case the writ must be brought against particular persons. But where the quo warranto is for a liberty claimed by a corporation, there it is to be brought against the body politic; and the liberties may be seized, but the corporation still subsists, and is not dissolved without cause of forfeiture. 4 Mod. 52, 58.

A judgment of seizure cannot be proper where a thing is dissolved. And the judgment in the quo warranto against the city of London seems contradictory, for the first part of it is, quod libertates et franchisias capiantur et seisantur in manus regis; and the latter part of it is, quod capiantur ad satisfaciend. Domino Regi de fine suo pro usurpatione libertatis, &c. And the corporation was not thereby dissolved, for it implied that they were not extinguished. 4 Mod. 52, 58. See tit. London, and under that title particularly as to the abuses of the information by quo warranto.

After judgment the regular course is to issue a writ of seizure to the sheriff, which, after reciting the proceedings in the quo warranto, commands him to seize the liberties into the king's hands. But this writ, in point of fact, has not always issued. See Co. Ent. 539 b.

Where several franchises are granted by the same charter, and one is subordinate and inseparably incident to the other, the forfeiture of the principal is the forfeiture of the subordinate and incident; but when the franchises are independent, and the one may stand without the other, the forfeiture of the one is not the forfeiture of the other. Palm. 82.

Where a quo warranto, or an information in the nature of it, is brought for several franchises, it is as several writs or several informations, to which there may be several pleas and several judgments; because the defendant may claim one franchise by one title, and another by another. Palm. 7, 8.

The court will not consolidate several informations against several persons for distinct offices, for there must be an information against each to enable each to disclaim. 2 Maul. & Selw. 75.

It has been adjudged that the 4 & 5 Wm. & Mary, c. 18. by which informations in the Crown Office are not to be sued without express orders in open court, &c., being a remedial law, extends to informations in the nature of a quo warranto, which always suppose the usurpation of some franchise. See Kydd's Law of Corporations, ii. 410, &c. 415, &c.; and ante, tit. Information, I. IV.

This statute, and the 9 Ann. c. 20. leave the power of the attorney-general, with respect to filing informations, whether in the nature of quo warranto, or not, exactly as it was at common law; for the 4 & 5 Wm. & Mary, c. 18. expressly provides, that it shall not be construed to extend to any other information than such as shall be exhibited in the name of their majesties' coroner or attorney in the Court of King's Bench for the time being, commonly called the master of the Crown Office. And the 9 Ann. c. 20. only introduces some provisions with respect to informations in cases within the meaning of it filed in the name of the latter officer. In point of fact, there are several records in the Crown Office of informations in the nature of quo warranto, filed in the name of the attorney-general in the intermediate time between the two statutes, and since the passing of the last, as well in cases within the meaning of the last, as in other cases. 2 Kydd's Corp. 415, &c.

The distinction between the power of the attorney-general and the master of the crown-office seems to be this, that the power of the latter is confined to cases which concern the public government; whereas that of the former extends also to cases which only concern the private rights of the crown.

2 Ld. Raym. 1409; Hardw. 261; Stra. 637; 3 Burr. 1814, 1817. See 2 Kydd's Corp. 417, &c.

The cases in which informations in the nature of quo warranto are granted under the 9 Ann. c. 20. are where a man exercises a corporate franchise, or acts as a corporate officer, without having been duly elected and sworn or admitted, and where the office of a corporate officer becomes void by something subsequent, as a motion, &c. Kydd's Corp. 424.

To subject a man to an information in the nature of a quo warranto, it is necessary that there should be not only a claim, but an user of the franchise. See Sayer, 245; 5 T. R. 85.

Such information will lie for the office of bailiff of a court-leet, being a principal officer having a power to summon and select the jury. 2 East, 308.

Upon an application for a quo warranto information, suggesting that the defendants were elected contrary to the provisions of a particular charter, the affidavit must state that the charter was accepted, or that the usage has been in conformity to the charter; and the court, after determining that the affidavit was ill for omitting so to state, refused leave to amend it. 4 M. & S. 253.

Where the only act done by the party, against whom an application is made for leave to file an information in the nature of quo warranto, is voting in an election for members of parliament under any claim of right, the court will refuse it, on the ground that an inquiry into the right of voting belongs more properly to the House of Commons. 1 Stra. 547.

But an information in the nature of quo warranto will lie against a person claiming to have a right of voting by virtue of a burgage tenement. 8 T. R. 599 n.

The Court of King's Bench, having a discretionary power of granting informations in the nature of quo warranto, had long ago established a general rule to guide their discretion as to the time for applications of this nature, viz. not to allow in any case such information against a person who had been twenty years in the possession of his franchise; but having reason to consider this time as too extensive, they by degrees restrained it, by analogy to the Statute of Limitations, and resolved not to allow such information against any person who had been six years in possession. See 4 Burr. 1962, 2022, 2120, 2523; Comp. 75; 1 T. R. 1, 4, 2 T. R. 767; 4 T. R. 282, 284. And at length the legislature confirmed this regulation, and extended it to informations filed by the attorney-general. By the 32 Geo. 3. c. 58. it is enacted, that to any information in the nature of quo warranto, for the exercise of any corporate office or franchise, the defendant may plead that he has been in possession of or has executed the office for six years or more. And it is by the same act provided, that no defendant shall be affected by any defect in the title of the person from whom he derives his right and title, if that person has been in the undisturbed exercise of his office or franchise six years previous to the filing of the information.

This latter provision must be considered as applying only to cases where issue is taken on the title of the person through whom the defendant claims; for no inquiry can be made into such title where no issue has been taken upon it. Kyd. Corp. ii. 444, 435, &c.

Under this act the defendant may plead several pleas, even though he do not plead (in one of them) the limitation imposed by the statute. 8 T. R. 467.

The six years in the act means six years before making the rule absolute for the information, and not six years before obtaining the rule nisi. 1 Maul. & Selw. 71.

To obtain leave to file an information, the party applying must lay a proper case before the court, verified by affidavit, on which the court will grant a rule on the defendant to show cause. It was formerly, indeed, so much the practice of the court to grant quo warranto informations as of course, that it was held prudent never to show cause against the rule, for fear of disclosing the grounds on which the defendant rested his defence. But since these matters have come more under consideration, it is no longer a matter of course; and the court have on several occasions declared that it was the intention of the legislature that they should exercise a sound discretion according to the particular circumstances of the respective cases that came before them, and should not, without good reason, disturb the quiet of any corporation. See 1 T. R. 2; 4 Burr. 1964, 2022.

The court will make the rule for an information absolute, although the party, after the rule obtained, resign his office, and his resignation be accepted. 2 Maul. & Selw. 75.

Where the right, or the fact on which the right depends, is disputed, that is a sufficient reason for granting an information, if the application be made within the proper time. So where the right depends on a point of new or doubtful law. See 1 Burr. 1485; Comp. 58; Doug. 397 (382).

The conduct of the parties on whose behalf the application is made will weigh much with the court, in some instances, in granting or refusing an information. See 4 Burr. 1963, 2024, 2120; 5 T. R. 300, 573; Comp. 75; 4 T. R. 223.

It is no reason for refusing an information, that informations formerly granted for the same cause have been abandoned, as that may have been by collusion. But it is a good reason that the prosecutor stands exactly in the same circumstances with the defendant. 2 T. R. 770, 771; and see 1 East, 86.

In cases where there has been a long acquiescence, and where the objection, if it prevailed, might tend to dissolve the corporation, the court may refuse the application. Comp. 58. But though a great number of derivative titles may be affected by judgment of ouster against the defendant, yet, if it be confessed that elections may still be made, the court will not refuse it on that ground alone. 2 T. R. 767; and see 8 East, 213.

As, however, it is in the discretion of the court to grant a quo warranto information, or to refuse it, the court will not, under circumstances tending to throw suspicion on the motives of their relator, grant such application, where the consequence will be to dissolve a corporation. 2 B. & A. 479.

On a former application against the same person (as mayor of Helleston, in Cornwall), the court held it to be a valid objection to one relator that he was present and concurred at the time of the objectionable election, even though he was then ignorant of the objection; for a corporator must be taken to be cognizant of the contents of his own charter, and of the law arising therefrom. 2 B. & A. 339. And in the same case the court refused to grant the rule, on the ground that the other relator appeared to be a man in low and indigent circumstances, and that there were strong grounds of suspicion that he was applying, not on his own account, nor at his own expense, but in collusion with a stranger.

But it has been since held that it is no objection to granting an information that the person applying is in low and indigent circumstances, and that there is strong ground of suspicion that he is applying, not on his own account, or at his own expense, but in collusion with a stranger; but the court in such a case required security for costs. Re v. Wakelin, 1 Barn. & Adol. 50.

And as to the competency of the relator, see 1 B. & Ad. 689, 690.

Where the application is made in the names of persons unconnected with the corporation, that will in general be a strong reason for refusing it. 1 T. R. 23; 1 East, 46 n; 3 T. R. 574 n.

QUO WARRANTO.

The 9 Ann. c. 20. gives full costs, on verdict or judgment, to the successful party, whether relator or defendant; but it is only in case of verdict or judgment that, under this statute, the defendant can have costs for a groundless prosecution; but it has been decided that if the prosecutor do not, at his own costs, procure the information to be tried within a year after issue joined, the defendant is entitled to the benefit of the recognizance under the statute of William & Mary. See further, Information, I.

What cases are within the meaning of the statute has been the subject of some controversy, as the successful party is entitled to his costs only in such cases.

The words of the statute are, the "offices of mayors, bailiffs, portreeves, and other offices within cities, towns corporate, boroughs, and places;" one question has been, whether these words express only corporation offices, or whether they extend to offices in boroughs and other places not corporate. And it seems on the whole decided that the word places in the act only extends to offices in places of the same kind with those before enumerated.

It has likewise been urged, that there is a material difference between the case of a person who is compellable to take upon himself a burdensome office, which he could not refuse without being liable to an indictment, and that of a person who voluntarily undertakes an office from which he expects personal importance or some other advantage; and that it is unreasonable that a person, supposed to be elected into an office of the first description, should be liable to pay the costs of a prosecution for ousting him, on account of some defect in his election. 5 T. R. 375.

As this statute, 9 Ann. c. 20 extends only, as regards costs, to cases where the title of a person to be a corporate officer, as mayor, bailiff, or freeman, is in question, an information to try the right of holding a court is therefore not within it, but stands upon the common law only; and being a prosecution in the name of the king, no costs are given. 1 Burr. 402.

The court will not stay proceedings until the prosecutor give security for costs, on the ground that the relator is in insolvent circumstances, where it appears that he is a corporator, and no fraud is suggested. 2 Maul. & Selw. 346.

By the 11 Geo. 4. and 1 Wm. 4. c. 70. § 14. the jurisdiction of the court of session of Chester was abolished; and by 1 Wm. 4. c. 8. § 4. it was enacted that all informations in nature of quo warranto, and pleas and proceedings thereon, depending in the said court, should, at the request of the relator or defendant, be transmitted by the late prothonotary of such court, or other officer having the custody thereof, into the Crown Office of the King's Bench, and be proceeded with as if commenced there. It was held, that an information removed from the court of Chester may be proceeded upon in the Court of King's Bench, though no recognizances have been entered into for prosecuting with effect as required in K. B. by the 4 & 5 Wm. & Mary, c. 18. § 2.

It was formerly a subject of much discussion, whether a new trial could be granted in a quo warranto information when the verdict was in favour of the defendant. This depended chiefly on the question, whether such an information was a criminal prosecution; but since it has been held that it is merely a civil proceeding, there is no doubt but that a new trial may be granted where a verdict has been given in favour of the defendant, as well as where it has been given in favour of the crown. 2 T. R. 484.

RAC

RACHETUM, from the French racheter, i. e. redimere.] The compensation or redemption of a thief. 1 Stat. Rob. K. Scot. c. 9.

RACING. See Horse Races, Gaming, Wager.

RACK. See Torture.

RACK RENT. The full yearly value of the land let by lease, payable by tenant for life or years, &c. Wood's Inst. 185. See Rent.

RACK VINTAGE. A second vintage or voyage made by our merchants for racked wines, i. e. wines drawn from the lees. See stat. Antiq. 32 Hen. 8. c. 14.

RAGEMAN. A statute attributed to the fourth year of King Edward I. is so termed, whereby justices were assigned by the king and his council, to hear and determine all complaints of injuries done throughout the realm, within the five years next before Michaelmas, in the fourth year of his reign.

Rageman seems a corruption of the word regimen, a rule, form, or precedent. Certain blank charters (or rather confessions) are termed ragemans in Rot. Parl. 1 H. 4. nu. 69, 93.

RAGLORIA. A word mentioned in the charter of Edward III. whereby he created his eldest son Edward Prince of Wales, in parliament at Westminster, the seventeenth year of his reign, recited by Selden, in his Titles of Honour, 597, Cum forestis, parcis, chascis, boscis, warreniis, hundredis, comitis, ragloriis, ringeldiis, nodewardis, constabulariis, ballivis, &c. Davies, in his Dictionary, says that rhaglaw, among the Welch, signifies seneschallus, surrogatus, præpositus.

RAGLORIUS. A steward. Seld. Tit. of Honour, 597.

RAGMAN'S ROLL OR RAGIMUND'S ROLL. So called from one Ragimund, a legate in Scotland, who, calling before him all the beneficed clergymen in that kingdom, caused them on oath to give in the true value of their benefices; according to which they were afterwards taxed by the court of Rome; and this roll, among other records, being taken from the Scots by Edward I. was re-delivered to them in the beginning of the reign of Edward III.

Sir Richard Baker saith, that Edward III. surrendered, by charter, all his right of sovereignty to the kingdom of Scotland, and restored divers instruments of their former homages and fealties, with the famous evidence called Ragman's Roll.

Sir David Dalrymple calls this Bagimont's Roll, and says the name of the legate was Benemundus de Vicâ, vulgarly called Bagimont. Annals of Scotland, anno 1275.

RAN, Sax. aperta rapina.] Open or public theft. Lamb. Archai. 125; Ll. Canuti, c. 58. Hoveden.

The term, "all that a man can rap and ran," or still more corruptly, rap and rend, is by some derived hence; rap from rapia, to take by force.

RANGE, from French ranger, to order, dispose of.] It is used in the Forest Laws, both as a verb, as to range; and a substantive, as to make range. Charta de Forestâ, c. 6.

RANGER. A sworn officer of the forest. Charta de Forestâ. His authority is in part described by his oath set by Manwood, part 1. c. 50; but more particularly part 2. c. 20. num. 15, 16, 17. His office consists chiefly in three points: to walk daily through his charge; to see, hear, and inquire of trespasses in his bailiwick; to drive the beasts of the forest, both of venary and chase, out of the disafforested into the forested lands; and to present all trespasses of the forest, at the next court holden for the forest. See Forest.

The ranger is made by the king's letters patent, and hath a fee paid yearly out of the Exchequer, and certain fee deer. Rangeator Forestæ de Whittlewood, Pat. 14 Rich. 2. nu. 8.

RANSOM, French rançon, redemptio.] Is properly the sum paid for redeeming a captive or prisoner of war; and sometimes taken in our law for a sum of money paid for pardoning some great offence, and setting the offender at liberty who was under imprisonment. See 1 Hen. 4. c. 7. 11 Hen. 6. c. 11.

As in the goods of an enemy, so also in his person, a man may acquire a sort of qualified property, by taking him a prisoner in war (Bro. Abr. tit. Propertie, 18), at least till his ransom is paid. 2 Comm. 402.

The wealth to be amassed by the ransom of prisoners of war, was one of the great inducements to military service; and curious instances of the importance which was attached to this consideration, occur in history. Thus, when the Maid of Orleans was to be brought to her disgraceful trial, the advisers of the measure thought it right to pay her captors, whose property she had become, a sum equal to what it was supposed they might be able to make by her ransom. Turner's Hist. vol. iii. p. 101. In Fenn's Letters is one from an English admiral, stating his determination to kill or drown the crews of one hundred merchantmen which he had taken, unless the council wish to preserve their lives; vol. i. p. 213; Lutgard's Hist. vol. v. p. 118. Sometimes, in the contracts of service, the king stipulated that he should be allowed to buy captives of a certain rank from the captors at a certain price. Coleridge's n. 2 Comm. 402.

Fine and ransom go together; and some writers tell us that they are the same; but others say that the offender ought to be first imprisoned, and then redelivered or ransomed in consideration of a fine. Co. Litt. 127. Dalt. 209.

Ransom differs from amercement, being a redemption of a corporal punishment due to any crime. Lamb. Eirem. 556. See Fines for Offences.

A ship was taken by the French; the master (having a share in her) ransomed her for 1800*l.*, and was taken to France as an hostage for this money. The ransom-money must be raised out of the profits, notwithstanding any former mortgage of the ship; for if there was a precedent mortgage, what would become of that security if the ship had not been redeemed? After the ship was redeemed, she performed her intended voyage, and the freight-money received after redemption was the first profits arising, and out of them the ransom-money is to be satisfied; the insurers always pay a part of the ransom-money. 2 Eq. Ca. Abr. 690. See Insurance, II. 2.

RANKING OR CREDITORS. The Scotch term for the arrangement of the property of a debtor according to the claims of the creditors, in consequence of the nature of their respective securities. See Bankrupt, Executor, Mortgage, &c. for similar arrangements in the English law.

RAPE, raptus, vel rapa.] A division of a county, similar to that of a hundred, but oftentimes containing in it more hundreds than one.

Sussex is divided into six rapes only, viz. Chichester, Arundel, Bramber, Lewes, Pevensey, and Hastings; every of which, besides hundreds, hath a castle, river, and forest belonging to it. Camd. Brittan. 225, 229. These rapes are incident to the county of Sussex, as lathes are to Kent, and wapentakes to Yorkshire, &c.

These rapes and lathes are considered by Blackstone as an intermediate division between the shire and the hundreds, each of them containing about three or four hundreds a piece. These had formerly their rape-reeves and lathes-reeves, a thing in subordination to the shire-reeve (sheriff). Where a county is divided into three of these intermediate jurisdictions, they are called tithings, which were anciently governed by a tithing-reeve. These tithings still subsist in the large county of York, where, by an easy corruption, they are denominated ridings; the north, east, and west riding. 1 Comm. Introduct. § 4. p. 116. See the several titles.

We have no mention in the Domesday Survey of any mote or court attached to the rape, nor is there any reference to its testimony, as in the case of the hundred. Indeed the rape seems to have been intrusted to the jurisdiction of individuals; for in the account of Sussex, in the Survey, we read of rapum Comitatus de Moritonio, rapum Willielmi de Braiose, rapum Comitatus de Ow, rapum Willielmi de Warene, and rapum Comitatus Rogerii. The rapes mentioned by their own names are those of Arundel, Hastings, Lewes, and Pevensey; Chichester rape does not appear, it was under Earl Roger's authority, but perhaps usurped from the bishop. Hrepp is still a territorial division in Ireland; and it is not improbable that the rapes of Sussex were military districts for the supply of the castles which existed in each. 1 Ellis's Introduct. to Domesday Book, 180.

RAPE OF THE FOREST, raptus forestæ.] Trespass committed in the forest by violence; it is reckoned among those crimes, whose cognizance belonged only to the king. Leg. Hen. 1. c. 10. See Forest.

RAPE OF WOMEN, raptus, from rapio.] An unlawful and carnal knowledge of a woman, by force, and against her will; a ravishment of the body, and violent deflowering her, which is felony by the common and statute law. Co. Litt. 190. The word raptus (ravished) is so appropriated by law to this offence, that it cannot be expressed by any other; even the word carnaliter cognovit, &c. without it, will not be sufficient. Co. Litt. 124; 2 Inst. 180.

Rape was punished by the Saxon laws, particularly those of King Athelstan, with death. Bract. lib. 3. c. 28. But it was afterwards thought too hard, and in its stead another severe, but not capital, punishment, was inflicted by William the Conqueror, viz. castration and loss of eyes, which continued till after Bracton wrote, in the reign of Henry the Third. Lit. Guil. Conq. c. 19.

But in order to prevent malicious accusations, it was then the law (and it seems continued to be so in appeals of rape, until they were abolished), that the woman should immediately after, "ad unum vicem jurat et pœnit," go to the next town, and there make discovery to some credible persons of the injury she has suffered, and afterwards seek redress to the highest constable of the hundred, the coroner, or the sheriff, with the outrage. Glanv. lib. 14. c. 6; Bract. lib. 3. c. 28. See 1 Hale's P. C. c. 632. Afterwards, by statute Westm. c. 19, the time of limitation was extended to forty days. At present there is no time of limitation fixed; for as it is usually now punished by indictment at the suit of the king, the maxim of law takes place, that nullum tempus currit regi; but the jury will rarely give credit to a stale complaint. During the former period also, it was held for law, that the woman (by consent of the judge and her parents), might recede the offender from the execution of his sentence, by accepting him for her husband, if he also was willing to agree to the exchange, not otherwise. Glan. lib. 14. c. 6; Bract. lib. 3. c. 28. But this is now not held for law; and it is said that the election of the woman is taken away by virtue of stat. Westm. 2, making the rape felony, although she consent afterwards. See post.

By stat. Westm. 1. 3 Edw. 1. c. 13, the punishment of rape was much mitigated; the offence itself of ravishing a damsel within age (that is, under twelve years old), either with her consent or without, or of any other woman against her will, being reduced to a trespass, if not prosecuted by appeal within forty days, and subjecting the offender only to two years' imprisonment, and a fine at the king's will. But this lenity being productive of the most terrible consequences, it was soon found necessary to make the offence of forcible rape felony, which was accordingly done by stat. Westm. 2. 13 Ed. 1. c. 34. And by the 18 Eliz. c. 7, it was made felony, without benefit of clergy, as was also the abominable wickedness of carnally knowing and abusing any woman child under the age of ten years; in which case the consent or non-consent was immaterial, as by reason of her tender years she was incapable of judgment and discretion.

Before this statute, it was a question whether a rape could be committed on the body of a child of the age of six or seven years; and a person being indicted for the rape of a girl of seven years old, although he was found guilty, the court doubted whether a child of that age could be ravished; and it was said, if she had been nine years old she might, for at that age she may be endowed. Dyer, 304.

Hale was indeed of opinion, that such profligate actions committed on an infant under the age of twelve years, the age of female discretion by the common law, either with or without consent, amounted to rape and felony, as well after as before the statute of Queen Elizabeth. 1 Hale's P. C. 631.

The statute of Eliz. as well as the former acts on the subject, were repealed by the 9 Geo. 4. c. 31, which, by § 16, enacts, that every person convicted of the crime of rape shall suffer death as a felon. By § 17, if any person shall unlawfully and carnally know and abuse any girl under the age of ten years, he shall be guilty of felony, and, on conviction, suffer death; and unlawfully and carnally to know and abuse any girl above the age of ten, and under twelve years, is a misdemeanor, and the offender, on conviction, may be imprisoned with or without hard labour for such term as the court shall award. By § 18, the proof of actual emission is declared not to be necessary to constitute a carnal knowledge, but the offence shall be deemed complete upon proof of penetration only.

A male infant, under the age of fourteen years, is presumed by law incapable to commit a rape, and, therefore, it seems, cannot be found guilty of it. For though in other felonies malitia supplet ætatem, yet, as to this particular species of felony, the law supposes an imbecility of body as well as mind. 1 Hale's P. C. 631.

But an infant may be a principal in the second degree, if he aid and assist in the commission of the offence, and it appears that he had a mischievous discretion; for the excuse of impotency will not in such case apply. See 3 C. & P. 396.

It is no excuse or mitigation of the crime, that the woman at last yielded to the violence, and consented either after the fact or before, if such consent was forced by fear of death or duress,—or that she was a common strumpet, for she is still under the protection of the law, and may be forced; but it was anciently held to be no rape to force a man's own concubine; and it is said by some to be evidence of a woman's consent, that she was a common whore. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 41. § 2; Co. Litt. 123. See 1 Hale's P. C. 629.

Also formerly it was adjudged not to be a rape to force a woman who conceived at the time, because it was imagined that if she had not consented, she could not have conceived; though this opinion hath been since questioned, by reason the previous violence is no way extenuated by such a subsequent consent; and if it were necessary to show the woman did not conceive, to make the crime, the offender could not be tried till such time as it might appear whether she did or not. 2 Inst. 190; 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 41. § 2.

The party ravished may give evidence upon oath, and is in law a competent witness; but the credibility of her testimony, and how far forth she is to be believed, must be left to the jury upon the circumstances of fact that concur in that testimony. For instance, if the witness be of good fame; if she presently discover the offence and made search for the offender; if the party accused fled for it; these and the like are concurring circumstances, which give greater probability to her evidence. But, on the other side, if she be of evil fame, and stand unsupported by others; if she concealed the injury for any considerable time after she had opportunity to complain; if the place where the fact was alleged to be committed, was where it was possible she might have been heard, and she made no outcry; these and the like circumstances carry a strong, but not conclusive, presumption that her testimony is false or feigned. 1 Hale's P. C. 634, 635, 636.

And the defendant may give evidence of the woman's notoriously bad character for want of chastity or common decency, or that she had before been connected with the prisoner himself; but he cannot give evidence of any other particular facts to impeach her chastity. R. & R. 211; 2 Stark. 243; 3 C. & P. 589. So what she herself said so recently after the fact, as to preclude the possibility of her being practised on, has been holden to be admissible in evidence as a part of the transaction; but the particulars of her complaint are not evidence of the truth of her statement. 1 East's P. C. 444; 2 Stark. 241.

Moreover, if the rape be charged to be committed on an infant under twelve years of age she may be still a competent witness, if she hath sense and understanding to know the nature and obligations of an oath; or even to be sensible of the wickedness of telling a deliberate lie. Nay, though she hath not, it is thought by Sir Matthew Hale, that she ought to be heard without oath, to give the court information; and others have held, that what the child told her mother, or other relations, may be given in evidence, since the nature of the case admits frequently of no better proof. But it is now settled by a solemn determination of the twelve judges, that no hearsay evidence can be given of the declarations of a child who hath not capacity to be sworn, nor can such child be examined in court without oath: and that there is no determinate age, at which the oath of a child ought either to be admitted or rejected. Yet, where the evidence of children is admitted, it is much to be wished, in order to render their evidence credible, that there should be some concurrent testimony of time, place, and circumstances, in order to make out the fact; and that the conviction should not be grounded singly on the unsupported accusation of an infant under years of discretion. There may be therefore, many cases of this nature, witnesses who are competent, that is, who may be admitted to be heard; and yet, after being heard, may prove not to be credible, or such as the jury is bound to believe. 4 Comm. c. 15.

Aiders and abettors in committing a rape, may be indicted as principal felons, whether men or women. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 41. § 6. Lord Audley was indicted and executed as a principal, for assisting his servant to ravish his own wife, who was admitted a witness against him. Dalr. 107; 1 St. Trials, 265.

And generally, all those who are present, aiding and abetting a man to commit a rape, are principal offenders in the second degree, and this whether they are men or women. An accessory before the fact is, by the 9 Geo. 4. c. 81. § 81. punishable with transportation, not exceeding fourteen years, or with imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding three years; and an accessory after the fact with similar imprisonment, not exceeding two years.

Hale observes, that though a rape is a most detestable crime, it is an accusation easily made, and hard to be proved; but harder to be defended by the man accused, although ever so innocent: and he mentions several instances of rapes, which at the time were apparently fully proved, but were afterwards discovered to have been malicious contrivances. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 625, 636.

An assault with intent to commit a rape, is a misdemeanor, and punishable under the 9 Geo. 4. c. 81. s. 25. with imprisonment to hard labour, not exceeding two years.

Upon an indictment for an assault, with intent to commit a rape, if a rape be proved to have been actually committed, the misdemeanor is merged in the felony, and the judge should direct an acquittal, and remand the offender, in order that he may be indicted for the felony. 1 East, P. C. 411.

RAPINE, rapina.] The taking a thing in private, against the owner's will, is properly theft; but the taking it openly or by violence, is rapine. See Robbery. Rapine on the northern borders was repressed by several old statutes, all of which are now repealed.

RAPTU HEREDIS. A writ for taking away an heir holding in socage; of which there are two sorts, one when the heir is married, the other when he is not; see Reg. Orig. 163; and title, Guardian.

RASE, rasciva.] Seems to have been a measure of corn now disused. Toll shall be taken by the rase, and not by the heap or cantel. Ordinance for Bakers, &c. c. 4.

RASURE of a deed, so as to alter it in a material part, without consent of the party bound by it, &c. will make the same void; and if it be rased in the date, after delivery, it is said it goes through the whole. 5 Rep. 23, 119.

Rasure, &c. is most suspicious, when it is in a deed-poll, that there is but one part of the deed, and it makes to the advantage of him to whom made. And where a deed by rasure, addition, or alteration, becomes no deed, the defendant may plead non est factum. 5 Rep. 23, 119. See Deed, Pleading.

RATE. A valuation of every man's estate; or the appointing or setting down how much every one shall pay, or be charged with, to any tax.

RATE-TITHE. Is when any sheep or other cattle are kept in a parish for less time than a year, the owner must pay tithe for them pro rata, according to the custom of the place. F. N. B. 51. See Tithes.

RATIFICATION, ratificatio.] A ratifying or confirming: it is particularly used for the confirmation of a clerk in a prebend, &c. formerly conferred on him by the bishop, where the right of patronage is doubted, or supposed to be in the king. Reg. Orig. 304.

RATIHABITIO. Confirmation, agreement, consent. See 18 Vin. Abr.

Omnis ratibitio retro trahitur et mandato equiparatur. Co. Lit. 207; Wing. 485; a maxim frequently cited in the courts of law.

RATIO. An account; as reddere rationem, to give an account, and so it is frequently used. According to another it is a cause, or giving judgment therein; and ponere ad rationem, is to cite one to appear in judgment. Hals. 88.

RATIONABILIBUS DIVISIS. A writ which lay where two lords, in divers towns, had seignories joining together, for him who found his waste by little and little to have been encroached on, against the other who had encroached, thereby to rectify their bounds; in which respect Fitzherbert called it in its own nature a writ of right. The Old Nat. Brev. says, that it was a kind of justitias, and might be removed by a pone out of the county to the Common Bench. See the form and use in F. N. B. 128; and Reg. Orig. 157.

This writ was abolished by the 3 & 4 Wm. 4. c. 27. s. 26. See further, Perambulation.

RATIONABILE ESTOVERIUM. Alimony was heretofore so called. See Magna Carta, and title, Baron and Feme, XI.

RATIONABILI PARTE. A writ of right for lands, &c. See Right, Writ of, Recto de Rationabili Parte.

RATIONABILI PARTE BONORUM. A writ which lay for a wife, after the death of her husband, against the executors of the husband, for her third or reasonable part of his goods after debts and funeral charges paid. F. N. B. 222.

It appears by Glanville, that by the common law of England, the goods of the deceased (his debts first paid) shall be divided into three parts; one for the wife, another for his children, and the third to the executors: and this writ might have been brought by the children, as well as the wife. Reg. Orig. 142.

But it seems to have been used only where the custom of the county served for it; and the writs in the register rehearse the customs of the counties, &c. New Nat. Br. 270, 271.

As to children bringing this writ, their marriage is no advancement, if the father's goods be not given in his lifetime; but where a child was advanced by the father, this writ would not lie. New N. B. 270. See titles, Executor, V. 8; Will; and 18 Vin. Abr. 158.

RAVISHMENT, Fr. Ravissement, i. e. De captio, rapto] An unlawful taking away either a woman, or an heir in ward, sometimes it is used in the same sense with rape. See that title.

RAVISHMENT DE GARD, ravishment of ward.] A writ which lay for the guardian by knights-service, or in socage, against a person who took from him the body of his ward. F. N. B. 140.

By 12 Car. 2. c. 24. this writ is taken away as to lands held by knights-service, &c. but not where there was guardian in socage, or appointed by will. It is however now abolished by the 3 & 4 Wm. 4. c. 27. s. 36. See Guardian.

The mayor and aldermen and chamberlain of London, who have the custody of orphans, if they committed any orphan to another, he should have a writ of ravishment of ward against him who took the ward out of his possession. New Nat. Brev. 317. See London, Orphans. And further, Guardian.

RAY. Cloth never coloured or dyed. See 17 Rich. 2. c. 3; 11 Hen. 4. c. 6; 1 Rich. 3. c. 8.

RE-AFFORESTED. Is where a forest which had been deforested is again made forest; as the forest of Dean is by 20 Car. 2. c. 3.

REAL ACTION. See Action.

REAL BURDEN. In Scotch law, a condition imposed on an estate which is effectual against creditors and heirs. The power of imposing such a real burden is exercised by the person granting an heritable bond.

REAL RIGHT. The right of property, jus in re: the person having which right may sue for the subject itself. A personal right jus ad rem entitles the party only to an action for performance of the obligation.

REAL WARRANTICE, is when infeoffment of one tenement is given in security of another. Scotch Dict.

REAL ESTATE. As to what is real, as distinguished from a personal estate, see Estate. The term is generally applied to landed property, and includes all estates and interests in lands which are held for life, or for some greater estate, and whether such lands be of freehold or copyhold tenure.

By the 1 Wm. 4. c. 27. all former statutes relating to the payment of debts out of real estate are repealed. This act provides two principal objects: 1. To extend the remedies of creditors against fraudulent devisees; 2. To enable courts of equity to carry their decrees on this subject into execution.

By the original law of England, personal estate and the annual profits of lands only were liable to the payment of debts, and credit was given only to the extent of visible chattels: the person, however, of the debtor could not be taken in satisfaction of a debt, because the lord had a claim to the service of his tenant; this law was evidently founded on the ancient principle of the feudal system. In the course of time, when commerce began to increase, and a system of mercantile credit to be established, the attention of the legislature was called to the protection of creditors, and the rule of law was partially relaxed: provisions were made in parliament expressly relating to merchants. By the 11 Edw. 1. the chattels and devisable burgages were made liable to debts; and if the debtor had no moveables, then his body was to be taken and kept in prison. By a statute, 13 Edw. 1. the lands, goods, and body were made liable in certain gradations. The securities under this statute were called statutes merchant, and were held to be bonds of record. In the 27 Edw. 3. the security by statute staple (which was also a bond of record) was established, by which the lands, body, and goods were made liable for debts acknowledged before the officer of the staple; and by 23 Hen. 8. c. 6. this security was extended to all who chose to adopt it; and which was then called a recognizance in the nature of a statute staple. The provisions of this old statute have long since fallen into disuse.

As to the liability of the heir for the debt of his ancestor, there were two sorts of obligations or contracts known to the law; one called a specialty, the other a simple contract. If the ancestor were bound by a specialty, the estate descended to the heir by the common law, liable to the engagement; but the creditor could not follow the estate in the hands of a bona fide purchaser from the heir; and though one heir succeeding to an estate was liable to the debt of his ancestor, yet if the ancestor, after the statute of Wills (32 Hen. 8.) devised his estate to a third person, the devisee enjoyed the estate, without being liable for the engagements of the devisor.

This defect was in part remedied by the 3 & 4 Wm. & M. c. 14. the object of which was to place the devisee in the same situation as that in which the heir would have stood had he succeeded to the property; but the act was imperfect, and there were two cases for which it provided no adequate remedy. 1. It did not provide for the case of there being no heir; it only allowed an action to be brought against the devisee and heir, but not against the devisee, if there were no heir. The 1 Wm. 4. c. 47. provides a remedy against the devisee, even though there should be no heir. 2. With respect to specialty debts (bonds and covenants), the 3 & 4 Wm. & M. were held to apply to bond debts or covenants, for the payment of sums certain, and not to the damages for breaches of covenant or contracts under seal; therefore if a man had sold an estate to another, covenanting for title, and died, although the purchaser was evicted for want of title, yet if the vendor had devised his real property to a stranger, such devisee would retain the estate devised against the purchaser, whatever might have been the amount of the purchase money: to prevent this evil, the act 1 Wm. 4. c. 47. places the devisee exactly in the same situation as the heir would stand in, in case the estate had descended to him directly.

With respect to infants. By the feudal law, during the subsistence of wardships, the estate of the heir in chivalry was, during the minority, in the hands of his guardian, who took the whole profits of it to himself. When, therefore, an action was brought against an infant heir, he was entitled to pray the parol to demur (i. e. to put in his plea of non-age, in stay of the creditor's action until he came of full age); and this not merely on account of his inability to defend himself pay the debts or perform the covenants of his ancestors, in regard of any lands, &c. descended to him, and shall sell the same before action brought or process sued out against him, such heir shall be answerable for such debts or covenants in actions of debt or covenant, to the value of the lands so sold, in which cases all creditors shall be preferred as in actions against executors and administrators; and such execution shall be taken out upon judgments so obtained against such heir, to the value of the said land, as if the same were his own debts; saving that the lands bond fide aliened before action brought shall not be liable to such execution.

§ 7. Provided, that where any action of debt or covenant is brought against the heir, he may plead riens per descent at the time of the writ brought against him; and the plaintiff in such action may reply that he had lands, &c. before the writ brought; and if, upon the issue joined thereupon, it be found for the plaintiff, the jury shall inquire of the value of the lands so descended, and thereupon judgment shall be given and execution awarded as aforesaid; but if judgment be given against such heir by confession of the action, without confessing the assets descended, or upon demurrer or nihil dicit, it shall be for the debt and damage, without any writ to inquire of the lands so descended.

§ 8. Provided, that all devisees made liable by this act shall be liable in the same manner as the heir at law by force of this act, notwithstanding the lands to them devised shall be aliened before action brought.

By § 9. traders' estates shall be assets to be administered in courts of equity; but creditors by specialty are to be paid first.

By § 10. the parol shall not demur by or against infants.
See further, Parol, Demurrer.

By § 11. infants are to make conveyances under order of the court of equity; and by § 12. persons having a life interest may convey the fee, if the estate is ordered to be sold.

By § 13. the act, viz. the (Irish) not to repeal act 33 Geo. 3. relating to debts due to bankers.

Excellent as were the provisions of the above act, they still did not extend to the payment of debts by simple contract, except where the person dying was a trader within the bankrupt laws. Its deficiencies have, however, been supplied by a recent statute, 3 & 4 Wm. 4. c. 104. by which the real estate of all persons whatsoever have been rendered liable to the discharge of their debts, whether due by specialty or on simple contract; but the preference is very properly given to the former, which are to be satisfied in full before any part of the latter are paid.

The last-mentioned statute enacts, that when any person shall die seised of, or entitled to any estate or interest in lands, tenements, or hereditaments, corporeal or incorporeal, or other real estate, whether freehold or customaryhold, or copyhold, which he shall not by his last will have charged with or devised subject to the payment of his debts, the same shall be assets to be administered in courts of equity for the payment of the just debts of such persons, as well the debts due on simple contract as on specialty; and that the heir or heirs at law, customary heir or heirs, devisee or devisees of such debtor, shall be liable to all the same suits in equity at the suit of any of the creditors of such debtor, whether creditors by simple contract or by specialty, as the heir or heirs at law, devisee or devisees of any person or persons who died seised of freehold estates was or were before the passing of this act liable to in respect of such freehold estates at the suit of creditors by specialty in which the heirs were bound: provided always, that in the administration of assets by courts of equity under the act all creditors by specialty in which the heirs are bound shall be paid the full amount of the debts due to them before any of the creditors by simple contract or by specialty in which the heirs are not bound shall be paid any part of their demands.

The following are the principal provisions of the act :—

By § 2. all wills and testamentary limitations, dispositions, or appointments, already or hereafter to be made concerning any manors, &c. or hereditaments, or any rent or charge out of the same, whereof any persons, at the time of their decease, shall be seized in fee simple, in possession, reversion, or remainder, or have power to dispose of the same by their last wills, shall be deemed (only as against such persons, bodies politic or corporate, and their heirs, successors, executors, administrators, and assigns, with whom the persons making any such wills, &c. shall have entered into any bond, covenant, or other speciality binding his, her, or their heirs,) to be fraudulent, void, and of none effect.

By § 3. in the cases before mentioned, every such creditor shall and may have and maintain his action of debt or covenant upon the said bonds, covenants, and specialties against the heir and heirs at law of such obligor or obligors, covenantor or covenantors, and such devisee and devisees, or the devisee or devisees of such first mentioned devisee or devisees jointly, by virtue of the act; and such devisee and devisees shall be liable and chargeable for a false plea by him or them pleaded, in the same manner as any heir should have been for any false plea by him pleaded, or for not confessing the lands or tenements to him descended.

By § 4. If there shall not be any heir at law, against whom, jointly with the devisee or devisees, a remedy is thereby given, in every such case every creditor may have his action of debt or covenant against such devisee or devisees solely, and such devisee or devisees shall be liable for false plea as aforesaid.

§ 5. Provided, that where there shall be any limitation or appointment, devise or disposition, of or concerning any manors, &c. hereditaments, for the payment of just debts, or portions, or sums of money, for any children of any person, in pursuance of any marriage contract, bond fide made before such marriage, the same shall be in full force, and the same manors, &c. may be enjoyed by the persons, their heirs, &c., for whom the said limitation, &c. was made, and by their trustees, their heirs, &c., for such estate or interest as shall be so limited, &c. until such debts or portions shall be raised and satisfied.

§ 6. In all cases where any heir at law shall be liable to Equitable assets in a court of equity, not created by statute, still continue liable to be administered among the whole body of creditors indifferently. As to what are real and what equitable assets and the order in which debts are to be paid out of the former, see Executor, V., 6.

REALTY. Is an abstract of real, as distinguished from personality.

REASON. Is the very life of law; and what is contrary to it is unlawful.

When the reason of the law once ceases, the law itself generally ceases; because reason is the foundation of all our laws. Co. Lit. 97, 183.

If maxims of law admit of any difference, those are to be preferred which carry with them the more perfect and excellent reason. Ibid. See 1 Comm. 70.

REASONABLE AID. A duty claimed by the lord of the fee, of his tenants holding by knights-service, to marry his daughter, &c. Westm. 2. c. 24. See Tenures.

REASONABLE CAUSE. See Consideration.

REASONABLE PART. See Rationabili Parte.

REATTACHMENT, reattachiamentum. A second attachment of him who was formerly attached and dismissed the court without day, by the not coming of the justices or some such casualty. Broke, Reg. Orig. 35.

A cause discontinued, or put without day, cannot be revived without reattachment or resummons; which, if they are special, may revive the whole proceedings: b. t. it general, the original record only. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 17, § 195. And on a reattachment the defendant is to plead de novo, &c. See Day.

REBATE. Discount; the abating what the interest of money comes to, in consideration of prompt payment. Merch. Dict. See Harry.

REBELLION, rebellio. Among the Romans, was where those who had been formerly overcome in battle, and yielded to their subjection, made a second resistance: but with us it is generally used for the taking up of arms traitorously against the king whether by natural subjects, or others when once subdued; and the word rebel is sometimes applied to him who wilfully breaks a law so to a villain disobeying his lord. See 25 Edw. 3. c. 6; 1 Rich. 2. c. 6.

There is a difference between enemies and rebels: enemies are those who are out of the king's allegiance; therefore subjects of the king, either in open war, or rebellion, are not the king's enemies, but traitors. Thus David, Prince of Wales, who levied war against Edw. I. because he was within the allegiance of the king, had sentence pronounced against him as a traitor and rebel. Fleta, lib. 1. c. 16. Private persons may arm themselves to suppress rebels, enemies, &c. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 63, § 10.

Rebellion is also used for disobedience to the process of courts of law in Scotland or Ireland.

REBUTTER, from the Fr. buter, i. e. repellere, to put back or bar. The answer of a defendant to a plaintiff's surrejoinder. See Pleading.

Rebutter is also where a man by deed or fine (now abolished) grants to warranty any land or hereditament to another; and the person making the warranty, or his heirs, agrees for the same thing: if he who is so sued, plead the deed or fine with warranty, and pray judgment if the plaintiff warrant to the party, against the warranty in the deed, &c. this is called a rebutter. Terms de Ley. And if I grant to a tenant to hold without impeachment of waste, and afterwards impeach him for waste done, he may debar me of this action, by shewing my grant; which is rebutter. Co. Entr. 284; Co. Litt. 365.

RECAPTION, receptio. The taking a second distress of one formerly distrained, during the plea grounded on the former distress: and it is a writ to recover damages for him whose goods being distrained for rent, or service, &c. are distrained again for the same cause, pending the plea in the county-court, or before the justices. F. N. B. 71, 72. See 17 Edw. 3. c. 7.

A recaption lies where the lord distrains other cattle of the tenant than he first distrained, as well as if he had distrained the same cattle again, if it be for one and the same cause; but anno, 19 Edw. III. issue was taken whether the cattle were other cattle of the plaintiff, &c. New Nat. Br. 161. See Replevin.

If the lord distrain the cattle of the stranger for the same rent, and not his cattle who was first distrained; neither the stranger, nor the party first distrained, shall have the writ of recaption: and if the lord distrain for rent or service, and afterwards the lord's bailiff takes a distress on the same tenant for the same rent or service, pending the plea, the tenant shall not have a recaption against the lord, nor against the bailiff, although the bailiff maketh cognizance in right of the lord, &c. for it may be the lord had no notice of that distress, or the bailiff had no notice of the distress taken by the lord; though in such case action of trespass lies; and if the lord agree to the distress taken by his servant or bailiff, the tenant may have this writ against the lord. New Nat. Br. 159.

A man is distrained within a liberty, and sues a replevin there by plaint or writ, and pending that plaint in the liberty he is distrained again for the same cause by the person who distrained before; he shall not on that distress bring a writ of recaption, because the plaint is not pendent in the county-court before the sheriff, nor in C. B. before the justices: but if the plaint be removed by pone or recordari out of the liberty before the justices, then the party distrained may have a recaption, &c. And if a person be convicted before the sheriff in a writ of recaption, he shall not only render damages to the party, but be amerced for the contempt; and be fined. 39 Edw. III. See further, Replevin.

For damage-feeasant, beasts may be distrained as often as they be found on the land; because every time is for a new trespass and a new wrong, and no recaption lies.

RECAPTION is also a species of remedy by the mere act of the party injured. This happens, when any one hath deprived another of his property in goods or chattels personal, or wrongfully detains one's wife, child, or servant; in which case the owner of the goods, and the husband, parent, or master, may lawfully claim and retake them, wherever he happens to find them: so it be not in a riotous manner, or attended with a breach of the peace. 3 Inst. 134; Hal. Annal. s. 46.

The reason for this is obvious; since it may frequently happen that the owner may have this only opportunity of doing himself justice: his goods may be afterwards conveyed away or destroyed; and his wife, children, or servants, concealed or carried out of his reach, if he had no speedier remedy than the ordinary process of law. If therefore he can so contrive it as to gain possession of his property again, without force or terror, the law favours and will justify his proceeding. But, as the public peace is a superior consideration to any one man's private property; and as, if individuals were once allowed to use private force as a remedy for private injuries, all social justice must cease, the strong would give law to the weak, and every man would revert to a state of nature: for these reasons it is provided, that this natural right of recaption shall never be exerted, where such exertion must occasion strife and bodily contention, or endanger the peace of society. If, for instance, my horse is taken away, and I find him in a common, a fair, or a public inn, I may lawfully seize him to my own use; but I cannot justify breaking open a private stable, or entering on the grounds of a third person, to take him, except he be feloniously stolen; but must have recourse to an action at law. 2 Roll. Rep. 55, 56, 208; 2 Roll. Abr. 565, 566; 3 Comm. 4.

As to the recovery of stolen goods on convictions, see Restitution.

RECEIPT. All receipts in writing for sums not under 5l. are subjected to certain stamp-duties, varying from 3d. up to 10s.

RECEIVER, Receptor.] Is by us, as with the civilians, commonly used in the evil part, for such as receive stolen goods, &c. The receiving a felon, and concealing him and his offence, make a person accessory to the felony. 2 Inst. 183. See Accessory, II. 3.

By the common law, receivers of stolen goods were only guilty of a misdemeanor. Various legislative enactments were made, beginning with the reign of William and Mary, creating this offence a felony, all of which have recently been repealed, and the whole statute law on this subject is now contained in the sections of the 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 29. which are here abstracted. By § 54 of that act, if any person shall receive any chattel, money, valuable security, or other property whatsoever, the stealing or taking whereof shall amount to a felony either at common law or by virtue of that act, such person knowing the same to have been stolen, such receiver shall be guilty of felony, and may be indicted and convicted either as an accessory after the fact, or for a substantive felony; and in the latter case, whether the principal felon shall or shall not have been previously, or shall or shall not be, amenable to justice: and such receiver may be transported for not exceeding fourteen years, or be imprisoned not exceeding three years; and, if a male, not more than thrice whipped. By § 55. where the original offence is an indictable misdemeanor by the act, such receiver shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and be liable to be transported for seven years, or imprisoned not exceeding two years, and if a male, whipped. By § 56. all such receivers may be tried in the county or place in which the property is found in their possession, or where the principal may be tried. By § 60. where the stealing or taking of any property is by the act punishable summarily, receivers of such property shall on conviction thereof before a justice of the peace, be liable to the same forfeiture and punishment to which the principal is liable.

By the 30 Geo. 2. c. 24. it shall be lawful for any pawnbroker, or any other dealer, their servants, or agents, to whom any goods shall be offered to be pawned, exchanged, or sold, which shall be suspected to be stolen, to seize and detain the persons offering the same, for the purpose of being examined by a justice, who is empowered, if he sees any grounds to apprehend that the goods have been illegally obtained, to commit the persons offering the same to prison for a period not exceeding six days; and if, on the further examination, the justice shall be satisfied that the goods were stolen, he shall commit the offender to prison to be dealt with according to law; and although it may afterwards appear that the goods in question were fairly obtained, yet the parties who seized the supposed offender shall be indemnified.

In some cases the distinction between a receiver and an accessory have required an attentive consideration; as where goods in a warehouse were severed by some of the parties from the rest for the purpose of stealing, and afterwards taken out of the warehouse by them and other parties to the theft, it was held that the latter were not accessories, but principals; Rex v. Atwell, et al. 2 East, P. C. c. 16. § 164; but where goods were entirely taken away from the premises or actual possession of the owner, the party concerned in the further removal of them afterwards was considered as an accessory. Rex v. King, York Assizes, 1816 or 1818; Russell on Crimes, lib. 4. c. 21.

A party may be indicted for receiving goods stolen by persons unknown (see R. & R. 372); but where the principal is known, it should be stated according to the truth. 2 East, P. C. c. 16. § 164; 3 Camp. 264.

On an indictment against a prisoner for receiving several articles, if it appear that they were received at different times, the prosecutor may be put to his election. But evidence may be given of all the receipts, for the purpose of proving (what is an indispensable ingredient in the offence) guilty knowledge; at least, of all receipts prior to that on which the prosecutor elects to proceed. Ry. & M. 146.

In cases where the principal and receiver are joined in the same indictment and tried together, there is no doubt that the receiver may enter into the full defence of the principal, and avail himself of every matter of fact and point of law tending to his acquittal: and in cases where the principal has been previously convicted, it seems competent to the receiver to controvert his guilt, or to show that the offence did not amount to felony in him, or not to that species of felony of which he was convicted. See Foster, 365; Leach, 288.

Where the party is indicted as a receiver, and the jury find that he was the principal thief, they must acquit him of receiving; and in such case the judge will, if the grand jury are discharged, order the prisoner to be detained and tried as principal at the next assizes. Rex v. Maddan, York Assizes, Spring, 1830.

Upon the trial of the receiver the principal felon may be admitted a witness. Haslam's case; Patram's case; 2 East, P. C. c. 16. § 166. And this although pardoned or not convicted. And his evidence is equally admissible after conviction, provided judgment has not been passed upon him, or he has endured the punishment to which he has been sentenced. See Evidence, II.

With respect to the venue of indictments for receiving stolen goods, see ante and Indictment, V.

RECEIVER. Annexed to other words, as receiver of rents, signifies an officer belonging to the king or other personage. Crompt. Jurisd. 18. See Accounts.

RECEIVER OF THE FINES. An officer who receives the money of all such as compound with the king on original writs sued out of Chancery. West. Symb. par. 2. § 106; 1 Edm. 4. c. 1.

RECEIVER-GENERAL OF THE DUCHY OF LANCASTER. An officer of the duchy court, who collects all the revenues, fines, forfeitures, and assessments, within the duchy, or what is there to be received, arising from the profits of the duchy lands, &c. 39 E. c. 7.

RECEIVER OF THE KING'S RENTS AND TENTHS. What he shall take for acquittances, see 33 Hen. 8. c. 39. § 65. See King, VI.

RECITAL, recitatio.] Is the rehearsal or making mention, in a deed or writing, of something which has been done before. 1 Lill. Abr. 416.

A recital is not conclusive, because it is no direct affirmation; otherwise, by feigned recitals in a true deed, men might make what titles they pleased, since false recitals are not punishable. Co. Litt. 532; 2 Lev. 108.

If a person by deed of assignment recite that he is possessed of an interest in certain lands, and assign it over by the deed, and become bound by bond to perform all the agreements in the deed, if he is not possessed of such interest, the condition is broken: and though a recital of itself is nothing, yet, being joined and considered with the rest of the deed, it is material. 1 Leon. 112. A recital that before the indenture the parties were agreed to do such a thing, is a covenant, and the deed itself confirms it. 3 Keb. 466.

A new reversionary lease shall commence from the delivery, where an old lease is recited, and there is none, &c. Dyer, 93; 6 Rep. 36.

A. recites that he hath nothing in such lands, and in truth he hath an estate there, and makes a lease to B. for years. The recital is void, and the lease good. Jenk. Cent. 255. In this case, if the recital were true, the lease would not bind.

The recital of one lease in another is not a sufficient proof that there was such a lease as is recited. Vaugh. 74. But the recital of a lease in a deed of release, is good evidence of a lease against the releasor, and those who claim under him. Mod. Ca. 44.

Where a covenant to lay out a sum in an annuity recited that the covenantor had given a bond for the payment of the money, the recital was held to be evidence of the bond. 2 P. Wms. 432. But a recital will not operate as an estoppel, or as evidence against one who was neither a party nor claims under a party to the deed. 1 Salk. 186. See further, Deeds.

RECLAIMING BILL. In Scotch law, a petition of appeal against the judgment of any lord ordinary, or the court of session.

RECOGNITION, recognitio. An acknowledgment. It is the title of the first chapter of the 1 Jac. 1. whereby the parliament acknowledged the crown of England, on the death of Queen Elizabeth, rightfully to have descended to King James.

RECOGNITIONE ADNULLANDA per Vim et Duritatem facta. A writ to the justice of C. B. for sending a record touching a recognizance, which the cognizor suggests was acknowledged by force and duress; that if it so appear, the recognizance may be annulled. Reg. Orig. 183.

RECOGNITORS, recognitores. The jury impanelled on an assize; so called because they acknowledged a disseisin by their verdict. Bract. lib. 5. See Assize, Jury.

RECOGNIZANCE, Fr. reconnaissance; Lat. recognitio, obligatio. An obligation of record, which a man enters into before some court of record, or magistrate duly authorized, with condition to do some particular act; as to appear at the assizes, to keep the peace, to pay a debt, or the like. It is, in most respects, like another bond, the difference being chiefly this, that the bond is the creation of a fresh debt, or obligation de novo; the recognizance is an acknowledgment of a former debt upon record, the form whereof is, "That A, B. doth acknowledge to owe to our lord the king, to the plaintiff, to C, D., or the like, the sum of 10*l.*," with condition to be void on performance of the thing stipulated, in which case the king, the plaintiff, C, D., &c., is called the cognizor, is qui cognoscitur; as he that enters into the recognizance is called the cognizee, is qui cognoscit. This being either certified to, or taken by the officer of some court, is witnessed only by the record of that court, and not by the party's seal; so that it is not, in strict propriety, a deed, though the effects of it are greater than a common obligation, being allowed a priority in point of payment, and binding the lands of the cognizor from the time of enrolment on record. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. See post.

Recognizances for keeping the peace shall be returned to the sessions. 3 Hen. 7. c. 1.

For debt or bail they are taken or acknowledged before the judges, a master in Chancery, &c. See Bail. And to appear at the assizes, or sessions, they may be taken by justices of peace, which recognizances are to be returned by the justices to the sessions, or an information lies against them. 2 Ed. Abr. 117. See Justices.

By the 10 & 11 Hm. 3. c. 7. § 7. (which section is not repealed by the 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 7. no clerk of assize, clerk of the peace, or other person, shall demand or take any fee of any person bound by any justice of the peace to give evidence against any traitor or felon, for the discharge of any recognizance for such appearance, on pain of 5*l.* with costs.

By the 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 64. § 2, 3, 4. justices of peace and coroners, before committing or bailing offenders for felony, murder, &c. or misdemeanor, shall take down the examination of the witnesses and prisoners, and bind the parties to such recognizances to prosecute and give evidence. By § 31 such recognizances and others specified shall not be extracted without an order by the judge, recorder, chairman, &c.

As to recognizances of a private kind, in nature of a statute staple, by virtue of the 23 Hen. 8. c. 6. and which are a charge on real estate, the following observations will serve at present; and see further, Statute Staple.

By the 23 Hen. 8. c. 6. the chief justices of the King's Bench and Common Pleas, in term time, or in their absence out of town, the mayor of the staple at Westminster, and the recorder of London, jointly, have power to take recognizances for the payment of debts in this form—Noverint universi per presentes Nos A. B. & C. D. teneri et firmiter obligari E. F. in centum libris, &c. They are to be sealed with the seal of the cognizor, and of the king, appointed for that purpose, and the seal of one of the chief justices, &c. And the cognizees, their executors and administrators, have the like process and execution against the cognizors as on obligations of statute staple. 2 Inst. 678. See Statute Staple.

The execution on a recognizance or statute, pursuant to the 23 Hen. 8. c. 6. is called an extent; and the body of the cognizor (if a layman), and all his lands, &c. into whose hands soever they come, are liable to the extent; goods (not of other persons in his possession) and chattels, as leases for years, cattle, &c. which are in his own hands, and not sold bona fide, and for valuable consideration, are also subject to the extent. 3 Rep. 13.

But the land is not the debtor, but the body; and land is liable only in respect that it was in the hands of the cognizor at the time of the acknowledgment of the recognizance, or after; and the person is charged, but the lands chargeable only. Plowd. 72.

Lands held in tail are chargeable only during life, and do not affect the issue in tail, unless a recovery be passed, when it is as fee-simple land: copyhold lands are subject to the extent only during the life of the cognizor. The lands a man hath in right of his wife shall be chargeable only during the lives of husband and wife together; and lands which the cognizor hath in joint-tenancy with another, are liable to execution during the life of the cognizor, and no longer; for after his death, if no execution was sued in his life, the surviving joint-tenant shall have all; but if the cognizor survive, all is liable. 2 Inst. 673.

If two or more join in the recognizance, &c. the lands of all ought equally to be charged; and where a cognizor, after he hath entered into a recognizance or statute, conveys his lands to divers persons, and the cognizee sues execution on the lands of some of them, and not all; in this case he or they whose lands are taken in execution, may, by audita querela or scire facias, have contribution from the rest, and have all the lands equally and proportionably extended. But the cognizor or his heirs, when he sells part of his lands, and keeps the remainder, shall not have any contribution from a purchaser, if his land is put in execution. 3 Rep. 14; Plowd. 72.

If there be a recognizance, and after a statute entered into by one man to two others, his lands may be extended pro rata, and so taken in execution. Yelp. 12.

This kind of recognizance may be used for payment of debts, or to strengthen other assurance. Wood. 288. If a recognizance is to pay 100*l.* at five several days; viz. 20*l.* on each day, immediately after the first failure of payment, the cognizee may have execution by elegit on the recognizance for the 20*l.*, and shall not stay till the last day of payment is past, for this is in nature of several judgments. Co. Litt. 292; 2 Inst. 395, 471. When no time is limited in a statute or recognizance for payment of the money, it is due presently. See Bond.

To make a good recognizance or obligation of record, the form prescribed must be pursued, therefore they may not be acknowledged before any others besides the persons appointed by the statutes, and the substantial forms of the statute are to be observed herein. But a recognizance may be taken by the judges in any part of England. Dyer. 221; Hob. 195.

A recognizance for money lent, though it is not a perfect record till entered on the roll, yet, when entered, it is a recognizance from the first acknowledgment, and binds persons and lands from that time. Hob. 196. By the 29 Car. 2. c. 3. no recognizance shall bind lands in the hands of purchasers for valuable consideration, but from the time of enrolment, which is to be set down in the margin of the roll; and recognizances, &c. in the counties of York and Middlesex, shall not bind lands unless registered pursuant to 2 Ann. c. 4; 5 Ann. c. 18; 6 Ann. c. 35; 7 Ann. c. 20. See Registry of Deeds. The clerk of the recognizances is to keep three several rolls of the entering recognizances taken by the chief justices, &c. and the persons before whom the recognizances are taken; and the parties acknowledging are to sign their names to the roll as well as to the recognizance. 8 Geo. 1. c. 25.

A recognizance is not a record until it is enrolled; and, therefore, where defendant pleaded to assumpsit on bills of exchange, &c. that plaintiff was indebted to him by virtue of a recognizance taken in the Court of Exchequer, which was still in force, "as by the said recognizance remaining in the said court before the barons will appear," without stating that it was enrolled, a replication that the plaintiff was not so indebted, concluding to the country, was held good on special demurrer, inasmuch as the plea did not state a debt due by recognizance, which was matter of record. 1 B. & A. 153.

Recognizances and statutes are like judgments, and the cognizee shall have the same things in execution as after judgment. The body of the cognizor himself, but not of his heir or executor, &c. may be taken, though there be lands, goods, and chattels, to satisfy the debt; and if a cognizor is taken by the sheriff, and he let him go, yet his lands and goods are liable. 12 Rep. 1, 2; Plond. 62; 1 And. 273.

By recognizances of debt and bail, the body and lands are bound; though some opinions are, that the lands of bail are bound from the time of recognizance entered into; and some, that they are not bound but from the recovery of the judgment against the principal. 2 Leon. 84; Cro. Jac. 272, 449. See Bail.

In B. R. all recognizances are entered as taken in court; but in C. B. they enter them specially where taken, and their recognizances bind from the caption; but those in B. R. from the time of entry; in C. B. a scire facias may be brought on their recognizances either in London or Middlesex; on those in B. R. in the county of Middlesex only. 2 Salk. 359.

A recognizance of bail in C. B. is entered specially; the bail are bound to pay a certain sum of money, if the party condemned doth not pay the condemnation, or render his body to prison; and in B. R. recognizances are entered generally that if the party be condemned in the suit or action, he shall render his body to prison, or pay the condemnation-money, or the bail shall do it for him. 2 Lit. Abr. 417. See Bail.

One of the best securities we have for a debt is the recognizance in Chancery, acknowledged before a master of that court, which is to be signed by such master, and afterwards enrolled; and the king may, by his commission, give authority to one to receive a recognizance of another man, and to return the same into Chancery; and on such a recognizance, if the cognizor do not pay the debt at the day, the cognizee shall have an elegit on the cognizance so taken, as if it were taken in the Chancery. New Nat. Br. 589.

It was formerly a question, whether a ca. sa. would lie on a recognizance taken in Chancery; but adjudged, that immediately after the recognizance is acknowledged, it is a judgment on record; and then, by the 25 Edw. 3. c. 17. a ca. sa. will lie, being a debt on record. 2 Bulst. 62.

If a recognizance be made before a master in Chancery for a debt, or to perform an order or decree of the court; if the condition be not performed, an extent shall issue; or a scire facias is the proper process for the cognizor to show what he can say why execution should not be had against him; upon which, and a scire facias or two nihilis returned, and judgment thereupon, the proper execution is an elegit, &c. Cro. Jac. 3.

Where a man is bound by recognizance in Chancery, and the cognizor hath certain indentures of defeasance: if the recognizee will sue execution on the recognizance, the cognizor may come into Chancery, and show the indentures of defeasance, and that he is ready to perform them; and thereon he shall have a scire facias against the cognizee, returnable at a certain day; and in the same writ, he shall have a supersedeas to the sheriff not to make execution in the mean time. New Nat. Br. 589.

If a person is bound in a recognizance in Chancery, or other court of record, and afterwards the cognizee dieth, his executors may sue forth an elegit to have execution of the lands of the cognizor; and if the sheriff return that the cognizor is dead, then a special scire facias shall go against the heir of the cognizor, and those who are tenants of the lands which he had at the day of the recognizance entered into. New Nat. Br. 590.

In case lands are mortgaged, without giving notice of a recognizance formerly had, if the recognizance be not paid off and vacated in six months, the mortgagor shall forfeit his equity of redemption, &c. 4 & 5 Wm. & Mary, c. 16. See Mortgage, III.

When a statute has been shown in court, and the plea discontinued, the conusee, on a re-summors, may have execution without producing it again. 5 Hen. 4. c. 12.

On a scire facias to defeat a recognizance, the cognizor shall find surety to the party as well as to the king. 11 Hen. 6. c. 10.

For the period within which an action in a recognizance must be brought, see Limitation of Actions.

As to the offence of acknowledging a recognizance in the name of another, see False Personation.

See further, tit. Statute Merchant; Statute Staple; Surety of the Peace; and 18 Vin. Abr. 163—170.

RECOGNIZEE. He to whom one is bound in a recognizance, mentioned in the 1 Hen. 6. c. 10.

RECOGNIZOR. He who enters into the recognizance.

RE-COMPENSATION. Where a party sues for a debt and the defendant pleads compensation, the plaintiff may allege a compensation on his part, and this is called a re-compensation. Bell's Scotch Dict.

RECORD, recordum, from the lat. recordari, to remember. A memorial or remembrance; an authentic testimony in writing, contained in rolls of parchment, and preserved in a court of record, Britton, c. 27. In these rolls are contained the judgment of the court on each case, and all the proceedings previous thereto; carefully registered and preserved in public repositories, set apart for that purpose. The term record is applied to such proceedings of superior courts only, and does not extend to the rolls of inferior courts, the registries of proceedings whereof are not properly called records. Co. Litt. 260. See Courts.

From the beginning of the reign of Richard I. commences a still extant series of records down to the present day. See 1 Reeve, 218. In the King's Bench the rolls are preserved in the treasury of that court from the beginning of the reign of Henry VI.; in the Common Pleas, from that of Henry VIII. The earlier rolls, from the year 1195 to the end of the reign of Henry V. in the former court, and in the latter, from 1193 to the year 1509, are deposited in the Chapter House of Westminster Abbey. 2 Tidd's Pract.

All courts of record are the king's courts in right of his crown and royal dignity: and therefore no other court has authority to fine or imprison. A court not of record, in the court of a private man: whom the law will not intrust with any discretionary power over the fortune or liberty of his fellow-subjects. Such are the courts barons incident to every manor, and other inferior jurisdictions; where the proceedings are not enrolled or recorded: but as well their existence, as the truth of the matter contained therein, shall, if disputed, be tried and determined by a jury. 3 Comm. c. 3. p. 21.

There are three kinds of records, viz. a judicial record, as an attainder, &c. a ministerial record on oath, being an office or inquisition found; and a record made by conveyance and consent, as a fine, recovery, (now both abolished,) or a deed enrolled. 4 Rep. 54. But it has been held, that a deed enrolled, or a decree in Chancery enrolled, are not records, but a deed and a decree recorded; and there is a difference between a record and a thing recorded. 2 Lil. 421.

Records, being the rolls or memorials of the judges, import in themselves such incontrollable verity, that they admit of no proof or averment to the contrary, inasmuch that they are to be tried only by themselves; for otherwise there would be no end of controversies; but during the term wherein any judicial act is done, the roll is alterable in that term, as the judges shall direct; when the term is past, then the record admitteth of no alteration, or proof that it is false in any instance. Co. Lit. 260; 4 Rep. 52.

Matter of record is to be proved by the record itself and not by evidence, because no issue can be joined on it to be tried by a jury like matters of fact; and the credit of a record is greater than the testimony of witnesses. 21 Cur. B. R. Though where matter of record is mixed with matter of fact, it shall be tried by jury. Hob. 124.

A man cannot regularly aver against a record; yet a jury shall not be stopped by a record to find the truth of the fact; and it was adjudged, that on evidence it is at the discretion of the Court to permit any matter to be shown to prove a record. 1 Vent. 362; Allen, 18.

A record may be contradictory in appearance, and yet be good; and though it hath apparent falsehood in it, it is not to be denied; but a record may in some cases be avoided by matter in fact. Style's Reg. 281; Co. Lit. Cro. Car. 329; Hull, 20.

The judges cannot judge of a record given in evidence, if the record be not exemplified under seal: but a jury may find a record although it be not so, if they have a copy proved to them, or other matter given in evidence sufficient to induce them to believe that there was such a record. 2 Lil. Abr. 421. See Trial by Record.

If the transcript of a record be false, the court of B. R. will on motion, order a Certiorari to an inferior court, to certify how the record is below; and if it be on a writ of error on a judgment of the Common Pleas, they will grant a rule to bring the record out of C. B. into this court, and then order the transcript to be amended in court, according to the roll in C. B. And a record cannot be amended without a rule of the court, grounded on motion. 2 Lil. Abr. 421, 422.

Where a record is so drawn, that the words may have a double construction, one to make a record good, and another to make it erroneous, the court will interpret the words that way which will make the record good, as being most for the advancement of justice: so if a letter of a word in a record be doubtful, that it may be taken for one letter or another, the court will take it to be that letter which is for upholding the record. See Cro. Id. 101; Cro. Jac. 119, 153, &c.

The court will not supply a blank left in a record, to make it perfect, when before it was defective; as this would be to make a record, which is not the office of the court to do, but to judge of them. 2 Lil. Abr. 420. If a subsequent record hath any relation to one that is precedent; in such case it must appear in pleading, &c. to be the same without any variation. 3 Ld. 907.

Records removed out of inferior courts, on writs of error, and the judgments on such records are to be entered in B. R.; but if removed on the records are not perfected: and if a record once comes into B. R. by writ of error it never goes out again, but a transcript of it may go to the House of Lords, on a writ of error there. 2 Lil. 422. Writ of error removes the record; but the original is no part of it. Jenk. Cent. 111. A record cannot be removed by writ of error, until the judgment in that record is entered: and when and how a record may be removed, and where and how remanded, see Cro. Jac. 206; 2 Brownl. 145; and tit. Error.

Justices of assise, gaol-delivery, &c. are to send all their records and processes determined, to the exchequer at Michaelmas, in every year; and the treasurer and chamberlains, on sight of the commissions of such justices, are to receive the same records, &c. under their seals, and keep them in the treasury, 9 Ed. 3. st. 1. c. 5.

Judges may reform defects in any record, or process, or variance between records, &c. And a record exemplified or inrolled may be amended for variation from the exemplification. 8 Hen. 6. c. 12. 15. See Amendment.

As to amendments of the record at nisi prius, see Amendment, Variance.

As to making up the record of a cause for trial at nisi prius, see Pleading.

A record that is rased, if legible, remains a good record notwithstanding the rasure; but he who rased it is not to go unpunished for his offence. And in case of a rasure in a judgment, done by fraud to hinder execution, the record hath been ordered to be amended, and a special entry thereof to be made; but though the record by this means be made perfect, the offender may be indicted for the felony. 2 Rol. Rep. 81.

The offence of stealing or fraudulently taking from its place of deposit, or of maliciously obliterating, injuring, or destroying records or other proceedings of courts of law or equity, is punishable by the 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 29. § 21. as a misdemeanor, by transportation for seven years, imprisonment, or fine, &c. See Larceny, False Personation.

TRIAL BY RECORD, Is used where a matter of record is pleaded in any action, as a judgment, or the like; and the opposite party pleads nil tiel record, "that there is no such matter of record existing." Upon this issue is tendered, and joined in the following form: "And this he prays may be inquired of by the record; and the other doth the like." And hereupon the party pleading the record has a day given him to bring it in; and proclamation is made at the rising of the court on that day, for him "to bring forth the record by him in pleading alleged, or else he shall be condemned;" and, on his failure, his antagonist shall have judgment to recover, by rule of the court, according to the circumstances of the case. The trial of this issue is merely by the record, on the principle already stated.

Titles of nobility, as whether earl or no earl, baron or no baron, shall be tried by the king's writ or patent only, which is matter of record. 6 Rep. 53. Also in case of an alien, whether alien, friend or enemy, shall be tried by the league or treaty between his sovereign and ours, for every league or treaty is of record. 9 Rep. 31. And, also, whether a manor be to be held in ancient demesne, or not, shall be tried by the record of doomsday in the king's exchequer. 3 Comm. c. 22. p. 330. See Ancient Demesne.

Thus, also, upon the plea of a former judgment recovered by the plaintiff against the defendant for the same cause of action; or of another action depending on the same cause; or of outlawry; or of comperuit ad diem to a bail-bond; or of any act of parliament; or, in short, of any other matter of record, a general replication is nil tiel record; upon which the parties join issue; and the truth or falsehood of such issue is determined by the party producing, or failing to produce, the record in question, on a day given him for that purpose. Sellon's Pract. c. 13.

Where the record pleaded is the record of another court, the only way of producing it is by suing out a certiorari from the Court of Chancery, for the court where the record is to certify the record; and upon the return of the certiorari, but not till then, the record will be sent by mittimus to the court where it is to be produced: and thus a record of K. B. may be removed into C. B. contrary to the general rule, that they are not removable out of that court. Cro. Car. 297; 2 Saund. 344.

RECORD.

Where records are pleaded, they must be shown; and one may not plead any record, if it be not in the same court where it remaineth, unless he show it under the great seal of England, if denied: acts of record must be specially pleaded. Bro. c. 20; Cro. Jac. 560; 5 Rep. 218; 10 Rep. 92; Style, 22. Records are to be pleaded entire, and not part of them with an inter alia referring to the record; and so should a special verdict find a record, unless a judgment be pleaded, or the declaration is on a judgment in a superior court, when the plaintiff may say recuperavit generally; but not in an inferior court, for there all the proceedings must be set forth particularly. Mich. 22 Car. B. R.

Though writs are matter of record, they need not be so pleaded. 1 Salk. 1; 1 Lev. 211.

See further as to the form of the issue in a trial by record, Chitty on Stephen on Pleading.

RECORDS OF THE REALM. In the year 1800, in consequence of very extensive enquiries, and two Reports made by a select committee of the House of Commons, of Great Britain (printed by order of the House, 4th July, 1800, in one very large folio volume), that house presented an address to his majesty, requesting that he would be pleased to give directions for the better preservation, arrangement, and more convenient use of the Public Records of the Kingdom. A commission was accordingly granted by his majesty, authorizing several great officers of state, and learned members of the House of Commons and others, to carry into execution the several measures recommended in the Reports. In 1806 a second commission was issued. The commissioners have proceeded from time to time in the business of the commission: and have printed a collection of the Statutes of the Realm, and many useful indexes and other works of legal and historical importance. Their proceedings have been annually reported to his majesty in his privy council. Abstracts of these annual reports, and accounts of other proceedings of the commissioners, have been from time to time laid before parliament, and ordered to be printed.

Much light will be thrown on the origin of parliaments by the publication of parliamentary writs and records in progress, under the direction of the above commissioners. Dugdale's Collection of Writs is imperfect, and contains none of the returns to parliament which are highly important. Prynn's Parliamentary Writs are imperfect and ill arranged, and the Rolls of Parliament published under the record commission of 1800, having been printed from transcripts in Lincoln's Inn Library instead of from the originals, are full of inaccuracies and clerical errors; it was therefore determined to reprint them. The first volume of this great publication appeared in 1827, and embraces the writs of summons, writs for elections to parliament and returns, and writs of expenses; also the writs of military summons, and other valuable records during the reign of Edward I. The work is rendered useful and easy of reference by an abstract, alphabetical digest, and calendar; the writs are printed in the body in fac-simile with the abbreviations of the original. The body of the work is prefaced by a "Chronological Abstract," accurately stating the date and the particular description of each instrument in chronological order, and referring to the page in the body where it is to be found. Then follows a calendar "of writs and returns," arranged according to the alphabetical order, of the counties and boroughs sending members, showing the date and place of the parliament, and the names of the members. There is also an accurate alphabetical digest of the names of every individual named in the collection of records, stating succinctly in what capacity and at what date he appears on the records, and referring to the page in the body where the record naming him is to be found; and an index to this digest makes it easy of reference. When this elaborate work is complete, it will compose a body of valuable materials for historical and antiquarian deductions, arranged with great perspicuity and unwearied labour.

RECOVERY.

The commission still continues in force, but the number of commissioners has been reduced. Valuable as its labours may have been they have been purchased at a very dear rate, having already cost the country nearly 400,000*l.*

A like commission is in force for Ireland. See 54 Geo. 3. c. 113, for vesting part of the King's Inns Dublin, in his majesty, as a repository for public records there. See also the 57 Geo. 3. c. 62. § 1, by which the records of certain offices abolished by that act are to be removed to this repository; and the lord lieutenant is empowered to give directions for the safe custody, preservation, and arrangement of all records relating to Ireland.

The system of records in Scotland is such as not only to preserve deeds, to give publicity to titles, and to the burthens by which lands are affected; but also to produce all the effects of an action, and to give a decree which may be the foundation of process capable of attaching the person or estate of a debtor. See 49 Geo. 3. c. 42, for better regulating the public records of Scotland: and 55 Geo. 3. c. 70, for the better regulating the formation and arrangement of the judicial and other records in the court of session.

RECORDARI FACIAS LOQUELAM, (frequently abbreviated re-fa-lo.) A writ directed to the sheriff to remove a cause, depending in an inferior court, to the King's Bench or Common Pleas; and it is called a recordari, because it commands the sheriff to make a record of the plaintiff and other proceedings in the county-court, and then to send up the cause. F. N. B. 71; 2 Inst. 339.

This writ is in the nature of a certiorari: on which the plaintiff may remove the plaint, from the county-court without cause; but a defendant cannot remove it without cause shown in the writ, as on a plea of freehold, &c. If the plaintiff is in another court, neither plaintiff nor defendant can remove it without cause. Wood's Inst. 572.

If a plea is discontinued in the county, the plaintiff or defendant may remove the plaint into the Common Pleas or King's Bench by recordari, and it shall be good; and the plaintiff may declare on the same, and the court hold plea thereof. New Nat. Br. 158.

The form of this writ in the register is, et recordum illud habeas, &c. But in a recordari to remove a record out of the court of ancient demesne, the writ shall say, loquellam et processum, &c. And there is a writ to call a record, &c. to an higher court at Westminster, called recordo et processum mittendis. Tab. Reg. Orig. By the usual writ recordari,—the sheriff is commanded, in his full court, to cause to be record of the plaint which is in the said court between A. and B of, &c. and have that record before the justices at Westminster, the day, &c. under the seals, &c. And to the said parties appoint the same day, that they be then there to proceed in that plea as shall be just, &c.

RECORDER, recordator. A person whom the mayor and other magistrates of any city or town corporate, having jurisdiction, and the court of record within their premisses, by the king's grant, associate unto them for their better direction in matters of justice, and proceedings according to law: therefore he is generally a counsellor or other person experienced in the law.

The recorder of London is one of the justices of oyer and terminer, and a justice of peace of the quorum, for putting the laws in execution, for preservation of the peace and government of the city: and being the mouth of the city, he delivers the sentences and judgments of the courts there: and also certifies and records the city-customs, &c. Charters of King Charles II.; Co. Lit. 288. He is chosen by the mayor and aldermen, and attends the business of the city on any warning by the lord mayor, &c. See Certificates, Customs of London, London.

RECOVERY.

RECUPERATIO, from French recouvrer, recuperare.] In a general sense, the obtaining any thing by judgment or trial of law.

A true recovery is an actual or real recovery of any thing, or the value thereof, by judgment; as if a man sue for any land or other thing moveable or immoveable, and have a verdict or judgment for him.

A feigned recovery was a certain form or course set down by law to be observed for the better assuring lands or tenements: and the effect thereof was to discontinue and destroy estates tail, remainders, and reversions, and to bar the entails thereof. West Symb. part 2. tit. Recoveries, § 1.

As already stated under the title Fine of Lands, by the 3 & 4 Wm. 4. c. 74, fines and common recoveries have been abolished, and a simpler mode of proceeding substituted in those cases in which they were formerly necessary. Many years must, however, elapse, before the learning connected with recoveries will become obsolete; consequently the greater portion of the sketch of the law upon the subject, given in the former editions of this work, is still retained.

The power of suffering a common recovery was a privilege inseparably incident to an estate-tail, and could not be restrained by condition, limitation, custom, recognizance, statute, or covenant. See 1 Burr. 81. But the tenant in tail, in order to be entitled to such privilege, must have been tenant in tail in possession, or he must have had the concurrence of the prior freeholder who claimed under the same settlement. 2 Burr. 1072. See more fully, title Tail and Fee Tail.

A true recovery is as well of the value as of the thing; for example—if I buy land of another with warranty, which land a third person afterwards, by suit of law, recovers against me, I have my remedy against him who sold it me, to recover in value, that is, to recover so much in money as the land is worth, or other lands of equal value by way of exchange. F. N. B. 154; Comell. And this rule will be found to pervade the whole of the present doctrine of recoveries.

A common recovery was so far like a fine, that it was a suit or action, either actual or fictitious; and in it the lands were recovered against the tenant of the freehold; which recovery, being a supposed adjudication of the right, bound all persons, and vested a free and absolute fee simple in the recoveror.

Fines and recoveries have long been considered as mere forms of conveyances or common assurances, the theory and original principles of them being little regarded. See 1 Wils.

73 Common recoveries were invented by the ecclesiastics, to elude the statutes of Mortmain; and afterwards encouraged by the flattery of the courts of law, in 12 Edw. 4. in order to put an end to all fettered inheritances, and bar not only estates tail but also all remainders and reversions expectant thereon. See further, Mortmain, Tail and Fee Tail, &c. In addition to what is said under those titles, and title Fine of Lands, the following will serve to develop the original principle of these conveyances; and see Cruise on Recoveries.

A recovery, in a large sense, is a restitution to a former right by solemn judgment. At common law, judgments, whether obtained after a real defence made by the tenant to the writ, or whether pronounced on his default or feint plea, had the same efficacy to bind the right of the land in question; and hence men took an opportunity of making use of the action of the court to their own advantage, and to the prejudice of others, who, though in some cases strangers to the action, yet were interested in the land for which it was brought. 2 Inst. 75, 429.

For, whilst these recoveries were governed by the strict rules of common law, particular tenants, as tenant in dower only, and those who had made leases for years, and those whose wives were entitled to dower, often took advantage of them, and by selling the lands and suffering their purchasers to recover them, thereby defeated the right of those in remainder or reversion, &c., which were inconveniences so great, that it was thought necessary to provide against them by positive laws. Thus the stat. Westm. 2. 13 Edm. 1. c. 3. made provision for him in reversion against the recoveries suffered either by the tenant in dower, by the curtesy, or in tail after possibility of issue extinct, or for life; and by the fourth chapter of this statute, the wife was secured as to her dower; and the statute of Gloucester, 6 Edm. 1. c. 11; and 7 Hen. 8. c. 4; 21 Hen. 8. c. 15. established the rights of termors, and enabled them to falsify such recoveries. See Co. Lit. 104; Kel. 109; F. N. B. 468; Plowd. 57; Doct. & Stud. 15.

But there was no express provision made by any statute to preserve the interest of the issue in tail, or of him in reversion, against a recovery suffered by the donee; yet it seems, that for two hundred years after the making the statute de donis, they were protected by that statute; therefore we find no express resolution, where such recovery was allowed to bar the issue in tail, or those in remainder or reversion, till the reigns of Edward IV. and Henry VII. though in some cases the donee in tail was allowed to change the entail, and even to bar it. See 1 Roll. Abr. 342; Co. Lit. 343; 10 Co. 37; Plowd. 436; 2 Inst. 335; Co. Lit. 374; 4 Leon. 132, 133.

When these recoveries were established as a common conveyance, and the best way of barring the issue in tail, and those in reversion or remainder, the tenant for life began to apply them once more to the prejudice of those who had the inheritance; and though the former statutes gave those who had the inheritance a remedy, yet the provision made by them being tedious and expensive, it was thought proper to make the 32 Hen. 8. c. 31. which declared all such covinous recoveries against the particular tenants to be void, in respect to him in reversion or remainder; and though the judges very reasonably determined recoveries against that act to be not only void, but a forfeiture of the particular estate, because it was a manner of conveyance as much known at that time as a fine or feoffment, therefore, by parity of reason, ought to have the same operation, yet that statute did not fully answer the end for which it was made. Co. Lit. 356 a; 1 Co. 15; Vaugh. 51.

For if A. had been tenant for life, and made a lease for years to B., and B. had made a feoffment in fee, if the feoffee had suffered a recovery, and vouched the tenant for life, this was no void recovery within the statute, because A. the tenant for life was not seised at the time of the recovery, for the feoffment of the termor was a disseisin to A. and him in reversion; and the statute makes recoveries of tenants for life in possession only void against them to whom the reversion then belongs. 10 Co. 45 a; Co. Lit. 362.

Yet where tenant for life bargained and sold his land in fee by indenture enrolled, and the bargainee suffered a recovery, and vouched the bargainor, this was a void recovery, and a forfeiture within the 32 Hen. 8. c. 31; for though the bargain and sale was of the inheritance, yet it passed only an estate for life of the bargainor, which was the greatest estate he could lawfully pass, consequently the reversioner was not divested; therefore the bargainee being a legal tenant for life in possession, the recovery against him, though with a voucher of the bargainor, was void within that act against him in reversion, whose reversion was not turned to a right, as in the former case of a disseisin. 1 Co. 15; 1 Leon. 123.

But the former defect was cured by the 14 Eliz. c. 8. which repealed the said 32 Hen. 8. c. 31. and declared all recoveries (had by agreement of the parties, or by coin) against tenant for life, of any lands whereof he is so seised, or against any other with voucher over of him, to be void as against the reversioners and their heirs.

These statutes made no provision for reversions or remainders expectant on estates tail; therefore, if there were tenant for life, remainder in tail, remainder in fee; and tenant for life suffered a recovery, and vouched the remainder-man in tail, who vouched the common vouchee; this was so far from being a void recovery within those statutes, that the reversion in fee was actually barred by it; for the intended recompense which the remainder-man in tail was to have against the common vouchee, was to go in succession, as the estate-tail would have done; and it could not be a covinous recovery within the act, because the remainder-man in tail joined in it, who might at any time have suffered such a recovery to destroy the remainder in fee. 10 Co. 39 b, 45; Co. Lit. 362 a; 3 Co. 60 b; Cro. Eliz. 562; Moor, 690; Cro. Eliz. 570.

These common recoveries were no sooner allowed by the judges to bar estates-tail, but men began to improve them into a common way of conveyance, and to declare uses on them, as on fines and feoffments. Hence it was, that the statutes which provided against any alienations or discontinuances of particular tenants, provided at the same time against their recoveries; thus the 11 Hen. 7. c. 20. declared all recoveries as well as other discontinuances by fine or feoffment of women tenants in tail, of the gift of their husbands, or their ancestors, void; so a recovery against husband and wife of the inheritance of the wife, without any voucher, was declared to be void within the 32 Hen. 8. c. 28; though the statute said "suffered or done by the husband," for that like a feoffment by baron and feme, was in substance the act of the baron only, and so within the statute; but a common recovery suffered by a feme covert, where her husband joined with her, was good to bar her and her heirs. I. In order to explain the nature of a common recovery, Blackstone gave the following account of its progress: premising that it was in the nature of an action at law, not immediately compromised like a fine, but carried on through every regular stage of proceeding. See 2 Comm. c. 21.

Let us, in the first place, suppose one David Edwards were tenant of the freehold, and desirous to suffer a common recovery in order to bar all entails, remainders, and reversions, and to convey the same in fee-simple to Francis Golding. To effect this, Golding was to bring an action against him for the lands; and he accordingly sued out a writ, called a præcipe quod reddat, because those were its initial or most operative words, when the law proceedings were in Latin. In this writ the demandant, Golding, alleged that the defendant Edwards (here called the tenant) had no legal title to the land, but that he came into possession of it after one Hugh Hunt had turned the demandant out of it. The subsequent proceedings were made up into a record or recovery roll, in which the writ and complaint of the demandant were first recited; whereupon the tenant appeared and called upon one Jacob Morland, who was supposed, at the original purchase, to have warranted the title to the tenant; and thereupon he prayed that the said Jacob Morland might be called in to defend the title which he so warranted. This was called the voucher, vocatio, or calling of Jacob Morland to warranty; and Morland was called the vouchee. Upon this, Jacob Morland, the vouchee, appeared, was impleaded, and defended the title. Whereupon Golding, the demandant, desired leave of the court to impart, or confer with the vouchee in private, which was (as usual) allowed him; and soon afterwards the demandant, Golding, returned to court, but Morland, the vouchee, disappeared or made default. Whereupon judgment was given for the demandant Golding, then called the recoverer, to recover the lands in question against the tenant Edwards, who was then the recoveree; and Edwards had judgment to recover of Jacob Morland lands of equal value, in recompense for the lands so warranted by him, and lost by his default, which was agreeable to the ancient doctrine of warranty. See that title. This was called the recompense or recovery in value. But Jacob Morland having no lands of his own, being usually the cryer of the court (who, from being frequently thus vouched, was called the common vouchee), it is plain that Edwards had only a nominal recompense for the lands so recovered against him by Golding; which lands were now absolutely vested in the said recoverer by judgment of law; and seisin thereof was delivered by the sheriff of the county. So that this collusive recovery operated merely in the nature of a conveyance in fee simple, from Edwards the tenant in tail, to Golding the purchaser.

The recovery here described was with a single voucher only; but sometimes it was with double, treble, or farther voucher, as the exigency of the case required. And indeed it was usual always to have a recovery with double voucher at the least, by first conveying an estate of freehold to any indifferent person against whom the præcipe was brought, and then he vouched the tenant in tail, who vouched over the common vouchee. For if a recovery were had immediately against tenant in tail, it barred only such estate in the premises of which he was then actually seised; whereas if the recovery were had against another person, and the tenant in tail were vouched, it barred every latent right and interest which he might have in the lands recovered. Bro. Abr. tit. Tute, 32; Plowd. 8. If Edwards therefore were tenant of the freehold in possession, and John Barker tenant in tail a remainder, there Edwards first vouched Barker, and then Barker vouched Jacob Morland the common vouchee, who was always the last person vouched, and always made default, whereby the demandant Golding recovered the land against the tenant Edwards, and Edwards recovered a recompense of equal value against Barker, the first vouchee, who recovered the like against Morland, the common vouchee, against whom such ideal recovery in value was always ultimately awarded. See post, II.

This supposed recompense in value was the reason why the issue in tail is held to be barred by a common recovery. For, if the recoveree should obtain a recompense in lands from the common vouchee, (which there was a possibility in contemplation of law, though a very improbable one, of his doing,) these lands would supply the place of those so recovered from him by collusion, and would descend to the issue in tail. Doct. and Stud. b. 1. Dial. 26. This reason also held with equal force as to most remaindermen and reversions, to whom the possibility remained and reverted as a full recompense for the realty which they were otherwise entitled to; but it would not always hold; and therefore the judges were even astuti in inventing other reasons to maintain the authority of recoveries. And, in particular, it was said that though the estate-tail was gone from the recoverer, yet it was not destroyed, but only transferred; and still subsisted, and would ever continue to subsist, (by construction of law,) in the recoverer, his heirs, and assigns; and, as the estate-tail so continued to subsist for ever, the remainders or reversions, expectant on the determination of such estate-tail, could never take place. 2 Comm. c. 21.

To such awkward shifts, such subtle refinements, and such strange reasoning, remarks the learned commentator, were our ancestors obliged to have recourse, in order to get the better of that stubborn statute De donis. The design for which these contrivances were set on foot was certainly laudable.

able, the unripping the fetters of estates-tail. Our modern courts of justice, however, adopted a more manly way of treating the subject: by considering common recoveries in no other light than as the formal mode of conveyance by which tenant in tail is enabled to alienate his lands. And it was therefore avowed by the judges, that the true reason of common recoveries being bars was not the recompense in value, though that was the foundation of almost all the arguments on the subject, but that they were common conveyances. See 2 Lev. 28; Pig. Rec. 14; Vin. Abr. Recovery (A.); Plowd. 514; Bac. Law Tr. 149; Com. Dig. Estates (B. 27.)

Infants were not capable of suffering common recoveries on account of their want of understanding; although, if an infant were permitted to suffer a common recovery in person, he must, as in the case of a fine, and for the same reason, have reversed it during his minority, which must be tried by inspection of the judges, otherwise the recovery would bind him for ever afterwards. But if an infant suffered a common recovery, in which he appeared by attorney, he might reverse it at any time after he attained his full age; as it might be tried by a jury whether he was an infant or not when he appointed an attorney, and which by law an infant is not capable of performing. Cruise on Rec.

It was formerly doubted whether a common recovery bound an infant who appeared by his guardian, and the practice therefore was, when an infant intended to suffer a common recovery, that he and his guardian should petition the king to grant letters under the privy seal to the judges of the court of C. B. directing them to permit such infant to suffer a recovery; but it was still in the discretion of the judges to permit the infant to suffer it or not, according to the circumstances of his case; and if the judges, upon examination, found it necessary, or that it would be advantageous to the infant that he should suffer a recovery, they then admitted persons of known integrity and fortune to appear as his guardians, and to suffer a recovery for him in court. But these sort of recoveries, suffered by privy seal, were afterwards disused, and private acts of parliament universally substituted in their stead. Cruise on Recoveries.

A recovery, as well as a fine, by a feme-covert, was good to bar her, because the præcipe in the recovery answered the writ of covenant in the fine to bring her into court, where the examination of the judges destroyed the presumption that this was done by the coercion of her husband, for then it was presumed they would have refused her. 10 Co. 43, a; 2 Roll. Abr. 395.

Whenever a husband and wife appeared in the court of C. B. to suffer a common recovery, the wife was always privately examined as to her consent. And where a warrant of attorney was acknowledged before commissioners appointed by a writ of dedimus potestatem de alternata faciendo, by a husband and wife, the commissioners were positively directed by a rule of court (11d. Term, 11 Geo. 3.) to examine the wife, separately and apart from her husband, as to her free and voluntary consent to the suffering such recovery. Cruise on Rec.

The king could not suffer a common recovery, for if he did, he must have been either tenant or vouchee; and in both cases the defendant must have counted against him, which the law did not allow. Pig. 74; Plowd. 241.

Idiots, lunatics, and generally all persons of nonsane memory, were disabled from suffering common recoveries, as well as from levying fines; though, if an idiot or lunatic suffered a common recovery, and appeared in person, no averment could afterwards be made that he was an idiot or lunatic. But if he appeared by attorney, it seems that such averment would be admitted upon the same principle that an averment of infancy might have been made against a warrant of attorney, acknowledged by an infant, for the purpose of suffering a common recovery, since the fact of idiocy might have been tried by a jury with as much propriety as the fact of infancy. Cruise on Rec.

Although no averment of idiocy or lunacy can be made against a recovery, where the parties appear in person, yet evidence of weakness of understanding has been admitted on a trial in ejectment, to invalidate a deed to make a tenant to the præcipe for suffering a recovery, and the recovery has in that manner been set aside. Cruise on Rec. See further Fine of Lands, IV.; Idiots and Lunatics, V.

By the 47 Geo. 3. st. 2. c. 8. every person (femes-covert being solely and secretly examined by the lord of the manor or his steward,) might appoint an attorney for the purpose of surrendering any copyhold premises of which a recovery was to be suffered to the use of any person to make him tenant to the plaintiff, and appoint any person to appear as vouchee, and to do any acts requisite for perfecting any such recovery, and direct the demandant in such recovery to surrender the tenements recovered, &c.

By the 59 Geo. 3. c. 80. all persons (feme-coverts being examined separately,) might appoint attorneys to appear for them as tenants to the plaintiff or writ, or as vouchees or vouchees for perfecting common recoveries of such lands, holden in ancient demesne, as were not held by copy of court roll.

As to persons restrained by statute from suffering common recoveries, see ante, the introduction to the present title.

If a man were seised of a reputed manor, which really was no manor, and he suffered a common recovery of this by the name of a manor, this was a good recovery of the lands which constituted the reputed manor, though strictly speaking there was no manor recovered; because the law supported this, as all other conveyances, according to the intention of the parties; for it would have been severe to vacate the conveyance when the purchaser recovered them by the assent of the vendor under such a denomination. 2 Roll. Abr. 396; 6 Co. 64; 2 Roll. Rep. 67; 2 Vent. 32, S. P. See Cro. Eliz. 524, 707; and 1 Kcb. 591, 691, cont.

So, if a recovery were suffered of a manor with its appurtenances, lands which had been reputed parcel of the manor should pass; for it was but equitable, quod voluntas Domini volentis, rem suam in alium transferre rata habeatur; and though the recovery did not mention the lands reputed parcel of the manor, but only the manor itself, yet that was supplied by the indenture, which was of the manor, and all lands reputed parcel thereof, and though occupied together but two years. 1 Sid. 190; 1 Lev. 27; 1 Kcb. 591, 691; 2 Mod. 235.

If a man having a third part of a manor suffered a recovery of a moiety, this was good to pass his interest in the third part; for where the words of a conveyance (which a recovery is agreed to be) contained more than the grantor can convey, it would be an unreasonable interpretation to make this void and entirely useless, when they were sufficient to convey so much as might lawfully pass; so if the recovery had been in this case of the third part of the manor, by the name of the moiety, part and purparty of the manor, this had been good for the whole third part, and not only for a moiety of the third. Cro. Car. 109, 110.

The principal use of a recovery was to enable a tenant in tail to bar not only his estate tail, but also all remainders, reversions, conditions, collateral limitations, and charges not prior to the estate, and to acquire or pass a fee simple in an estate commensurate with the estate of the settlor; but a reversion vested in the crown could not, as generally understood, be barred by a recovery.

A recovery produced other effects, viz. it operated by estoppel, when suffered without a proper tenant to the præcipe, or by persons having contingent or expectant, or other rights or interests, or by expectant heirs, and in some other cases, so as to conclude the parties suffering it, and all persons claiming under them, except issue in tail; it operated as a confirmation of all prior estates or charges made by the tenant in tail who suffered it; it released or extinguished rights, interests, and powers; it destroyed or extinguished contingent remainders and executory interests; it worked a discontinuance to the issue in tail, if not duly suffered by tenant in tail; it revoked devises; it created a forfeiture in many cases where suffered by a tenant for life, or by persons not having the freehold.

A common recovery in the Common Pleas of copyhold lands, would not pass them; though it was said if lands were customary freeholds, and passed by surrender in a borough court, a recovery in C. B. of such lands would be good. 1 Atk. 474; but see contra, 2 Ves. 603. For the method of suffering recoveries of copyholds, see Pig. 100; Bac. Abr. Copyhold, (C).

Recovery might have been suffered of a trust-estate by cestui que trust, as effectually as of a legal estate. 1 P. Wms. 91; 9 Mod. 143; Fearne.

II. 1. THE force and effect of common recoveries may appear, from what has been said, to have been an absolute bar not only of all estates tail, but of remainders and reversions expectant on the determination of such estates. So that a tenant in tail might, by this method of assurance, convey the lands held in tail to the recoveror, his heirs and assigns, absolutely free and discharged of all conditions and limitations in tail, and of all remainders, reversions, charges, and incumbrances dependent upon it. But, though a common recovery barred a contingent remainder, by destroying the particular precedent estate which supported it, yet it did not bar a springing use, nor an executory devise. Pig. 127. And it was a rule that an executory devise could not be prevented or destroyed by any alteration whatsoever in the estate out of which, or after which, it was limited. Fearne, 3d edit. 306. See Executory Devise, Perpetuity. If the remainder were in abeyance, a common recovery would bar it. 6 Co. 42a. A term limited to commence on failure of issue, might also be barred by a recovery. 1 Lev. 35. So a power appendant, or in gross, was barrable by a recovery. Pig. 135. But a recovery would not bar a mortgage, because that was to be considered as a charge upon the estate, and could not be defeated. 2 Atk. 591. Tenant in tail mortgaged for years, and died without suffering a recovery, the mortgage was held not good; but if he had suffered a recovery afterwards, it would have let in the mortgage. 1 Wils. 276. As to the operation of recovery in general, by letting in all the preceding incumbrances, and rendering valid all the preceding acts of tenant in tail, see Pig. 120; Cruise on Rec. 159. And as to the mode formerly adopted of guarding against a recovery's letting in the incumbrances of the remainder-man, see 1 Inst. 203, b. in n.

By the 34 & 35 Hen. 8. c. 20. no recovery had against tenant in tail of the king's gift, whereof the remainder or reversion is in the king, should bar such estate tail, or the remainder or reversion of the crown. See Tail and Fee-tail. And by the 11 Hen. 7. c. 20. no woman, after her husband's death, should suffer a recovery of lands settled on her by her husband; or settled on her husband and her by any of his ancestors. And by the 14 Eliz. c. 8. no tenant for life of any sort could suffer a recovery so as to bind them in remainder or reversion. For which reason, if there were tenant for life, with remainder in tail, and other remainders over, and the tenant for life were desirous to suffer a valid recovery, either he, or the tenant to the præcipe by him made, must have vouched the remainder-man in tail, otherwise the recovery was void; but if he did vouch such remainder-man, and he appeared and vouched the common vouchee, it was then good; for if a man were vouched and appeared, and suffered the recovery to be had against the tenant to the præcipe, it was as effectual to bar the estate tail as if he himself were the recoveree. Salk. 571.

In all recoveries it was necessary that the recoveree or tenant to the præcipe as he was usually called, should be actually seised of the freehold, else the recovery was void. Pigot, 28; 6 T. R. 708. For all actions to recover the seisin of lands must be brought against the actual tenant of the freehold, else the suit will lose its effect; since the freehold cannot be recovered of him who has it not. And, though these recoveries were in themselves fabulous and fictitious, yet it was necessary that there be actores fabulæ, properly qualified. But the nicety, thought by some modern practitioners to be requisite in conveying the legal freehold, in order to make a good tenant to the præcipe, was removed by the provisions of the 14 Geo. 2. c. 20. which enacted, with a retrospect and conformity to the ancient rule of law, that, though the legal freehold were vested in lessees (for life), yet those who were entitled to the next freehold estate in remainder or reversion might make a good tenant to the præcipe;—that, though the deed or fine which created such tenant were subsequent to the judgment of recovery, yet if it were in the same term, the recovery should be valid in law; and that, though the recovery itself did not appear to be entered, or were not regularly entered on record, yet the deed to make a tenant to the præcipe, and declare the uses of the recovery, should, after a possession of twenty years, be sufficient evidence on behalf of a purchaser for valuable consideration that such recovery was duly suffered. 2 Comm. c. 21. And by this act also, common recoveries should, after twenty years from the time of suffering them, be deemed valid, if it appeared on the face of such recovery that there was a tenant to the writ; and if the persons joining in such recovery had sufficient estate and power to suffer the same; notwithstanding the deed or deeds for making the tenant to the præcipe should be lost, or not appear. For the operation of this statute see 1 Burr. 115 2 Burr. 1074.

Under a devise of land to a trustee and his heirs, out of the rents and profits to pay an annuity to the testator's wife, and the overplus to his nephews, and after his wife's death to the use of his nephews, and the survivor for their lives; remainder to the use of the trustee to preserve contingent uses and estates during their lives; and after their deceases, in trust for the heirs male of the body and bodies of the nephews; and in default of such issue, then to the use of another in fee; the Court of King's Bench held, that the limitation in trust for the heirs male of the nephews was executed by the statute, and therefore united with the prior use executed in them for life; and that a recovery suffered of the whole estate by the survivor of the nephews after the death of the other nephew without issue, and after the death of his own issue, barred the entail, and defeated the subsequent limitation in fee. 11 East, 377.

In consequence of its being required that the tenant to the præcipe should have the freehold, great difficulties were frequently thrown in the way of barring entails, and occasionally serious mischiefs arose. So long as the freehold remained in the tenant for life, or if there were no tenant for life in the tenant in tail, who was to suffer the recovery, there was no difficulty. But it often happened that the freehold was in a trustee, or had been aliened by the tenant for life or tenant in tail, and the person in whom it was vested could not be traced, or refused to concur in making the tenant; sometimes it was a question of construction whether the freehold was vested in trustees. If, under the impression that they had not the freehold, they were not made to join in the conveyance to the tenant, the recovery was void. Not unfrequently, from omitting to investigate the title when a recovery was to be suffered, or from some other cause, it was not known that the freehold was not in a trustee, or that it had been aliened, and from ignorance of this circumstance the recovery was void. These mischiefs could only be remedied by obtaining the concurrence of the person in whom the freehold was vested, and suffering a new recovery. If a recovery was void for want of a proper tenant to the præcipe, and the defect was not discovered in the lifetime of the tenant in tail who suffered it, the evil was incurable, and the estate was lost by the persons claiming under the recovery. See 1 Pres. on Conv. p. 28.

When a tenant in tail in remainder was desirous of suffering a recovery, he was at the mercy of the person having the freehold, who had it in his power to withhold his assent. There were instances of this power being abused, and of the person having the freehold extorting from the remainder-man a consideration for his concurrence. This sometimes occurred when the freehold continued in the first tenant for life, who might or might not be connected with the remainder-man; but it more frequently occurred when the freehold was vested in an alienee, who was generally a stranger. There were cases in which great skill and caution were requisite in making the tenant to the præcipe, in order to preserve powers, rights, and interests, which might otherwise have been prejudiced or extinguished, as the following examples will show. If a tenant for life conveyed to a tenant to the præcipe, to enable a remainder-man in tail to suffer a recovery, he would, without caution, extinguish the powers annexed to his estate for life, and let in upon his own estate the incumbrances of the remainder-man. The expedients adopted to prevent this mischief were extremely subtle and artificial. By similar expedients a tenant for life, with a contingent remainder in tail either to himself or his children, might assist a remote remainder-man in tail in suffering a recovery without destroying the contingent remainder. If a person having either an estate tail or an estate for life, with a contingent remainder to his children, (but as not unfrequently happened, it was doubtful which,) was desirous of barring his supposed estate tail by a recovery, but at the same time wished to prevent the forfeiture of his supposed life estate, and the destruction of the contingent remainder, a different contrivance, no less artificial, was resorted to. In recoveries of copyholds most of these precautions were unnecessary.

After the demandant had obtained judgment in a recovery, a writ of seisin was sued out to be executed by the sheriff of the county where the lands lay, and he returned that he had executed the writ, and delivered seisin of the lands to the demandant. But this was a false return, for the writ was never executed, and seisin was never in fact delivered. So that where the law required that the demandant should recover against the actual tenant of the freehold, when he had recovered the lands, it failed in the final object of the action, namely, that of giving him possession. Thus the suit was to commence with all the formalities of a real action, but to end with dispensing with the only object of those formalities, namely, to give to the demandant the lands sued for. See The First Report of the Real Property Commissioners, 20—25.

As to the use of the single and double voucher, it has been already observed, that the tenant who lost the land had, on his vouching over, a recompence in value adjudged against him, which was to go in the same succession as the voucher would have done: now a recovery with single voucher was sufficient to bar an estate-tail, where the tenant in tail was tenant to the præcipe, and seised of the lands in tail at the time of the præcipe brought against him; for the recompence in value must have followed the descent of the land which he lost, and when that proved to be the estate tail, then the law was supposed to have required for it, consequently not prejudiced by the recovery; but because a single voucher could bar only the estate which the tenant was seised of at the time of the præcipe brought, and not any right which he had, it was found necessary to admit the use of a double voucher; for if such tenant in tail discontinued the tail, and took back an estate, or disseised the discontinuee, a recovery against him with a voucher over could not bar the estate-tail; for the recompence came in lieu of the land recovered, which was the defeasible estate, consequently the issue had nothing in value for the estate-tail, without which he could not be barred. Bro. tit. Recovery. Yelv. 51; 3 Co. 5; Moor, 256.

But if in that case tenant in tail after disseisin had, either by fine or release made a tenant to the præcipe, and came in himself as vouchee, and then vouched over the common vouchee; such double voucher had been sufficient to bar the tenant in tail, and his heirs, of every estate of which he was at any time seised; for when the tenant in tail came in as vouchee, it was presumed he would, and he had an opportunity to set up every title he had, to defeat the demandant; and since what he offered was not sufficient to bar the demandant, the court took it for granted he had no other title than what he set up, therefore would give him but one recompence for all. 3 Co. 6, b; Plowd. 8; Cro. Eliz. 562; Poph. 100; Moor, 365; Hob. 263.

Thus we see how estates-tail were barred by recoveries, and the uses of the single and double voucher; and in that respect the operation of a recovery was correspondent to that of a fine, for they were but different ways of transferring estates-tail for security of purchasers; but the operation of a fine differed from a recovery in respect to strangers who had reversions or remainders expectant on estates-tail; for a fine did not bar them, unless they omitted to make their claim within five years after the estate-tail was spent, and their reversion or remainder becomes executed; but a recovery reached them immediately, and at the same time barred the estate-tail and all reversions and remainders on account of the supposed and imaginary recompence. Co. Lit. 372, a; 2 Roll. Abr. 396; Moor, 156; Bro. tit. Recovery, 28, 55.

And as a common recovery suffered by tenant in tail barred all reversions and remainders expectant, so it avoided all charges, leases, and incumbrances made by those in reversion or remainder, and the recoveror should enjoy the land, free from any charge, for ever; as where he in remainder on an estate-tail, granted a rent-charge, and the tenant in tail suffered a recovery; it was adjudged, that the grantee could not distrain the recoveror; for since the rent was only at the first good, because of the possibility of the grantor's remainder coming in possession, when that possibility ceases, by the recovery of tenant in tail, such grant must then become void. Moor, 158; Cro. Eliz. 718; 1 Co. 62; 2 Roll. Abr. 396; Moor, 154; 4 Leon. 150, &c.; Poph. 5, 6. See ante, II.

Tenant to the præcipe might have been either by fine, feoffment, lease and release, or by bargain and sale enrolled. Wils. 281. See further, Vin. Abr. Recovery (U.); Com. Dig. Recovery, (B. 3.): Pig. 65, 72. As to the doctrine of tenant to the præcipe by disseisin, see 1 Burr. 60; 2 Burr. 1065. Tenant to the præcipe made by fine, recovery suffered, fine reversed; yet held a good recovery, for there was a tenant at the time. 2 Salk. 568. For if the person against whom the præcipe was brought, were, at the time when the præcipe was sued, or at any time before judgment, actual tenant of the freehold, it was immaterial what became of it afterwards. 1 Inst. 203 b, in n.

Though there was no tenant to the præcipe, the recovery was good against the party who suffered it, by way of estoppel; though not against remainder-men or strangers. 10 Mod. 45. And though the tenant for life kept the possession, yet the recovery would be good. Pig. 41. And a surrender by tenant for life should be presumed on a recovery of 40 years' standing. 2 Stra. 1129, 1267; see 2 Burr. 1069.

It was no objection to a recovery with double voucher, that the tenant jointly vouched the tenant for life and remainder-man in tail, who vouched over the common vouchee. 2 Taunton, 59.

In a recovery, if the acknowledgment of the vouchee was taken abroad, a notarial certificate made to authenticate the affidavit of the commissioners, must have distinctly stated that the affidavit was sworn. 2 Taunton, 205.

3. If fines or recoveries were levied or suffered without any good consideration, and without any uses declared, they, like other conveyances, enured only to the use of him who levied or suffered them. Dyer, 18. And if a consideration appeared, yet as the most usual fine, "sur cognizance de droit come ceo, &c." conveyed an absolute estate, without any limitations, to the cognizee: (see Fine,) and as common recoveries did the same to the recoveror; these assurances could not be made to answer the purpose of family settlements, (wherein a variety of uses and designations is very often expedient,) unless their force and effect were submitted to the direction of other more complicated deeds, wherein particular uses can be more particularly expressed. The fine or recovery itself, like a power once gained in mechanics, might be applied and directed to give efficacy to an infinite variety of movements, in the vast and intricate machine of a voluminous family settlement. And, if these deeds were made previous to the fine or recovery, they are called deeds to lead the uses; if subsequent, deeds to declare. As, if A. tenant in tail, with reversion to himself in fee, would settle his estate on B. for life, remainder to C. in tail, remainder to D. in fee; this was what, by law, he had no power of doing effectually, while his own estate-tail was in being. He therefore usually, after making the settlement proposed, covenanted to levy a fine, (or, if there were any intermediate remainders, to suffer a recovery,) to E., and directed that the same should enure to the uses in such settlement mentioned. This was a deed to lead the uses of the fine or recovery; and the fine when levied, or recovery when suffered, enured to the uses so specified, and no other. For though E. the cognizee or recoveror, had a fee-simple vested in himself by the fine or recovery; yet, by the operation of this deed, he became a mere instrument or conduit-pipe, seised only to the use of B., C. and D. in successive order: which use was executed immediately by force of the statute of uses. Or, if a fine or recovery were had without any previous settlement, and a deed were afterwards made between the parties declaring the uses to which the same should be applied, this would be equally good, as if it had been expressly levied or suffered in consequence of a deed directing its operation to those particular uses. For by the 1 & 2 Ann. c. 16. indentures to declare the uses of fines and recoveries, made after the fines and recoveries had and suffered, were good and effectual in law, and the fine and recovery should enure to such uses, and be esteemed to be only in trust; notwithstanding any doubts that had arisen on the statute of frauds, 29 Car. 2. c. 3. to the contrary. See 2 Comm. c. 21. and the appendix in that volume; and post, tit. Uses.

III. THE judgment obtained in a common recovery being a matter of record, and similar in almost every respect to a judgment in an adversary suit, can only be reversed by a writ of error: but no person has a right to bring such writ of error, unless he has an immediate interest in the lands whereof the recovery was suffered; though the right of bringing such writ is not forfeited to the crown on an attainder for high treason. Cruise on Rec.

As a common recovery can only be reversed by writ of error, or some proceeding of a similar nature, to which none are entitled, but those who have an immediate interest in the lands, the law allows all strangers, whose interests are affected by a recovery, to falsify it, by action, entry, or plea. Thus, where a recovery has been suffered by tenant in tail, although the issue in tail cannot enter, because the recovery operates as a discontinuance, yet he may bring his action; and if the recovery is pleaded against him, he may falsify by pleading matter to avoid it; but in cases of this kind he is restrained, in the same manner as in a writ of error, from pleading any thing contrary to the record. Cruise on Rec. cites Booth, 77.

As to the remedies for termors affected by recoveries, see ante, the introduction to this title.

A recovery ought not to be reversed unless writs of scire facias are issued against the terre-tenants and the heir: because the errors in a recovery ought not to be examined until all the parties interested in supporting it be before the court: but this circumstance is discretionary, and not stricti juris. 3 Mod. 119, 274; Holt, 614.

Nothing can be assigned for error in a common recovery which contradicts the record: and therefore no incapacity in a vouchee can be assigned for error, where he appeared in person: but if a vouchee appears by attorney, an averment may then be made, either that such vouchee died before the day on which judgment was given; or that he laboured under some personal disability, which rendered him incapable of suffering a recovery. See 1 Wils. 42; 4 Rep. 7; Cro. Eliz. 739. and ante, 1.

By the 23 Eliz. c. 3. no recovery (fine, &c.) shall be reversed for false or incongruous Latin, rasure, interlining, misentering of a warrant of attorney, or not returning of the sheriff, or other want of form in words, and not in matter or substance. And by the 10 & 11 Wm. 3. c. 14. no recovery (fine, or judgment in a real action, &c.) shall be reversed or avoided, for any error or defect therein, unless the writ of error, or suit for reversing such recovery, &c. be brought and prosecuted with effect within twenty years after such recovery suffered, &c. Saving the right of infants, femes covert, &c. so as they bring their writ of error within five years after their disabilities removed. By this latter statute, a writ of error must be brought within twenty years after the recovery has been suffered, and not within twenty years after the title has accrued. Cruise on Rec.

Recoveries are in certain cases permitted to be amended in order to avoid their being reversed, on a point of form only. But the court of C. P. will not grant leave to amend an affidavit only: it must appear on the face of the deed, to lead the uses, that there is sufficient ground for an amendment; and that all parties interested assent at the time of the amendment. See 1 H. Blackst. 73; 1 Bos. & Pul. 187; 2 Bos. & Pul. 560, 578, 580, n. 455; 3 Bos. & Pul. 362; 2 New Rep. C. P. 431; 6 Taunton, 73, 145, 171.

The court will not amend a warrant of attorney, which is the deed of the party. 6 Taunton, 373, 652. But where vouchee's warrant of attorney omitted to express in the body thereof against whom the plea of land was, but it appeared who the defendant was, by the præcipe engrossed at the foot of the warrant, the court held that the authority must refer to the plea described by the præcipe, and permitted the recovery to pass. Id. 373.

See 3 & 4 Wm. 4. c. 74, post, as to the cases in which recoveries are now valid without amendment.

Where a recovery is suffered of lands held in ancient demesne, it must be reversed by writ of deceit. See Ancient Demesne.

And for the provisions of the 3 & 4 Wm. 4. c. 71. with respect to recoveries suffered in the Common Pleas of lands in ancient demesne, see Fine of Lands, VII.

A common recovery suffered in a copyhold court can only be reversed by petition to the lord, in the nature of a writ of false judgment. But it seems that the lord of a manor is not in all cases, bound to allow of any proceedings on such a petition. See Show. P. C. 67; 1 Vern. 367.

A common recovery may also be invalidated, circuitously, by evidence on a trial in ejectment.

Although a common recovery can only be reversed by the Court of Common Pleas in the first instance, and by the judges of the two other courts in the Exchequer Chamber (see upon a writ of error from the Court of Common Pleas (see Error), yet the Court of Chancery can in fact invalidate a common recovery, where it appears to have been obtained by fraud or imposition, by compelling the recoveror to convey the estate to the person who is entitled in equity to have it, or by declaring the recoveror to be a trustee for such person. And a court of equity will also restrain the operation of a common recovery to those purposes for which it was intended, and will not allow it to have a more extensive effect. 2 Eq. Abr. 695; Pre. Chan. 485; and see Fine of Lands, VII.

It has been already observed (see ante, I.), that a recovery suffered by an infant in person shall not bind; but though he may avoid it, yet it cannot be done by any entry in pais, but by writ of error, and this too during his minority; for the judgment of the court being on record, must be set aside by an act of equal notoriety; but an infant may avoid a recovery by writ of error, as well where he comes in as vouchee, as where he is tenant to the præcipe; for though (strictly speaking) the recovery is not against him where he is not tenant to the præcipe, yet for the greater security of the purchaser, and to strengthen the recovery by the use of the double voucher, the person who really has the right to the land in demand, comes in as vouchee; and then, by vouching over the common vouchee, has one recompense for all his titles; consequently, if he be the person who really loses the land, he ought in reason to reverse the recovery, as well where he comes in as vouchee, as where he is seised of the land and is tenant to the præcipe. 1 Roll. Abr. 742; 1 Lev. 342.

If tenant in tail within age has come in as vouchee by attorney in a common recovery, he in remainder may assign this for error, for he is party in interest to the recovery; and where a man's interest is bound by another's act, it is but reasonable he should be allowed to free himself from the mischief by taking advantage of any error in it. 1 Roll. Abr. 755, 796.

In a writ of error to reverse a recovery, suffered by an infant, who appeared by guardian, the error assigned was in the entry of his admission by guardian, viz. quod I. B. sequatur pro J. S.; whereas it was objected, that since the infant was tenant to the writ, it ought to have been entered that the guardian was admitted to defend for the infant; but this exception was disallowed, because the words ad sequend. for the infant, signify the same with ad defendend.; for ad sequend. is to follow and attend the business and suit of the infant; and the guardian being assigned to do that, must likewise have been assigned to take care of or take upon him the defence of the infant's suit. 2 Saund. 94, 95; 1 Mod. 48.

In error to reverse a recovery, the errors assigned were, 1. that the writ of entry was brought of an advowson of a rectory, and of a rent issuing out of the rectory, which was a locus petiti, therefore the writ vicious; but this was disallowed, because the advowson and rectory are different things; so he who has the advowson has only the right of presentation; but he who has the rectory has the profits of the church, out of which the rent issues; consequently there can be no locus petiti in this case, because by the demand of the advowson of the rectory, and of the rent issuing out of the rectory, the demandant recovers more than by a demand of the rectory only. Another error assigned was in the demand of a rent or pension of four marks issuing out of the rectory, which was so uncertain a demand, a pension being a different thing from a rent, and recoverable in the spiritual court; but this was disallowed, because it is plain there is but one sort of four marks demanded, and the pension or rent must be synonymous here, because they are demanded as issuing out of the rectory; therefore the pension cannot be of the nature of an annuity, which charges the persons only, because it is expressly to issue out of the rectory. Poph. 29; 5 Co. 41 a.

In a writ of error to reverse a common recovery, the error insisted on was, that the warrant of attorney of the vouchee bore date before the summoneas ad warrantizand. issued, yet the judgment was affirmed, because the vouchee may come in, if he will, before the summoneas ad warrantizand. and make his attorney; therefore, to support the common recovery, it shall be presumed the vouchee was present in court, and appointed his attorney; and so the dedimus for the warrant and the summoneas ad warrantizand. void. 1 Sid. 213; 1 Lev. 180; Raym. 70.

Part of the proceedings (taken in France) on a recovery, were written on paper; the documents were in French, and there was a translation certified by a notary, written on parchment: the court refused to allow it to pass, on the ground that the notary should have made an affidavit that he was acquainted both with the French and English languages, as well as that the translation was faithful; and that the French documents ought to have been written on parchment. 3 M. & P. 28.

By the 3 & 4 Wm. 4. c. 74. § 8. if it shall be apparent, from the deed making the tenant to the writ of entry or other writ for suffering a common recovery already suffered or hereafter to be suffered, that there is in the exemplification, record, or any of the proceedings of such recovery, any error in the name of the tenant, demandant, or vouchee in such recovery, or any misdescription or omission of lands intended to have been passed by such recovery, the recovery, without any amendment of the exemplification, record, or proceedings in which such error, misdescription, or omission shall have occurred, shall be as good and valid as the same would have been if there had been no such error, misdescription, or omission.

By § 10. no common recovery already suffered or hereafter to be suffered shall be invalid in consequence of the neglect to enrol in due time a bargain and sale purporting to make the tenant to the writ of entry or other writ for suffering such recovery, provided such recovery would have been valid if the bargain and sale had been duly enrolled.

And by § 11. no common recovery already suffered or hereafter to be suffered shall be invalid in consequence of any person in whom an estate at law was outstanding having omitted to make the tenant to the writ of entry or other writ for suffering such recovery, provided the person who was the owner of or had power to dispose of an estate in possession, not being less than an estate for a life or lives in the whole of the rents and profits of the lands in which such estate at law was outstanding, or the ultimate surplus of such rents and profits, after payment of any charges thereon, and whether any surplus after payment of such charges shall actually remain or not, shall, within the time limited for making the tenant to the writ for suffering such recovery, have conveyed or disposed of such estate in possession to the tenant to such writ; and an estate shall be deemed to be an estate in possession, notwithstanding there shall be subsisting prior thereto any lease for lives or years, absolute or determinable, upon which a rent is reserved, or any term of years upon which no rent is reserved.

For the other provisions of the above act relating to recoveries, particularly those whereby recoveries have been abolished, see Fine of Lands, VII., Tail.

RECOUPE, from the French recouper.] The keeping back or stopping something which is due; and in our law we use it for to defalk or discount; as if a person had a rent of ten pounds out of certain lands, and he disseised the tenant of the land; in an assise brought by the disseisee, if he recovered the land and damages, the disseisor should recoupe the rent due in the damages; so of a rent-charge issuing out of land paid by the tenant to another, &c. might recoupe the same. Terms de Ley; Dyer, 2. See Set off.

RECTA PRISA REGIS. The king's writ to prisage or taking of one butt or pipe of wine before, and another behind the mast, as a custom for every ship laden with wines. Edward I. in a charter of many privileges to the barons of the cinque ports discharged them of this duty. Concili. See further, titles Customs on Merchandize, Prisage.

RECTITUDO. Right or justice. Sometimes it signifies legal dues, a tribute or payment. Leg. Ed. Confess. c. 30; Leg. Hen. 1. c. 6.

RECTO, right; breve de recto, a writ of right, which was of so high a nature, that as other writs in real actions were only to recover the possession of the land, &c. in question; this aimed to recover the seisin and the property, and thereby both the rights of possession and property were tried together. Co. Lit. 158. See Writ of Right.

It had two species, writ of right patent and writ of right close: the first was so called, because it was sent open, and was the highest writ of all others, lying for him who had a fee simple in the lands or tenements sued for, against tenant of the freehold at least, and in no other case. F. N. B. 1, 2, &c. But this writ of right patent seems to have been extended farther than originally intended, for a writ of right of dower, which lies for tenant in dower, is patent, as appears by F. N. B. 7. And the like may be said in some other cases. Table Reg. Orig. Also there was a special writ of right patent in London, otherwise termed a writ of right according to the custom, which lay of lands or tenements within the city, &c. The writ of right patent was likewise called breve magnum de recto. Reg. Orig. 9; Fleta, lib. 5. c. 32.

If a person seised in fee-simple died seised of such estate, and a stranger abated and entered into the land, and deforced the heir, the heir might sue a writ of right patent against the tenant of the freehold of the same land, or an assize of mort d'ancestor. 11 Ass. 17.

In a writ of right patent, the demandant was to count of his own seisin, or of the seisin of his ancestor, if one brought the writ as heir to an ancestor, he might lay the seisin and esplees as in pernancy of the profits of the lands in his ancestors; and where it was brought by a bishop or body politic, seisin of the esplees is to be laid in themselves, or in their predecessors. New Nat. Brev. 10.

A writ of right close was brought where one held lands and tenements by charter in ancient demesne, in fee-simple, fee-tail, or for term for life, or in dower, and was disseised; it was directed to the bailiff of the king's manors, or to the lord of ancient demesne, if the manor were in the hands of a subject, commanding him to do right in his court: this writ was also called breve parvum de recto. F. N. B. 11; Reg. Orig. 9; Britton, c. 120.

Where a writ of right close was directed to the lord of whom the lands were holden, and he would not hold his court to proceed on it, a writ should issue requiring him to hold his court, &c. And if the lord held his court, but would not do the demandant right, or delay it, the plea might have been removed by the writ called tolt into the county court of the sheriff, and from thence by recordari into the Common Pleas. New Nat. Brev. 6, 7.

Glanvil seems to make every writ, whereby a man sued for any thing due unto him, a writ of right, c. 10—12.

All writs of right, with the exception of a writ of right of dower, are now abolished. See further, Writ of Right.

RECTO DE ADVOCATIONE ECCLESIAE. A writ which lay at common law, where a man had right of advowson of a church, and the parson of the church dying, a stranger presented his clerk to the church; the party who had the right, not having brought his action of quare impedit nor darrein presentment, but having suffered the stranger to usurp on him; and it lay only where an advowson was claimed in fee to him and his heirs. F. N. B. 30. See Advowson, III. 3 Comm. c. 16.

RECTO DE CUSTODIA TERRÆ ET HÆREDIS. A writ of right of ward of the land and heir. A writ which lay for him whose tenant, holding of him in chivalry, died in nonage, against a stranger who entered on the land, and took the body of the heir. By the 12 Car. 2. c. 24. it became useless as to lands holden in capite, or by knight's service; but not where there was guardian in socage, or appointed by the last will and testament of the ancestor.

Guardian in socage was always entitled to an action of ravishment of ward (ravishment de gard, see that title,) if his ward or pupil were taken from him; but then he must have accounted to his pupil for the damages he so recover. Hale on F. N. B. 139. This writ has, however, been altogether abolished by the 3 & 4 Wm. 4. c. 27. § 36. For the form, see in F. N. B. 139; Reg. Orig. 161.

RECTO DE DOTE. A writ of right of dower, which lies for a woman who has received part of her dower and demands the residue against the heir of the husband or his guardian. F. N. B. 7, 8, 147; Co. Lit. 32, 38. See Dower.

RECTO DE DOTE UNDE NIHIL HABET. A writ of right of dower whereof she hath nothing, which lies in case where the husband having divers lands or tenements hath assured no dower to his wife, and she thereby is driven to sue for her thirds against the heir or his guardian. Old Nat. Brev. 6; Reg. Orig. 170. See Dower.

RECTO QUANDO (or QUIA) DOMINUS REMISIT CURIAM. A writ of right when or because the lord hath remitted his court, which lay where lands or tenements in the seignior of any lord were in demand by a writ of right; if the lord in such case held no court (or had waived his right) at the prayer of demandant or tenant, but sent to the king's court his writ to put the cause thither for that time (saving to him at other times the right of his seignior), then this writ should issue out for the other party, and had its name from the words therein contained. F. N. B. 16. See Writ of Right.

RECTO DE RATIONABILI PARTE. A writ of right of the reasonable part, which lay between privies in blood, as brothers in gavelkind, sisters, and other coparceners, for land in fee-simple. If there were two sisters, and the ancestor died seised of land in fee, and one of the sisters entered into the whole, and deforced the other, she who was deforced should have the writ of right de rationabili parte, to have her reasonable or proportionable part; and if where there were two sisters, after the death of the ancestor they entered and occupied in common as coparceners, and then one of them deforced the other to occupy that which was appendant or appurtenant to the messuage, &c. which they had in coparcenary, she who was deforced should have this writ. Also, if the ancestor were disseised of lands, and died, and one sister entered into the whole land, and deforced her sister, she should have the writ against her other sister: for it lay as well on a dying seised of the ancestor, if one sister entered on all, as where the ancestor did not die seised; and it was a writ of right patent, &c. F. N. B. 9; New Nat. Brev. 19, 20.

In this writ the demand should be of a certain portion of land, to hold in severalty; and voucher and view did not lie in it, because of the privacy of blood; but in a rationabili parte the view was granted, anno 15 H. 8. for that the ancestor did not die seised, &c. The process on the writ, after removing into C. B., was summons, grand cape, and petit cape, &c. F. N. B. 9. See Booth on Real Actions.

RECTO SUR DISCLAIMER. Right on disclaimer. A writ which lay where the lord, in the Court of Common Pleas, avowed on his tenant, and the tenant disclaimed to hold of him; on which disclaimer the lord should have this writ; and if he averred and proved that the land was holden of him, he recovered back the land from the tenant for ever. This writ was grounded on the statute of Westm. 2. c. 2; Old Nat. Brev. 150. See Disclaimer.

The three last-mentioned writs have all been recently abolished. See Limitation of Actions, I. II.

RECTOR, Lat.] A governor. Rector ecclesiæ parochialis is he who hath the charge and cure of a parish church. It has been held that rector ecclesiæ is one who hath a parsonage where there is a vicarage endowed. And when dioceses were divided into parishes, the clergy who had the charge in those places were called rectors; afterwards, when their rectories were appropriated to monasteries, &c. the monks kept the great tithes; but the bishops were to take care that the rector's place should be supplied by another, to whom he was to allow the small tithes for his maintenance, and this was the vicar. See Parson, Vicar.

RECTORIAL TITHES. See Tithes.

RECTOR, rectoria. Is taken pro integrâ ecclesiâ parochiali, cum omnibus suis iuribus, feodis, decimis, altisque proventuum speciebus. Spelm. Also the word rectoria hath been often applied to the rector's mansion or parsonage-house. Paroch. Antig. 549. See Parson, Parsonage.

RECTUM. Right; anciently used for a trial or accusation. Bract. lib. 3.

RECTUM ESSE. See Rectus in Curia.

RECTUM ROGARE. To ask for right; to petition the judge to do right. Leg. Inae, c. 9.

RECTUM, stare ad rectum. To stand trial at law, or abet, by the justice of the court. Hord. 655.

RECTUS IN CURIA. Right in court; one who stands at the bar, and no man objects any offence against him. Smith de Repub. Angl. lib. 2, c. 3. When a person outlawed hath reversed the outlawry, so that he can participate of the benefit of the law, he is said to be Rectus in Curia.

RECUSANTS. Are persons who wilfully absent themselves from their parish church, and on whom heavy penalties were imposed by various statutes, passed in the reign of Elizabeth and James I. See Dissenters, Nonconformists, Oaths.

RED, Sax. ræd. Advice; Redbana is one who advised the death of another. See Deobana.

RED BOOK OF THE EXCHEQUER, Liber rubens Scaccarii. An ancient record, wherein are registered the names of those who held lands per baroniam in the time of Hen. II. Riley, 687. It is a manuscript volume of several miscellaneities, in the keeping of the king's remembrance, in his office in the Exchequer; and hath some things (as the number of the hides of lands in many of our counties, &c.) relating to the times before the Conquest. There is likewise an exact collection of the escheques under King Hen. I., Ric. II., and King John; the ceremonies used at the coronation of Queen Eleanor, wife to King Hen. III., &c. and entries of several ancient charters of liberties, granted by the earliest kings of England.

REDDENDUM. Is used substantively for the clause in a lease, whereby the rent is reserved to the lessor; which anciently consisted of corn, flesh, fish, and other victuals. 2 Rep. 72.

In debt for rent, the plaintiff declared on a lease made August 25, 11 Wm. 3. of a messuage, &c. for seven years to commence from the 24th day of June before; reddendum quarterly at Michaelmas, St. Thomas's day, Lady-day, and Midsummer, 3*l.* 10*s.* sterling, the first payment to be made at Michaelmas then next; and assigned for breach that 14*l.* of the rent was in arrear for one year, ending 24th December, anno 18 Wm. And on demurrer to this declaration, it was objected that on this lease there was no year could be ended on the 24th of December, but on St. Thomas's day, according to the reddendum; which was held to be true, because where special days are limited in the reddendum, the rent must be computed from those days, not according to the habendum; and that the rent is never computed from the habendum, but when the reddendum is general, i. e. paying quarterly so much. 1 Salk. 141. See Deed, II.; Lease, Rent.

REDDIT SE, hath rendered himself. Where a man procures bail for himself to an action in any court at law; if the party bailed at any time before the return of the second scire facias against the bail, renders himself in discharge of his bail, they are thereby discharged. 2 Lall. Abr. 430. See Bail, Scire facias against Bail.

REDDITARIUS. A renter; redditarium, a rental of a manor, or other estate. Cartular. Abbat. Glaston, MS. 92.

REDDITION, redditio. A surrendering or restoring; being also a judicial acknowledgment that the thing in demand belongs to the demandant, and not to the person so surrendering. See Stat. Antig. 34 & 35 Hen. 8. c. 24.

REDITOS ASSISUS. A set or standing rent. See Assises.

REDEEMABLE RIGHTS. Those rights which return to the conveyor or disposer of land, &c. upon payment of the sum for which such rights are granted. See Mortgage, Rent-Charge, &c.

RE-DELIVERY. A yielding and delivery back of a thing: if a person has committed a robbery, and stolen the goods of another, he cannot afterwards purge the offence by any re-delivery, &c. Co. Litt. 69; H. P. C. 72. See Larceny, Robbery.

RE-DEMISE. A re-granting of lands demised or leased. See Demise and Re-demise.

REDEMPTION, redemptio. A ransom or commutation. By the old Saxon laws, a man convicted of a crime paid such a fine according to the estimation of his head, pro redemptio sua. Redemption is also applied to the payment of mortgages, &c. See that title.

RE-DISSISEIN, re-dissaisin. A disseisin made by him, who once before was found and adjudged to have disseised the same man of his lands or tenements; for which there formerly lay a special writ called a writ of disseisin. Old Nat Br. 106; F. N. B. 188. See Assise of Novel Disseisin, Disseisin.

REDRESS OF INJURIES. The more effectually to accomplish the redress of injuries, courts of justice are instituted in every civilized society, in order to protect the weak from the insults of the stronger; by expounding and enforcing those laws, by which rights are defined, and wrongs prohibited: this remedy is therefore principally to be sought by application to these courts of justice; that is, by civil suit or action. 3 Comm. 2.

REDUBBERS. Those that bought stolen cloth, and turned it into some other colour or fashion, that it might not be known again. Britton, c. 29; 3 Inst. 134; Stat. Wallie, 12 Edw. 1, c. 4.

REDUCTION. The Scotch term for an action for the purpose of repealing or rendering null and void some deed or claim against the party.

REDUCTION, and REDUCTION-IMPROBATION. The reduction is a reassignatory action by which deeds, services, decrees, or illegal acts by any body corporate, may be rendered void. The action of reduction has a certification which renders the deed called for, and not produced, incapable of receiving any effect until it be produced. The action of improbation is founded on actual forgery, and the certification thereon has the effect of rendering the deed called for, and not produced, for ever void and null. The junction of two actions, which forms what is called the reduction improbation, confers on the simple reduction all the efficacy of the improbation, and secures the person who uses it from all future trouble from the deed called for, if it be not produced in the action. Bell's Scotch Dict.

RE-ENTRY, from the Fr. reentrer, rursus intrare. The resuming or retaking a possession lately had; as if a man makes a lease of lands, &c. to another, he thereby quits the possession; and if he covenants with the lessee that, for non-payment of the rent at the day, it shall be lawful for him to re-enter, this is as much as if he conditioned to take again the lands into his own hands, and to recover the possession by his own act, without assistance of the law. But words in a deed give no re-entry, if a clause of re-entry be not added. Wood's Inst. 140.

One may reserve a rent on condition in a feoffment, lease, &c. that if the rent is behind he shall re-enter, and hold the lands till he is satisfied, or paid the rent in arrear; and in this case if the rent is behind, he may re-enter; though when the feoffee, &c. pays or tenders on the lands all the arrears, he may enter again. And the feoffor, &c. by his re-entry, gaineth no estate of freehold, but an interest, by the agreement of the parties to take the profits in the nature of a distress. here the profits shall not go in part of satisfaction of the rent; but it is otherwise if the feoffor was to hold the land till he was paid by the profits thereof. Litt. 327; Co. Litt. 203.

The distinction, when the profits taken by the lessor after entry are, and when they are not, to be in satisfaction of the rent, is not admitted in equity; for the courts of equity will always make the lessor account to the lessee for the profits of the estate during the time of his being in possession of it: and decree him, after he is satisfied the rent in arrear, and the costs, charges, and expences attending his entry, and detention of the lands, to give up the possession to the lessee; and deliver and pay him the surplus of the profits of the estate, and the money arising thereby. 1 Inst. 283, (a) in n.

All persons who would re-enter on their tenants for non-payment of rent, are to make a demand of the rent; and, to prevent the re-entry, tenants are to tender their rent, &c. 1 Inst. 201. If there is a lease for years, rendering rent, with condition, that, if the lessee assigns his term, the lessor may re-enter; and the lessor assigneth, and the lessor receiveth the rent of the assignee, not knowing or hearing of the assignment, he may re-enter notwithstanding the acceptance of the rent. 3 Rep. 85; Cro. Eliz. 553. See further, Rent.

A feoffment may be made upon condition, that if the feoffor pay to the feoffee, &c. a certain sum of money at a day to come, then the feoffor to re-enter, &c. Litt. § 322. See Entry, Use.

RE-EXCHANGE. The like sum of money, payable by the drawer of a bill of exchange which is returned protested, as the exchange of the sum mentioned in the bill is back again to the place whence it was drawn. Lex Mercat. 98. See Bill of Exchange.

RE-EXTENT. A second extent on lands or tenements, on complaint that the former was partially made, &c. Broke, 213. See Extent.

RE-FA-LO. The abbreviation of recordari facias loquelam; see that title.

REFARE, from Sax. reaf, or rufan.] To bereave, take away, or rob. Leg. Hen. 1. c. 83.

REFERENCE. The sending any matter by the Court of Chancery to a master; and by the courts at law to a prothonotary, or secondary, to examine and report to the court.

In Chancery, by order of court, irregularities, exceptions, matters of account, &c. are referred to the examination of a master of that court. An original or amended bill may also be referred for scandal or impertinence.

In the court of B. R. matters concerning the proceedings in a cause by either of the parties, are proper matters of reference under the secondary, and for him in some ordinary cases to compose the differences betwixt them; and in others to make his report how the matters stand, that the court may settle the differences according to their rules and orders.

If a question of mere law arises in the course of a cause in Chancery, as whether by the words of a will an estate for life or in tail is created; or whether a future interest devised by a testator shall operate as a remainder on an executory devise; it is the practice of that court to refer it to the opinion of the judges of the Court of K. B. or C. P. upon a case stated for that purpose, wherein all the material facts are admitted, and the point of law is submitted to their decision, who thereupon have it solemnly argued by counsel on both sides, and certify their opinion to the chancellor: and on such a certificate the decree is usually founded. It seems that the Master of the Rolls, sitting for the Chancellor, may make such a reference; but not when sitting at the Rolls. 2 Bro. C. C. 88. The Court of Exchequer is both a court of law and equity: therefore, if a question of mere law arises in the course of the exercise of its equitable jurisdiction, the barons will decide upon it in that suit, without referring it to another jurisdiction. 3 Comm. 452, 3, and n.

As to reference to arbitration, see Arard.

REFERENDARY, referendarius.] An officer abroad of the same nature as masters of request were to the king among us; the referendaries being those who exhibit the petitions of the people to the king, and acquaint the judges with his commands. And there was such an officer in the time of the English Saxons here. Spelman.

REFORMATION OF RELIGION. The change from the Catholic to the Protestant religion, and the destruction of the power of the pope in these kingdoms, which commenced in the reign of Henry VIII., and was established, after some interruption, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, and finally sanctioned at the Revolution on the abdication of James II. See Church, Uniformity, &c.

In Scotland what is called the Reformation took place in 1560, and was established by the act 1567, c. 2.

REFUSAL. Is where one hath by law a right and power of having or doing something of advantage to him, and he declines it. See Executor.

There is a refusal by the bishop to admit a clerk presented to a church for illiterature, &c.; in which case, if a bishop once refuses a clerk for insufficiency, he cannot accept of him afterwards, if a new clerk is presented. 5 Rep. 58; Cro. Eliz. 27. See Parson, Quare Impedit.

In trover, a demand of the goods, and a refusal to deliver them, must, in some cases, be proved. See Trover.

REGALE EPISCOPORUM. The temporal rights and privileges of a bishop. Brady.

REGAL FISHES. Whales and sturgeon; some add porpoises. See 1 Eliz. c. 5; and ante, tits. King, Queen.

REGALIA, Jura omnia ad Fiscum spectantia; Spelman.] The royal rights of a king, which the civilians reckon to be six, viz. power of judicature; of life and death; of war and peace; masterless goods, as waifs, estrays, &c.; assessments; and minting of money. See King.

The crown, sceptre with the cross, sceptre with the dove St. Edward's staff, four several swords, the globe, the orb with the cross, and other articles used at the coronation of our kings, are commonly called the regalia. See a relation of the coronation of King Charles II. in Baker's Chronicle.

Regalia is sometimes taken for the dignity and prerogative of the king; and these the feudal writers distinguish into the majora and minora regalia; the former comprehending what relates to his power and dignity, the latter to his fiscal or pecuniary prerogatives. 1 Comm. 241. See King, V.

Regalia is also taken for those rights and privileges which the church enjoys by the grants and other concessions of kings, and sometimes for the patrimony of the church. 25 Regalia Sancti Petri, &c. It signifies also those lands and hereditaments which have been given by kings to the church. viz. Cepimus in manum nostram baroniam et regalia que archiepiscopus Eborum de nobis tenet. Prynne, lib. Angl. ii. § 1. These, whilst in the possession of the church, were subject to the same services as all other temporal inheritances, and after the death of the bishop, they of right returned to the king, until he invested another with them; which, in the reign of William the Conqueror, and some of his immediate successors, was often neglected or delayed, and as often the bishops complained thereof. This appears in Ordericus Vitalis, lib. 10, and other writers in those days. Neubrigensis lib. 3, cap. 26. tells us they complained against Henry II. for the same cause.

REGALIA FACERE. To do homage or fealty when he is invested with the regalia. Malmsbury, de Gestis Pontificum, p. 129, de Anselmo.

REGALITY. Was a territorial jurisdiction in Scotland granted with land from the crown. The lands were said to be given in liberam regality, and the persons receiving the right were termed lords of regality. The jurisdiction of the lord of regality was equal to that of the sheriff; but his criminal jurisdiction was much more unbounded, as he was competent to judge in the four pleas of the crown, and possessed the same criminal jurisdiction with the justiciary, excepting in the case of treason; and a criminal amenable to a court of regality might have been repledged from the sheriff, or even from the court of justiciary. These jurisdictions were abolished by the operation of the statute 20 Geo. 2. c. 50.

REGARD, regardum; remardum; Fr. regard; aspectus, respectus. Signifies, generally, any care or diligent respect; yet it hath also a special acceptation, wherein it is only used in matters of the forest, either for the office of regardor, or for the compass of the ground belonging to that office. Crom. Jur. 175, 199. Touching the former, see Manwood, part 1. 191, 198. And touching the second signification, the compass of the regardor's charge is the whole forest; that is, all the ground which is parcel of the forest, for there may be woods within the limits of the forest that are no parcel thereof, and those are without the regard. Manwood, part 2. c. 7, note 1. And see 10 Car. 2. c. 1.

As to the court of regard and the office of regardor, see Forest.

REGARDANT, Fr. regard, marking, v. regard. As a vill in regardant was called regardant to the manor, because he had the charge to do all base services without the manor, and to see the same free of all things that might annoy it. This word is only applied to a villen or tith, yet in old books it was sometimes attributed to servants. 1 Inst. 120. A villen regardant, it seems, was rather so called because annexed to the manor, regarding or relating to it. See Tenure, Villen.

REGARDER, regardator, Fr. regardier, spectator. The officer of the king's forest, who is sworn to make the regard of it; and has been used in ancient time to view and inquire of all offences of the forest, as well of vert as of venison; and of concealment of any offences or defaults of the foresters, and all other officers of the king's forest, relating to the execution of their offices, &c. Cromp. Jurisd. 159; Manwood.

This officer was ordained in the beginning of the reign of Henry II. Regarders of the forest must make their regard before any general sessions of the forest, or justice seat, can be holden, when the regarders go through the forest, once every halfweek, to see and inquire of the trespasses therein; ad videndum, ad inquirendum, ad ostendendum, ad certificandum, &c. Manw. part 1. p. 191. A regardor may be made either by the king's letter patent, or by any of the justices of the forest, at the general view, or such times as the regard is to be made, &c. Manw. See Forest.

REGAL INCONSULTO. A writ issued from the king to the judges not to proceed in a cause which may prejudice the king, without the king being advised.

James I. granted an officer C. B. to sue Mitchell, and thereupon Brownlow, chief protonotary, brought an assize against him; and the defendant Mitchell obtained the king's writ to the judges, requiring the grant of this officer, commanding them not to proceed regal inconsulto. And it was argued against the writ that the court might proceed, because the writ doth not mention that the king had a title to the thing in dispute, nor any prejudice which might happen to the king if they should proceed:—the cause was compromised. Moor, 844.

A writ of regal inconsulto may be awarded, not only for the party to the plea, but on suggestion of a stranger, on cause shown that the king may be prejudiced by the proceeding, &c. Jenk. Cent. 97.

A writ of regal inconsulto does not lie but when it appears plainly to the court that the party's title is in disaffirmance of the king's title. Hudr. 179.

When the defendants will not pray in aid, this writ is in nature thereof, to inform the court how it concerns the crown, and to inhibit their proceedings. See 9 Rep. 16 a; Cro. Eliz. 417. Where the tenant or defendant does not pray in aid, but a writ de domino rege inconsulto is brought, and directed to the judges, and it appears to the court that the cause is not available or sufficient in law, the court ought to disallow the writ and proceed in the action; and if the cause appears to the court to be just and lawful, and not brought for delay, then the judges ought to surcease. See 2 Inst. 209; And. 280; Mo. 421. And further, Fin. Abr. tit. Rege inconsulto.

REGIAM MAJESTATEM. A collection of the ancient laws of Scotland. Another of these books is entitled Quoniam Attachamenta, both being termed from the initial words. The Regiam Majestatem is said to have been compiled by order of David I. king of Scotland, who reigned from 1124 to 1153.

REGIO ASSENSU. A writ whereby the king gives his royal assent to the election of a bishop. Reg. Orig. 294.

REGISTER, more correctly registrar, registrarius. An officer who writes and keeps a registry. See Registry.

REGISTER is the name of a book wherein are entered most of the forms of writs, original and judicial, used at common law, called the Register of Writs. Coke affirms that this register is one of the most ancient books of the common law. Co. Litt. 159.

Blackstone terms it the most ancient and highly venerable collection of legal forms, upon which Fitzherbert's Natura Brevium is a comment; and in which every man who is injured will be sure to find a method of relief exactly adapted to his own case described in the compass of a few lines, and yet without the omission of any material circumstance. 3 Comm. 183.

REGISTRY, registrum, from the old Fr. gister, i. e. in lecto reponere. Properly the same with repository. The office books and rolls wherein the proceedings of the Chancery or any spiritual court are recorded, &c. are called by this name.

REGISTRY, or REGISTER OF THE PARISH CHURCH, registrum ecclesie parochialis. That wherein baptisms, marriages, and burials, are registered in each parish every year; which was instituted by Lord Cromwell, anno 13 Henry VIII., while he was vicar-general to that king.

The acts in force relating to parish registers are the 6 & 7 Wm. 3. c. 6; 9 & 10 Wm. 3. c. 35. § 4; and the 52 Geo. 3. c. 146. By the latter act, copies of these parish registers are to be subscribed by the minister and churchwardens, and transmitted yearly to the registrar of every diocese.

Parish registers, although not originally intended for the purposes of evidence, are generally admissible in support of the facts to which they relate, for they are made by persons in an official situation, whose duty it is to make the entries accurately of the facts immediately within their own knowledge. The evidence, however, afforded by these registers, is of a very defective and limited nature, and the want of a general registration of births, marriages, and deaths, is severely felt. In 1834 a select committee of the House of Commons was appointed to investigate the subject, which, after examining a number of witnesses, made a report expressing a decided opinion that a new national system of registration should be attempted. Soon afterwards a bill, chiefly based on the recommendations of the committee, was introduced into the Commons by Mr. W. Brougham, and was pending at the time the sessions was adjourned.

REGISTER, OR REGISTRY OF DEEDS. The registering of deeds and incumbrances is a great security of titles to purchasers of lands, and to mortgagees; and some laws have been made requiring the same.

By the 2 Ann. c. 4. a registry is to be kept of all deeds and conveyances affecting lands executed in the West Riding of Yorkshire, and a public office erected for that purpose; and the register is to be chosen by freeholders having 100*l.* per annum, &c. The 6 Ann. c. 35. ordains, that a memorial and registry of all deeds, conveyances, wills, &c. which affect any lands or tenements, shall be made in the East Riding of the county of York; and the register is to be sworn by the justices in quarter sessions, and every leaf of his book signed by two justices.

By the 8 Geo. 2. c. 6. a registry shall be of all deeds made in the North Riding of the county of York. Memorials of wills must be registered within six months after the death of the testator: the register neglecting his duty, or guilty of fraudulent practices, shall forfeit his office and pay treble damages; and persons counterfeiting any memorial, &c. be liable to the common penalties of forgery.

By the 7 Ann. c. 20. a memorial and registry is to be made of all deeds and conveyances, and of all wills, whereby lands are affected, &c. in the county of Middlesex, in the like manner as in the West and East Ridings of Yorkshire.

Deputy of the chief clerk of the King's Bench appointed a register for Middlesex instead of the chief clerk. 25 Geo. 2. c. 4.

It is provided by the 5 Ann. c. 18. and subsequent statutes, that bargains and sales may be inrolled with the register, and shall be as valid as if inrolled according to the 27 Hen. 8. c. 16. See Bargain and Sale, Inrolment.

By the above statutes, deeds, conveyances, and wills, shall be void against subsequent purchasers or mortgagees, unless registered before the conveyances under which they claim; also no judgment, statute, or recognizance, shall bind any lands in those counties but from the time a memorial thereof shall be entered at the register's office; but the acts do not extend to copyhold estates, leases at a rack-rent, or to any leases not exceeding twenty-one years, where the possession goes with the lease, nor to any chambers in the inns of court.

The expediency of establishing a general registry for deeds throughout the kingdom was very fully considered a few years ago by the Real Property Commissioners, who, in their second report, expressed a strong opinion in its favour, and drew out a plan of the register, which they recommended to be adopted. A bill founded on their report was subsequently introduced into the House of Commons by the then attorney-general, Sir John Campbell, but was rejected; and a similar fate befel it in the following sessions.

In Scotland registration has the effect of giving a creditor a lien on the effects of a debtor, and entitling him to the effect of a decree for the same.

REGIUS PROFESSOR. A royal professor, or reader of lectures in the universities, founded by the king. King Henry VIII. was the founder of five lectures in each university of Oxford and Cambridge, viz. of Divinity, Greek, Hebrew, Law, and Physic; the readers of which are called in the university statutes Regii Professores.

REGNI POPULI. A name given to the people of Surrey and Sussex, and on the sea-coasts of Hampshire. Blount.

REGNUM ECCLESIASTICUM. In some countries, formerly, the clergy held there was a double supreme power, or two kingdoms in every kingdom; the one a Regnum Ecclesiasticum, absolute and independent of any but the pope over ecclesiastical men and causes, exempt from the secular magistrate; the other a Regnum Seculare of the king or civil magistrate, which had subordination and subjection to the ecclesiastical kingdom: but these usurpations were exterminated here by Henry VIII. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 321.

REGRATOR, regratarius. It originally signified one who bought provisions in order to sell them again for gain; and such person was considered anciently as an enemy to the community. It is now confined to persons buying and selling again in the same market, or within four miles thereof. See Spelm. v. Regratarius, and ante, tit. Forestaller.

REGRESS, LETTERS OF. These were granted by the superior of lands mortgaged to the wadsetter or mortgagor. Their object was this:—by the wadset or mortgage the mortgagor was completely divested, and when he redeemed he appeared to claim an entry from the superior as a stranger; and the superior was no more bound to receive the mortgagor than he could have been forced to receive any third party; to remedy this, letters of regress were granted by the superior, under which he became bound to re-admit the mortgagor at any time when he should demand entry. Bell's Scotch Dict. See now the 20 Geo. 2. c. 50.

REGULARS, regulares. Such as professed to live under some certain rule; as Monks, or canons regular, who ought always to be under some rule of obedience. See Clergy.

REGULUS, SUBREGULUS. Words often mentioned in the councils of the English Saxons. The first signifies Comes, the other Vicecomes. But in many places they signify the same dignity; as in the old books in the archives of Worcester cathedral. Conell. See Subregulus.

REHABERE FACIAS SEISINAM, Quando Vicecomes liberavit seisinam de majore parte, quam deberet. A writ judicial, of which there is another of the same name and nature. Reg. Judic. 13, 51, 54. It lay when the sheriff in the habere facias seisinam had delivered more than he ought.

REHABILITATION, rehabilitatio. A restoring to former ability. It was one of those exactions claimed by the pope heretofore in England by his bull or brief for re-enabling a spiritual person to exercise his function who had been disabled. See 25 Hen. 8. c. 21. and tit. Pope, Rome.

REIF, Sax. refian, spoliare. Robbery. Conell.

REJOINDER, rejoinctio. The answer or exception of a defendant in any action to the plaintiff's replication. It ought to be a sufficient answer to the replication, and follow and enforce the matter of the bar pleaded. Abr. 433. See Departure, Pleading.

RELATION, relatio. Is where, in consideration of law, two different times or other things are accounted as one; and by some act done, the thing subsequent is said to take effect by relation from the time preceding; as if one deliver a writing to another to be delivered to a third person as the deed of him who made it, when such third person hath paid a sum of money: now, when the money is paid, and the writing delivered, this shall be taken as the deed of him who made and delivered it, at the time of its first delivery, to which it has relation (see tit. Deed, III. 7; Escrow; and so things relating to a time long before shall be as if they were done at that time. Terms de Ley; Shep. Epit. 837.

This device is most commonly to help acts in law, and make a thing take effect; and shall relate to the same thing the same intent, and between the same parties only; and it shall never do a wrong, or lay a charge upon a person that is no party. Co. Litt. 190; 1 Rep. 99; Plowd. 168. 2 Vent. 200.

When execution of a thing is done, it hath relation to the thing executory, and makes all but one act to record, although performed at several times. 1 Rep. 199. See Execution, Judgment, &c.

Sale of goods of a bankrupt by commissioners shall have relation to the first act of bankruptcy, and be good, notwithstanding the bankrupt sells them afterwards. See Bankrupt.

If an infant or feme covert disagree to a settlement to them made, when they are of age, or discover it, it shall relate, as to this purpose, to discharge them of damages from the time. 3 Rep. 29; Co. Litt. 310. See Infant, &c.

Letters of administration relate to the death of the intestate, and not to the time when they were granted. Stylr. 341. See Executor. When the wife is endowed of lands by the heir, she shall be in immediately from the husband by relation. 36 Hen. 6. 7. See Dower.

It is a rule in pleadings, grants, &c. Ad proximum antecedens fiat relatio; but that rule has an exception, (viz.) nisi impediatur sententia. And it hath been held, that this rule hath many restrictions, i. e. fiat relatio, so as there is no absurdity or incongruity; therefore it is always secundum subjectam materiam. Hurd. 77; 3 Salk. 199. See also the argument in Thelluson's Will case, 1 Bos. & Pul. 374.

RELATOR, Lat.] A rehearser or teller; applied to an informer. See Information, Quo Warranto.

RELEASE.

RELAXATIO. The gift or discharge of a right of action, which any one hath or claimeth against another, or his land. Tomes de la Ley.

An instrument whereby estates, or other things, are extinguished, transferred, abridged, or enlarged. West. Symbol. part 1. l. 2. § 50. And whereby a man quits and renounces that which he before had. Com. Dig. tit. Release.

A RELEASE OF LAND is classed by Blackstone among the secondary or derivative sort of conveyances; and is by him defined to be, a discharge or conveyance of a man's right in lands or tenements to another that hath some former estate in possession. See further Conveyance, Dead, Lease and Release.

The words generally used in such releases are remised, released, and for ever quit claimed. See post, II.

- I. Of Releases generally.
- II. Of the Words and Ceremony required in a Release; and how far a Covenant, Agreement, or a Disposition by Will, may operate as a Release.
- III. What shall be released by a Release of all Claims and Demands.
- IV. What shall be released by a Release of all Actions and Suits; and of all Right and Title in Land.
- V. How far a Possibility, or contingent Interest, or Demand, may be released.

I. THERE is a release in fact and a release in law. Perkins' Grants, 71. A release in fact is that which the very words expressly declare. A release in law is that which doth acquit by way of consequence or intendment of law. How these are available, and how not, see Littlton at large, l. 3. c. 8. Cowell.

A release is the giving or discharging of a right of action which a man hath claimed, or may claim, against another, or that which is his; or it is the conveyance of a man's interest or right which he hath to a thing to another who hath possession thereof, or some estate therein. 1 New Str.

According to Co. Litt. releases are distinguished into express releases in deed, and those arising by operation of law; and are made of lands and tenements, goods and chattels; or of actions real, personal, and mixt. 1 Inst. 264, a.

Releases of land may enure or take effect in various ways; either, first, by way of enlarging an estate, (enlarger l'estate), when the possession and inheritance are separated for a particular time, and he who hath the reversion or inheritance releases to the tenant in possession all his right and interest. Such release is said to enlarge his estate, and to be equal to an entry and feoffment, and to amount to a grant and attornment. 1 Inst. 267, n. Thus, if there be tenant for life or years, remainder to another in fee, and he in remainder releases all his right to the particular tenant and his heirs, this gives him the estate in fee. Litt. § 405. But in this case the release must be in possession of some estate for the release to work upon; for if there be a lessee for years, and he in fee enters and is in possession, the lessor releases to him all his right in the reversion, such release is void for want of possession in the lessee. Litt. 459.

When it is said, however, that a release which enures by enlargement cannot work without a possession, it must be understood to mean, not that an actual estate in possession is necessary, but that a vested interest suffices for such a release to operate upon. By comparing this with the operation of a lease and release, (see that title,) it will be seen that not only estates in possession, but estates in remainder and reversion, and all other incorporeal hereditaments, may be effectually granted and conveyed by lease and release; but it is an inaccuracy to say that the lessee, in these cases, is in the actual possession of the hereditaments; the right expression is, that they are actually vested in him by virtue of the lease of possession and the statute. 1 Inst. 270, (a), n. 3.

To make releases operate by enlargement, it is generally necessary that the lessee, at the time the release is made, should be in actual possession of, or have a vested interest in, the lands intended to be released; that there should be a privity between him and the lessor; and that the possession of the lessee should be notorious. To this latter circumstance, however, the statute of uses furnishes an exception, exemplified in the operation of a lease and release: where the bargainee has a vested interest, immediately after the execution of the bargain and sale, without any entry, attornment, or other act of notoriety whatsoever; though at common law, till entry or attornment, the lessee was not capable of a release. But, from the general principles above noticed, tenant by elegit or statute merchant is not capable of a release that is to operate by enlargement; while tenants in dower, or by the curtesy are; as they have the notoriety of possession and privity of estate with respect to the lessor. See 1 Inst. 273, (a), in n.

Secondly, By way of passing an estate, (mitter l'estate); as when one of two coparceners releaseth all her right to the other, this passeth the fee-simple of the whole. 1 Inst. 273.

In both these cases there must be a privity of estate between the lessor and lessee; that is, one of their estates must be so related to the other as to make but one and the same estate in law. 1 Inst. 272, 273; 2 Comm. c. 20.

Thirdly, By way of passing a right, (mitter le droit); as if a man be disseised, and releaseth to his disseisor all his right; hereby the disseisor acquires a new right, which changes the quality of his estate, and renders that lawful which before was tortious or wrongful. Litt. § 466.

Releases of this kind must be made either to the disseisor, his feoffee, or his heir. In all these cases, the possession is in the lessee, the right in the lessor, and the uniting the right to the possession completes the title of the lessee. But the different degrees of title in the disseisor, his feoffee, or his heir, give the releases made to them different operations. They all agree in this respect, that no privity is required, or indeed can from the nature of the case exist between them and the lessor. 1 Inst. 274, (a), in n.

At common law, lands could not be transferred from one to another but by feoffment with livery of the seisin. This produced a notoriety of the transmutation of the possession. This notoriety was, in some measure, effected by a disseisin; but that was only a tortious possession, liable to be defeated by the disseisee. Thus the disseisor had the possession, the disseisee the right. To complete the title of the disseisor it was necessary he should acquire the right. This could not be done by a feoffment, as that was a transfer of the possession; but it was effected by a release, which in this case operated as an actual transfer of the right. 1 Inst. 264, (a), in n.

Thus in the case of a release, per mitter le droit, when made to the feoffee of the disseisor, the feoffee is in by title, his estate cannot be divested or disaffirmed but by an act equal to that which created it. A release does not affect his possession or title, but discharges it from the right of the lessor; so that, whether the whole fee is in the feoffee, or carved out into particular estates, it remains unaltered by the release, except as it is discharged by it from the right of the releasor. 1 Inst. 275, (a), in n. In the case of a release to the heir of the disseisor, it is to be observed, that a disseisor has a mere naked possession, unsupported by any right; and that the disseisee may restore his possession, and put a total end to the possession of the disseisor by entry. But though the feoffee of the disseisor comes in by title, still the right of possession remains in the disseisee, and he may equally enter on the feoffee as on the disseisor; so that a release, per mitter le droit, gives both to the disseisor and his feoffee the right of possession, and the right of property. But if the disseisor dies, the entry of the disseisee is taken away, and a presumptive right of possession is in the heir; so that the release of the disseisee only passes the right of property. 1 Inst. 277, (a), in n.

Fourthly, By way of extinguishment; as if my tenant for life makes a lease to A. for life, remainder to B. and his heirs, and I release to A.; this extinguishes my right to the reversion, and shall enure to the advantage of B.'s remainder as well as of A.'s particular estate. Litt. § 470. See title Extinguishment. Where the releasee cannot have the thing per mitter le droit, yet the release shall enure, by way of extinguishment, against all manner of persons; as when the lord grants the seigniority to his tenant, such releases absolutely extinguish the rent, &c. although the releasee be only tenant for life. See 1 Inst. 267, (a), in n.; 193, (b); 273, (b).

Fifthly, By way of entry and feoffment; as if there be two joint disseisors, and the disseisee releases to one of them, he shall be sole seised, and shall keep out his former companion; which is the same in effect as if the disseisee had entered, and thereby put an end to the disseisin, and afterwards had enfeoffed one of the disseisors in fee. 1 Inst. 278. It has been already observed, that when a man has in himself the possession of lands, he must at the common law convey the freehold by feoffment and livery; which makes a notoriety in the country; but if a man has only a right or a future interest, he may convey that right or interest by a mere release to him that is in possession of the land; for the occupancy of the releasee is considered as a matter of sufficient notoriety already. 2 Comm. c. 20; and see 1 Inst. 275, (b), in n.

A release is to be adapted to the nature of the case, and the purposes for which the release is intended; so that if a man be disseised of lands or dispossessed of goods, and release all actions, he may, notwithstanding, enter into his lands, or retake his goods, the right and property being still in him, though he has divested himself of his remedy. Hob. 169; 4 Co. 63.

So, where a man has divers means to come to his right, he may release one, and yet take advantage of the other; but if a man has not any means to come to his right but by way of action, there, by a release of all actions, his right by judgment of law is gone, because by his own act he has barred himself of all means to come to it. 8 Co. 152; Co. Lit. 286.

Heretofore releases were construed with much nicety and great strictness; and being considered as the deed or grant of the party, were, according to the rule of law, taken strongest against the releasor. They now receive such interpretation as these grants and agreements do, and are favoured by the judges as tending to repose and quietness. Dyer, 56; Plowd. 289; Heth. 15; 8 Co. 148.

Hence it hath been established as a general rule in the construction of releases, that where there are general words only in a release, they shall be taken most strongly against the releasor; but where there is a particular recital in a deed, and then general words follow, the general words shall be qualified by the special words. 1 Mod. 99; 1 Ld. Raym. 235.

It is necessary, in all cases where a release of lands is made, that the estate be turned to a right; as in a disseisin, &c. where there are two rights, a right of possession in the disseisor, and a right to the estate in the disseisee; now when the disseisee hath released to the disseisor, here the disseisor hath both the rights in him, viz. the right to the estate and also to the possession; or else it is requisite that there be privity of estate between the tenant in possession and the releasor, for a release will not operate without privity. 2 Lit. 435. A release made by one that at the time of the making thereof had no right, is void; and a release made to one that at the time of making thereof hath nothing in the lands, is also void, because he ought to have a freehold, or possession, or privity. Noy's Max. 74.

He that makes a release must have an estate in himself, out of which an estate may be derived to the releasee; the releasee is to have an estate in possession in deed, or in law in the land whereof the release is made, as a foundation for the release; there must be privity of estate between the releasor and releasee; and sufficient words in law not only to make the release, but also to create and raise a new estate, or the release will not be good. 1 Inst. 22. A release to a man and his heirs will pass a fee-simple; and if made to a man, and the heirs of his body, by this the releasee hath an estate tail; but a release of a man's right in fee-simple is not sufficient to pass a fee-simple. 1 Inst. 273.

A release made by deed-poll, of right to lands, &c. needs no other execution than sealing and delivery, and will operate without consideration. But it is convenient to put a valuable consideration therein, lest it should be judged fraudulent by stat. Litt. § 445; Lit. Convey. 230, 248; Cro. Jac. 270. See Consideration.

II. A RELEASE which operates by mitter l'estate is where two persons come in by the same feudal contract as joint tenants or coparceners, and one of them releases to the other the benefit of it. In releases which operate by this mode, the releasee being supposed to be already seised of the inheritance by virtue of the former feudal contract, and the release only operating as a discharge from the right or privity of another, seised under the same contract, words of inheritance in the release are useless. So, in cases of releases per mitter le droit, words of inheritance are not necessary; as the disseisor to whom or to whose feoffee or heir the release is made, (see ante, I.) acquires the fee by the disseisin, and therefore cannot take it under the release. But where the release operates by enlargement, the releasee having no such previous inheritance, and possession being either for life or in fee, (as originally granted,) the release gives the estate to the releasee for his life only, unless it is expressly made to him and his heirs. 1 Inst. 273, (b); 274, (a), in n.

Littleton says, that the proper words of a release are remisio, relaxatio, et quietum clamasse, which have all the same signification. Lord Coke adds, renunciare, acquiescere, and says that there are other words which will amount to a release; as if the lessor grants to the lessee for life that he shall be discharged of the rent, this is a good release. Lit. § 445; 1 Inst. 264; Plowd. 140.

So a pardon, by act of parliament, of all debts and judgments, amounts to a release of the debt, the word pardon including a release. 1 Sid. 261.

An express release must regularly be in writing and by deed, according to the common rule, eodem modo oritur, eodem modo dissolvitur; so that a duty arising by record must be discharged by matter of as high a nature; so of a bond or other deed. Co. Lit. 264, b; 1 Roll. Rep. 13; 2 Leon. 76, 213; 2 Roll. Abr. 408; 2 Sand. 48; Moor. 573, pl. 787.

But a promise by words may, before breach, be discharged or released by word of mouth only. 1 Sid. 177; 2 Sul. 73; Cro. Jac. 485, 620. Vide Cro. Car. 383; 1 Mod. 262; 1 Mod. 259; 1 Sid. 293.

A release of a right in chattels cannot be without deed. 1 Leon. 288.

A covenant perpetual, as that the covenantor will not sue beyond a certain limitation of time, is a defeasance, or absolute release: and this construction has been made to avoid circuity of action; for in such case the party should, contrary to his covenant, sue, the other party would recover precisely the same damages which he sustained by the other's suing; but if the covenant be, that he will not sue at such a time, this does not amount to a release, nor is it pleadable in bar as such, but the party hath remedy only on his covenant. Moor, 23, pl. 80, 811, 1 Roll. Abr. 939; Brig. 118; 2 Balst. 95, 290; Hard. 113, 1 Le. 41; 2 Salk. 573, 575; Carth. 210; 1 Ld. Raym. 419, 611; Cro. Eliz. 152; 1 And. 307; 1 Roll. Abr. 939; Carth. 63; Salk. 375; 1 Show. 46.

So a covenant not to sue on a bond during the life of the obligor, and if any person to whom the chargee should assign the bond should recover the principal, the obligee would pay the obligor interest during his life on the amount recovered, was held no bar to an action by an assignee of the bond in the name of the obligee, since such covenant did not amount to a release. 6 Bing. 547.

So also if the covenant be conditional and the condition not performed; as where a creditor covenanted (in an assignment of effects to trustees for creditors) not to sue the debtors if the trustees fairly accounted for the effects, and the trustees refused to account, the covenant was held not a release of the debts. 2 Chit. 541.

If two are jointly and severally bound in an obligation, and the obligee, by deed, covenants and agrees not to sue one of them; this is no release, and he may notwithstanding sue the other. Cro. Car. 551; March, 95; 2 Salk. 575. Hutton v. Leger, 6 Taunton, 289. And see 3 Burn. & C. 208.

But if two are jointly and severally bound, a release to one discharges the other. 1 Ld. Raym. 420. See 2 Fent. 217; 1 Ld. Raym. 611; 1 Le. 152; and further, tit. Agreement, Bond, Covenant.

It seems agreed, that a will, though sealed and delivered, cannot amount to a release, because it is ambulatory and revocable during the testator's life, and, by reason of the executor's consent, requisite to every disposition of a personal thing by will, and the injury that might accrue to the testator's creditors, were a will allowed to operate as a release. Stil. 286; 1 Fent. 39.

Therefore, where in debt on an obligation, by the representative of a testator, a defendant pleaded that the testator by his last will in writing released to the defendant; this was adjudged ill, and that no advantage could be taken by plea. 1 Stil. 421.

But it hath been held in equity, that though a will cannot enure as a release, yet provided it were expressed to be the intention of the testator that the debt should be discharged, the will would operate accordingly; and that in such case it would be plainly an absolute discharge of the debt, though the testator had survived the legatee. 1 P. Wms. 85; 2 Vern. 52; and see 6 Ves. 519, per the Master of the Rolls.

So, in another case, it was held, that a release by will can only operate as a legacy, and must be assets to pay the testator's debts; and if a debt so released by will be afterwards received by the testator himself in his life-time, the legacy is extinct; and such release by will intimates no more than that the executors should not, after the testator's death, trouble or molest the debtor. 2 P. Wms. 332.

If a debt is mentioned to be devised to the debtor, without words of release or discharge of the debt, and the debtor die before the testator; this will not operate as a release, but will be considered as a lapsed legacy, and the debt will subsist. 2 Vern. 52.

A debt is only a right to recover the amount of the debt by way of action: and as an executor cannot maintain an action against himself, or against a co-executor, the testator, by appointing the debtor an executor of his will, discharges the action, and consequently discharges the debt. Still, however, when the creditor makes the debtor his executor, it is to be considered but as a specific bequest or legacy, devised to the debtor to pay the debt; and therefore, like other legacies, it is not to be paid or retained, till the debts are satisfied; and if there are not assets for the payment of the debts, the executor is answerable for it to the creditors. In this case, it is the same whether the executor accepts or refuses the executorship. On the other hand, if the debtor makes the creditor his executor, and the creditor accepts the executorship, if there are assets, he may retain his debt out of the assets, against the creditors in equal degree with himself; but if there are not assets, he may sue the heir, where the heir is bound. 1 Inst. 264, (b), in n. See Executor, Legacy, Will.

In the case of Smith v. Stafford, (Hob. 216.) the husband promised the wife, before marriage, that he would leave her worth 100*l*. The marriage took effect; and the question was, whether the marriage was a release of the promise: all the judges but Hobart were of opinion, that as the action could not arise during the marriage, the marriage could not be a release of it. The doctrine of this case was admitted in that of Gage v. Acton; which arose upon a bond executed by the husband to the wife, before marriage, with a condition making it void if she survived him, and he left her 1000*l*. Two of the judges were of opinion, that the debt was only suspended, as it was on a contingency which could not, by any possibility, happen during the marriage. But Holt, chief justice, differed from them: he admitted, that a covenant or promise by the husband to the wife, to leave her so much in case she survives him, is good; because it is only a future debt on a contingency, which cannot happen during the marriage, and that is precedent to the debt: but that a bond debt was a present debt, and the condition was not precedent, but subsequent; that made it a present duty, and the marriage was consequently a release of it. The case afterwards went into Chancery. The bond was taken there to be the agreement of the parties, and relief accordingly decreed. See 1 Salk. 825; 12 Mod. 290; 2 Vern. 181. A like decree was made in the case of Camel v. Buckle, 2 P. Wms. 243. See Baron and Feme.

III. LITTLETON says, that a release of all demands is the best release to him to whom it was made; and Coke says, that the word demand is the largest word in law, except claim; and that a release of all demands discharges all sorts of actions, rights and titles, conditions before or after breach, executions, appeals, rents of all kinds, covenants, annuities, contracts, recognizances, statutes, commons, &c. Litt. § 508; Co. Litt. 291.

But notwithstanding the large import of the word demands, yet there are several instances where the generality of the word hath been restrained to the particular occasion for which the release was made.

By a release of all demands, all actions real, personal, and mixed, and all actions of appeal, are extinct. Litt. § 509; 8 Co. 154.

So a release of all demands extends to inheritances, and takes away rights of entry, seizures, &c. Co. Litt. 291. But if the king releaseth all demands, yet as to him the inheritance shall not be included. Bro. Prerogative, pl. 62; Bridge. 124.

By a release of all demands made to the tenant of the land, a common of pasture shall be extinct. Co. Litt. 291.

A release of all demands will bar a demand of a relief, because the relief is by reason of the seigniority to which it belongs. Cro. Jac. 170.

If A. being possessed of goods loses them, and they come to the hands of B. who being in possession, A. by deed releases to B. all actions and demands personal which at any time before habuit vel habere potuit against B. for any cause, matter, or thing whatsoever; this shall bar A. of the property of the goods; so that B. has the absolute right in him by this release. 2 Roll. Abr. 407.

By a release of all demands all manner of executions are gone, for the recoveror cannot sue out a fieri facias, capias, or elegit, without a demand. Litt. § 508; 2 Roll. Abr. 407.

By a release of all demands to the conusor of a statute-merchant, before the day of payment, the conusee shall be barred of his action, because the duty is always in demand; yet if he releases all his right in the land, it is no bar. Co. Litt. 291; Bridgm. 124.

So, a bond conditioned to pay money at a day to come, is a debt and duty presently, and may be discharged by a release of all actions and demands before the day of payment. Cro. Jac. 300.

But in an action of debt for non-performance of an award made for payment of money at a day to come, there is no present debt, nor any duty before the day of payment is come; therefore it cannot be discharged before the day, by a release of all actions and demands. 1 Id. 214; Cro. Jac. 300.

So, if a man devises a legacy of 20*l.* to J. S. at the age of twenty-three, though the legatee, after he attains the age of twenty-one, and before the day of payment, may release it, yet by the word demands, it is not released, but there must be special words for the purpose. 10 Co. 51.

A release of all demands does not discharge a covenant not broken at the time; but a release of all covenants will release the covenant. Cro. Jac. 173; 2 Roll. Abr. 407; Noy, 123. For the difference, when broken or not, see Dyer, 217; Litt. Rep. 86; 3 Leon. 69; 5 Co. 71; Hos's case; 10 Co. 51; Co. Litt. 292; 8 Co. 153; 1 And. 8, 64; and see tit. Covenant.

If a lessee for life grants over his estate by indenture, reserving rent during the continuance of the estate, and afterwards releases to the assignee all demands; this shall discharge the rent, for he had the freehold of the rent in him at the time. 2 Roll. Abr. 408; Cro. Jac. 486; Bridgm. 123; 2 Roll. Rep. 20; Poph. 136.

So, if lessee for years grants over by indenture all his estate, reserving a rent during the term, and afterwards releases to the assignee all demands, this shall release the rent; for though he cannot have an action to demand all the estate, yet this is an estate in him of the rent, and assignable over; and in an action of debt for any arrears after, he shall claim it as a duty accrued from the estate; and it shall not be said that the duty arises annually on taking the profits, but this had its commencement and creation by the reservation of the contract, which was before. 2 Roll. Abr. 408.

If there be lessee for years rendering rent, and the lessor grants over the reversion, and the lessee attorns, and after the lessee assigns over his estate, and after the assignee of the reversion releases all demands to the first lessee, yet this shall not release the rent; for there is neither privity of the estate or contract between them after the assignment; but if the release had been made to the assignee, it had extinguished the rent. 2 Roll. Abr. 408; Moor, 544; Cro. Eliz. 606.

If he who has a rent-charge in fee releases to the tenant of the land all demands from the beginning of the world till the making of the deed of release; this shall discharge all the rent, as well that to come as what is past. 20 Ass. pl. 5; 2 Roll. Abr. 408.

It is said by Littleton and Coke, that by a release of all demands a rent-service shall be released; but this it is said is to be intended of a rent-service in gross, as a seignior. Litt. § 510; Co. Litt. 291. Therefore, where in action of covenant on a lease for years, to pay the rent reserved, the defendant pleaded release by the plaintiff of all demands, at a day before the rent in question became due; the plaintiff replied, that the release was in performance of an award of all matters in controversy between the plaintiff and defendant; and on demurrer it was adjudged, that the rent was not discharged by this release; as it became due by the perception of the profits, and was not like to a rent-charge, or a rent-parcel of a seignior; and that this rent being incident to the reversion, and part thereof, was no more released than the reversion itself; and this construction should the rather prevail, as it was not the intention of the party to release this rent; but Twisden said, that in releases and deeds, when words are heaped up, the party who is to take advantage may take the strongest word, and the strongest sense, and that is the reason they are put in; and as to the intent, that must be gathered from the words, and men must take care what words they use: and he said, he could see no difference between this rent, and a rent in fee, both are rent-services, and neither demandable before they become due, otherwise than as in 40 Ed. 3. 47. it is said, there is a continual demand betwixt lord and tenant; and in this case there is a tenure between the lessee and him in reversion: and the reason why the reversion is not touched by this release is, because it can pass only by way of extinguishment, and not by way of passing an interest; but it was adjudged against the release. 1 Lev. 99, 100; 1 Sid. 141; 1 Keb. 499, 510; see 2 Salk. 578.

Where a release, contained in a deed, recited that A. stood indebted to his creditors in the several sums set to their respective names, and that they had agreed to take fifteen shillings in the pound of him, upon the whole of their respective debts, and in consideration of the payment thereof each and every of them did release him from all manner of actions, debts, claims, and demands in law or equity; this release was held to extend only to the respective debts and all actions touching them: and that the general words had reference to the particular recital, and were restrained by that. 4 M. & S. 423.

A. the mother of B. having entered into a bond on his behalf for 1000*l.*, B. executed an indemnity bond of the same date, conditioned for the payment of 1000*l.*, three months after her decease. A. afterwards made a codicil to her will, by which she relinquished two debts due from B. of 1000*l.* and 500*l.*; and desired him to be punctual in indemnifying her estate against the bond for 1000*l.* Soon after the execution of this codicil, A. executed a release to B., in which (reciting the existence of certain debts of 500*l.*, 480*l.*, and 300*l.* due on bonds, &c.) it was expressed that she had agreed to release B. from those sums, and of and from all and every other sum or sums of money, claims and demands thereby secured, and all other sum and sums of money, claim and demand whatsoever, and released him accordingly from those sums, and all claim on account of those sums, or for, or on account of any other matter, cause, or thing whatsoever; the court of C. P. held that this release did not extend to the indemnity bond; and that no extrinsic evidence could be admitted to explain the intentions of A. as to the release. 1 New Rep. C. P. 113.

A deed inter partes cannot operate as a release to strangers therefore a charter-party between A. and B. in consideration of a former charter-party between A. and C. which charter-party in consideration of the freight B. was to pay was thereby declared null and void, A. agreeing to cancel the first in consideration of the second, &c. and C. was thereby acquitted of all claims which A. might have against him in virtue of the first charter-party, was held not to operate as a release from A. to C. of the first charter-party. 3 M. & S. 308.

IV. A RELEASE of all actions discharges a bond to pay money on a day to come; for it is debitum in presenti, præsens sit solvendum in futuro; and it is a thing merely in action, and the right of action is in him who releases, though no action will lie when the release is made. Co. Litt. 292. See Bond.

But a release of actions does not discharge a rent before the day of payment, for it is neither debitum nor solutum at the time of the release; nor is it merely a thing in action, for it is grantable over. Co. Litt. 292.

So, if a man has an annuity for a term of years, for life, or in fee, and he, before it be in arrear, releases all actions; this shall not release the annuity, for it is not merely in action because it may be granted over. Co. Litt. 292; 1 Bulst. 178; Cro. Eliz. 897; Moor, 113. But such release shall release the arrears incurred before. 39 Hen. 6. 43; 2 Roll. Abr. 404.

By a release of all manner of actions, all actions, as well criminal as real, personal, and mixed, are released. Co. Litt. 287.

A release of actions real is a good bar in actions mixed as assise of novel disseisin, waste, quare impedit, annuity; and so is a release of actions personal. Co. Litt. 284. But not after the grantee has made his election. 1 Jones, 215.

A release of all actions is regularly no bar to an execution; for execution is no action, but begins where the action ends. Co. Litt. 289; 8 Co. 153.

Also a release of all actions does not regularly release a writ of error; for it is no action, but a commission to the justices to examine the record; but if therein the plaintiff may recover, or be restored to any thing, it may be released by the name of action. 2 Inst. 40; Yelv. 209; Co. Litt. 288. But, by a release of all suits, a man is barred of a writ of error. Latch. 110. So, by a release of all suits, a man is barred of execution, because it cannot be had without application to the court, and prayer of the party, which is his suit. Co. Litt. 291; 8 Co. 153.

A release of all actions is a good bar to a scire facias, though it be a judicial writ, for the defendant may plead to it, and it is in nature of a new original given by the statute. Co. Litt. 290; Comb. 455.

So, in replevin, a release of all actions is a good bar, for the avowant is defendant, though in some respects he is plaintiff. 2 Roll. Rep. 75.

So, if a man by wrong takes away my goods; if I release to him all actions personal, yet by law I may take the goods out of his possession. Co. Litt. 286; Skin. 57.

If a man releases all actions, by this he shall release as well actions which he hath as executor, as those in his own right; 39 Ed. 3, 26; 2 Roll. Abr. 101; 2 L. Rep. 1397, S. C. cited by Powell; and said by him to be clearly so, unless there was an action of his own for the release to work upon.

If a man releases all quarrels; a man's deed being taken most strongly against himself, it is as beneficial as all actions, for by it all actions real, personal, and mixed, are released; and all causes of action, though no action then depending. Co. Litt. 292.

Where a lessor, whose bailiff had made a distress for rent, commenced an action in the bailiff's name, and with his consent, against the sheriff, for taking insufficient pledges in replevin, and the bailiff, without the lessor's privity, released the sheriff, and the release was pleaded puis darrein continuance, the Court of Common Pleas set aside the plea. 7 Taunt. 48.

So, where the obligor of a bond, after notice of its being assigned, took a release from the obligee, and pleaded it to an action brought by the assignee in the name of the obligee, the Court of Common Pleas set aside the plea, nor would they under those circumstances suffer the obligor to plead payment to the obligee. Legh v. Legh, 1 Box. & Pull. 447; and see 1 Chitt. R. 390; and tit. Obligation, vol. v.; and 4 N. & A. 419.

If one of several plaintiffs fraudulently release the action, the court will set aside a plea of release; but the fraud must be clearly made out by the affidavits of the party seeking to set aside the release. 1 Young & J. 362; and see 4 Moo. 192; 7 Moo. 356.

The general words in a release are qualified by the recital. Thus, where the release recited that disputes were subsisting between A. and B., about which actions had been brought, and that it had been agreed that each of them should execute a release of all actions, causes of action, claims, and demands, brought by him against the other; it was held, that the release must be confined to actions then depending. 3 B. & Ad. 175. And see 4 M. & S. 423, ante, III.; and 2 B. & A. 38.

If a person release to another all his right which he hath in the land, without using any more words, as, "To hold to him and his heirs, &c." the releassee hath only an estate for life. Dyer, 263. A release made to a tenant in tail, or for life, of right to land, shall extend to him in remainder or reversion. 1 Inst. 207. By release of all a man's right unto lands, all actions, entries, titles of dower, rents, &c. are discharged; though it bars not a right that shall descend afterwards. And a release of all right in such land will not discharge a judgment not executed; because such judgment doth not vest any right; but only makes the land liable to execution. 8 Rep. 151; 3 Salk. 298.

It is said a release of all one's title to lands, is a release of all one's right. Litt. § 509; 1 Inst. 292. By a release of all entries, or right of entry, which a man hath into lands, without more words, the releasor is barred of all right or power of entry into those lands; and yet if a man have a double remedy, viz. a right of entry, and an action to recover, and then release all entries, by this he is not barred and excluded his action; nor doth a release of actions bar the right of entry. Plowd. 484; 1 Inst. 345.

If a disseisee releases to the disseisor all actions; this is no release of his right of entry; for when a man has several means to come at his right, he may release one, and yet take benefit of the other. Co. Litt. 28, b; 8 Co. 141.

V. To prevent maintenance, and the multiplying of contentions and suits, it was an established maxim of the common law, that no possibility, right, title, or any other thing that was not in possession, could be granted or assigned to strangers. A right in action could not be transferred even by act of law; nor was it considered as transferred to the king by the general transferring words of an act of attainder. See 3 Rep. 2, b.

But a right or title to the freehold or inheritance of lands might be released in five manners. 1. To the tenant of the freehold, in fact, or in law, without any privity. 2. To him in remainder. 3. To him in reversion. 4. To him who had right only, in respect of privity; as if the tenant were disseised, the lord, notwithstanding the disseisin, might release his services to him. 5. To him who had privity only, and not the right; as, if tenant in tail made a feoffment in fee, after this feoffment, no right remained in him; yet in respect of the privity only, the donor might release to him the rent and services. So, 6. If the terretenants, and the person entitled to the right or possibility, joined in a grant of the lands, it would pass them to the grantee, discharged from the right or possibility. See 10 Rep. 49, b). But the law is now altered, in the above instances, in many respects. As to the assignment of things in action, see tit. Assignment. A contingent remainder in real estates could only be transferred by a fine and a common recovery, in which the remainder-man came in upon the voucher; but fines and recoveries are now abolished. See Fine of Lands; Recovery; Remainder.

On the principles of the common law above stated, it was held, that an heir at law cannot release to his father's disseisor in the life-time of the father; for the heirship of the heir is a contingent thing, for he may die in the lifetime of the father, or the father may alien the lands. Litt. § 446; Co. Litt. 265, a; 10 Co. 51; Bridgm. 78.

So, if the conusee of a statute released to the conusor all his right to the land, yet he might afterwards sue execution, for he had no right to the land, but only a possibility. 1 And. 133; Co. Litt. 265; 9 Roll. Abr. 405; Cro. Eliz. 552.

So, if a creditor release to his debtor all the right and title which he hath to his lands, and afterwards get judgment against him, he may extend a moiety of the same land; for he had no right to the land at the time of the release, and the land is not bound but in respect to the person. 2 Mod. 281; 2 Lev. 215.

So, if a plaintiff releases all demands to the bail in the King's Bench, and afterwards judgment be given against the principal, execution may be sued against the bail; for that, at the time of the release, there was only a possibility of the bail becoming chargeable. 5 Co. 70; Co. Litt. 265; Moor. 469; Cro. Eliz. 579; Hut. 17; and see Moor. 852.

So, if A. recovers in trespass against B. in B. R., and B. brings a writ of error, pending which A. releases to B. all executions, and afterwards the judgment is affirmed, and new damages given to A. for the delay, (on 3 Hen. 7. c. 10.) this release shall not bar A. to have execution of those damages, because he had not any right to have execution, nor to any duty when the release was made. 2 Roll. Abr. 404; Cro. Jac. 337; 1 Roll. Rep. 11.

If the next presentation to a church be granted to A. and B. and living the incumbent, A. releases all his estate, title, and interest to B., this release is void, it being of a chose in action; otherwise, had the release been made after the avoidance, at which time the interest would have been vested in A. Cro. Eliz. 173, 600; Owen. 85; 1 Leon. 167; 3 Leon. 256; Dyer. 244; 10 Co. 48.

A city orphan cannot at law release her orphanage part to her father, for she hath no right in her during the life of her father; but it hath been held in equity, that such release being for a valuable consideration, as on the marriage of a daughter, and a portion given her by the father, such release may operate as an agreement to waive the orphanage, and hath accordingly been so decreed in equity. 1 P. Wms. 638; 2 P. Wms. 527; Preced. Chan. 545.

If there be a devise of a term for years to A. for life, remainder to B.—B. may release his right to A., and such release shall extinguish his interest, though it was objected that B. had only a possibility at the time of the release made. 10 Co. 47.

A duty uncertain at first, which on a condition precedent is to be made certain afterwards, is but a possibility which cannot be released. 5 Co. 702; 2 Mod. 281. As a nomine poenae waiting on a rent, which cannot be released till the rent is behind, as the non-payment of the rent makes the nomine poenae a duty. Yelv. 215; Bownl. 116. So, if a man covenant to pay 10*l.* on the birth of a child, the covenantor cannot be released of the 10*l.*; it resting merely in contingency whether such child ever will be born or not. Yelv. 192.

So, if an award be, that on a plaintiff's delivering to defendant, by a certain day, a load of hay, defendant shall pay him 10*l.*; in this case the 10*l.* cannot be released before the day, for it rests merely in possibility and contingency, whether the money shall ever be paid, for it becomes a duty on delivery of the hay only, and not before. Yelv. 215. See Award.

In debt on bond against the defendant as administrator, &c. the defendant pleaded a release; whereby the plaintiff, reciting that there were several controversies between the defendant and him, about a legacy and the right of administration, releases to the defendant all his right, title, interest, and demand of, in, and to the personal estate of the intestate; and, on demurrer, this was held to be no plea; and a difference was taken by Holt, between a release of all demands to the person of the obligor or administrator, and a release of all demands to the personal estate of the obligor or intestate: that the last will not discharge the bond, as the other may, because the bond does not give any right or demand upon the personal estate, &c. until judgment and execution sued. Salk. 575; 2 Ld. Raym. 786.

If A. promises B. in consideration that he will sell to his son certain merchandise, at such a price, that if his son does not pay it at the feast of St. Michael next ensuing, he himself will pay it; and before Michaelmas, A. releases all actions and demands to him who made the promise, this shall not release the assumpsit: for till Michaelmas it cannot be known whether his son will have paid it or not, and, till default by him, the other is not bound to pay it; so it is a mere contingency till Michaelmas, which cannot be released. 2 Roll. Abr. 407, 408.

For more learning on this subject, see Bac. Ab. tit. Release, (7th ed.); 18 Vin. Abr.; and Com. Dig. tit. Release.

RELEGATION, relegatio.] A banishing, or sending away.

Abjuration is forswearing the realm for ever; relegation is banishment for a time only. Co. Litt. 133. See Transportation.

RELEVANT, applying to the matter in question—so relevancy of proof is the effect of it as applied to the action or suit.

RELICTA VERIFICATIONE. Where a judgment is confessed by cognovit actionem after plea pleaded, and the plea is withdrawn, it is called a confession, or cognovit actionem relicta verificatione. See Judgments acknowledged.

RELIEF, relevamen; but in Domesday, relevatio, relevium.] A certain sum of money which the tenant, holding by knights-service, grand serjeanty, or other tenure, for which homage or legal service is due, and being at full age at the death of his ancestor, paid unto his lord at his entrance. See Bracton, lib. 2. c. 36; Britton, c. 69; Grand Customary of Normandy, c. 34.

Skene, de Verbor. signif. verb. Relevium, saith, relief's a French word, from the Latin relevare, to relieve, or take up that which is fallen; for it is given by the tenant or vassal, who is of perfect age, after the expiring of the wardship, to his superior lord, of whom he held his lands by knights-service, that is, by ward and relief: for, by payment thereof he relieves, and, as it were, raiseth up again his lands, after they were fallen down into his superior's hands, by reason of wardship, &c.

Relief is otherwise thus explained, viz. a feudatory or beneficiary estate in lands was at first granted only for life, and after death of the vassal it returned to the chief lord, for which reason it was called feudum caducum, v. z. fallen to the lord by the death of the tenant; afterwards, these feudatory estates being turned into an inheritance, by the connivance and assent of the chief lord, when the possessor of such an estate died, it was called hereditas caduca, i. e. it was fallen to the chief lord; to whom the heir having paid a certain sum of money, he did then relevare hereditatem caducam out of his hands; and the money thus paid was called a relief.

This must be understood after the conquest; for, in the time of the Saxons, there were no reliefs, but heriots paid to the lord at the death of his tenant; which in those days were horses, arms, &c. and such tributes could not be exacted by the English immediately after the conquest, for they were deprived of both by the Normans; and instead thereof, in many places, the payment of certain sums of money was substituted, which they called a relief; and which continues to this day.

Relief reasonable, or, as it is sometimes called, lawful and ancient relief, is such as is enjoined by some law, or becomes due by custom, and doth not depend on the will of the lord. What that was we may read in the laws of William the Conqueror, c. 22. and of Henry 1. c. 14. and before that time in the laws of Canute, c. 97. viz. the relief of an earl was eight war horses, with their bridles and saddles, four lorions, four helmets, four shields, four pikes, four swords, four hunting horses and a palfrey, with their bridles and saddles; the relief of a baron or thane was four horses, two with furniture, and two without, two swords, four lances, four shields, and an helmet, cum loried, and fifty marks in gold. The relief of a ravasar was his father's horse, his helmet, shield, lance, and sword, which he had at his death. The relief of a villain or countryman was his best beast, &c. Cowell. See Tenures.

RELIGION, religio. Virtue, as founded on reverence of God, and expectation of future rewards and punishments; a system of Divine Faith and Worship, as opposed to others. Jhus. That habit of reverence towards the Divine Nature, whereby we are enabled and inclined to serve and worship Him, after such a manner as we conceive most acceptable to Him, is called religion. Wilkins.

All blasphemies against God, as denying His Being or Providence, all profane scoffing at the Holy Scriptures, or exposing any part to contempt or ridicule, all impostures in religion, as false pretending to extraordinary commissions from God and receiving or abiding the people with false commendations of judgments, &c.; all open lewdness and other scandalous offences of this nature, because they tend to subvert all religion or morality, which are the foundation of government, are punishable by the temporal judges with fine and imprisonment, and also such corporal punishments as to the court in discretion shall seem meet, according to the heinousness of the crime. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 5.

Blackstone enumerates the following, as the crimes against God and religion, which are punishable by the laws of England: APOSTASY, as to which see title God and Religion; HERESY, see that title; REVILING THE ORDINANCES OF THE CHURCH, see that title; BLASPHEMY, SWEARING (PROFANE), CONJURATION OR WITCHCRAFT, see those titles; RELIGIOUS IMPORTORS, see title Prophecies; SIMONY, see that title; PROFANATION OF THE LORD'S DAY, see title Sunday; DRUNKENNESS, LEWDNESS, see those titles. See Church, Conformity, &c. See also titles Clergy, Parson, Service and Sacraments, &c.

Seditious words, in derogation of the established religion, are indictable, as tending to a breach of the peace. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 5. § 6.

RELIGIOUS HOUSES, religiosæ domus. Houses set apart for pious uses, such as monasteries, churches, hospitals, and all other places where charity was extended to the relief of the poor and orphans, or for the use or exercise of religion. See Monasteries.

In the Natitia Monastica, or a short History of the Religious Houses in England and Wales, by Tanner, in alphabetical order of counties, is accurately given a full account of the founders, the time of foundation, titular saints, the order, the value, and the dissolution under Henry VIII., with references to printed authors and manuscripts which preserve any remains relating to each house; with a preface of the institution of religious orders, &c. Cowell.

RELIGIOUS MEN, religiosi. Such as entered into some monastery or convent, there to live devoutly. And in ancient deeds of sale of land, the purchasers were often restrained by covenant from giving or alienating to, or for the benefit of, to the end the land might not fall into mortmain. Cowell. See Mortmain.

RELINQUISHMENT A forsaking, abandoning, or giving over. It has been adjudged, that a person may assign an ill demanded or debt, &c. and have a release for that which is well demanded. Step. Pl. c. 1. Sec. 1.

RELICUÆ, reliquæ. Remains, such as the bones, &c. of saints who are dead, preserved by persons living, with great veneration, as sacred memorials of them. They are forbidden to be used or brought into England by several statutes; and justices of peace were, by 3 Jac. 1. c. 26. empowered to search houses for Popish books and reliques, which, when found, are to be defaced and burnt, &c.

RELOCATION. A reletting or renewal of a lease. Where a landlord, instead of warning a tenant to remove, has allowed him to continue without making any new agreement, this is termed in the law of Scotland tacit relocation.

REMAINDER.

REMANENTIA.] An estate limited in lands, tenements, or rents to be enjoyed after the expiration of another particular estate. And a remainder may be either for a certain term, or in fee-simple or fee-tail. Broke, tit. Donee and Remainder, 245; Glan. lib. 7. c. 1. The difference between a remainder and reversion, according to Spelman, is this, that by a reversion, after the appointed term, the estate returns to the donor or his heirs, as the proper fountain; whereas by remainder it goes to some third person or a stranger. Cowell.

Remainder is described to be a remnant of an estate in lands or tenements, expectant on a particular estate created together with the same, and at the same time, and is so expectant on the particular estate, that unless it can take effect when the particular estate determines, it is void. Co. Lit. 49, 148; 2 Co. 51; Moor, 344; Vaugh. 269.

I. AN estate in remainder may be defined to be an estate limited to take effect and be enjoyed after another estate is determined. As if a man, seised in fee-simple, grants lands to A. for twenty years, and after the determination of the said term, then to B. and his heirs for ever; here A. is tenant for years, remainder to B. in fee. In the first place, an estate for years is created or carved out of the fee, and given to A., and the residue or remainder of it is given to B. But both these interests are in fact only one estate; the present term of years and the remainder afterwards, when added together, being equal only to one estate in fee. Co. Lit. 148. They are indeed different parts, but they constitute only one whole; they are carved out of one and the same inheritance; they are both created, and may both subsist together; the one in possession, the other in expectancy. So, if land be granted to A. for twenty years, and after the determination of the said term to B. for life; and after the determination of B.'s estate for life, it be limited to C. and his heirs for ever; this makes A. tenant for years, with remainder to B. for life, remainder over to C. in fee. Now here the estate of inheritance undergoes a division into three portions; there is, first, A.'s estate for years carved out of it; and after that B.'s estate for life; and then the whole that remains is limited to C. and his heirs. And here also the first estate, and both the remainders, for life and in fee, are one estate only, being nothing but parts or portions of one entire inheritance; and if there were a hundred remainders, it would still be the same thing, upon a principle grounded in mathematical truth, that all the parts are equal, and no more than equal to the whole. And hence, also, it is easy to collect that no remainder can be limited after the grant of an estate in fee-simple; because a fee-simple is the highest and largest estate that a subject is capable of enjoying; and he that is tenant in fee hath in him the whole of the estate; a remainder, therefore, which is only a portion or residuary part of the estate, cannot be reserved after the whole is disposed of. Plowd. 29; Vaugh. 269. A particular estate, with all the remainders expectant thereon, is only one fee-simple; as 40*l.* is part of 100*l.*, and 60*l.* is the remainder of it; wherefore, after a fee-simple once vested, there can no more be a remainder limited thereon than after the whole 100*l.* is appropriated there can be any residue subsisting. 2 Comm. c. 11.

Thus much being premised, the student will be the better enabled to comprehend the rules that are laid down by law to be observed in the creation of remainders, and the reasons upon which those rules are founded.

First, there must necessarily be some particular estate, precedent to the estate in remainder; as an estate for years to A., remainder to B. for life; or an estate for life to A., remainder to B. in tail; this precedent estate is called the particular estate, as being only a small part, particula, of the inheritance; the residue or remainder of which is granted over to another. The necessity of creating this preceding particular estate, in order to make a good remainder, arises from this plain reason, that remainder is a relative expression, and implies that some part of the thing is previously disposed of; for where the whole is conveyed at once, there cannot possibly exist a remainder; but the interest granted, whatever it be, will be an estate in possession. See Co. Lit. 49; Plowd. 25.

An estate created to commence at a distant period of time, without any intervening estate, is therefore properly no remainder; it is the whole of the gift, and not a residuary part. And such future estates can only be made of chattel interests, which were considered in the light of mere contracts by the ancient law, to be executed either now or hereafter, as the contracting parties should agree; but an estate of freehold must be created to commence immediately; for it is an ancient rule of the common law, that an estate of freehold cannot be created to commence in futuro, but it ought to take effect presently, either in possession or remainder. 5 Rep. 94. Because at common law no freehold in lands could pass without livery of seisin, which must operate either immediately or not at all. It would therefore be contradictory, if an estate, which is not to commence till hereafter, could be granted by a conveyance, which imports an immediate possession. Therefore, though a lease to A. for seven years, to commence from next Michaelmas, is good; yet a conveyance to B. of lands, to hold to him and his heirs for ever, from the end of three years next ensuing, is void. So that, when it is intended to grant an estate of freehold, whereof the enjoyment shall be deferred till a future time, it is necessary to create a previous particular estate, which may subsist till that period of time is completed, and for the grantor to deliver immediate possession of the land to the tenant of this particular estate; which is construed to be giving possession to him in remainder, since his estate and that of the particular tenant are one and the same estate in law. As where one leases to A. for three years, with remainder to B. in fee, and makes livery of seisin to A.; here, by the livery the freehold is immediately created and vested in B. during the continuance of A.'s term of years. The whole estate passes at once from the grantor to the grantees, and the remainder-man is seised of his remainder at the same time that the termor is possessed of his term. The enjoyment of it, must, indeed, be deferred till hereafter; but it is, to all intents and purposes, an estate commencing in præsentia, though to be occupied and enjoyed in futuro.

As no remainder can be created without such a precedent particular estate, therefore the particular estate is said to support the remainder. But a lease at null is not held to be such a particular estate as will support a remainder over. 8 Rep. 75. For an estate at will is of a nature so slender and precarious, that it is not looked upon as a portion of the inheritance; and a portion must first be taken out of it in order to constitute a remainder. Besides, if it be a freehold remainder, livery of seisin must be given at the time of its creation; and the entry of the grantor, to do this, determines the estate at will in the very instant in which it is made. Dyer, 18. Or, if the remainder be a chattel interest, though perhaps the deed of creation might operate as a future contract, if the tenant for years be a party to it, yet it is void by way of remainder; for it is a separate independent contract, distinct from the precedent estate at will; and every remainder must be part of one and the same estate, out of which the preceding particular estate is taken. Raym. 151. And hence it is generally true, that if the particular estate is void in its creation, or by any means is defeated afterwards, the remainder supported thereby shall be defeated also; as where the particular estate is an estate for the life of a person not in esse, or an estate for life upon condition, on breach of which condition the grantor enters and avoids the estate; in neither of these cases the remainder over is void. Co. Lit. 298; 2 Roll. Abr. 415; 1 Jon. 58.

Secondly, the remainder must commence, or pass out of the grantor, at the time of the creation of the particular estate. Lit. § 671; Plowd. 25. As where there is an estate to A. for life, with remainder to B. in fee; here B.'s remainder in fee passes from the grantor at the same time that seisin is delivered to A. of his life estate in possession. And it is this which induces the necessity at common law of livery of seisin being made, on the particular estate, whenever a freehold remainder is created. For if it be limited even on an estate for years, it is necessary that the lessee for years should have livery of seisin, in order to convey the freehold from and out of the grantor, otherwise the remainder is void. Lit. § 671. Not that the livery is necessary to strengthen the estate for years; but as livery of the land is requisite to convey the freehold, and yet cannot be given to him in remainder without infringing the possession of the lessee for years, therefore the law allows such livery made to the tenant of the particular estates to relate and enure to him in remainder, as both are but one estate in law. Co. Lit. 49.

Hence the remainder must be created in the same instrument with the particular estate. Co. Lit. 49 a. The particular estate, however, may be made by a will, and the remainder by a codicil, or vice versa, for they are, for this purpose, parts of the same assurance. 2 Bla. 698.

A remainder may also be limited by an appointment in execution of a power contained in the conveyance by which the particular estate is created, because from the retrospective relation which appointments bear to the instrument containing the power, they are considered as legally inserted therein. Cornish on Remainders, 45. But see 1 Preston on Abstracts 115.

Thirdly, the remainder must vest in the grantee during the continuance of the particular estate, or eo instanti that it determines. Plowd. 25; 1 Rep. 66. As if A. be tenant for life, remainder to B. in tail; here B.'s remainder is vested in him at the creation of the particular estate to A. for life, or if A. and B. be tenants for their joint lives, remainder to the survivor in fee; here, though during their joint lives the remainder is vested in neither, yet on the death of either of them, the remainder vests instantly in the survivor; wherefore both these are good remainders. But if an estate be limited to A. for life, remainder to the eldest son of B. in tail, and A. dies before B. hath any son; here the remainder will be void, for it did not vest in any one during the continuance, nor at the determination, of the particular estate, and even supposing that B. should afterwards have a son, he shall not take by this remainder: for as it did not vest at or before the end of the particular estate, it never can vest at all, but is gone for ever. 1 Rep. 188. And this depends upon the principle before laid down, that the precedent particular estate, and the remainder, are one estate in law; they must therefore subsist and be in esse at one and the same instant of time, either during the continuance of the first estate, or at the very instant when that determines, so that no other estate can possibly come between them. For there can be no intervening estate between the particular estate and the remainder supported thereby. 3 Rep. 21. The thing supported must fall to the ground, if once its support be severed from it. 2 Comm. c. 11.

If a man makes a lease to A. for life, and that after the death of A. and one day after, the land shall remain to B. for life, &c. this is a void remainder, because not to take effect immediately on the determination of the first estate, and so during that time there would be an interruption of the livery, and no tenant of the freehold, either to do the services, or answer to the præcipes of strangers; Plumd. 25; Raym. 144; that the law is nice to an instant. 1 Ld. Raym. 316.

It is upon these rules, but principally the last, that the doctrine of contingent remainders depends. For remainders are either vested or contingent. Vested remainders, whereby a present interest passes to the party, though to be enjoyed in futuro, are where the estate is invariably fixed to remain to a determinate person after the particular estate is spent. As if A. be tenant for twenty years, remainder to B. in fee; here B.'s is a vested remainder, which nothing can defeat or set aside.

In a recent case it was held, on a devise to A. remainder to the right heir male of the testator in fee, that the remainder vested, upon the testator's death, in the party then answering the description. 2 N. & M. 544; and see 12 East, 589; 1 Brown's C. C. 292; 1 B. & A. 546; 1 M. & S. 744.

See post, II. and also post, V. as to the distinction between remainders vested and executory.

II. CONTINGENT or executory remainders (whereby no present interest passes) are where the estate in remainder is limited to take effect either to a dubious and uncertain person, or upon a dubious and uncertain event, so that the particular estate may chance to be determined, and the remainder never take effect. 3 Rep. 20.

Thus if A. be a tenant for life, with remainder to B.'s eldest son (then unborn) in tail, this is a contingent remainder, for it is uncertain whether B. will have a son or no; but the instant that a son is born, the remainder is no longer contingent, but vested. Though if A. had died before the contingency happened, that is, before B.'s son was born, the remainder would have been absolutely gone, for the particular estate was determined before the remainder could vest.

Though undoubtedly it is a property of all contingent remainders that it is uncertain whether they will ever take effect, yet it is not that uncertainty which constitutes a remainder contingent, because every vested remainder for life or a tail is also subject to the same uncertainty, as to its determination, namely, to die, or die without issue before the determination of the particular estate. The true criterion seems to be, whether there is a present capacity of taking effect in possession if the particular estate were to determine; if there be, the remainder is vested, and not otherwise. Thus if there be a lease for life to A., and after the death of J. D. remainder to B. in tail; while J. D. lives, B.'s remainder is contingent, because if A. were then to die, there would be no capacity of its taking effect in possession; but if J. D. were to die, living A., in that case B.'s remainder would immediately become vested; and yet if B. were also to die without issue, living A., it would never actually take effect at all. See Fearne Con. Rem. p. 216. 7th edit.

The same rule applies to the estate so commonly created in settlements of trustees to preserve contingent remainders; it is quite uncertain, and depends on a contingency whether it will ever actually come into possession, yet it is a vested remainder. See 2 Comm. 169 n.

By the strict rule of law, if A. were tenant for life, remainder to his own eldest son in tail, and A. died without issue born, but leaving his wife enfeint, or big with child, and after his death a posthumous son was born, this son could not take the land by virtue of this remainder; for the particular estate determined before there was any person in esse in whom the remainder could vest. Salk. 228; 4 Mod. 282. But, to remedy this hardship, it is enacted by the 10 & 11 Wm. 3. c. 16, that posthumous children shall be capable of taking in remainder in the same manner as if they had been born in their father's lifetime; that is, the remainder is allowed to vest in them while yet in their mother's womb.

The particular case on which this statute was passed (as many statutes have arisen from circumstances of private hardship or injustice), was as follows:—A father had devised an estate to his son for life, with a remainder to the first and other sons of the son in tail; the son died, leaving his wife pregnant, who was afterwards delivered of a son: the courts of C. P. and K. B. held clearly that the grandson, not being born at the expiration of the estate for life, was not entitled to take it; but the lords, moved by the hardship of the case, reversed the judgment of the courts below, contrary to the opinions of all the judges. Reeve v. Long, 1 Salk. 227. & alibi. But the House of Commons, in reproof of what they considered as an assumption of legislative authority in the Lords, immediately brought in an act which passed into the above statute. The statute only mentions marriage and other settlements; and it is probable that devises were designedly omitted to be expressed, from delicacy, and that the authority of the judgment of the peers might not be too openly impeached. As the statute says that the posthumous son, in this case, shall take the estate as if born before the death of the father, he is entitled to the intermediate profits from the death of the father; 3 Atk. 203; which is different from the case of a descent devested by the birth of a posthumous child. See Descent, Rule I.

This species of contingent remainders, to a person not in being must however be limited to some one that may, by common possibility, or potentia propinqua, be in esse at or before the particular estate determines. 2 Rep. 51. As if an estate be made to A. for life, remainder to the heirs of B.; now, if A. dies before B., the remainder is at end; for during B.'s life he has no heir, nemo est hæres viventis; But if B. dies first, the remainder then immediately vests in his heir, who will be entitled to the land on the death of A. See post. This is a good contingent remainder, for the possibility of B.'s dying before A. is potentia propinqua, and therefore allowed in law. Co. Litt. 378. But a remainder to the right heirs of B. (if there be no such person as B. in esse), is void. Hob. 83. For here there must be two contingencies happen; first, that such a person as B. shall be born; and secondly, that he shall also die during the continuance of the particular estate; which make it potentia remotissima, a most improbable possibility. A remainder to a man's eldest son, who hath none (we have seen), is good; for by common possibility he may have one; but if it be limited in particular to his son John or Richard, it is bad, if he have no son of that name; for it is too remote a possibility that he should not only have a son, but a son of a particular name. 5 Rep. 51. A limitation of a remainder to a bastard, before it is born, is not good; for though the law allows the possibility of having bastards, it presumes it to be a very remote and improbable contingency. Cro. Eliz. 509.

It is not merely there being two contingencies to happen, or what Lord Coke calls a possibility on a possibility, in order to the vesting of the estate, which will make the possibility too remote; but there must be some legal improbability in the contingencies. Butler mentions a case, Routledge v. Dorril, 2 Ves. jun. 337, where limitations of a money fund were held valid; although, to entitle one of the objects to take under it, it was necessary, first, That the husband and wife must have had a child; 2. That that child must have had a child; 3. That the last-mentioned child must have been alive at the decease of the survivor of his grandfather and grandmother; 4. That if a boy, he must have attained twenty-one,—if a girl, that age, or be married. Fearne, Cont. Rem. 251, n. c. 7th ed.; 2 Comm. 170, n. 5.

Next, with respect to a contingent remainder, where the person to whom it is limited is fixed and certain, but the event upon which it is to take effect is vague and uncertain. Where land is given to A. for life, and in case B. survives him, then with remainder to B. in fee; here B. is a certain person, but the remainder to him is a contingent remainder, depending upon a dubious event, the uncertainty of his surviving A. During the joint lives of A. and B. it is contingent; and if B. dies first, it never can vest in his heirs, but is for ever gone; but if A. dies first, the remainder to B. becomes vested. 2 Comm. c. 11.

Contingent remainders of either kind, if they amount to a freehold, cannot be limited on an estate for years, or any other particular estate less than a freehold. Thus, if land be granted to A. for ten years, with remainder in fee to the right heirs of B., this remainder is void; but if granted to A. for life, with a like remainder, it is good. 1 Rep. 130. For, unless the freehold passes out of the grantor at the time when the remainder is created, such freehold remainder is void; it cannot pass out of him without vesting somewhere; and in the case of a contingent remainder, it must vest in the particular tenant, else it can vest no where; unless, therefore, the estate of such particular tenant be of a freehold nature, the freehold cannot vest in him, and consequently the remainder is void. 2 Comm. c. 11.

But although every contingent freehold remainder must be supported by a preceding freehold, it is not necessary that such preceding estate continue in the actual seisin of its rightful tenant; it is sufficient if there subsists a right of entry to such preceding estate at the time the remainder should vest. Fearne, Cont. Rem. p. 288. 7th ed.

A contingent remainder is defined by Fearne to be a remainder limited so as to depend on an event or condition which may never happen to be performed; or which may not happen or be performed till after the determination of the preceding estate; for if the preceding estate (unless it be a mere trust estate) determine before such event or condition happens, the remainder will never take effect.

Under this definition we may properly distinguish four sorts of contingent remainders. 1. Where the remainder depends entirely on a contingent determination of the preceding estate itself. 2. Where the contingency on which the remainder is to take effect is independent of the determination of the preceding estate. 3. Where the condition, upon which the remainder is limited, is certain in event, but the determination of the particular estate may happen before it. 4. Where the person to whom the remainder is limited is not yet ascertained, or not yet in being. Fearne, 3, 4.

In the case of Dormer v. Fortescue, [reported in its various stages by the name of Dormer v. Fortescue; Dormer v. Parkhurst; Barrington d. Dormer v. Parkhurst; Smith v. Parkhurst, or Parkhurst; Parkhurst v. Smith, &c. See Bro. P. C. tit. Fine, Remainder,] an estate was limited (after several precedent estates) to the use of A. for ninety-nine years, if he should so long live; and after his decease, or the sooner determination of the estate limited to him for ninety-nine years, to the use of trustees and their heirs during his life, upon trust, to preserve the contingent remainders; and after the end or determination of that term, to the use of A.'s first and other sons successively in tail-male; remainder to the heirs of the body of the original settler; remainder to such settler's right heirs. All the preceding estates being determined, A. came into possession of the lands limited to him for ninety-nine years; and having a son, they joined in levying a fine, and suffering a common recovery, in which the son was vouched. If the trustees took a vested estate of freehold during the life of A., the recovery was void, there not being a good tenant to the præcipe, the father being only tenant for years; but if they took a contingent estate, the freehold was in the son, and of course there was a good tenant to the præcipe. Upon this point the case was argued in the court of K. B. and afterwards on appeal before the House of Lords, where all the judges were ordered to attend. Lee, C. J., when the cause was heard in K. B., and Willes, C. J., in delivering the opinion of the judges in the House of Lords, entered very fully into the distinction between contingent and vested remainders. They seem to have laid down the following points:—That a remainder is contingent, either where the person to whom it is limited is not in esse, or where the particular estate may determine before the remainder can take place; but that in every case where the person to whom the remainder is limited is in esse, and is actually capable, or entitled to take, on the expiration or sooner determination of the particular estate, supposing that expiration or determination to take place at that moment, there the remainder is vested. That the doubt arose by not adverting to the distinction between the different nature of the contingency in those cases where the remainder is limited to a person in esse, but the title of the remainder-man depends on a collateral or extraneous contingency, which may or may not take place during the continuance of the preceding estate; and those cases where the preceding estate may end beyond the continuance of the estate in remainder. Thus, if an estate is limited to A. for life, and, after the death of A. and J. S., to B. for life, or in tail, there, during the life of J. S., the title of B. depends on the contingency of J. S. dying in the lifetime of A. This being an event which may or may not take place during the continuance of the preceding estate, B.'s estate is necessarily contingent. But then, supposing J. S. to die, still it remains an uncertainty whether B.'s estate will ever take place in possession; for if the remainder be limited to B. for life, there, if B. dies in A.'s lifetime, A.'s estate would endure beyond the continuance of the estate limited in remainder. The same would be the case if the remainder over were limited to B. in tail, and B. was to die in A.'s lifetime without issue. Yet in both cases it was agreed that B. took not a contingent, but a vested remainder. Hence they inferred, that it was not the possibility of the remainder over never taking effect in possession, but the remainder-man's not having a capacity or title to take, supposing the preceding estate at that instant to expire or determine, together with its being uncertain whether he ever will obtain that capacity or title during the continuance of the preceding estate, that makes the remainder contingent. Upon these grounds they determined that the trustees took a vested remainder, and that the recovery therefore was void. The doctrine established in this case is laid down very precisely by Coke, 10 Rep. 85. where he with great accuracy of expression observes, that where it is dubious and uncertain whether the use or estate limited in future shall ever vest in interest, or not, then the use or estate is in contingency; because, upon a future contingent, it may either vest or never vest, as the contingent happens. See 1 Rep. 137 b; 1 Inst. 265 a, in n.; and post, V.

If an estate be limited, either at common law, or by way of use, to one for life, or in tail, remainder to the right heirs of J. S., who is then dead; this is a good remainder, and vests presently in the person who is heir at law to J. S. by purchase; see post, V; and though a daughter be the heir at law, and after a son is born, yet shall the daughter retain the land against him; for she being heir, and coming within the description at the time when the remainder was limited, it then vested and settled in her immediately, as a remainder by purchase, and shall not by any accident after be defeated. 2 Roll. Abr. 415; 1 Co. 95, 103; Plowd. 56.

But if J. S. be living at the time of the remainder limited to his right heirs, this puts such remainder in abeyance of the contingency; that is, it is in no person, but in nubibus, it the contingency happens; for it is not in the feoffor or donor, because he has limited it out of him, and all remainders must pass out of him at the time of the limitation, though they do not presently vest in the person intended; and in the right heirs of J. S. it cannot be, because he cannot have heirs during life; so there is no person in rerum natura within the description to take it; therefore it is, in the mean time, in abeyance or expectancy, to vest or not vest, as the case happens; for if J. S. dies during the particular estate, then the remainder presently takes place in his heirs, but if the particular estate determines, by death or otherwise, in the life of J. S., then such remainder is become totally void, and can never vest; but the estate settles again in the feoffor or donor, as if no such limitation or remainder had been; and he becomes tenant to the procurator, and is obliged to do the services; and though J. S. die soon after, yet his heir can have no benefit by it, not being capable of taking the remainder when it fell. 1 Co. 1. 7; Co. Litt. 378 a; 2 Co. 51; 3 Rep. 117 415; Plowd. 28, 558; Poph. 74; Moor. 720; 3 Co. 1. 20; 10 Co. 50; Raym. 145; Pollex. 56. See Fearne, 41, 52, &c. where this doctrine of the remainder being in abeyance is considered as in some measure unintelligible; and another question depending thereon is stated thus: "A man [by settlement or will] makes a disposition of a remainder or future interest, which is to take no effect at all until a future event or contingency happens; it is admitted that no interest passes by such a disposition to any body before the event referred to takes place. The question is, what becomes of the intermediate reversionary interest from the time of the making of such future disposition until it takes effect? It was said by the grantor or testator at the time of making such disposition, it is confessedly not included in it; the natural conclusion seems to be, that it remains where it was, viz. in the grantor or the testator, and his heirs, for want of being departed with to any body else. When the future disposition takes effect, then the reversionary or future interest passes, pursuant to the terms of it; but if such future disposition takes effect, either by reason of the determination of the particular estate, or of the contingency, or otherwise, what is then then to draw the estate, which was a mere subject of it, out of the grantor or his heirs, or the heirs of the testator, or who can derive title to an estate under a prospective disposition which confessedly never takes any effect at all? Fearne, 285, 286, 533.

But if there be no such J. S. at the time of the limitation, though he be after born, and dies during the particular estate, yet his heirs shall never have the remainder. So, if a remainder be limited to A. son of B. in tail, &c. or to E. wife of D. in truth there is no such A. or E., though B. has a son called A., or D. marries one E., yet they can never take the remainder; because if there be such persons as the words of the gift import, there the remainder ought to vest in them presently, and they will never after be made capable of taking it, but if there be no such person then in esse, none who the limitation by that description after can lay claim to it, because the limitation was present to such persons, but a remainder propter nuptias, into filio, or propter nuptias heredi maritus of A., or propter nuptias hæredibus de sanguine patris, or propter nuptias of A., or to the right heirs of A., there being then such marries, and vest when such persons come into use as are intended by the description, because here appears no present person for any person in particular; therefore, if they answer the description at any time before the particular estate determines, it is time enough; and so there is a diversity between a remainder limited to one by name in particular, and such a remainder limited by description or circumlocution, or by a general name and a special name. Co. Litt. 3; 1 Co. 20; 2 Co. 51; Hob. 83; Moor, 104; Dyer, 337; 2 Leon. 210. 1 R. & L. Rep. 54.

REMAINDER, II.

A. to remain to B. and his heirs; this remainder is contingent, and cannot vest presently, for if A. survives B. it is void; and because, otherwise, the operation of livery would be interrupted during the life of A., for he cannot give himself any estate, his livery operating to pass estates from him not to give any to him who had the whole before; therefore, during his life the operation of the livery must cease, and by consequence no remainder can take effect in virtue of that livery, which pro tempore being at an end, all that depended thereon ceases too, and can never after be revived; for the livery must carry out all the estates at once from the feoffor, and if he comes again into the possession before they can all take effect, this breaks the force of the livery, and brings back again to him all that such livery had taken out from him, and then they never can take effect but by a new livery. This is the reason of the common case, that one cannot give lands to another to begin after his death, because, being to make livery presently, if that cannot operate presently, it can never operate at all; for it is a contradiction to give lands to one by a solemn livery, which is an act executed, and works presently; and yet, by words, to restrain that operation to a future time. But in the principal case, where A. dies first, there no interruption is of the livery, for B. had an estate for life by virtue thereof; and before that determines, the same livery which carried the remainder in abeyance, for the uncertainty of its taking effect, does on A.'s death direct and settle, or bring down the remainder to B. and his heirs. 10 Co. 85.

If a lease be made to A., B., and C., for their lives, and if B. survives C., then to remain to B. and his heirs: this remainder is in abeyance, because, though the person be certain, yet since it depends on C.'s dying before him, till that be known the remainder cannot vest. So if a lease be made to A. for life, and after the death of B., who is a stranger, to remain to C. in fee, or to A. in fee; these remainders are in abeyance or contingency, and depend on B.'s dying before C. or A., for if he survives them the remainder cannot take effect. 3 Co. 20; 10 Co. 85; Co. Litt. 378.

If a lease were made to A. for life, remainder to the abbot of D. and his successors, though the abbot were then dead, so as there were then no abbot at all, yet the remainder should be good if an abbot were made before the death of A. So of a remainder to a mayor and commonalty, dean and chapter, prior and convent, &c. though there be then no mayor, dean or prior. So of a remainder to the bishop of D., parson of D., or other sole corporation, and his successors; these remainders (not being limited to them by name specially, but to them generally, and so whoever comes within the description before the determination of the particular estate, is capable of taking by virtue thereof,) are good remainders in abeyance, &c. But if there be no such corporations at the time of the limitation, then the remainders are totally void; and none created after, though by the same name, can take these remainders, not even if a patent be then passed to make such corporation. Co. Litt. 261; Hob. 33; 2 Co. 51; 10 Co. 30; Moor, 104; 1 Roll. Rep. 254; 2 Bulst. 275.

Contingent remainders may be defeated by destroying or determining the particular estate upon which they depend before the contingency happens whereby they become vested. 1 Rep. 66, 135. Therefore, when there is tenant for life, with divers remainders in contingency, he may, not only by his death, but by alienation, surrender, or other methods, destroy and determine his own life estate before any of those remainders vest; the consequence of which is, that he utterly defeats them all. As, if there be tenant for life, with remainder to his eldest son unborn in tail, and the tenant for life, before any son is born, surrenders his life estate, he by that means defeats the remainder in tail to his son; for his son not being in esse when the particular estate determined, the remainder could not then vest; and as it could not vest then, by the rules before laid down it can never vest at all.

In these cases, therefore, it is necessary to have trustees appointed to preserve the contingent remainders; in whom there is vested an estate in remainder for the life of the tenant for life, to commence when his estate determines. If, therefore, his estate for life determines otherwise than by his death, the estate of the trustees for the residue of his natural life will then take effect, and become a particular estate in possession, sufficient to support the remainders depending in contingency. See post, V. This method is said to have been invented by Sir Orlando Bridgman, Sir Geoffrey Palmer, and other eminent counsel, who betook themselves to conveyancing during the time of the civil wars; in order thereby to secure in family settlements a provision for the future children of an intended marriage, who before were usually left at the mercy of the particular tenant for life; and when, after the Restoration, those gentlemen came to fill the first offices of the law, they supported this invention, within reasonable and proper bounds, and introduced it into general use. 2 Comm. c. 11. See Moor, 486; 2 Roll. Abr. 797, pl. 12; 2 Sid. 159; 2 Chan. Rep. 170.

III. When lands are given in undivided shares to two or more particular estates, so as that, upon the determination of the particular estates in any of those shares, they remain over to the other grantees, and the reversion or remainderman is not let in till the determination of all the particular estates, then the grantees take their original shares as tenants in common; and the remainders limited to them, on the determination of the particular estates, are known by the appellation of cross remainders. These remainders may be raised both by deed and will; in deeds they can only be created by express words, but in wills they may be raised by implication. 1 Inst. 195, b. in n.

A. having issue five sons, his wife being enseint, devised two-thirds of his lands to his four younger sons, and the child in ventre sa mere, if he were a son, and their heirs; and if they all died without issue male of their bodies, or any of them, that the lands revert to the right heirs of the devisor. By this devise, the younger sons were tenants in tail in possession, with cross remainders in tail to each other, and no part shall revert to the heir of the devisor till all the younger sons be dead without issue male of their bodies. Dyer, 303.

But where one having issue three sons, A., B., and D., devises one house to A. and his heirs, another to B. and his heirs, and a third to D. and his heirs; provided, that if all his said children die without issue, that then the messuages remain and be to his wife and her heirs: It was held by three judges, that on the death of one of the sons without issue, the wife might enter, and that here there were no cross remainders from one son to another, because, being devised to them severally by express limitation, there shall be no greater estate to them by implication. Gilbert v. Witty, Cro. Jac. 655; 2 Roll. Rep. 281; 1 Vent. 224; Raym. 455; Fitzg. 97; 2 Jon. 82; Carth. 173.

In the above case it was said, by Justice Dodderidge, that cross remainders should never be raised by implication between more than two. This doctrine received some countenance from what was said by the courts in the cases of Cole v. Livingstone, 1 Ventr. 224; Holmes v. Maynell, T. Raym. 452; and some other cases. See 4 Leon. 14. But it seems entirely exploded by the cases of Burden v. Burville, B. R. Pasch. 18 Geo. 3; Richmond, (D.) v. Cudogan, (E.), Chanc. May, 1773; Wright v. Halford, et al. Comp. 31; and some other subsequent cases. It seems, however, to be admitted in these cases, that to raise cross remainders between more than two, stronger implication is required than to raise them between two only; 1 Inst. 195, b. in n; and see 4 T. R. 713; that the rule is, that as between two only it shall be presumed that cross remainders were intended to be raised; but if there be more than two, it is necessary to resort to other words in a will to discover an intention to raise them. See also 2 East, 86, 47; 1 Taunt. 284; and 2 Comm. 381, n. 5.

One seised of lands in fee, by will devises Black Acre to A. his daughter, and her heirs, and White Acre to his daughter B. and her heirs; and if she die before the age of sixteen years, living A., then A. to have White Acre to her and her heirs; and if A. die, having no issue, living B., then B. to have the part of A. to her and her heirs; and if both die having no issue, then to J. S. and his heirs: the testator dies; B. attains her age of sixteen years, and then dies, without issue in the life of A.; and it was held by three justices, against Dyer; 1st. That the daughters had an estate tail on the whole will, and not a fee determinable on a contingency subsequent; 2dly. That by the words, "If both die without issue," no cross remainders in tail were created by implication, but that on B.'s death without issue after sixteen, J. S. should have her part presently without staying till the death of A. without issue. Dyer, 330; 1 Bendl. 212; 1 Roll. Abr. 839; Vaugh. 267.

A. seised of lands in fee, by will devises all his lands in the county of, &c. to his two daughters B. and D. and their heirs, equally to be divided betwixt them; and in case they happen to die without issue, then to his nephew J. S. and the heirs male of his body, and dies; and it was adjudged that on the death of B. one of the daughters of the other sister took her moiety as a cross remainder. Raym. 452; Ken. 17; 2 Jon. 172; 2 Show. 136; Pollax, 434; and see 2 Leon. 545; 3 Mod. 107.

Richard Holden, seised in fee, and having issue a son and three grandchildren, by his will devised part of his estate to his wife for her life; and the reversion of such part, expectant on her death, and all other his freehold tenements, &c. he gave to his son Richard Holden for life, and after his death to his first and other sons successively in tail male, and for default of such issue, and after the determination of the said estates, he gave the premises to his grandson Richard Holden, and his grand-daughter Elizabeth Holden, to be equally divided between them, and to the heirs of their respective bodies issuing; and for default of such issue, he gave the premises to his grand-daughter Anne in fee. The testator died seised, Richard the son died without issue male, whereupon Elizabeth and the grandson entered, and Elizabeth died without issue generally; Anne Holden married John Jervis, and the question was, whether there were cross remainders between Elizabeth and Richard the grandson, or whether the moiety of Elizabeth should go to Anne or to Richard? And it was resolved that there were no cross remainders between them, because here are no express words, nor is there any necessary implication, without one of which cross remainders cannot be raised; that the words, and for default of such issue, being relative to what goes before, mean only, and for default of heirs of their respective bodies; and therefore it is no more than as if it had been a devise of one moiety to Richard and the heirs of his body, and of the other moiety to Elizabeth and the heirs of her body; and for default of heirs of their respective bodies, remainder over; in which case there could be no doubt; and it was held that this case differed from the case supra, the word respective being in that case, and the first devisees were the testator's daughters, and the remainderman only a nephew; whereas in the present case Anne was as near to the testator as Richard. Comber v. Hill, 2 Kely. 188; 2 Barn. K. B. 367; Browne v. Williams, Mich. 8 Geo. 2.

It was formerly held that cross remainders could only be raised by will, and were not to be allowed in a deed; but it is now settled that though they cannot be implied in a deed, they may be created by the express words of the deed. See 1 Saund. R. 186, note, and Mr. Butler's note, Co. Lit. 85, b. And see 1 East, 416; 2 Barn. & A. 810; 1 Brod. & B. 40; 4 Russell, 78.

IV. As to estates of inheritance, there can be no doubt but that the grantor, having a perpetual and durable interest in the estate, may share and divide it, or grant as many remainders over as he thinks proper. Bac. Abr. tit. Remainder, 7th edit.

Not only lands and tenements, but also rents, commons, estovers, or any other interest or profits in esse, wherein the grantor hath the absolute property to him and his heirs, may be granted with remainder over. Plowd. 379; 9 Co. 48, 97.

So, if one hath the office of park-keeper, forester, gaoler, sheriff, &c. to him and his heirs, he may grant those offices to one for life, remainder to another for life, &c. for omne majus continet in se minus; and as they are grantable over in fee, so may they be granted in succession to one for life, with remainders over, &c. 9 Co. 48; 1 And. pl. 201.

It was formerly doubted whether there could be a remainder of a rent de novo; that is, whether a man seised of lands in fee could thereout grant a rent-charge to one for life or years, remainder to another in fee or in tail; and this doubt arose from the rent not having any existence before it was created, consequently, no reversion could be left to the grantor, out of which the remainder was to arise. But it is now settled that such grant in remainder is good, the grantor having the absolute interest in the estate out of which it is to arise, and his intention gives it, being for the whole, out of which the lesser estates are carved. But if he grant such rent for life or years, to one, without going further, he cannot after grant the reversion thereof to another, because he has no reversion in him. 2 Roll. Abr. 415; 2 Co. 70, 76; 2 Vent. 240; 1 Lev. 144; 1 Sid. 285; 2 Salk. 577; 2 Lutw. 1225; Moor, pl. 100. See Rent.

The king may grant an estate in an office, to commence in futuro, or on a contingency, for he hath no inheritance in the office as to the execution of it, but in point of interest only to grant. And there is a diversity between offices in fee existing, and such as are granted only for life; which, being as a new thing created, may, as a rent de novo, be granted to commence in futuro. 4 Mod. 275; 1 Ld. Raym. 52; Carth. 850; Salk. 465; Comb. 334.

If one be created baron, viscount, earl, &c. by patent, and after, in the same patent, the same honour is granted to another in remainder, yet this operates as a new grant, and not as a remainder; for the king had no reversion of that honour in him, though he had still the same power of appointing one in succession to take it, as he had of granting it to the first. Show. Parl. Ca. 5, 11.

As to personal goods and chattels, it was formerly held that they, in their own nature, were incapable of any limitation over, being things transitory, and by many accidents subject to be lost, destroyed, or otherwise impaired, and the exigencies of trade requiring a frequent circulation thereof, in which they differ from lands and tenements which are permanent; therefore, what is called an estate in lands is termed property in personal chattels. Wherefore it was held that a grantor's devise of a personal thing to one, though but for an hour or minute, was a gift for ever; and an absolute disposition of the entire property. Bro. Devise, 18; Plowd. 521; Dyer, 74; 8 Co. 94.

Hence it was a long time before the courts of justice could be prevailed upon to have any regard for a devise over, even of a chattel real, or a term for years, after an estate for life limited thereon; because the estate for life being, in the eye of the law, of greater regard and consideration than an estate for years, they thought he, who had it devised to him for life, had therein included all that the deviser had a power to dispose of; but now such remainders over are allowed under the name of executory devises, and are established both in courts of law and equity, provided they tend not to a perpetuity, so as to make estates unalienable. 4 New Abr. 294. See Executory Devise.

Also a distinction was formerly taken between a devise of a personal chattel to one for life, with a remainder over, and of the use only; that in the first case the devisee for life had the absolute property; but not so in the second, for that the first devisee had not the property of the goods, but only a special interest in them, so that there still remained a property which might be limited over: but this distinction is now exploded, and the devisee in remainder is allowed in equity the like remedy in both cases. Plowd. 521; Cro. Car. 346; 1 Roll. Abr. 610; March, 106; Owen, 33; 1 Ch. Ca. 129; 2 Vern. 245; 1 P. Wms. i. 502, 651; 2 Comm. c. 25. p. 398.

But a devise of a term for years, or personal chattel, to one, for a day, or an hour, is a devise of the whole term or interest, if the limitation over is void, and it appears at the same time that the whole was intended to be disposed of from the executors. 1 P. Wms. 666.

A. being possessed of a term for ninety-nine years, devised it to B. for life, and after to six others successively, for their lives, if the term so long continue; and all the seven persons being dead, and the term continuing, it was adjudged, that it should revert to the executors of the testator, and that it did not vest in the survivor of the devisees, so as to transmit it to his representatives. 1 Salk. 231; 1 Ld. Raym. 325.

A farmer devised his stock (which consisted of corn, hay, cattle, &c.) to his wife for life, and after her death to the plaintiff. It was objected, that no remainder can be limited over of such chattels as these, because the use of them is to spend and consume them; but the Master of the Rolls said the devise over was good, but added, if any of the cattle were worn out in using, the defendant was not to be answerable for them; and if any were sold as useless, the defendant was only to answer the value of them at the time of the sale; and an account was decreed to be taken accordingly. Abr. Eq. 301.

A. gives his sister, by will, 10*l.* and directs that such part of his personal estate, as his wife should leave of her substance, should go to the sister; whatever the wife has not employed in that way shall go over, and be accounted for. 1 P. Wms. 651.

The above authorities show that a termor cannot create a life estate in his term with a remainder (using the word in its strict sense); but it would seem that such a remainder may be created in chattels real, where a termor carves out a less estate for years than his own, and gives over the residue of the term by way of remainder. See Cornish on Remainders, 92; and 1 Burr. 282; 1 M. & S. 692.

But if a chattel real, money, goods, or other personal things, are devised to one, and the heirs of his body, or to one, and, if he dies without heirs of his body, remainder over, by which the devisee has an estate-tail; this remainder is totally void, and the courts of equity will not allow of a bill by the remainder-man to compel security, &c. or to have the money, &c. after the death of the first devisee, but it shall go to his executors or administrators; for the first devise gives the absolute property of a personal estate, as the like devise of a real estate, before the statute De donis, gave the absolute fee, upon which no limitation could be made further; and as the heirs are the representatives to take the real estate, so are the executors to take the personal estate; and this is not within the statute De donis, but remains as at common law. 2 Vent. 349; 2 Vern. 600; 1 Salk. 156.

If A. devise that his goods and furniture shall remain in his house, to be enjoyed, according to the limitations of his will, by those entitled to the house; the first, who would be tenant in tail of the house, becomes absolute owner of the goods. See further, Executory Devise.

V. THE word remainder is no term of art, nor is it necessary to create a remainder. So that any words, sufficient to show the intent of the party, will create a remainder; because such estates take their denomination of remainders, more from the nature and manner of their existence, after they are limited, than from any previous quality inherent in the word REMAINDER. To make them such, therefore, if a man gives land to A. for life, and that after his death the land shall revert, or descend, to B. for life, &c. this is a good remainder, and may be pleaded as such. 1 Roll. Abr. 416; Plowd. 29; 1 Roll. Rep. 319; Dyer, 125.

So, if lands are given to one, and the heirs male of his body, and to him, and the heirs female of his body; this limitation to the heirs female is a remainder; because it is not to take place till the estate to the heirs male is spent. Co. Litt. 377 a.

So, if lands are given to a widow, and to the heirs of the body of her late husband, on her begotten; this is a remainder to the heirs of the body of the husband; because it cannot take effect till after the widow's death, who has an estate for life. Co. Litt. 26, 200; 2 Mod. 210.

So, an estate limited to A. for life, or in tail, and after his decease, or for default of such issue, to B. and the heirs of his body, is good; though there be not the word remainder. So, if a lease be made to A. for life, and that after his death B. shall have the profit; this is a good remainder to B. Plowd. 159; Moor, pl. 54; Dyer, 125; 1 Roll. Rep. 319; Cro. Eliz. 10, 742.

So, a lease to A. for life, and that after his death his children shall have it, is a good remainder. 6 Co. 17 b; Raym. 83.

Nay, though an estate be limited expressly as a remainder, yet, if it be not so in construction of law, the word remainder will have no force to make it such. As, where A. seised of lands in fee, he and B. levied a fine to D. in fee, who granted and rendered to B. in tail, rendering rent to A., and if B. died without issue, tenementa præd. integrè remanebunt to A. and his heirs; B. suffered a common recovery, A. distrained for his rent: this was adjudged a reversion, and as such the rent passed with it to A., and was chargeable on the land in whose hands soever it came, by virtue of the contract, which cannot be destroyed by the recovery, though the reversion is thereby barred. Cro. Eliz. 727, 768, 792; Moor, pl. 795; Co. Litt. 299; Raym. 142.

If a lease be made to A. for eighty years, if he so long live, and if he die within the term, then the land to go over to another for the residue of the eighty years; this is a good remainder, because, though the term or interest be determined, yet the land and part of the years still remain; these years may be made the measure of the succeeding interest, as any other number of years may be. Cro. Eliz. 216; 1 Leon. 218; 1 Co. 153; 3 Leon. 195; 2 Roll. Abr. 415; Plowd. 198; Moor, 247, 520, pl. 441; 1 And. 259.

J. S. seised of lands in fee, by indenture, demises them to A. for life, habendum to B., D., and E., his three sons for their lives, and the life of the survivor of them successively; after the death of A., it was adjudged in this case: First, that if the sons could take, it must be by way of remainder, they not being parties to the deed; and then it must be as joint-tenants, which could not be by reason of the word "successively." Secondly, that they could not take in succession, for the uncertainty whose estate or interest was to commence first. Hob. 313; Hut. 37.

A., by indenture, makes a lease to B. for forty years, if A. so long live, and after his death to D. (who was no party to the deed), for one thousand years; and then A. levies a fine, and dies, and five years pass after his death, and then the plaintiff claiming under D. enters, &c.: this is no remainder at all to D.; for, first, presently it cannot vest by reason of the lessor's life interposing, therefore no remainder is vested. Secondly, as a contingent remainder, it cannot be good; because then it ought to have a particular estate to support it, and ought to be in abeyance, or contingency, to vest or not vest when that determines: but here the first lease is no such particular estate, because that reaches not to the commencement of the remainder; nor is the remainder limited with regard to the particular estate, because it is not to commence on the determination of that, but at a future time, viz. on the death of the lessor; and there is no contingency in the case, for it is to take effect, at all events, on the death of the lessor, be it before or after the end of the term; therefore, it can be no other than a future interesse termini, to begin after the death of the party who grants it, which, being but for years, it may well do, because it enures by way of contract; and though the grantee there was no party to the deed, and therefore, as objected, could take nothing, yet it appears that judgment was given for the plaintiff; which proves, first, that the grantee had an interest; secondly, that this interest was not barred by the fine, and five years non-claim after the death of the grantor, not being touched, devested or turned to a right; thirdly, that though the grantee was no party to the indenture, yet he might well take by virtue thereof, if he gets the indenture to make out his title; for the grantor cannot derogate from his own grant, or avoid his own acts. Raym. 140.

We next come to consider the question, what shall be words of limitation, and what words of purchase.

In a grant of an estate in fee simple to A., it is necessary to give it to A. and his heirs: of an estate in fee-tail, to A. and the heirs of his body; and a grant to A. without any additional words, gives him only an estate for life. Hence the word heirs, and the words heirs of the body in the second, are said to be words of limitation; because they limit or describe what interest A. takes by the grant, viz. in one case a fee-simple, in the other a fee-tail; and the heirs, in both instances, take no interest, any farther than as the ancestor may permit the estate to descend to them. But if a remainder is granted, or an estate devised, to the heirs of A. where no estate of freehold is at the same time given to A., the heir of A. cannot take by descent from A.; but he takes by purchase under the grant, in the same manner as if the estate had been given to him by his proper name. Here the word heirs is called a word of purchase. 2 Comm. c. 11 p. 172, in n.

Further to elucidate this contested question, it may be proper to state the much talked-of rule in Shelly's case, and Mr. Fearn's definition of the terms words of limitation, and words of purchase.

The rule in Shelly's case is this:—When the ancestor by any gift or conveyance, takes an estate of freehold, and in the same gift or conveyance an estate is limited, either mediately or immediately, to his heirs in fee, or in tail, always in such cases the heirs are words of limitation, and not words of purchase. 1 Co. 104. And the remainder is said to be executed in the ancestor, where there is no intervening estate; or vested, where an estate for life or in tail intervenes. 2 Comm. c. 11, in n. Otherwise, (continues Coke,) if an estate for years is limited to the ancestor, the remainder to another for life, the remainder to the right of the lessee for years, then his heirs are purchasers, &c. 1 Co. 104.

Mr. Fearn, after examining the terms used by Coke, in laying down the above rule, and vindicating them from the charge of inaccuracy, to which Mr. Douglas had consigned them liable, seems to have fully settled the distinction between words of limitation and words of purchase, in the following manner.

When the words heirs, &c. operate only to expand an estate in the ancestor, so as to let the heirs described into its extent, and entitle them to take derivatively through or from him, as the root of succession, or person in whom the estate is considered as commencing, they are properly words of limitation; but when they operate only to give the estate imported by them, to the heirs described, originally, and as the persons in whom that estate is considered as commencing and not derivatively from or through the ancestor, they are properly words of purchase. Lord Coke, in the rule above alluded to, very properly refers the word purchase to the express objects of limitation, viz. heirs, &c. And when such heirs, &c. originally acquire the estate by those words, he styles them words of purchase; otherwise, not. In general, words of purchase are those, by which, taken absolutely without reference to, or connexion with, any other words, the estate first attaches, or is considered as commencing in the person described by them; whilst words of limitation operate by reference to, or connexion with, other words, and extend or modify the estate given by those other words. This is evidently the line of distinction adopted by Lord Coke, and which pervades the terms of the rule in question; and is in fact admitted by all who do not deny the word heirs, in the common limitation to a man and his heirs for ever, to be words of limitation. But it is to be remarked, that when the words heirs male of the body, &c. operate as words of purchase, that is, when they do not attach in the ancestor, but vest in the person answering the description of such special heir, they appear to have a sort of equivocal or mixt effect: for though they give the estate to the special heir originally, and not through or from his ancestor, yet the estate which he so takes has such a reference to the ancestor, as to pursue the same course of succession, in the same extent of duration or continuance, through the same persons, as if it had attached in and descended from the ancestor. Fearne's Cont. Rem. 107—109, &c. edit. 1791.

If, then, an estate be given to A. for life, and after his death to the heirs of his body, this remainder is executed in A. or it unites with his estate for life; and the effect is the same as if the estate had at once been given to A. and the heirs of his body; which expression limits an estate-tail to A.; and the issue have no indefeasible interest conveyed to them, but can only take by descent from A. So also, if an estate be given to A. for life, with remainder to B. for life, or in tail, remainder to the heirs, or the heirs of the body of A.; in this case A. takes an estate for life, with a vested remainder in fee, or in tail: and his heir, under this grant, can only take by descent at his death. Fearne, 21. But in order that the estate for life, and the remainder in tail or in fee, should thus unite and coalesce, and heirs be a word of limitation, the two estates must be created by the same instrument, and must be either both legal, or both trust estates. Doug. 440; 2 T. R. 444. The rule with regard to the execution or coalition of such estates seems now to be the same in equitable as in legal estates. 1 Bro. C. R. 206. And in all these cases where a person has an estate tail, or a vested remainder in tail, he can bar it and cut off the expectations or inheritance of his issue. Doug. 233.

In order, therefore, to procure a certain provision for children, the method was invented of granting the estate to the father for life, and after his death to his first and other sons in tail; for the words son or daughter were held to be words of purchase; and the remainder to them did not, like the remainder to heirs, unite with the prior estate of freehold. But if the son was unborn, the remainder was contingent, and might have been defeated by the alienation of the father, by forfeiture, fine, or recovery; though a conveyance of a greater estate than he has by bargain and sale, or by lease and release, is no forfeiture, and will not defeat a contingent remainder. 2 Le. 60; 1 Mod 151. To prevent this alienation by tenant in tail, it was necessary to determine trustees, to whom the estate is given upon such a contingent estate, if at all, comes into existence; and this they are said to support and preserve the contingent remainders. This is called a strict settlement, and is the only mode (executory devises excepted) by which a certain and indefeasible provision can be secured to an unborn child. But, in the case of articles or covenants before marriage, for making a settlement upon the husband and wife, and their offspring, if there be a limitation to the parents for life, with a remainder to the heirs of their bodies, the latter words are generally considered as words of purchase, and not of limitation. And a court of equity will decree the articles to be executed in strict settlement. See Fearne, 124, and the examples there cited. It being the great object of such settlements to secure fortunes for the issue of the marriage, it would be useless to give the parents an estate tail, of which they would almost immediately have the absolute disposal. And therefore the courts of equity will decree the estate to be settled upon the parent or parents for life; remainder (or, upon the determination of such estate for life by forfeiture) to trustees, to support contingent remainders, for their lives; remainder (after the decease of the parents) to the first and other sons successively in tail; with remainder to all the daughters in tail, as tenants in common; with subsequent remainders, or provisions, according to the occasions and intentions of the parties.

In these strict settlements, the estate is unalienable till the first son attains the age of twenty-one; who, if his father is dead, has then, as tenant in tail, full power over the estate; or, if his father was living, the son could formerly bar his own issue by a fine, independent of the father. Cruise, 161. See Fine. But the father, and the son at that age, can cut off all the subsequent limitations, and dispose of the estate in any manner they please, formerly by joining in a common recovery, and now by the mode of assurance recently substituted for a recovery. See Recovery, and ante, 11. This is the origin of the vulgar error, that a tenant of an estate-tail must have the consent of his eldest son to enable him to cut off the entail; for that is necessary, where the father has only a life-estate, and his eldest son has the remainder in tail.

But there is no method whatever of securing an estate to the grandchildren of a person who is without children at the time of the settlement; for the law will not admit of a perpetuity: which has been defined to be "any extension of an estate beyond a life in being, and twenty-one years after." 2 Bro. C. R. 30. See Executory Devise. Hence, where in a settlement the father has a power to appoint an estate to or amongst his children, he cannot afterwards give this to his children, in strict settlement, or give any of his sons an estate for life, with a remainder in tail to his eldest son: for if he could do this, a perpetuity would be created by the original settlement. 2 T. R. 241. See 2 Comm. c. 11, in n.

From what has been imperfectly stated under this title, the student will observe how much nicety is required in creating and securing a remainder; and, in some measure, see the general reasons upon which this nicety is founded. It were endless to attempt to enter upon the particular subtleties and refinements into which this doctrine, by the variety of cases which have occurred in the course of many centuries, has been spun out and subdivided. It has been already hinted, (see ante, IV.) that in devises by last will and testament, (which being often drawn up when the party is mors condis, are always more favoured in construction than formal deeds, which are presumed to be made with great caution, fore-thought, and advice,) remainders may be created, in some measure, contrary to the rules laid down: though lawyers will not allow such dispositions to be strictly remainders; but call them by another name, that of executory devises, or devises hereafter to be executed; as to which see further this Dictionary, under that title.

The descent of remainders was, until recently, governed by different rules from estates in possession, but by a late statute both are now placed on the same footing. See Descent.

With respect to the time within which persons claiming in remainder must pursue their rights, see the provisions of the recent statute, under the title, Limitation of Actions, II. 1.

REMANENTES, remansi, belonging to]—de hominibus sive tenentibus qui huic manerio remansi sunt. Domesday.

REMEDY, remedy.] The action or means given by law for the recovery of a right; and it is a maxim of law, that whenever the law giveth any thing, it gives a remedy for the same.

REMEMBRANCERS, rememoratores.] Formerly called clerks of the remembrance; officers of the exchequer, of which, until recently, there were three, distinguished by the names of the king's remembrancer, the lord treasurer's remembrancer, and the remembrancer of first fruits. Upon their charge it lies to put the lord treasurer and the justices of that court in remembrance of such things as are to be called on and dealt in for the king's benefit.

The king's remembrancer enters in his office all recognizances taken before the barons for any of the king's debts, for appearances, &c.; and he takes all bonds for such debts, and makes out process for breach of them; also he writes process against the collectors of customs, subsidies, excise, and other public payments for their accounts. All informations on penal statutes are entered and sued in his office; and he makes the bills of composition on penal laws, and takes the instalment of debts. And all matters of English bills in the exchequer chamber remain in the office of this remembrancer. He has delivered into his office the indentures, fines, and other evidences, which concern the passing any lands to or from the king. In Crastino Annuarum, yearly, he reads in the court the oath of all the officers of the court, when they are admitted. Writs of prerogative, or privilege, for officers and ministers of the court, are made out by him; and commissions of nisi prius, by the king's warrant, on trial of any matters within his office. At the assizes in the country he hath the entering of judgments, of pleas, &c. And all differences touching irregularities in proceedings shall be determined by the king's remembrancer; who is to settle the same, if he can, and give costs where he finds the fault; but, if not, the court is to determine it, &c.

By order of court, his majesty's remembrancer, or his deputy, are diligently to attend in court, and to give an account touching any proceedings as they shall be required; and they enter the rules and orders of the court.

By 57 Geo. 3. c. 60. for regulating certain offices in the Court of Exchequer in England, it was enacted that after the termination of the existing interests in the offices of king's remembrancer, and as soon as the office should become vacant by death, resignation, &c. the duties thereof should be discharged in person, and not by deputy; and the lords of the Treasury were required to regulate the duties, emoluments, and establishments, of the said office accordingly. The fees of the office so regulated to continue chargeable, and be applicable to the future salaries: the surplus, if any, to be applied to the public use.

The treasurer's remembrancer issued out process of fiat facias and extents, for debts to the king, and against sheriffs, escheators, &c. not accounting. He took the accounts of all sheriffs, and made the record, whereby it appeared whether sheriffs, and other accountants, paid their proffers due at Easter and Michaelmas; and he made another record, whether sheriffs, and other accountants, kept their days prefixed. There were also brought into his office all the accounts of customers, comptrollers, and accountants, to make entry thereof on record. All estreats of fines, issues, and amerciaments, set in any of the courts at Westminster, or at the assizes, or sessions, were certified into his office; and by him delivered to the clerk of the estreats, to make out process on them; and he might issue process for discovery of tenures; and all such revenue as was due to the crown by reason thereof, &c.

By the 3 & 4 Wm. 4. c. 99. the office of the lord treasurer's remembrancer was, with the offices connected therewith, abolished. Part of the duties of this office had been previously transferred to other offices; part ceased by the act, and the remainder are to be performed by his majesty's remembrancer.

The remembrancer of the First Fruits' Office is to take all compositions, and bonds for payment of first fruits and tenths, he makes process against all such persons as do not pay the same. 5 Rich. 2. st. 1. c. 14; 37 Edw. 3. c. 4.

REMISSION. A pardon from the king, and passed under the great seal, the taking of which is a confessing the fault. Scotch Law Dict. These remissions do not prevent a private party from pursuing for damages. See Pardon.

REMITTER, from the Lat. remittere, to restore, or send back.] An operation in law; upon the meeting of an ancient right, remediable, and a latter (defeasible) estate, in the same person; (the latter being cast upon him by law; whereby the ancient right is restored and set up again; and the new defeasible estate ceased; and thus he is in, of his first or better estate. See 1 Inst. 347, b; Litt. § 659.

The reason of this invention of the law is in favour of right; and that title which is first, and most ancient, is always preferred. Dyer, 68; Finch's Lam, 119.

A remitter must be to a precedent right: for regularly to every remitter there are two incidents, viz. an ancient right and a defeasible estate of freehold coming together. Dart and Stud. c. 9; Wood's Inst. 528.

Remitter is classed (with retainer), by Blackstone, among those remedies for private wrongs which are effected by the mere operation of law; and is defined to be, where he who hath the true property, or jus proprietatis, in lands, but is out of possession thereof, and hath no right to enter, without recovering possession in an action, hath afterwards the freehold cast upon him by some subsequent, and, of course, defective title. In this case, he is remitted, or sent back, by operation of law, to his ancient and more certain title.

The right of entry, which he hath gained by a bad title, shall be ipso facto annexed to his own inherent good one, and his defeasible estate shall be utterly defeated and annulled by the instantaneous act of law, without his participation or consent. Litt. § 659; Co. Litt. 358; Cro. Jac. 149.

But if the subsequent estate, or right of possession, be gained by a man's own act or consent, as by immediate purchase, being of full age, he shall not be remitted; for the taking such subsequent estate was his own folly, and shall be looked upon as a waiver of his prior right. Co. Litt. 348, 350. Therefore, it is to be observed, that to every remitter there are regularly these incidents; an ancient right and a new defeasible estate of freehold, uniting in one and the same person; which defeasible estate must be cast upon the tenant, not gained by his own act or folly. The reason given by Littleton, why this remedy, which operates shortly, and by the mere act of law, was allowed, is because, otherwise, he who hath right would be deprived of all remedy. Litt. § 661.

The above distinctions may seem superfluous to an law observer, who perhaps would imagine, that since the law hath now both the right, and also the possession, it signifies by what means such possession shall be said to be gained. But the wisdom of our ancient law derives nothing in vain. As the tenant's possession was gained by a defective title, it was liable to be overturned by showing that defect, in a writ of entry; and then he must have been driven to his writ of right to recover his just inheritance, which would have been doubly hard, because, during the time he was himself tenant, he could not establish his prior title by any possessory action. The law, therefore, sent to him to his prior title, or puts him in the same condition as if he had recovered the land by action. Without the remitter, he would have had jus et seisinam separate; a good right, but a bad possession. Now, by the remitter, he hath the most perfect of all titles, juris et seisinæ conjunctionem. 3 Comm. c. 10, p. 190.

There shall be no remitter to a right, for which the party has no remedy by action: as if the issue in tail be barred by the fine or warranty of his ancestor, and the freehold is afterwards cast upon him; he shall not be remitted to his estate-tail: for the operation of the remitter is exactly the same, after the union of the two rights, as that of a real action would have been before it. As then the issue in tail could not, by any action, have recovered his ancient estate, he shall not recover it by remitter. See Co. Litt. 349; Mour. 115; 1 And. 286; 3 Comm. 19; and 1 Inst. 347, a, in n.

And now by the recent statute of limitations, 3 & 4 Wm. c. 27, § 34, the right and title to lands is wisely extinguished when the party is barred by that act of his remedy by entry or action.

There were formerly three degrees of title where a person, dispossessed of his lands, acquired them, in the view of the law, independent of any anterior right. Thus, if A. was dispossessed by B., who then possessed as B., it was a mere naked possession, unsupported by any right, and A. might restore his possession, and put a final end to the possession of B., by a writ of right, without any previous action: but if B. died, the possession descended on his heir by act of law: in this case, the heir came to possession of the land by a lawful title, and acquired in the eye of the law, an apparent right of possession, which was so far good against the person dispossessed, that he lost his right to recover the possession by entry, and could only recover it by an action of law. The actions used in these cases were called possessory actions. But if A. permitted the possession to be withheld from him beyond a certain period of time, without claiming it, or suffered judgment in a possessory action to be given against him by default, or if he agreed in tal. to make a discontinuance: in all these cases B.'s title was strengthened, and A. could no longer recover by a possessory action; and his only remedy then was, by an action on the right: these last actions were called droiturel actions, and were the ultimate resource of the persons dispossessed. Now if, at any of these three stages of the adverse fact, the dispossessor, without any fault in him, came to the possession of the estate by a defeasible title, he was considered to be in, not as of his new right, but as of his ancient and better right; and, consequently, the right of the person, who supposing the dispossessed still to be in as of his defeasible estate, would be entitled to the lands, upon the cession or determination of that estate, was gone for ever. In these circumstances, the dispossessed was said to be remitted to his ancient estate: the principal reason whereof was, as has already been stated, that the person so remitted could not seek to enter upon the estate, so that in those cases where the possession was recovered by entry, the remitter had the effect of an entry. In those cases where the estate was recoverable by action, it had the effect of a judgment at law: but since there was no remitter where the person came to the defeasible estate, came to it by his own act, or his own assent; hence the defeasible estate to enable the party to be remitted, must have been made to him either by descent, or must have come to him by descent, or act of law: neither was there any remission where the ancient estate was not recoverable either by action or by entry. So that in those cases where the dispossessed was beyond the three stages just alluded to, if he afterwards came to the estate by a defeasible title, he remained seized as of that estate, and is not remitted to his more ancient title. 1 Inst. 347 b, in n. See Release, 1.

Now by the 3 & 4 Wm. c. 27, § 39, no descent cast after December, 1833, shall toll or defeat any right of entry or action for the recovery of land; and by § 36, all real and mixed actions are with a few exceptions abolished.

The doctrines of the common law respecting remitter were greatly altered by 27 Hen. 8. c. 10; that statute executes the possession to the party in the same plight, manner, and form as the use was limited to him. It operates only with respect to the first taker, and therefore the issue of the issue is remitted.

Lands are given to a man and his wife, and the heirs of their two bodies; and after the husband alienates the land in fee, and then takes back an estate to him, and his wife, for their lives; here they will both be remitted: but if he take an estate again to himself for life, remitter will not be allowed against his own alienation. Co. Litt. 354.

When the entry of a person is lawful, and he takes an estate in the land for life, or in fee, &c. (except it be by matter of record, or otherwise to conclude or estop him,) he shall be remitted. Co. Litt. 363. And a remitter to one in possession, may be a remitter to another in remainder, if the remainder be not bound, which estops it. Cro. Car. 14.

A father was tenant for life, remainder to his son for life, remainder to the right heirs of the body of the father; he and his son conveyed the lands to the uncle in fee, who died without issue; so that the son, who was heir in tail to the father, was now heir at law to the uncle, and the fee descended on him; the wife of the uncle brought dower, but the son being remitted to his former estate, no dower accrued to the wife, for the estate of which she claims dower is gone. 1 Leon. 37; 9 Rep. 136.

Where a person lets land for term of life to another, who granteth it away in fee; if the alienee make an estate to the lessor, it will be a remitter to him, because his entry is lawful. Litt. § 694.

Many questions as to remitter formerly arose out of cases where a discontinuance had been effected of lands which took away the right of entry; but by the 3 & 4 Wm. c. 27, § 39, no discontinuance subsequent to December, 1833, shall toll or defeat any right of entry or action for the recovery of land. See further Discontinuance.

REMITTITUR. In cases of appeal, the record itself, or a transcript thereof, is sent from the court of B. R. to the Exchequer Chamber, or House of Lords: when judgment is given in the superior court, or the writ of error abates, or is discontinued, the record or transcript is returned (Remittitur, sent back,) to the court of K. B., and the entry of this circumstance is termed a Remittitur. See Tidd's and Sellen's Pract.

RENT,

REDDITUS,] Said to be from redeundo, because Retroit et quotannis redit. Fleta, lib. 3. c. 14. Rather à reddendo, from its being rendered. See post; and title Deed. A sum of money, or other consideration, issuing yearly out of lands or tenements. Plowd. 132. 188. 141. Generally taken as the consideration payable by a tenant for lands, or tenements held under a lease or demise.

Rents are classed, by Blackstone, among incorporeal hereditaments. The word rent or render, redditus, according to him, signifies a compensation or return, it being in the nature of an acknowledgment, given for the possession of some corporeal inheritance. See 1 Inst. 144.

It is defined to be a certain profit issuing yearly out of lands and tenements corporeal. It must be a profit; yet there is no occasion for it to be, as it usually is, a sum of money; for spurs, capons, horses, corn, and other matters may be rendered, and frequently are rendered by way of rent. Co. Litt. 142.

But it cannot be part of the profits demised, as the herbage or vesture of the land, for that would be an exception out of the grant, not a rent reserved. Co. Litt. 47 a.; 2 Com. 41.

It may also consist in services or manual operations; as, to plough so many acres of ground, to attend the king or the lord to the wars, and the like; which services, in the eye of the law, are profits.

This profit must also be certain; or that which may be reduced to a certainty by either party. It must also issue yearly; though there is no occasion for it to issue every successive year; but it may be reserved every second, third, or fourth year: yet as it is to be produced out of the profits of lands and tenements as a recompense for being permitted to hold or enjoy them, it ought to be reserved yearly, because those profits do annually arise, and are annually renewed. It must issue out of the thing granted, and not be part of the land or thing itself; wherein it differs from an exception in the grant, which is always part of the thing granted. Plowd. 13; 8 Rep. 71.

It must, lastly, issue out of lands and tenements corporeal; that is, from some inheritance whereunto the owner or grantee of the rent may have recourse to distrain. Therefore, a rent, strictly speaking, cannot be reserved out of an advowson, a common, an office, a franchise, or the like; but a grant of such annuity or sum (e. g. by a lessee of tithes, or other incorporeal hereditament,) may operate as a personal contract, and oblige the grantor to pay the money reserved, or subject him to an action of debt for the amount of the rent agreed upon; though it doth not affect the inheritance, and is no legal rent in contemplation of law. 1 Inst. 47. 144. See 2 Woodd. 69. and post, II. ad fin. The king however might always reserve a rent out of incorporeal hereditaments: the reason of which is, that he, by his prerogative, can distrain on all the lands of his lessee. 1 Inst. 47. a in n.

So rent cannot issue out of personal chattels: and where chattels are demised with land, the whole rent shall issue out of the land. 2 Wils. 375.

recovery thereof: See also Distress; Ejectment; Sufferance.

III. In what cases a demand for Rent is necessary.

IV. Of the time of demanding Rent, and the place where the demand is to be made.

I. THERE are, at common law, three manner of rents; rent-service, rent-charge, and rent-seck. Litt. § 213.

Rent-service is so called, because it hath some corporeal service incident to it; as, at the least, fealty, or the feudal oath of fidelity. 1 Inst. 142. For, if a tenant holds his land by fealty, and 10s. rent; or by the service of ploughing the lord's land, and 6s. rent; these pecuniary rents, being connected with personal services, are therefore called rent-service. And for these, in case they be behind, or arrear, at the day appointed, the lord may distrain of common right, without reserving any special power of distress; provided he hath in himself the reversion, or future estate of the lands and tenements, after the lease or particular estate of the lessee or grantee is expired. Litt. § 215.

The services are of two sorts, either expressed in the lease or contract, or raised by implication of law. When the services are expressed in the contract, the quantum must be either certainly mentioned, or be such as, by reference to something else, may be reduced to a certainty; for if the lessor's demands be uncertain, it is impossible to give him an adequate satisfaction or compensation for them, as the jury cannot determine what injury he has sustained. Co. Litt. 95. a; Stil. 397; 2 Ld. Raym. 1160.

The services implied are such as the law obliges the tenant to perform when there are none contracted for in the grant; and these are more or less, according to the duration of the gift; as at common law, before the statute quoniam emporum terrarum, if the tenant made a feoffment in fee without any reservation of services, the feoffee held by the same services by which the feoffor held over; because the services being an incumbrance on the land, which the tenant could not discharge without his lord's consent, must follow the land, into whose hands soever it comes. Co. Litt. 22. a.

A rent-charge is where the owner of the rent hath no future interest, or reversion expectant, in the land; as where a man, by deed, maketh over to others his whole estate in fee simple, with a certain rent payable thereout; and adds to the deed a covenant or clause of distress, that if the rent be arrear, or behind, it shall be lawful to distrain for the same. In this case, the land is hable to the distress, not of common right, but by virtue of the clause in the deed: and therefore it is called a rent-charge, because in this manner the land is charged with a distress for the payment of it. Inst. 143.

A clear rent-charge must be free from the land-tax. Doug. 602.

Where a man seised of lands, grants by deed-poll, or indenture, a yearly rent to be issuing out of the same land, to another in fee, in tail, for life or years, with a clause of distress; this is a rent-charge, because the lands are charged with a distress by the express grant or provision of the parties, which otherwise it would not be. So, if a man make a feoffment in fee, reserving rent, and if the rent be behind, that it shall be lawful for him to distrain; this is a rent-charge, the word reserving amounting to a grant from the feoffee. Litt. § 217; Co. Litt. 170. a; Plowd. 134.

A rent granted for equality of partition by one coparcener to another, is a rent-charge, and distrainable of common right, without clause of distress; and although there be no tenure of the sister who grants it; for as the law, for the conveniency of coparceners, allows of such grants, it must consequently give a remedy to the grantee for recovery of it. Litt. § 252.

A rent-charge, granted for life by a tenant for years, is good as a chattel interest, and the goods of a stranger, who is not shown to hold the premises by title paramount to the rent-charge, as by a prior mortgage, may be distrained for the arrears. 1 Ad. & E. 19., S. C., 3 N. & M. 349.

An annuity is a thing very distinct from a rent-charge, with which it is frequently confounded: a rent-charge being a burden imposed upon and issuing out of lands: whereas an annuity is a yearly sum chargeable only upon the person of the grantor. Therefore if a man by deed grant to another the sum of 20*l.* per annum, without expressing out of what lands it shall issue, no land at all shall be charged with it; but it is a mere personal annuity; which is of so little account in the law, that, if granted to an eleemosynary corporation, it is not within the statutes of Mortmain; and yet a man may have a real estate in it, though his security is merely personal. 2 Comm. c. 3. See 1 Inst. 144.

Rent-seck, redditus sicus, or harrin rent, is in effect nothing more than a rent reserved by deed, but without any clause of distress.

A rent-seck is so called, because it is unprofitable to the grantee; as, before seisin had, he can have no remedy for recovery of it; as where a man seised in fee grants a rent in fee for life or years, or where a man makes a feoffment in fee or for life, remainder in fee, reserving rent, without any clause of distress, these are rents-seck; for which, by the policy of the ancient law, there was no remedy, as there was no tenure between the grantor and grantee, or feoffor and feoffee; consequently, no fealty could be due. Litt. § 215, 218; Cro. Car. 520; Kelm. 104; Cro. Eliz. 656.

And it hath been ruled in equity, where an annuity was devised by will to A., and the land subject to the annuity, to B., that B. should give seisin of the rent-seck to A., that he might have remedy for recovery of it at common law; it being the original intention of the gift, that the devisee should have some benefit from it. Moor, 626; 3 Chan. C. 24.

So, when a bill was brought for 3*l.*, for a rent of 5*s.* arrear for twelve years, the equity of the bill being that the deeds by which the rent was created were lost, consequently no remedy for the rent at law; the court, on the plaintiff's proving constant payment till the last twelve years, decreed the defendant to pay the arrears and growing rent; for aces, by payment, it was evident the plaintiff had a right to the rent, and that he could not, without deeds, make a title at law; therefore the court decreed the defendant to pay the rent, and so subjected his person, which possibly might not have been liable by the deed which created the rent. 1 Chan. Ca. 120. This was previous to 4 Geo. 2. c. 28. See post, II.

Though a rent is an incorporeal hereditament, it is susceptible of the same limitations as other hereditaments. Hence it may be granted or devised for life, or in tail, with remainders or limitations over. But there is this difference between an intail of lands, and an intail of rent; that the tenant in tail of lands, with the immediate reversion in fee in the donor, might, by a common recovery, bar the intail and the reversion. See Recovery. Whereas the grantee in tail of a rent de novo, without a subsequent limitation of it, i. e. acquired, by a common recovery only a base fee, determinable upon his decease, and failure of the issue in tail; but if there were a limitation of it in fee, after the limitation in tail, the recovery of the tenant in tail gave him the fee-simple. This was resolved in the cases of Smith v. Farnby, Carth. 52; Sid. 285; 2 Keb. 29, 55, 84; Weeks v. Pauch, Lutw. 1224; Chaplin v. Chaplin, 3 P. Wms. 229; 2 Eq. Abr. 384, 385.

The reason of this difference is, that it would be unjust that the conveyance of a grantee of a rent should give a longer duration or existence to the rent, than it had in its original creation. It is true that the barring of an estate-tail in land is equally contrary to the intention of the grantor.

But a rent differs materially from land. The old principles of the feudal law looked upon every modification of landed property, which was considered to be against common right, with a very jealous eye. Now a rent-charge was supposed to be against common right; the grantee of the rent-charge being subject to no feudal services, and being a burden on the tenant who was to perform them. Upon this principle the law, in every instance, avoided giving, by implication, a continuation to the rent, beyond the period expressly fixed for its continuance. Thus, if a tenant in tail of land die without issue, his wife is entitled to dower for her life out of the land, notwithstanding the failure of the issue; but the widow of a tenant in tail of rent is not entitled to her dower against the donor. So, if a rent is granted to a man and his heirs, generally, and he dies without an heir, the rent does not escheat, but sinks into the land. It is upon this principle, that, when there was not a limitation over in fee, a tenant in tail of rent acquired by his recovery no more than a base fee; as has been already stated: but if there were a limitation in fee, after the particular limitation in tail, the grantor had substantially limited the rent in fee; and therefore it was doing him no injustice, that the recovery should give the donee who suffered it an estate in fee simple. 1 Inst. 298, a. in n.

The case of Chaplin v. Chaplin was, that Lady Hanby, the grandmother of Porter Chaplin, being seised in fee, conveyed certain lands, to the use and intent that the trustees, named in the deed, should receive and enjoy a rent-charge of 30*l.* per annum, and to them and their heirs, with power to distrain for it, and to enter and hold the land on non-payment for forty days: and then the rent was declared to be to the use of Porter Chaplin in tail; remainder to the use of the same person who had the land in fee. P. C. died, leaving issue, who married, and died without issue; and the question was, Whether the widow was entitled to dower in this rent? and determined she was not. It is stated to have been afterwards disclosed to the Court, that the legal estate of the rent in fee was in the trustees: but it is observable, that it was not necessary that any new matter should be adduced to disclose this to the court, as it appeared on the face of the deed: for a conveyance to A. and his heirs, to the use and intent that B. and his heirs may receive a rent out of the estate, gives B. the legal fee of the rent: so that if it is afterwards declared that B. and his heirs are to stand seised of the rent to uses, the intended cestuis que use take only trust or equitable estates. If, therefore, it is intended to limit a rent in strict settlement, it is necessary to do it by way of grant at common law, to some person and his heirs, to the uses intended to be limited. This gives the grantee the mere seisin to the uses, and the uses declared upon it will be executed by the statute. See 1 Inst. 298, a. in n.

There are also other species of rents, which are reducible to these three. Rents of assize are the certain established rents of the freeholders and ancient copyholders of a manor, which cannot be departed from or varied. 2 Inst. 19. Those of the freeholders are frequently called chief-rents, redditus capitales; and both sorts are indifferently denominated quit-rents, quieti redditus; because thereby the tenant goes quit and free of all other services. When these payments were reserved in silver or white money, they were anciently called white-rents, or blanch farms, redditus albi; in contradistinction to rents reserved in work, grain, or baser money, which were called redditus nigri, or black mail. 2 Inst. 19. See those several titles. Rack-rent is only a rent of the full value of the tenement, or near it. A fee-farm rent is a rent-charge issuing out of an estate in fee; of at least one-fourth of the value of the lands, at the time of its reservation: for a grant of lands, reserving so considerable a rent, is indeed only letting lands to farm in fee simple, instead of the usual method for life or years. 1 Inst. 143.

It seems that the quantum of the rent is not essential to create a fee-farm. See 1 Inst. 145, b. n. 5. And also, whether a fee-farm must necessarily be a rent-charge; or may not also be a rent-seck; and Doug. 605.

These are the general divisions of rent; but the difference between them (in respect to the remedy for recovering them) is now totally abolished; and all persons may have the like remedy by distress for rents-seck, rents of assize and chief-rents, (if paid for three years within twenty years preceding the act, or if created since,) as in case of rents reserved upon lease. 4 Geo. 2. c. 28. § 5.

The rent in a lease must be reserved to the lessor, or his heirs, &c., and not to a stranger. See 1 Inst. 213 b. The principle which gave rise to this rule is, that rent is considered as a retribution for the land, and is therefore payable to those who would otherwise have had the land. It is to be observed, that remainder-men in a settlement, being at first view neither feoffers, donors, lessors, nor the heirs of feoffers, donors, or lessors, there seems to have been, for some time after the statute of Uses, a doubt whether the rents of leases, made by virtue of powers contained in settlements, could be reserved to them. In Chudleigh's case, 1 Rep. 159, it is positively said, that if a feoffment in fee be made to the use of one for life, remainder to another in tail, with several remainders over, with a power to the tenant for life to make leases, reserving the rent to the reversioners, and the tenant for life accordingly make leases: neither his heirs, nor any of the remainder-men, shall have the rent. But, in Harcourt v. Pole, 1 Anders. 275, it was adjudged, that the remainder-men might distrain in these cases: and in T. Jones, 36, the dictum in Chudleigh's case is denied to be law. The determination in Harcourt v. Pole will appear incontrovertibly right, if we consider that both the lessees and remainder-men derive their estate out of the reversion or original inheritance of the settler; and therefore the law, to use Coke's expression in Whitlock's case, 8 Rep. 71, will distribute the rent to every one to whom any limitation of the use is made. 1 Inst. 214, a. in n.; and see Id. 213, b. in n.

By the words "yielding and paying," in any indenture of lease, a covenant on the part of the lessee, to pay so much rent, is implied at law; and where the lease is not by deed, the law will imply a promise by the tenant to pay the landlord for his permission to occupy the premises. A special covenant, however, is generally inserted where there is a lease in writing. But in either case the payment of rent is obligatory upon the lessee, so long as he continues to hold the premises without obstruction on the part of the lessor, or such persons as the lessor may have covenanted against. 1 Rol. Abr. 519, l. 26; 8 T. R. 402; 9 Ves. 330; 1 W. Saund. 241, b. n. (5).

II. At common law where a man was seised of a rent-service, rent-charge, rent-seck, or fee-farm rent, either in fee or in tail, and died, neither his heir nor personal representative could recover from the tenant the arrears of rent which had become due in the testator's life-time. Co. Lit. 162, a. It was the same in the case of a tenant pur autre vie of a rent, who died, living cestui que vie; and where a man was seised of such a rent for his own life and died, though his executors or administrators might have had an action of debt for the arrears at common law, yet they had no power to distrain. Ibid.

To remedy these defects it was enacted by the 32 Hen. 8. c. 37. that the executors or administrators of tenants in fee-simple, tenants in fee-tail, and tenants for term of life, of rents-service, rent-charges, rents-seck, and fee-farms, unto whom any such rent or fee-farm be due, shall have an action of debt for such arrears against the tenants, who ought to have paid in the life-time of their testator, or against their executors and administrators, and distrain for the arrears on the land charged with the payment, so long as the lands continue in the seisin or possession of the tenant in demesne, who ought to have paid the rent or fee-farm, or in the seisin or possession of any other person claiming only from the same tenant by purchase, gift, or descent, in like manner as their testator might have done. § 1.

This act shall not extend to any manor in Wales, whereof the inhabitants have used to pay to every lord, at his first entry, any sum of money for discharge of all duties and penalties wherewith the inhabitants were chargeable to any of the lord's ancestors. § 2.

If any man have, in right of his wife, any estate in rents or fee-farms, and the same be unpaid in the wife's life, the husband, after the death of his wife, his executors and administrators, shall have action of debt for the arrears, or may distrain. § 3.

If any have any rents or fee-farms for term of life of any other person, and the rent, &c. be unpaid in the life of such person, and after the said person doth die, he to whom the rent or fee-farm is due, his executors and administrators, shall have an action of debt, or distrain for the same. § 4.

In a modern decision it was held, that the executor of a person who was seised in fee of land, and demised it for a term of years, reserving a rent, could not distrain for arrears of rent accrued in the testator's life-time, for the latter was not a tenant in fee-simple of a rent within the meaning of the above statute. 3 B. & Ad. 849.

Now, however, by the 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 42. § 37. executors or administrators of any lessor or landlord may distrain upon the lands demised for any term, or at will, for the arrears of rent due to such lessor or landlord in his lifetime, in like manner as he might have done in his lifetime.

By § 38, such arrearsages may be distrained for after the end or determination of such term or lease at will, in the same manner as if such term or lease had not been determined, provided such distress be made within six calendar months after the determination of such term or lease, and during the continuance of the possession of the tenant, from whom such arrears became due. Provided also, that all the powers and provisions in the statutes relating to distresses for rent, shall be applicable to the distresses made as aforesaid.

The only clause in the 12 Car. 2. c. 24. for converting military into common soccage tenures, which seems to affect rents, is a proviso (§ 5.) to preserve rents certain, and to make the reliefs on them universally the same as on the death of tenant in common soccage. 1 Inst. 162 b. in n.

By the 8 Ann. c. 14. no goods, upon any tenements leased, shall be taken by any execution, unless the party, at whose suit the execution is sued out, shall, before the removal of such goods, pay to the landlord of the premises, or his bailiff, all money due for rent for the premises; provided the arrears do not amount to more than one year's rent: and in case the arrears shall exceed one year's rent, then the party, paying the said landlord, or his bailiff, one year's rent, may proceed to execute his judgment: and the sheriff is required to levy and pay to the plaintiff, as well the money paid for rent, as the execution-money. § 1.

The act contains a proviso to prevent prejudice to the crown, in recovering and seizing debts, fines, and forfeitures. § 8. See Ogilby v. Wiggate, Part Cas.

Landlord died, and, after execution executed, administration is granted to A.; he is not entitled to a year's rent. 1 Strange, 97.

The administrator of the landlord may have an action against the officer for taking the goods in execution, and removing them from the premises before the landlord was paid a year's rent. 1 Strange, 212.

On motion on behalf of the landlord, the sheriff was ordered to pay him his year's rent, without deducting poundage. 1 Strange, 643.

The statute extends to the immediate landlord, and not to the ground landlord. 2 Strange, 787. After the landlord had been paid a year's rent on one execution, another execution came in, and he moved to be paid another year's rent on the last execution, but was denied; for the intent of the act was only to continue a lien as to one year, and to punish him for his laches if he lets more run in arrear. 2 Strange, 1024.

By the 1 Wm. 4. c. 11. the provisions of the last-mentioned statute are extended to cases of goods attached by writ of pone per rados or writ of extent thereon, issued out of the courts at Durham.

At common law the lessor of lands could only distrain during the continuance of the lessee's estate, where the term was express, the lessor's remedy by distress was gone. See Co. Lit. 47 b, 221 b, note. To remedy this defect it was enacted by the 8 Geo. 2. c. 14. § 6. 7. that it shall be lawful for any person having rent due or any lease for life, years, or at will determined, to distrain for such arrears after determination of the lease, provided that such arrears be due within six calendar months after the determination of such lease, and during the continuance of such land tenancy, and during the possession of the tenant from whom such arrears became due.

By 1 Geo. 2. c. 28. in case any tenant for life or years, or other person who shall come into possession of any lands, &c. under or by collusion of such tenant, wilfully hold over, after the determination of such term, and after demand made in writing, for delivering possession, such person holding over shall pay double the yearly value of the lands, &c. so determined. § 1.

In all cases between landlord and tenant, on the day's rent being in arrear, the landlord having a right by law to re-enter for non-payment, may, without any formal demand or re-entry, serve a declaration in ejectment, and in case of judgment or consent for confessing lease, entry, and ouster, it shall appear that half a year's rent was due before a declaration served, and no sufficient distress to be found, and that the lessor in ejectment had power to re-enter, the lessor in ejectment shall recover judgment. § 2.

As the statute dispenses with a demand for rent in those cases only where there is no sufficient distress on the premises, and six months rent in arrear, it is still necessary for the lessor to comply with all the formalities of the common law, before he can proceed on a clause of re-entry for non-payment of rent, if there is a sufficient distress on the premises. 7 T. R. 117. But an insertion in the proviso of the lease, that the right of entry shall accrue upon the rent being lawfully demanded, will not render a demand necessary if there is no sufficient distress, for it is only stating in express words that which is in substance contained by the principles of the common law in every proviso of this nature. 2 M. & S. 525; and see 2 B. & C. 490.

Lessees, &c. filing a bill in equity, shall not have an injunction against proceedings at law, unless they shall, within ten days after answer filed, bring into court such money as the lessors in their answer shall swear to be in arrear, over and above all just allowances and costs taxed, there to remain till the hearing of the cause, or to be paid to the lessors on good security, subject to the decree of the court; and in case such bill shall be duly filed and execution executed, the lessors shall be accountable for only so much as they shall really make of the premises from the time of their re-entry; and if the same shall happen to be less than the annual rent reserved, the lessees shall not be restored to the possession until they shall make up the deficiency to the lessors. § 3.

If the tenant, at any time before trial, tender or pay into court all arrears with costs, proceedings on ejectment shall cease. § 4. It must be before trial. 7 Last, 360; 2 B. & C. 490.

Previous to the above statute, the courts both of law and equity had exercised a discretionary power of staying the lessor from proceeding at law, in cases of forfeiture for non-payment of rent, by compelling him to take the money really due to him. See Andr. 341; 2 Salk. 597; 8 Mod. 345; 10 Mod. 383; 2 Vern. 103; Wils. 75; 2 Str. 900.

In debt for double the yearly value under the 4 Geo. 2. c. 18. the plaintiff, after stating a demise to the defendant's wife, and the subsequent intermarriage with the defendant, alleged in the first count a notice to quit, and demand of possession delivered to the defendant and his wife; and in the second count alleged a notice to quit, and demand of possession delivered to the wife previous to the intermarriage, the Court of Common Pleas held that to support the second count the husband need not be joined for conformity; and that to sustain the action it was not necessary to have given a notice to the husband subsequent to the marriage. 1 New R. 174.

By the 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. it shall be lawful for the landlord, where the agreement is not by deed, to recover a reasonable satisfaction for the tenements occupied by defendants, in an action on the case for the use and occupation of what was held; and if in evidence on the trial any parol demise or agreement, not by deed, whereon a certain rent was reserved, shall appear, plaintiff may make use thereof as an evidence of the quantum of the damages. § 14.

Where any tenant for life dies before or on the day on which any rent was reserved, on any demise which determined on the death of such tenant for life, the executors or administrators of such tenant for life may, in an action on the case, recover of the under-tenants, if such tenant for life die on the day on which the same was made payable, the whole, or if before such a day, then a proportion of such rent, according to the time so reserved for the year, or half year, or quarter, or other time, in which the rent was growing due, making all just allowances. § 15.

The above clause gives action on the case to executors of a lessor or landlord, being only tenant for his own life, where he dies before or on a rent day; and by his death the lease or demise determines; in which case the lessee or under-tenant, by the common law, might have avoided paying any rent. 1 Inst. 162 b, in note.

If any tenant holding tenements at a rack-rent, or where the rent reserved be full three-fourths of the yearly value of the premises, who shall be in arrear for one year's rent (see post), desert the premises, and leave the same uncultivated or unoccupied, so as no sufficient distress can be had to countervail the arrears, it shall be lawful for two justices of the peace (having no interest in the premises), to go upon and view the same, and to affix, on the most notorious part, notice in writing what day (at the distance of fourteen days at least), they will return to take a second view; and if on such second view the tenant, or some person on his behalf, shall not appear and pay the rent in arrear, or there shall not be sufficient distress on the premises, the justices may put the landlord in possession; and the lease to such tenants as to any demise therein contained only shall become void. § 16.

In case any tenant give notice of his intention to quit, and shall not accordingly deliver up the possession at the time in such notice contained, the tenant, his executors or administrators, shall pay to the landlord double the rent which he should otherwise have paid. § 18.

The remedy given by this section of the act 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. is extended by the 57 Geo. 3. c. 52. to cases where half a year's rent is in arrear.

See also the provisions of the 1 Geo. 4. c. 87. and 1 Wm. 1. c. 70. under title Ejectment.

By the 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. above quoted, landlords are empowered to follow goods fraudulently and clandestinely removed off the premises within thirty days; but this applies to the goods of the tenant only, and not to those of a stranger. 5 M. & S. 38; 4 Campb. 136. See Distress.

See the 56 Geo. 3. c. 88. and 58 Geo. 3. c. 39. to amend the law of Ireland respecting the recovery of tenements, from absconding, overholding, or defaulting tenants, and for protection of the tenant from undue distress, by which many provisions of the English acts are extended to Ireland.

The general remedy for rent is by distress, under the restrictions and directions of the foregoing statutes, and as to which, see further at length, tit. Distress. But there are also other remedies particularized by Blackstone, 3 Comm. c. 15. which it will be sufficient here to notice in a summary manner, as they are treated of under the several titles in this Dictionary.

By action of debt for the breach of the express contract. This is the most usual remedy, when recourse is had to any action at all for the recovery of pecuniary rents; to which species of render almost all free services are now reduced since the abolition of the military tenures; but for a freehold rent reserved on a lease for life, &c., no action of debt lay by the common law during the continuance of the freehold out of which it issued; for the law would not suffer a real injury to be remedied by an action that was merely personal. 1 Rol. Abr. 595. But by the 8 Ann. c. 14. § 4. an action of debt is given for rents on leases for life or lives, as upon a lease for years; and by the 5 Geo. 3. c. 17. which enables ecclesiastical persons to lease tithes and other incorporeal inheritances, action of debt is given (by § 3) for recovery of rent on such leases; and perhaps the first of these statutes extends to leases of incorporeal hereditaments. See 1 Inst. 47 a, in note.

In debt for rent, without showing in what parish the lands were situated, and a particular of the demand describing them in a wrong parish, yet it was held that the plaintiff might recover, it not appearing that any misrepresentation was intended, or that defendant held more than one parcel of land of plaintiff, so as to be misled by the particular. 3 M. & S. 380.

Until recently an assize of mort d'ancestor or novel disseisin lay of rents as well as of lands, if the lord, for the sake of trying the possessory right, made it his election to suppose himself ousted or disseised thereof. This, however, was seldom heard of; and all other real actions to recover rent, being in the nature of writs of right, and therefore more dilatory in their progress, were entirely disused, and are now abolished. Such were the writ of consuetudinibus et serviciis, the writ of cessavit, and the writ of right sur disclaimer, as to which, see those titles, and also title Gavellet. On the other hand, the writ of ne injuste vexes (see that title), and the writ of mesne (see Mean), were remedies for the tenant against the oppression of the lord.

III. MANY of the decisions under this and the following division are, by reason of the statute remedies against non-payment of rent, become of less consequence than they were at the time of their determination, but seem still worthy of being preserved, as showing, in some measure, the evils remedied by those statutes.

With respect to the necessity of demanding rent, there is a material difference between a remedy by re-entry and a remedy by distress for non-payment of the rent; for where the remedy is by way of re-entry for non-payment, there must be an actual demand made previous to the entry, otherwise it is tortious; because such condition of re-entry is in derogation of the grant, and the estate at law being once defeated, is not to be restored by any subsequent payment; and it is presumed, that the tenant is there residing on the premises, in order to pay the rent for preservation of his estate, unless the contrary appears by the lessor's being there to demand it: therefore, unless there be a demand made, and the tenant thereby, contrary to the presumption, appears not to be on the land ready to pay the rent, the law will not give the lessor the benefit of re-entry to defeat the tenant's estate, without a wilful demand in him, which cannot appear without a demand hath been actually made on the land. Co. Lit. 201 b; Hob. 207, 331; 5 Co. 56; Dyer, 51; Plowd. 70; 7 Co. 56; Vaugh. 32; this was at common law; but now see the 4 Geo. 2. c. 28. § 2; ante, Div. II. and tit. Re-entry.

So if there had been a nomine pence given to the lessor for non-payment, the lessor must demand the rent before he can be entitled to the penalty. Hut. 114; Hob. 207, 331. 7 Co. 56.

Where the remedy for recovery of rent is by distress, there needs no demand previous to the distress, though the deed says, that if the rent be behind, being lawfully demanded, that the lessor may distrain; but the lessor, notwithstanding such clause, may distrain when the rent becomes due. So it is if a rent-charge be granted to A., and if it be behind, being lawfully demanded, that then A. shall distrain. he may distrain without any previous demand, because this remedy is not in destruction of the estate, for the distress is only a pledge for payment of it, and the taking a distress is a legal demand of the tenant to pay the rent, which was all that was required by the deed; and the tenant is not injured by the taking of the distress, because, on tender of the rent, the pledges are immediately to be restored, or a writ of detinue lies after the quantum of the rent has been settled in the replevin; whereas in the case of re-entry, or of a penalty, the tenant is really injured, either by loss of his estate or the payment of a greater sum than the rent, which cannot be restored on payment of the rent; therefore he shall not be punished in such cases without a wilful default in law, which cannot otherwise appear than by the proof of a demand, which was not answered by the tenant. Hob. 207. Hut. 13, 23; Moor, 883; 2 Rol. Abr. 426.

But this general distinction must be understood with these restrictions:

That if the king makes a lease, reserving rent, with a clause of re-entry for non-payment, he is not obliged to make any demand previous to his re-entry; but the tenant is obliged to pay his rent for the preservation of his estate, because it is beneath the king to attend his subject to demand his rent. 4 Co. 73; 5 Co. 56; Latch. 23; Moor, 152; Dyer 87, 88.

But this exception is not to be extended to the duchy lands, though they be in the hands of the king, for the king must make a demand before he can re-enter into such lands; but this is by the 1 Hen. 4. c. 18. which provides, that when the duchy lands come to the king they shall not be under such government and regulations as the demesnes and possessions belonging to the crown. Moor, 149, 160.

So if a prebendary make a lease, rendering rent, and the rent be in arrear, and demanded, that it shall be lawful for the prebendary to re-enter, if the reversion in this case comes to the king, the king must in this case demand the rent, though he shall be by his prerogative excused of an implied demand; for the implied demand is the act of the law, the other the express agreement of the parties, which the king's prerogative shall not defeat. Therefore, in case of the king, if he makes a lease reserving rent, with a proviso that if the rent be in arrear for such a time (being lawfully demanded, or demanded in due form), that then the lease shall be void; it seems that not only the reversion in this case, but also the king himself, who continues the reversion in his own hands, is obliged to make an actual demand by reason of the express agreement for that purpose. Dyer, 87, 210.

But if the king, in cases where he need not make a demand, assigns over the reversion, the patentee cannot enter for non-payment without a previous demand, because the privilege is inseparably annexed to the person of the king 4 Co. 73, Moor, 404; Cro. Eliz. 462; Dyer, 87.

Another exception is, where the rent is payable at a place off the land, with a clause that if the rent be behind, being lawfully demanded at the place off the land, or where the clause is, that if the rent be behind, being lawfully demanded of the person who is to pay it, that then he may distrain; in these cases, though the remedy be by distress only, yet the grantee cannot distrain without a previous demand; because there the distress and demand being not complicate, but different acts to be performed at different places and times, the demand must be previous to the distress; for distress is an act of grace, not of common right, and therefore must be used in the manner that it is given. Hob. 208; 2 Roll. Abr. 426; Moor, 83; Braml. 171; but see Hut. 23, contra.

But where the clause is no more than that if the rent be behind, being lawfully demanded (without saying at any place off the land, or of the person of the grantor), that then the grantee may distrain, there needs no actual demand; because there the distress and demand is but one complicate act, the one included in the other, and all done at one time and place, viz. on the land; for the distress is in itself a lawful act, and, therefore, needs no actual demands previous to it; because all that was required by the deed was a lawful demand, which the distress in its own nature is. 2 Roll. Abr. 426; Hob. 208; and see Dyer, 348. See ante, II.

And there seems to have been formerly another exception admitted, that where the remedy was by way of entry for non-payment, that yet there needed no demand if the rent were made payable at any place off the land; because they looked on the money payable off the land to be in nature of a sum in gross, which the tenant had at his own peril undertaken to pay; but this opinion has been entirely exploded, for the place of payment does not change the nature of the service, but it remains in its nature a rent as much as if it had been made payable on the land; therefore the presumption is that the tenant was there to pay it, unless it be overthrown by the proof of a demand; and without such demand, and a neglect or refusal, there is no injury to the lessor, consequently the estate of the lessee ought not to be defeated. Plowd. 70; 4 Co. 73; Moor, 408, 598; Cro. Eliz. 415, 436, 536.

But when the power of re-entry is given to the lessor for non-payment, without any further demand, there it seems that the lessee has undertaken to pay it, whether it be demanded, or not; and there can be no presumption in his favour in this case; because by dispensing with the demand he has put himself under the necessity of making an actual proof that he was ready to tender and pay the rent. Dyer, 68.

There is another exception when the remedy is by distress, and that is when the tenant was ready on the land to pay the rent at the day, and made a tender of it; there it seems there must be a demand previous to the distress; because, where the tenant has shown himself ready on the day by the tender, he has done all that in reason can be required of him; for it would put the tenant to endless trouble to oblige him every day to make a tender, it being altogether uncertain when the lessor will come for his rent when he has omitted to receive it the day he appointed by the lease for payment and receipt; wherefore as the lessee must expect the lessor, not may distrain for it at the day appointed, or else the lessor has lapsed the day of payment, and was not on the land to receive it, he must give the tenant notice to pay it before he can distrain; for the tenant shall be put to no trouble where it appears that he has omitted nothing on his part. Hob. 207. 2 Roll. Abr. 427.

And where the tender was made by a tenant on the land at the day, there a demand on the land is sufficient to justify a distress after the day; because the demand, in such case, is of equal notoriety with the tender, and by parity of reason the tenant ought to take notice of such demand, as well as the lessor of the tender on the land. Hob. 207.

But if the tenant had tendered the rent on the day to the person of the lessor, and he refused it, it seems, by the better opinion, that the lessor cannot distrain for that rent, without a demand of the person of the tenant; because the demand ought to be equally notorious to the tenant as the tender was to the lessor. Hob. 207; 2 Roll. Abr. 427.

So, if the services by which the tenant holds be personal, as homage, fealty, &c. the demand must be of the person of the tenant, because this service is only performable by the very person of the tenant, therefore a demand where he is not, would be improper. Hut. 13; Hob. 207.

Again, if the rent be rent-seck, and the tenant be ready at the last instant of the day of payment to pay the rent, and the grantor is not there to receive it, he must afterwards demand it of the person of the tenant on the lands, before he can have his assize; because the tenant, by the tender at the day, has done all that was required on his part; and if the grantee might have his assize, after such tender on the day, without a demand of the person, the tenant might be made a disseisor, and damages for the disseisin might be laid on him without any wilful default in him; but in the case of a rent-charge, after such tender of the tenant on the land, the grantee may afterwards demand the rent on the land, because he has his remedy by distress, which is no more than a pledge for the rent; and this being to be found and taken on the land, the grantee need only demand his rent where he can find his remedy, which is on the land; but in this case, if the grantee cannot find the tenant on the land to demand the rent, he may, on the next feast on which the rent is payable, demand all the arrears on the land; and if the tenant is not there to pay it, he has failed of his duty, and is guilty of a wilful default, which amounts to a denial; and that denial being a disseisin of the rent, the grantee may have his assize, and by that shall recover the arrears. Cro. Car. 508; 7 Co. 57; Hob. 207; 2 Roll. Abr. 427.

But if there has been neither a tender of the rent nor a demand of the grantee on the day, there the grantee may afterwards demand the rent on the land; because the tenant having omitted to do his duty by a tender on the day, he is still obliged to answer the legal demands of the grantee, which is well made on the land, because the rent issues thereout; for where there is no tender on the day of payment, the rent is due and payable every day afterwards; therefore a demand in the same manner as the law requires, is sufficient; consequently the non-payment, after a demand on the land, is a denial and disseisin, for which the grantee may have his assize. Litt. § 233; 7 Co. 57; 2 Roll. Abr. 427.

If a lease be made, reserving rent, and a bond given for performance of covenants and payment of the rent, the lessor may sue the bond without demanding the rent. Cro. Eliz. 332; Cro. Car. 76; Hob. 8.

If there be several things demised in one lease, with several reservations, with a clause, that if the several yearly rents reserved be behind, or unpaid in part, or in all, by the space of one month, after any of the days on which the same ought to be paid, that then it shall be lawful for the lessor, into such of the premises, whereupon such rents, being behind, is or are reserved, to re-enter; these are in the nature of distinct demises and several reservations, consequently there must be distinct demands on each demise to defeat the whole estate demised. Vaugh. 71, 72. But see 4 Geo. 2. c. 28, § 2.

Also as to the necessity of a demand of the rent, there is a difference between a condition and a limitation; for instance, if tenant for life (as the case was by marriage settlement with power to make leases for twenty-one years, so long as the lessee, his executors or assigns, shall duly pay the rent reserved), make a lease pursuant to the power, the tenant is at his peril obliged to pay the rent without any demand of the lessor; because the estate is limited to continue only so long as the rent is paid; therefore, for non-performance, according to the limitation, the estate must determine; as if an estate be made to a woman dum sola fuerit, this is a word of limitation which determines her estate on marriage. Vaugh. 31, 32; Hob. 331; 2 Roll. Abr. 429; 2 Mod. 264; 3 Co. 64; Dyer, 87, 88; Noy, 145.

Where a rent-charge is granted with power to the grantee, in case the rent should be in arrear for a time specified, to enter and enjoy the lands charged, and receive and take the rents and profits for his own use, until satisfaction of the arrears of rent and costs, the grantee may, on the rent-charge becoming in arrear, maintain ejectment against the tenant without proof of a previous demand of the rent, for it is not a case of forfeiture. 3 N. & M. 567.

IV. RENT is regularly due and payable upon the land from whence it issues, if no particular place is mentioned in the reservation. Co. Litt. 201. But in case of the king, the payment must be either to his officers at the Exchequer, or to his receiver in the country. 4 Rep. 73. And, strictly, the rent is demandable and payable before the time of sun-set of the day whereon it is reserved, though perhaps not absolutely due till midnight. Co. Litt. 302; 1 Anders. 253; 1 Saund. 287; Prec. Chanc. 555; Salk. 578.

If the lessor dies before the sun is set on the day upon which the rent is demandable, it is clearly settled that the rent unpaid is due to his heir, and not to his executor; but if he dies after sun-set, and before midnight, it seems to be the better opinion that it shall go to the executor, and not to the heir. 1 P. Wms. 178.

There is a material difference between the reservation of a rent payable on a particular day, or within a certain time after, and the reservation of a rent payable at a certain day, with a condition that, if it be behind by the space of any given time, the lessor shall enter; in both cases a tender on the first or last day of payment, or on any of the intermediate days, to the lessor himself, either upon or out of the land, is good; but in the former case it is sufficient if the lessee attends on the first day of payment at the proper place; and if the lessor does not attend there to receive the rent, the condition is saved. In the latter case, to save the lease, it is not sufficient that the lessee attends on the first day of payment, for he must equally attend on the last day. 10 Rep. 129 a; Plowd. 70 a, b; Cro. Eliz. 48. See 1 Inst. 202 a, in n.

The other effects of this question of the time of the rent becoming due, are now in equal measure superseded by the statute regulations already stated and alluded to. But the following determinations on the subject may, notwithstanding, be requisite to be known.

The time for payment of rent, and consequently for a demand, is such a convenient time before the sun-setting of the last day as will be sufficient to have the money counted; 4 Taunt. 549; 1 Swanst. 343, note; but if the tenant meet the lessor on the land at any time of the last day of payment, and tenders the rent, that is sufficient tender, because the money is to be paid indefinitely on that day, therefore a tender on the day is sufficient. Co. Litt. 202 a; Dalst. 44; Sav. 258; 4 Leon. 171; 1 Saund. 287.

If the rent be payable at Easter, and the tenant pays the rent in the morning of that day, and the lessor dies at two hours before noon of the same day, the payment is voluntary, and yet it is a good satisfaction against the heir. 10 Co. 127 b; and see 1 Swanst. 346; Henniker v. Turner, 4 B. & C. 157.

If a lease is made rendering rent at Michaelmas between the hours of one and five in the afternoon, with a clause of re-entry, and the lessor comes at the day, about two in the afternoon, and continues to five, this is sufficient. Cro. Eliz. 15. The demand may be made by attorney. 4 Leon. 479. But the power must be special, for such land and of such tenant Yels. 37; 1 Brownl. 138. Demand must be proved by witnesses. Dyer, 68. Must be made of the precise sum due. 1 Leon. 305; Sav. 121; Mo. 207.

If a lease be made reserving rent on condition that if the rent be behind at the day, and ten days after (being in the mean time demanded), and no distress to be found upon the land, that the lessor may re-enter; if the rent be behind at the day, and ten days after, and a sufficient distress be on the land till the afternoon of the tenth day, and then the lessee takes away his cattle, and the lessor demands the rent at the last hour of the day, and the lessee does not pay it, and there is not any distress on the land, yet the lessor cannot enter, because he made no demand in the mean time between the day of payment and the ten days, which by the clause he was obliged to do. Cro. Eliz. 63. But see 4 Geo. 2. c. 28 and ante, II.

As to the place of demanding rent, there is a difference between a remedy by re-entry and distress; for when the rent is reserved on condition that, if it be behind, the lessor may re-enter, in such case the demand must be upon the most notorious place on the land; therefore, if there be a house on the land, the demand must be at the fore-door thereof, because the tenant is presumed to be there residing, and the demand being required to give notice to the tenant, that he may not be turned out of possession without a wilful default, such demand ought to be in the place where the end and intention will be best answered. Co. Litt. 153, 201; 2 Roll. Abr. 428.

And it seems the better opinion, that it is not necessary to enter the house, though the doors be open, because that is a place appropriated for the peculiar use of the inhabitant, into which no person is permitted to enter without his permission, and it is reasonable that the lessor shall go no farther to demand his rent than the tenant should be obliged to go, when he is bound to tender it; and a tender by the tenant at the door of the house of the lessor is sufficient, though it be open without entering; therefore, by parity of reason, a demand by the lessor at the door of the tenant, without entering, is sufficient. Dalst. 59; Co. Litt. 201; 1 And. 27; 3 Leon. 13 and see Cro. Eliz. 13.

But when the demand is only in order for a distress, then it is sufficient if it be made on any notorious part of the land, because this is only to entitle him to his remedy for his rent, therefore, the whole land being equally debtor, and chargeable with the rent, a demand on it, without going to any particular part of it, is sufficient. Co. Litt. 153.

RENTAL, corrupted from rent-roll. A roll where the rents of a manor are written and set down, by which the lord's bailiff collects the same. It contains the lands and tenements let to each tenant, and the names of the tenants, the several rents arising, and for what time, usually a year. Compl. Court Keep. 475.

RENTAL-RIGHT. A species of lease given usually at a low rent, and for life: where they were given to a tenant who, he heirs, they were a good ground of possession to the first heir after the decease of the original tenant. Such tenants were called Rentals, or kindly-tenants. See Bell's Scot. & Int. Law.

RENTAL'D TRIND BOLL, is when the trinds (tithes) have been liquidated and settled for so many bolls of corn yearly, by rental or an old use of payment. Scotch Dict.

RENTS OF ASSIZE. The certain rents of freeholders and ancient copyholders; so called, because they were assised, and different from others, which were uncertain, paid in corn, &c. 2 Inst. 19. See Rent, I.

RENTS RESOLUTE, redditus resoluti. Are accounted among the fee-farm rents to be sold by 22 Car. 2. c. 6. being such rents or tenths as were anciently payable to the crown from the lands of abbots and religious houses; and after their dissolution, notwithstanding the lands were demised to others, yet the rents were still reserved, and made payable again to the crown. Conell.

RENUNCIATION. The act of renouncing a right; as executors may renounce or refuse to take probate of a will. See Executors.

REPARATIONS. A tenant for life or years may cut down timber-trees to make reparations, although he be not compelled thereto; and when a house is ruinous at the time of lease made, and the lessee suffers it to fall, he is not bound to rebuild it; and yet if he fell timber for reparations, he may justify the same. Co. Litt. 54.

Lessee covenants, that from and after the amendment and reparation of the houses by the lessor, he at his own charges will keep and leave them in repair. In this case the lessee is not obliged to do it unless the lessor first make good the reparations. And if it be well repaired at first, when the lease is made, and later it decays, the lessor must first repair before the lessee is bound to keep it so. Cro. Jac. 672; see also Lease c. 72; and Covenant, Lease, Waste.

REPARATIONE FACIENDA. An ancient writ which lay in many cases, one whereof was where there were tenants in common or joint-tenants of a house, &c. which was fallen into decay, and one was willing to repair it, but the others were not. In this case, the party willing to repair the same should have this writ against the others. F. N. B. 127.

And if a man had a house adjoining to my house, and he suffered his house to be in decay to the annoyance of my house, I might have had a writ against him to repair his house. So, if a person had a passage over a bridge, and another ought to have repaired the bridge, who suffered it to fall in decay, &c. New Nat. Br. 281.

REPEAL, from the Fr. rappel, i. e. revocatio.] A revocation; as the repealing of a statute is the revoking or disannulling it. Rastal.

It is said a pardon of felony, &c. may be repealed on disproving the suggestion. 1 Keib. 19. See Pardon. A deed or will may stand good as to part, and be repealed for the rest. Style, 241.

REPETUNDARUM CRIMEN. The crime of receiving a bribe to prevent justice. See Barratry, Bribery, Extortion, &c.

REPLEADER, replacitare. To plead again. See Pleading I. 3. ad finem.

Repleader is to be had where the pleading hath not brought the issue in question which was to be tried. Also, if a verdict be given where there was no issue joined, there must be a repleader to bring the matter to trial, &c. 2 Lil. 460.

It was held that, at common law, a repleader was granted before trial, because a verdict did not cure an immaterial issue; but that now a repleader ought never to be awarded before trial, because the fault in the issue may be helped by the statute of joinders. That if a repleader is denied where it should be granted, or à converso, it is error; and the judgment in repleader is general, (viz.) quod partes replacent. They must begin again at the first fault, which occasioned the immaterial issue; if the declaration and the bar, and the replication, be all ill, they must begin de novo; but if the replication be good, and the replication ill, they must begin at the replication, and no costs are allowed on either side.

and a repleader cannot be awarded after a default. 2 Salk. 579.

Though a repleader is allowed after verdict, it has been adjudged not to be awarded after demurrer; (but a repleader hath formerly been granted after demurrer, and likewise after the demurrer argued); and that a repleader can never be awarded after a writ of error, but only after issue joined, &c. Litch. 147; 3 Lev. 440; Mod. Ca. 102.

REPLEGIARE. To redeem a thing detained or taken by another, by putting in legal sureties. See Replevin.

Repleading is applied in the Scotch law to the power of reclaiming a criminal, and trying him under a different jurisdiction from that of the court before which he is accused.

REPLEGIARE DE AVERIIS. A writ brought by one whose cattle are distrained, or put in the pound, on any cause, by another person, on surety given to the sheriff to prosecute or answer the action at law. F. N. B. 68; Reg. Orig. 7 H. 8. c. 4. See Replevin.

I. A REPLEVIN is a remedy grounded and granted on a distress; being a re-deliverance of the thing distrained, to remain with the first possessor, on security (or pledges) given by him to try the right with the distrainer, and to answer him in a course of law. Or, it is bringing the writ called replegiari facias by him who has his cattle or goods distrained by another, and putting in surety to the sheriff, that on delivery of the thing distrained, he will prosecute the action against the distrainer. Litt. lib. 2. c. 12. § 219; 1 Inst. 145 b.

Replevin is a writ, and usually granted in cases of distress, and is a matter of right; so that if a man grants a rent with clause of distress, and grants further, that the distress taken shall be irreplevisable, yet it may be replevied; for such restraint is against the nature of a distress, and no private person can alter the common course of the law. Co. Litt. 145.

An action of replevin is founded upon, and is the regular way of contesting the validity of a distress; being a re-delivery of the pledge, or thing taken in distress, to the owner, by the sheriff or his deputy, upon the owner's giving security to try the right of the distress, and to restore it if the right be adjudged against him; after which, the distrainer may keep it till tender made of sufficient amends, but must then redeliver it to the owner. 3 Comm. c. 9. p. 147, cites 1 Inst. 145; 8 Rep. 147.

In other words, a replevin is a judicial writ to the sheriff complaining of an unjust taking and detention of goods and chattels, commanding the sheriff to deliver back the same to the owner upon the security given to make out the injustice of such taking, or else to return the goods and chattels. Gilb. on Replev. 80.

The remedy of replevin, though seldom used except in cases of distress, seems equally applicable to other cases of wrongful taking. See Lord Redesdale's remarks, 1 Sch. & Lef. and Lord Ellenborough's, 2 Stark. Ca. 287; Bac. Abr. v. 7. p. 67.

In this writ or action both plaintiff and defendant are called actors; the one, i. e. the plaintiff, suing for damages; and the other, the avowant or defendant, to have a return of the goods or cattle. 2 Bendl. 84; Cro. Eliz. 799; 2 Mod. 149. Therefore, either party may carry down the cause; and if the defendant give notice, and do not go on to trial, the court will give costs against him; for the same reason, the defendant may not move for judgment of non-suit unless the plaintiff has given notice of trial. Bull. N. P. 61.

That the avowant (the person making the distress) is in nature of a plaintiff, appears, 1st, from his being called an actor, which is a term in the civil law, and signifies plaintiff; 2dly, from his being entitled to have judgment de retorno habendo, and damages, as plaintiff; 3dly, from this, that the plaintiff may plead in abatement of the avowry, consequently, such avowry must be in nature of an action. Carth. 122; 6 Mod. 103; Yelv. 148.

The avowant, being in nature of a plaintiff, need not aver his avowry with an hoc paratus est verificare, more than any other plaintiff need aver his count. Plowd. 263. See post, IV.

Nor shall he have a protection cast for him more than any other plaintiff. 2 Inst. 339.

But though an avowry be in nature of an action, yet one tenant in common may avow for taking cattle damage feasant. Cro. Eliz. 530.

Replevin is an action founded on the right, and different from trespass. Carth. 74; Yelv. 148; Hob. 16; Cro. Eliz. 799.

It is now held, that as no lands can be recovered in this action, it cannot with any propriety be considered as a real action; though the title of lands may incidentally come in question, as it may do in an action of trespass, or even of debt, which are actions merely personal. Finch's Law, 316; and see Comb. 476; Fitzg. 109.

Formerly, when the party distrained upon intended to dispute the right of the distress, he had no other process by the old common law than by a writ of replevin, replegiari facias; which issued out of chancery, commanding the sheriff to deliver the distress to the owner, and afterwards to do justice, in respect to the matter in dispute, in his own county court. F. N. B. 68. But this being a tedious method of proceeding, the beasts or other goods were long detained from the owner, to his great loss and damage. 2 Inst. 139. For which reason, the statute of Marlbridge, (52 Hen. 3.) c. 21, directs, that without suing a writ out of the chancery, the sheriff immediately, upon plaint to him made, shall proceed to replevin the goods. See post, III. And for the greater ease of the parties, it is further provided by 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 12. that the sheriff shall make at least four deputies in each county for the sole purpose of making replevin. See post, III. Upon application, therefore, either to the sheriff or one of his said deputies, security is to be given in pursuance of the statute of West. 2. 13 Edw. 1. c. 2; 1st. That the party replevying will pursue his action against the distrainer; for which purpose he puts in plegios de proseguendo, or pledges to prosecute. 2dly. That if the right be determined against him, he will return the distress again; for which purpose he is also bound to find plegios de retorno habendo. See post, IV. Besides these pledges, the sufficiency of which is discretionary, and at the peril of the sheriff, the 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. § 23. requires that the officer granting a replevin on a distress for rent shall take a bond with two sureties in a sum of double the value of the goods distrained, conditioned to prosecute the suit with effect and without delay, and for return of the goods, which bond may be assigned to the avowant or person making cognizance on request made to the officer, and, if forfeited, may be sued in the name of the assignee. See post, IV. And certainly as the end of all distresses is only to compel the party distrained upon to satisfy the debt or duty owing from him, this end is as well answered by such sufficient sureties, as by retaining the very distress, which might frequently occasion great inconvenience to the owner, and that the law never wantonly inflicts. The sheriff, on receiving such security, is immediately, by his officers, to cause the chattels taken in distress to be restored into the possession of the party distrained upon, unless the distrainer claims a property in the goods so taken. For if by this method of distress the distrainer happens to come again into possession of his own property in goods which before he had lost, the law allows him to keep them without any reference to the manner by which he thus has regained possession, being a kind of personal remitter. See Remitter. If, therefore, the distrainer claims any such property, the party replevying must sue out a writ de proprietate probando, in which the sheriff is to prove by an inquest in whom the property previous to the distress subsisted. Finch. L. 316. And if it be found to be in the distrainer, the sheriff can proceed no further, but must return the claim of property to the Court of King's Bench or Common Pleas, to be there further prosecuted, if thought advisable, and there finally determined. Co. Litt. 145; Finch. L. 450.

But if no claim of property be put in, or if (upon trial) the sheriff's inquest determine it against the distrainer, then the sheriff is to replevy the goods, (making use of even force if the distrainer makes resistance, 2 Inst. 193,) in case the goods be found within his county. But if the distress be carried out of the county or concealed, then the sheriff may return that the goods or beasts are eloiigned—elongata, carried to a distance, to places to him unknown; and thereupon the party replevying shall have a writ of capias in withernam; in vetito (or more properly, repetito) namio; a term which signifies a second or reciprocal distress in lieu of the first, which was eloiigned. It is therefore a command to the sheriff to take other goods of the distrainer in lieu of the distress formerly taken and eloiigned, or withheld from the owner. F. N. B. 69, 73. So that here is now distress against distress; one being taken to answer the other, by way of reprisal, and as a punishment for the illegal behaviour of the original distrainer. For which reason, goods taken in withernam cannot be replevied till the original distress is forthcoming. 3 Comm. c. 9. See post, III.

But, in common cases, the goods are delivered back to the party replevying, who is then bound to bring his action of replevin, which may be prosecuted in the county court, be the distress of what value it may. 2 Inst. 139. But either party may remove it to the superior Courts of King's Bench or Common Pleas, by writ of recordari or pone. 2 Inst. 23; the plaintiff at pleasure, the defendant upon reasonable cause. F. N. B. 69, 70. And also, if in the course of proceeding any right of freehold comes in question, the sheriff can proceed no further; so that it is usual to carry it up in the first instance to the courts of Westminster Hall. Finch. L. 317. Upon this action brought, and a declaration delivered, the distrainer, who is now the defendant, makes avowry; that is, he avows taking the distress in his own right, or the right of his wife; and sets forth the reason of it, as for rent arrear, damage done, or other cause; or else, if he justifies in another's right, as his bailiff or servant, he is said to make cognizance; that is, he acknowledges the taking, but insists that such taking was legal, as he acted by the command of one who had a right to distrain; and on the truth and legal merits of this avowry or cognizance the cause is determined. If it be determined for the plaintiff, viz. that the distress was wrongfully taken, he has already got his goods back into his own possession, and shall keep them, and moreover recover damages. 1. N. B. 69. See 21 H. 2. c. 19; and post, IV. But if the defendant prevents by the default or nonsuit of the plaintiff, then he shall have a writ de retorno habendo, whereby the goods or chattels (which were distrained and then replevied) are returned again into his custody, to be sold or otherwise disposed of, as if no replevin had been made. And at the common law the plaintiff might have brought another replevin, and so in infinitum, to the intolerable vexation of the defendant. Wherefore the statute of Westm. 2. c. 2. restrains the plaintiff, when nonsuited, from suing out any fresh replevin, but allows him a judicial writ, issuing out of the original record, and called a writ of Second Deliverance, in order to have the same distress again delivered to him on giving the like security as before. And if the plaintiff be a second time nonsuit, or if the defendant has judgment upon verdict or demurrer in the first replevin, he shall have a writ of return irreplevisable, after which no writ of second deliverance shall be allowed. 2 Inst. 340. But in case of a distress for rent arrears, the writ of second deliverance is in effect taken away by 17 Car. 2. c. 7; which directs that if the plaintiff be nonsuit before issue joined, then upon suggestion made on the record in nature of an avowry or cognizance; or if judgment be given against him on demurrer, then without any such suggestion; the defendant may have a writ to inquire into the value of the distress by a jury, and shall recover the amount of it in damages, if less than the arrear of rent; or if more, then so much as shall be equal to such arrear, with costs; or if the nonsuit be after issue joined, or if a verdict be against the plaintiff, then the jury encompelled to try the cause shall inquire concerning the sum of the arrears, and the value of the goods, &c. distrained; and thereupon the defendant shall have judgment for such, or so much thereof, as the goods, &c. distrained amounted unto. And if (in any of these cases) the distress be insufficient to answer the arrears distrained for, the defendant may take a further distress or distresses. See 1 Vent. 64. But otherwise, if pending a replevin for a former distress, a man distrains again for the same rent or service, then the party is not driven to his action of replevin, but shall have a writ of recaption, and recover damages for the defendant, the distrainor's, contempt of the process of the law. F. N. B. 71; 3 Comm. c. 9. See Recaption.

II. It is a general rule, that the plaintiff ought to have the property of the goods in him at the time of the taking; and not only a general property, which every owner hath, but also a special property, such as a person hath who hath goods pledged with him, or who hath the cattle of another to manure his lands, &c. is sufficient to maintain a replevin, and in such cases either party may bring a replevin. Co. Litt. 145; Winch. 26.

He that brings replevin must have an absolute, or at least a special, property in the thing distrained; and therefore several men cannot join in a replevin, unless they be joint-tenants, or tenants in common. Executors may have a replevin of a taking in vid. testatoris. So, if the cattle of a feme sole be taken, and she afterwards intermarry, the husband alone may have replevin; but, if they join after verdict, judgment will not be arrested, because the court will presume them jointly interested; (as they may be, if a distress be taken of goods of which a man and woman were joint tenants, and afterwards intermarry); the avowry admitting the property to be in the manner it is laid. Bull. N. P. c. 4. p. 53.

A replevin doth not lie of things which are feræ naturæ, as conies, hares, monkies, dogs, &c.; but if things, wild by nature, are made tame, or are reclaimed, so long as they continue in that condition, they belong to the person who hath the possession of them, and he may bring replevin; and the general rule herein seems to be, that a replevin lies for any thing that may by law be distrained. 2 Roll. Abr. 430; Godb. 124. See Distress.

We read of canes replegiati, hounds replevied, in a case between the abbot of St. Alban's and Geoffrey Chaldwick, 24 Hen. 3.

Goods may be replevied by writ, which is by the common law, or by plant, which is by statute law, for the more speedy having again their cattle and goods.

A replevin lies of a leveret; for it has animum revertendi; for the same reason it lies of a ferret; but it is said not to lie for a mastiff dog, though an action of trespass will. Br. Repl. 64; 2 Roll. Abr. 430. Sed quære?

Replevin lies of a swarm of bees. F. N. B. 68.

But not of trees, or timber growing; nor of things annexed to the freehold, because such things cannot be distrained; yet replevin lies of certain iron belonging to the party's mill. F. N. B. 68.

So replevin doth not lie of deeds or charters concerning lands, for they are of no value, but as they relate thereto. Bro. Repl. 34.

Nor of money, or leather made into shoes. Moor, 394; 2 Brownl. 139.

If a mare in foal, a cow in calf, &c., are distrained, and they happen to bring forth their young, whilst they are in the custody of the distrainor, a replevin lies for the foal, calf, &c. Bro. Repl. 41; F. N. B. 69; 1 Sid. 82.

Replevin lies for a ship; so for the sails of the ship. March, 110; Raym. 232. Replevin lies not for goods taken beyond sea, though brought hither by the defendant afterwards. 1 Show. 91.

Where an act of Parliament orders a distress and sale of goods, this is in the nature of an execution, and replevin does not lie: but if the sheriff grants one, yet it is not such a contempt as to grant an attachment against him; and Powell, Justice, said, he remembered a case in the Exchequer, where a distress was taken for a fee-farm rent due to the king and a replevin granted, yet, on debate, no attachment was granted, though it was in the king's case. Trin. 12 W. 3. in C. B. Bradshaw's case. But it is now determined that, if goods be taken in execution, (or on a conviction before justices,) the sheriff shall not make replevin of them; and if in such case the sheriff should make replevin, he would subject himself to an attachment; for goods are only replevisable where they have been taken by way of distress. Bull. N. P. c. 4. p. 53.

Whether goods taken under a warrant of distress by commissioners of sewers may be replevied while in the hands of the officer, and whether they may be replevied by the sheriff or his deputy, is doubtful: but if they be actually replevied, and the proceedings in replevin be removed into K. B. that court will not quash the proceedings on a summary application, but will leave it to the defendant in replevin to put his objection on record. 6 T. R. 522.

Where a magistrate has jurisdiction, and adjudges, and on refusal to pay, issues a warrant of distress and sale, the goods taken under such warrant are not replevisable. Per Richardson, J., 1 B. & B. 57. And see 2 B. & B. 391.

But when justices exceed the special jurisdiction given to them by a particular statute, the goods which have been distrained in consequence of such excess of jurisdiction may be replevied, even though the court of appeal has confirmed the warrant of distress; as where a distress was taken for a poor's rate for lands not in the occupation of the plaintiff, the court held, notwithstanding the sessions, on appeal, had confirmed the rate, that the distress was replevisable, because the determining that a man may be assessed for what he does not occupy, was an excess of the jurisdiction given by the 43 Eliz. c. 2, and 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. 2 Bla. 1330.

If I distrain another's cattle damage-tenant, and, before they are impounded, he tenders me sufficient amends; now, though the original taking was lawful, my subsequent detainer of them, after tender of amends, is wrongful, and he shall have an action of replevin against me to recover them; in which he shall recover damages only for the detention and not for the caption, because the original taking was lawful. F. N. B. 69. See 3 Comm. c. 9. But if the tender were before the taking, the taking is tortious: if after impounding, neither the taking nor detaining is tortious. And after the avowant has had return irreplevisable, yet if the plaintiff make sufficient tender, he may have his action of detinue for the detainer after. Bull. N. P. 60.

Where cattle distrained damage-tenant were put in a private pound, but were intended to be forwarded to a public pound, a tender of amends was held good. 4 Bing. 230.

III. REPLEVIN may be made either by original writ of replevin, at common law, or by plaint, under the stat. of Marl. 52 H. 3. c. 21; Co. Litt. 145; F. N. B. 69.

The following are the words of this statute: "That if the beasts of any person be taken, and wrongfully withheld, the sheriff after complaint made to him thereof, may deliver them, without let or gainsaying of him that took the beasts, if they were taken out of liberties; and if the beasts were taken within any liberties, and the bailiff of the liberty will not deliver them, then the sheriff, for default of those bailiffs, should cause them to be delivered."

The mischiefs before this act, as has been already hinted, were the great delay and loss the party was at, by having his beasts or goods withheld from him; as also, that when cattle were distrained and impounded within any liberty which had return of writs, the sheriff was obliged to make a warrant to the bailiff of the liberty to make deliverance; and there was another mischief, when the distress was taken without and impounded within the liberty. To remedy which, by this statute, the sheriff, on plaint made to him without writ, may, either by parol or precept, command his bailiff to deliver the beasts or goods, that is, to make replevin of them; and by these words, (post querimoniam sibi factam) the sheriff may take a plaint out of the county-court, and make a replevin presently, which he is to enter in the court; as it would be inconvenient, and against the scope of the statute, that the owner, for whose benefit the statute was made, should tarry for his beasts till the next county-court, which is holden from month to month. And by this act, the sheriff may hold plea in the county-court on replevin by plaint, though the value be of 40s. or above; and yet, in other actions, he shall only hold plea where the matter is under 40s. value. 2 Inst. 139; 13 Co. 21; 1 Keb. 205; Dalt. Sh. 430.

Replevins by writ issue, properly, out of Chancery, returnable into the courts of K. B. and C. B. at Westminster. F. N. B. 68; Gillb. Distr. & Repl. 68. and post, V.

Replevins by plaint are made by the sheriff by force of the above-mentioned statute of Marlbridge; by which he is directed, on complaint made to him by the party that his goods or cattle are distrained, to command his bailiff, (which may be by parol or precept, to make deliverance; and which plaint may be taken at any time, and as well out of, as in court. Bro. Repl. pl. 4; Co. Litt. 145; 2 Inst. 139.

It becomes the sheriff's duty, on complaint, by parol or by precept to his bailiff, to replevy the cattle, which precept may be given before any county-court: but such plaint is afterwards to be entered by the party who made the complaint, and not by the sheriff. 2 Com. Rep. 591.

The action of replevin is of two sorts: 1. In the detinet; 2. In the detinuit. Where the party has had his goods redelivered to him by the sheriff, upon a writ of replevin, or upon a plaint levied before him, the action is in the detinuit; but where the sheriff has not made such replevin, but the defendant still has the goods, the action is in the detinet. However, of late years no action has been brought in the detinet, though there is much curious learning in the old books concerning it. The advantage the plaintiff has in bringing an action of replevin in the detinet, in preference to an action of trespass de bonis asportatis, is, that he can oblige the defendant to re-deliver the goods immediately, in case, upon making his avowry, they appear to be replevisable: but as, in such cases, he may more speedily have them delivered to him by application to the sheriff in the common way, it is of no use, unless the distrainer have eligned the goods, so that the sheriff cannot get at them to make replevin; and in such case the plaintiff may bring an action of replevin in the detinet, and after avowry, pray that the defendant may give deliverance; or he may, upon return of an elongavit to the plures writ of replevin, have a writ to the sheriff, commanding him to take other beasts, &c. of the defendant in withernam, but if the defendant, before the return of the withernam, appear to the writ of replevin, and offer to plead non cepit, it shall stay the withernam, for the defendant shall not be concluded by the return of an elongavit, since the sheriff can make no other return where he cannot find the thing to be replevied. Bull. N. P. c. 4.

The hundred court, and courts of lords of manors, may by prescription hold plea in replevin, so may incidentally have power to replevy goods or cattle; but that, it seems, must be by process of the court after a plaint entered, but not by parol complaint out of court. Carth. 380.

Therefore, where in trespass for taking goods, &c. the defendant justified that the place where, &c. was a hundred, and time out of mind had a court of all actions, replevins, &c. grantable in or out of court, virtute cujus, &c.; the question was, If good or not? And the reason of the doubt was, because the county-court could not hold plea in replevin at common law; but were enabled by the statute of Marlbridge, which extends not to the hundred court, which is a court derived out of the county-court; but per Cur. clearly, supposing they may grant them in court, yet they cannot prescribe to grant them out of court. 2 Salk. 580, 5 Mod. 252; Skin. 674; Carth. 380; 1 Ld. Raym. 219.

The sheriff is obliged to grant replevins in all such cases as they are allowed by law; and the officer who takes the goods, by virtue of a replevin issuing for what cause soever, is not liable to an action of trespass, unless the party, in whose possession the goods were, claims property in them. and note, that in all cases of misbehaviour by the sheriff or other officers, in relation to replevins, they are subject to the control of the king's superior courts, and punishable by attachment for such misbehaviour. Carth. 381.

And though the sheriff may grant replevins by plaint, and may proceed thereon in his county-court, yet if any thing touching freehold come in question, or ancient demesne be pleaded, the sheriff can proceed no further; nor can any such proceedings be carried on in the hundred court, court baron, or any other court claiming a jurisdiction herein by prescription. 2 H. 7. 6; 4 H. 6. 30; Co. Litt. 145 b.

So, when the king is party, or the taking is in right of the crown, in these cases the sheriff is to surcease. Bro. Repl. pl. 3; 1 Brownl. 3.

The following is the provision of 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 13, already alluded to; "That the sheriff shall at his first county-day, or within two months after he receives the patent, depute and proclaim in the shire-town four deputies to make replevins, not dwelling twelve miles distant from one another; on pain to forfeit, for every month he wants such deputy or deputies, 5*l.*, to be divided between the king and the prosecutor."

IV. 1. WHEN the sheriff makes replevin, he ought to take two kinds of pledges; plegi de prosequendo, by the common law, and plegi de retorno habendo, by the statute of West. 2. c. 2. by which it is provided, "That sheriffs or bailiffs, from thenceforth, shall not only receive of the plaintiff pledges for pursuing the suit, before they make deliverance of the distress, but also for return of the beasts, if return be awarded; and if any take pledges otherwise, he shall answer for the price of the beasts, and the lord that distrains shall have his recovery by writ, that he shall restore to him so many beasts or cattle; and if the plaintiff be not able to restore, his superior shall restore."

By the 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. officers, having authority to grant replevins, shall, in every replevin of a distress for rent, take in their own names, from the plaintiff and two sureties, a bond in double the value of the goods distrained; (such value to be ascertained by the oath of one or more witnesses not interested, which oath the person granting such replevin is to administer); conditioned for prosecuting the suit with effect, without delay, and for return of the goods, in case a return shall be awarded, before any deliverance be made of the distress, and such officer, taking such bond, shall, at the request and costs of the avowant, or persons making cognizance, assign such bond to the avowant, &c. by indorsing the same, and attesting it under his hand and seal, in the presence of two witnesses; which may be done without stamp, provided the assignment be stamped before any action brought thereon; and if the bond be forfeited, the avowant, &c. may bring an action thereupon in his own name, and the court may by rule give such relief to the parties on such bond, as may be agreeable to justice; and such rule shall have the effect of a defeasance.

A rent-charge is within the meaning of this clause of the statute, and on a replevin of a distress for such rent, the sheriff may take and assign a bond. 1 Bos. & Pul. 319.

In the construction of these statutes the following points have been ruled, and opinions holden.

Under stat. Westm. 2. c. 2. an action lies against the sheriff, if he omit to take pledges, or if he take those that are insufficient; and the party may have a scire facias against the pledges, where the suit is in any court of record; and though in the county-court, &c. a scire facias will not lie against the pledges, because these are not courts of record, and every scire facias ought to be grounded on a record, yet there the party may have a precept in nature of a scire facias, against the pledges. 1 Ld. Raym. 278; 1 Comb. 1, 2; Com. 593.

An action will lie against the sheriff not only for not taking a bond, but also for taking insufficient pledges. Rous v. Patterson, Hil. 13 Geo. 2. B. R. on a writ of error from C. B. 16 Fin. Ab. 399, pl. 4.; under the name of Prowse v. Pattison, Bull. N. P. 60. In such an action some evidence must be given by the plaintiff of the insufficiency of the pledges or sureties; but very slight evidence is sufficient to throw the proof upon the sheriff. Samuels v. Darby, Westminster Sittings, Term 10 Geo. 3. C. B. Bull. N. P. 60. Though there have been contradictory determinations respecting the extent of the sheriff's liability in such an action, the point seems now to be settled. In Prowse v. Pattison, the party recovered damages to the amount of the rent in arrear added to the costs of replevin; but the whole together did not exceed the value of the distress. 4 T. R. 434, n. So in the case of Gibson v. Burnell, 30 Geo. 3., Gould, J., who tried the cause, was of opinion that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the costs in the replevin as well as the rent in arrear. But in Yea v. Lethbridge, M. 32 Geo. 3. the Court of C. B. on a question reserved at the trial for their opinion, held that the plaintiff could not recover beyond the value of the distress taken, which was not equal to the rent in arrear. 4 T. R. 433. And though this decision was afterwards questioned in the Court of C. P. (the court consisting of Lord Loughborough, Ld. Ch. J., Gould, J., Heath, J., and Wilson, J.) in Conner v. Lethbridge, L. 52 Geo. 3. 2 H. Bl.

Rep. 36. where it was ruled after great consideration that the plaintiff might recover damages to the extent of the injury which he had sustained, though they exceeded double the value of the goods distrained; yet the authority of the case of Yea v. Lethbridge was again established in a subsequent case, Evans v. Brander, Tr. 35 Geo. 3. where the Court of Common Pleas (then consisting of Eyre, Ld. C. J., Buller, J., Heath, J., Rooke, J., three of the judges, being then changed) decided that the sheriff was not liable for more than double the value of the goods distrained. 2 H. Bl. 547. The foundation of the last decision, and of that of Yea v. Lethbridge, is this: that the sheriff is liable no further than the sureties would have been, if he had done his duty by taking a bond under the 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. and the sureties had been sufficient; and that the extent of their responsibility is limited by the statute to double the value of the goods distrained.

In an action against the sheriff for taking insufficient sureties in replevin, the assignee of the replevin-bond cannot recover as special damage (beyond the penalty of the replevin-bond) the expenses of a fruitless action against the pledges, unless he gave the sheriff notice of his intention to sue the pledges. 3 Bingh. 56.

In replevin for distraining cattle damage feasant it is sufficient if the sheriff take one pledge. Counts against the sheriff for taking insufficient pledges must show a retorno habendo. A count against him for not restoring the goods is bad. 1 C. & M. 58.

The remedy in case of insufficient pledges is by action only; and the Court of C. P. refused to make an order on an officer to pay costs recovered by a defendant in replevin. 1 New Rep. C. P. 292.

This action must be brought by the person making cognizance, where there is no avowance on the record, 1 Bos. & Pul. 378.

A replevin bond under 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. may be assigned to the avowant only, and he may bring his action without joining the party making cognizance. 1 Bos. & Pul. 381, note.

The avowant and person making cognizance may sue jointly on the bond after assignment, or it may be assigned to the avowant alone, and he may sue alone. 3 M. & S. 180.

It is no plea in debt on a replevin bond, that the bond purported to be entered into by the defendant and sureties, but was executed by the defendant only. 6 Taunt. 28.

If the sheriff returns insufficient pledges, he shall answer according to the statute; for insufficient pledges are no pledges in law; and such pledges must not only be sufficient in estate, viz. capable to answer in value, but likewise sufficient in law, and under no incapacity; therefore infants, feme coverts, persons outlawed, &c. are not to be taken as pledges, nor are persons politic, or bodies corporate. Co. Litt. 145; 2 Inst. 340; 10 Co. 102.

In replevin the sheriff did not return any pledges, and after issue joined and found, it was moved, if they could be put in by the court after verdict; and the court held they might, notwithstanding the statute of Westm. 2. as before that statute the court might take pledges on the omission of the sheriff; and a diversity was taken between pledges for prosecuting, which were at common law, and pro retorno habendo given by this statute; and the court held, that though on default of the sheriff he was subject to the action of the party, that yet the taking of pledges by the court did not make the judgment erroneous. Noy, 156. And that the omission of pledges of the first description is error; but the omission of pledges de retorno habendo does not vitiate the proceedings, but subjects the sheriff to an action. See 1 Jon. 439; Cro. Car. 594. And if the sheriff omit to take bond, pursuant to the 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. (see ante, 1. and post.) an attachment will not be granted, but the remedy is by action against him. 2 T. R. 617.

If a sheriff take a replevin bond with one surety, and after judgment in replevin for a return, the return fail to be made, whereon the party distraining recovers in an action against the sheriff for taking insufficient pledges, it seems that the sheriff cannot recover against such single surety more than half the sum composed of the rent due, and the costs of the suit. And, query, whether such replevin-bond be assignable? 7 Taunt. 327.

A replevin by plaintiff was sued in the sheriff's court in London, and pledges were found de retorno habendo, si, &c.; this plaintiff was removed according to their custom into the mayor's court, and afterwards into the King's Bench by certiorari, and thereoyer of certiorari being demanded, the party declared in B. R. On this a return was awarded, and on an elongat' returned, a scire facias went against the pledges in the sheriff's court of London. On demurrer, the question was, whether this case being removed by certiorari, the pledges in the inferior court are discharged, or whether they remain liable to be charged by this scire facias? It was adjudged, that the pledges were not discharged. Skin. 244; 2 Show. 421; Comb. 1, 2; 3 Mod. 56. S. C.

The plaintiff declared, that he distrained for 7l. 10s. rent, reserved on a lease, and that the defendant delivered the cattle without taking pledges; to which the defendant pleaded, that the plaintiff in replevin delivered to him 3l. 10s. for pledges, which he accepted; and on demurrer the court held, that pledges being to be found to answer the party, if he had good cause of avowry, and to be answerable for amercement to the king, if nonsuited, or if it be found against him, the taking of money for a pledge was not lawful; and that although he might take money for pledges, yet he ought not to accept less than the plaintiff's demand: on which account the court likewise held the plea vicious; but they agreed, that if the defendant had taken but one pledge, (if he had been sufficient,) it had been well enough. Cro. Car. 446; 1 Jon. 378.

A bond taken by the sheriff, conditioned that if the party applying for the replevin should appear at the next county-court, &c. and prosecute his action with effect, and should make return of the thing replevied, if return should be adjudged, and save the sheriff harmless, &c. is good in law; and agreeable to the intent of the statute of Marlbridge, which requires pledges or sureties, of which nature the obligors are; and this method of taking bond instead of pledges was said to be of ancient usage; and that in the old books plegii signified the same as sureties; and that there being a proper remedy on such bond, it differed from the case of taking a deposit or sum of money; but the court agreed, that at common law this bond had been void, because it had been to save the sheriff harmless in making replevin by plaintiff, which he could not have done before the statute of Marlbridge. 1 Ld. Raym. 278; 2 Lutw. 686.

If in replevin in an inferior court, the condition of the bond is, if he prosecute his suit commenced with effect in the court of, &c. and make return, &c. if a return be adjudged by law, and it happens that the plaintiff hath judgment in the court below, which is afterwards reversed on a writ of error in B. R., in such case, unless the party make a return, he forfeits his bond; for though he had judgment in the court below, yet the words "if he prosecute his suit commenced, &c. extend to the prosecution of the writ of error, which is part of the suit commenced in the court below; and in this case, the taking such bond was held to be lawful, and said to be common practice. Carth. 248; 1 Show. 400; Fitzg. 158.

In debt on a replevin-bond taken by the sheriff, conditioned that if C. B. appear at the next county-court and prosecute with effect for taking, &c. and make return, &c. if return be adjudged, and save harmless the sheriff, &c. then, &c. the defendant after oyer pleaded that at the next county-court, held on such a day, he did appear, and prosecuted, &c. until it was removed by recordari, and did save the sheriff harmless; but doth not say, that no return habend' was adjudged on demurrer, the court inclined for the plaintiff; for the defendant should have said, that no return was adjudged at all; and though he prosecuted to the recordari, yet return habend' might be adjudged afterwards; and the condition goes to any adjudication of return. Comb. 228.

The condition of a replevin-bond is not satisfied by a prosecution of the suit in the county-court, but that the plaintiff, if removed by the recordari facias loquelam into the superior court, must be prosecuted there with effect, and a return made, if adjudged there. 1 Bos. & Pul. 410.

An action was brought on a bond in replevin to prosecute his suit with effect, and also to make return, &c.; the defendant pleaded that E. G. did levy a plaintiff in replevin in the court before the steward of Westminster, and that afterwards, and before the suit was determined, viz. such a day, &c. E. G. died; per quod the suit abated: the plaintiff replied, that true it is that E. G. levied such a plaintiff against the defendant, who immediately afterwards exhibited an English bill in the exchequer against the plaintiff in that suit, and by injunction hindered the proceedings below until such a day, &c. on which E. G. died; so that he did not prosecute his suit with effect: on demurrer to this replication the defendant had judgment; for, per Holt, this was a prosecution with effect, because there was neither a nonsuit or verdict against E. G. Carth. 519.

In an action on a replevin-bond common bail shall be filed. 1 Salk. 99. See Bail.

The condition of the bond is twofold, and not alternative, viz. for prosecuting the suit with effect, and for duly returning the goods if a return is awarded; and the bond is forfeited by a breach in either respect. 2 Bro. & B. 107; 5 B. & C. 284; 3 Maul. & S. 188. Therefore, where the plaintiff in replevin is nonsuited, and the avowant, instead of proceeding at common law for a return, proceeds by writ of inquiry, and has judgment on the 17 Car. 2. c. 17. for the arrearages of rent and costs, he may still proceed against the pledges for the breach of the condition in the plaintiff's not prosecuting with effect; and not prosecuting with success is "not prosecuting with effect." If the action is forced, so as to work injustice, the surety has a plain remedy, under the last clause of the 23 sect. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. by an application to the court for relief.

A defendant in replevin does not, by giving time to the plaintiff in replevin, discharge the sureties in replevin-bond. 6 Taunt. 379; 7 Taunt. 97.

But where parties in replevin submitted to arbitration without the privy of the sureties, it was held the latter were discharged. 4 Bing. 464, S. C.; 1 M. & P. 285.

However a mere enlargement of the time by an arbitrator, without the knowledge of the sureties, is no plea in an action against them. 10 Bing. 5.

2. The declaration in replevin ought to be certain in setting forth the numbers and kinds of cattle distrained: because, otherwise, the sheriff cannot tell how to make deliverance, if it should be necessary: yet an avowry may make that good, which would be bad on demurrer; both parties agreeing what the quantum and nature of the goods are. And the sheriff may require the defendant to show him the goods; and it would be a good return to say, "that no one came, on the part of the defendant, to show the goods and chattels." Aleyn, 32; Stile, 71.

A declaration in replevin for taking "divers goods and chattels" of the plaintiff, is bad for uncertainty: and although judgment pass by default for the plaintiff, the defect is not cured by the statute of jeofails. 4 Ann. c. 16. Pope v. Tillman, T. R. Trin. 57 Geo. 3. 642. But see 3 M. & S. 180.

The declaration ought to be not only of a taking in a ville or town, but also "in a certain place called," &c.; but if the defendant would take advantage of this, he must demur to the declaration. Hob. 16.

A man may count of several takings, part at one day and place, and part at another; and if the plaintiff allege two places, and the defendant only answer one, i. e. if the plea begun only as an answer to part, and be in truth but an answer to part, it is a discontinuance; and the plaintiff must not demur, but must take his judgment for that by nihil dicit; for if he demur or plead over, the whole action is discontinued. But if a plea begin with an answer to the whole, but is in truth only an answer to part, the whole plea is nought, and the plaintiff may demur. F. N. B. 68; Salk. 176. Where the defendant avows at a different place, in order to have a return, he must traverse the place in the count, because his avowry is inconsistent with it; but where he does not insist upon a return, he may plead nihil dicit, and prove the taking to be at another place, for the place is material. Sira. 507. This is to be understood where the defendant never had the cattle in the place laid in the declaration at all; for if on the plea of non cept the plaintiff prove that the defendant had the cattle in the place laid in the declaration, he will have a verdict; and if the fact be, that the defendant took the cattle in another place, and only had them in the place mentioned in the declaration, in the way to the pound, he ought to plead that matter specially. Bull. N. P. c. 4. p. 54.

A declaration by P. and C., assignees of a replevin-bond, stating that they distrained the defendant's goods for rent due to P., is sufficient without naming C. bailiff. If the declaration state that the sheriff took the bond in double the value, conditioned for prosecuting, &c. and for making return of the goods in the condition mentioned, and thereupon the sheriff replevied the same, that shows the bond to be conditioned for a return of the goods distrained. And the declaration is not double, because it alleges that the defendant did not prosecute his suit with effect, and hath not made a return, but it is not necessary to allege both. 3 M. & S. 180; 5 B. & C. 284.

Debt lies by the assignees of a replevin-bond against one of the sureties in the distant only. And where they declared that at the city of C., and within the jurisdiction of the mayor of the city, they distrained the goods of W. H. for rent, and that W. H. at the said city, made his plaint to the mayor, &c. and the proceedings accordingly; the Court of King's Bench held that it was no ground for special demurrer that the declaration did not show a custom for the mayor to grant replevin and take bond, nor that the plaint was made in court. 1 M. & S. 130.

The general issue in replevin is non cept, upon which property cannot be given in evidence, for that ought to be pleaded; and if he plead property in himself, he may either plead it in bar or in abatement, but if he pleads it in a stranger, it ought strictly to be pleaded in abatement, though it may likewise be pleaded in bar. 2 T. R. 219; 1 Salk. 415; 2 T. R. 12.

If the defendant plead property, whether it be in himself or a stranger, he shall have a return without making an avowry for it; but where the plea in abatement is of a collateral matter, such as ceptum in alio loco, he must make an avowry in order to have a return; for he must show a right to the property, or at least to the possession, to have a return; but the plaintiff ought not to traverse the matter of the continuance; and if he do, and demurrer be joined upon it, it is a discontinuance, and the defendant will have judgment. Salk. 174; Bul. N. P. 54.

The defendant may either avow the taking, or justify it; if he avow, it must be upon a right subsisting, such as rent arrears, &c., and then he entitles himself to a return; but where by matter subsequent he is not to have the thing for which the distress was taken, there he will not be entitled to a return, and therefore cannot avow, but must justify; as if a lord distrain for homage, and afterwards the tenant die, and then his executor bring replevin. But a man may distrain for one thing, and avow for another. 3 Co. 26 a; Bul. N. P. 54, 55.

By the 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. § 22. any person distraining for rent, relief, heriot, or other service, may in replevin avow or make cognizance generally, without setting out a title. But this does not extend to an avowry for a rent-charge. 1 New Rep. 56.

If a defendant make cognizance as bailiff to J. S., the plaintiff may traverse his being bailiff, for this is different from trespass quare clausum fregit; for there if the defendant justify an entry by command, or as bailiff to one in whom he alleges the freehold to be, the plaintiff shall not traverse the command, because it would admit the truth of the rest of the plea, viz. that the freehold was in J. S., which would be sufficient to bar his action. But in trespass de bonis asportatis, e. g. for taking the plaintiff's sheep, if the defendant justify the taking them damage feasant, as servant to J. S., the plaintiff may traverse the command or authority; for though J. S. had a right to take the cattle, yet a stranger, who had no authority from him, would be liable. And there is a great difference between a justification in trespass, and an avowry in replevin, in another respect, e. g. for an amercement in a court leet; in the justification, it is necessary for the defendant to set forth a warrant or precept, &c., but not to aver the matter of the presentment, because his plea is only an excuse; but in avowry he ought to aver, in fact, that the plaintiff committed the crime for which he is amerced; because he is an actor, and is to recover, which must be upon the merits. Bul. N. P. 55, cites 1 Salk. 107.

If an avowry be made for rent, and it appear by the defendant's own showing that part of it is not yet due, yet the avowry will be good for the residue. In such case the avowant must abate his recovery, quoad the rent not due, and take judgment for the rest; but if it appear that he has title only to two undivided parts of the rent, the avowry shall abate. 1 Saund. 285; Moor, 281; Salk. 580. So if the avowry be for part of a quarter or half a year's rent, he must show how the rest is satisfied, or it will be bad. Hardw. 84; Comb. 316; 1 Saund. 191. In avowry for rent, and a nomine pence together, without alleging any demand of rent, the avowry is good for the rent, though it will be ill for the penalty. 1 Saund. 286; Hob. 133. Avowry for rent due at a latter day, is no bar to avowry for rent due at a former day; but an acquittal under seal is; if not under seal, contrary proof will be admitted. Bul. N. P. 56. See further, titles Avowry, Distress, Rent.

By 21 Hen. 8. c. 19. if the avowry, cognizance, or justification be found for the avowant, or the plaintiff be nonsuited, the defendant shall recover such damages and costs as the plaintiff would have had if he had recovered. But this act mentions only persons avowing or making cognizance for rent-service, customs, services, damago feasant, or for other rent or rents, so that it does not extend to an avowry for a nomine pence, or for an estray; and therefore if in such damages and costs were given, the judgment would be reversed. 1 Jon. 135; and see Bul. N. P. 57.

The avowant or defendant in replevin, though not within the words, is plainly within the meaning of the 4 Ann. c. 16. (by which a plaintiff in replevin, which to certain purposes an avowant is, may plead as many pleas as he may think necessary.) And accordingly, where some issues in replevin are found for the plaintiff, which entitle him to judgment, and some for the defendant, the latter must be allowed the costs of the issues found for him, out of the general costs of the verdict, unless the judge certify that the plaintiff had a probable cause for pleading the matters on which those issues are joined. 2 T. R. 235.

If issue be joined on the property, the defendant may give in evidence the plaintiff's having the cattle, in mitigation of damages. Godb. 98. If the plaintiff plead riens arrears in bar to an avowry for rent, he cannot, upon such issue, give in evidence non-tenure. Bul. N. P. 59. In an avowry for rent, the plaintiff may plead a tender and refusal, without bringing the money into court; because, if the distress were not rightfully taken, the defendant must answer the plaintiff his damages. Bul. N. P. 60. See also as to payment into court in replevin, 1 H. Bl. 24; 1 B. & P. 382; 3 B. & P. 603.

A defendant in replevin is not entitled to move for judgment as in case of a nonsuit, under 14 Geo. 2. c. 17. § 1. 3 T. R. 661; 5 T. R. 400.

In debt on a replevin-bond, assigning for breach the not making a return of the goods distrained for rent, the plaintiff may, after signing judgment against the defendant for not returning the demurrer-book, tax the costs and issue execution for the costs, and the amount of the goods distrained, as indorsed on the replevin-bond, without executing a writ of inquiry. 3 M. & S. 155.

Proceedings in replevin were stayed by the Court of King's Bench after consuance and plea in bar, upon payment of costs of the action and distress and replevy, and delivering up the replevin-bond to be cancelled, there being no special damage. 3 M. & S. 525.

In an action on the bond, alleging a breach in not prosecuting the replevin suit according to the tenor and effect of the condition, it is a good plea that defendant did appear at the next county court, and there prosecute the suit, which was still undetermined and depending; and it is not sufficient for the plaintiff to reply that the defendant did not prosecute the suit as in the plea mentioned, but wholly abandoned the same, and that the said suit is not still depending,—the plaintiff must show a legal determination of it. 12 East, 585. Allowing two years to elapse without proceedings, is a breach of the condition, though judgment of non pros was signed in the county court. 4 Bing. 586.

To an action against a surety in the bond, averring a judgment for the plaintiff (defendant in replevin) for a return of the goods, and assigning a breach in no return having been made, the surety cannot plead that the judgment was obtained against his principal by fraud, viz. by the plaintiff, in collusion with the principal, procuring the principal to confess, and by the principal fraudulently confessing the replevin action: for this is no more than saying that the plaintiff and the principal fraudulently agreed together to defraud one another. But it seems that the plea might have been good, if it had averred that this agreement was for the purpose of defrauding the pledges in replevin. In this case it was held not a good plea for such surety that the plaintiff and defendant in replevin, without his knowledge, referred the matters in the suit to arbitration, and by mutual agreement suspended the proceedings in replevin during the reference. But the Court of Exchequer afterwards granted an injunction on this ground, restraining the proceedings on the bond, holding that the bond became functus officio by the agreement of reference. 7 Taunt. 97; 2 Marsh. 392; 6 Taunt. 379; 3 Price, 214; 4 Bing. 464, acc.

If the sheriff take a replevin-bond from one surety only, it is no plea to an action upon it that the bond, purporting to be entered into by two sureties, was in fact executed by the defendant and the principal only; but quere whether the surety might not avoid the bond by pleading that he only delivered it as an escrow till the other surety executed it. 7 Taunt. 28, 327; S. C. 1 Moo. 68.

The two sureties are only liable to the amount of the penalty of the bond, and the costs of the suit on the bond. 1 Taunt. 218.

And it has been more recently held, that the sureties in a replevin-bond are liable only for the value of the goods seized, and double costs; and if the value exceed the rent due, they are liable only to the amount of the rent. 2 Dow. P. C. 559; and see 2 H. Bla. 36, 547; 4 T. R. 435; 3 Stark. 168.

V. THE original writ of replevin issues out of Chancery, and neither it nor the alias replevin are returnable, but are only in nature of a justicies to empower the sheriff to hold plea in his county court, when a day is given the parties; but the pluries replevin is always with this clause, vel causam nobis significes, and it is a returnable process. F. N. B. 69, 70; Doct. Pl. 313, 314; 2 Inst. 139; Salk. 410. It is usual to take out the alias and pluries at the same time. Dalt. Sh. 273.

A pluries replevin returned in Michaelmas Term, the defendant claimed property, and nothing was afterwards done, nor any appearance nor continuance till Easter Term following, at which term they appeared and pleaded, and judgment was thereupon given; though no continuance was between Michaelmas and Easter, yet this was not any discontinuance, because there is not any continuance till appearance; for the parties have not any express day in court; and where there is not any continuance, there cannot be any discontinuance. 1 Rob. Abr. 485.

The pluries replevin supersedes the proceedings of the sheriff, and the proceedings are on that, and not on the plaint, as they are when that is removed by recordari, and though there is no summons in the writ, yet it gives a good day to the defendant to appear; and if he does not appear, then a pone issues and then a capias. 1 Ld. Raym. 617.

Capias and process of outlawry lies in replevin; for when on the pluries replevium fac, the sheriff returns averia elongata, then a capias in withernam issues; and on that being returned nulla bona, a capias issues; and so to outlawry. Capias and process of outlawry in replevin were given by 25 Edw. 3. st. 5. c. 17. 6 Mod. 84.

If on the pluries replevin the sheriff return that the cattle are eloiigned to places unknown, &c. so that he cannot deliver them to plaintiff, then shall issue a withernam, directed to the sheriff, commanding him to take the cattle or goods of the defendant, and detain them till the cattle or goods distrained are restored to the plaintiff; and if on the first withernam a nil be returned, there an alias and pluries replevin issue, and so to a capias and exigent. F. N. B. 73.

The writ of withernam ought to release the cause which the sheriff returns, for which he cannot replevy the cattle or goods, so that it does not lie on a bare suggestion that the beasts are eloiigned, &c. F. N. B. 69, 73. See ante, 111.

If on the withernam the cattle are restored to the party who eloiigned them, yet he shall pay a fine for his contempt. 2 Leon. 174.

Cattle taken in withernam may be worked; or, if cows, may be milked; for the party has them in lieu of his own. 1 Leon. 220; Dyer, 280.

And as the party is to have the use of the cattle, he is not to have any allowance made him for the expenses he has been at in maintaining them. Owen, 46; Cro. Eliz. 162; 3 Leon. 235.

Scire facias against an executor, reciting that where replevin was brought against his testator for a cow, and judgment against him de retorno habendo, which was not executed, that he should show cause why he should not have execution. The executor pleads plene administravit, upon which the plaintiff demurred; and Wylde, Justice, said, that upon the judgment the cow is in the custody of the law, therefore he ought to have execution; but the doubt is, because the replevin is determined by the death of the party (yet by him and Rainsford being only in court), the plaintiff shall have execution, for the defendant cannot be prejudiced; for if the sheriff return averia elongata, he shall not have a withernam but of the goods of the testator; or if there are no goods of the testator, the sheriff can take nothing, but shall return nulla bona, and then the plaintiff hath his ordinary way to charge the defendant if he hath made a devastavit; and it was adjudged for the plaintiff. Pasch. 20 Car. 2. in B. R. Sucklin v. Green.

W. sues a replevin, B. removes it by recordari into the King's Bench, the plaintiff does not declare, and on that a return awarded to H., upon which the sheriff returns averia elongata, and then a withernam was awarded and executed; and now the plaintiff comes and prays he may be admitted to declare, and prays a deliverance of the withernam; and it was testified by the clerks, that on the plaintiff's submission to a fine for not declaring, and that being imposed on him by the judges, he shall have deliverance of the withernam; and a fine of 3s. 4d. being accordingly imposed on the plaintiff, he then declared and had deliverance. Noy, 50. The course of B. R. is contrary to that of C. B.

If on an elongata returned, the sheriff's cattle are taken in withernam, yet on the defendant's appearance and pleading non cepit, on claiming property, the defendant shall have his cattle again; and if they are eloiigned, a withernam against the plaintiff; for if the property or taking be in question, there is no reason that the plaintiff should have the defendant's cattle. 1 Ld. Raym. 614.

The withernam is but mesne process, and cannot be on execution, because it is granted before judgment. 1 Ld. Raym. 614; and see Comb. 201; Salk. 382.

VI. The writ of second deliverance is a judicial writ depending upon the first original, and is given by stat. Westm. 2. 13 Edw. 1. c. 2, which recites, that after the return is awarded, the party distrained does replevy again, and so the judgments given in the King's courts take no effect; wherefore it enacts, that when return is awarded to the distrainer, the sheriff shall be commanded by a judicial writ to make return, in which it shall be expressed that the sheriff shall not deliver them without writ making mention of the judgment; and it further enacts, that if the party make default again, or for any other cause, return of the distress be awarded, now twice replevied, the distress shall remain irreplevisable. See ante, I.

If a defendant in replevin has return awarded on nonsuit of a plaintiff, on which he sues a writ of retorno habendo, upon which writ the sheriff returns averia elongata per quendam, and on this a withernam is awarded, and on the withernam the defendant has tot catalla to him delivered of the goods of the plaintiff, and thereupon the plaintiff sues a second deliverance; he shall sue it for the first distress taken, not for the withernam, and this by the nature and form of the writ of second deliverance. 2 Roll. Abr. 435.

If a retorno habendo be awarded to a plaintiff after a writ of second deliverance prayed by a defendant, this is a superaddas to the retorno habendo, and closes the sheriff's hand from making any return thereto; and if the sheriff will not execute the writ of second deliverance, the party has his remedy against him. Dyer, 41; Dalt. Sh. 275.

The statute of Westm. 2. gives the writ of second deliverance out of the same court where the first replevin was awarded, and a man cannot have it elsewhere; for if he may, then he shall vary from the place limited as to this by the statute. Plowd. 206.

In replevin a defendant avowed, that the plaintiff being awarded a writ of second deliverance; whereupon he is moved to stay the writ of inquiry of damages; and per curiam this is a superaddas to the retorno habendo, but not to the writ of inquiry of damages; for these damages are not for the thing avowed for, but are given by 21 Hen. 8. c. 19. as a compensation for the expense and trouble the avowant has been at. 1 Salk. 95. See Palm. 403; Latch. 72.

Error of judgment in C. B. in a second deliverance on demurrer in pleading, the error assigned was because there was not any writ of second deliverance certified; and in nullo est error being pleaded, it was moved not to be material, because it was awarded on the roll, and the parties had appeared and pleaded to it; but it was adjudged ill, and reversed for that cause; for there ought to be a writ, and if it vary from the declaration in the replevin, it shall be abated. Cro. Jac. 424.

No second deliverance lies after a judgment on a demurrer, or after verdict, or confession of the avowry; but, in all these cases, the judgment must be entered with a return irreplevisable; but on a nonsuit, either before or after evidence, a second deliverance will lie, because there is no determination of the matter, and there a writ of second deliverance lies to bring the matter in question; but, in the case of demurrer and verdict, the matter is determined by confession of the party. 2 Lill. Reg. 457.

If the plaintiff's writ abates, he may have a new writ, and is not put to his writ of second deliverance. Comm. 122.

If the plaintiff in replevin be nonsuited for want of delivering a declaration, if it happened through sickness of the person employed to prosecute, the court will order the defendant to accept a declaration on payment of costs, otherwise plaintiff would be remediless, the writ of second deliverance being taken away by 17 Car. 2. c. 7. in case of distresses for rent arrear. See ante, I.

2. If the person taking the goods claims property, the sheriff cannot make replevin of them; for property must be tried by writ, and in this case the plaintiff may have the writ de proprietate probanda to the sheriff; and if it be found for the plaintiff, then the sheriff is to make replevin; if for the defendant, then he is to proceed no further; but as this is but an inquest of office, though the property be found in the defendant, yet the plaintiff is not concluded, for he may still have his action of replevin, or of trespass: but if in his action of replevin the defendant plead property, and it be found for him, the plaintiff is concluded: and if the sheriff return the claim of property, yet shall it proceed in C. B. where the property shall be put in issue, and finally tried. Co. Litt. 145 b; F. N. B. 77; Dyer, 173; Comm. 592; Bull. N. P.

None but he who is party to the replevin shall have the writ de proprietate probanda; so that if on a replevin the beasts of a stranger are delivered to the plaintiff, such stranger, being no party to the replevin, shall not have this writ. 14 Hen. 4. 25; 2 Roll. Abr. 431.

The sheriff is to return the claim of property on the pluries, before which time the writ de proprietate probanda does not issue, for it recites the pluries. Reg. 83; Com. 595.

The writ de proprietate probanda is an inquest of office, and the sheriff is to give notice to the parties of the time and place of executing it. Dalt. Sh. 274.

If the defendant claims property in replevin, the plaintiff may have the writ de proprietate probanda without continuance of the replevin, though it be two or three years after; because, by claim of property, the first suit is determined. Moor, 403.

If the plaintiff has property, and omits to claim it before the sheriff, he may notwithstanding plead property in himself or in a stranger, either in abatement or in bar; though it was formerly held, that property in a stranger could only be pleaded in abatement. Cro. Eliz. 475; Winch. 26; 1 Show. 402; Salk. 594; 6 Mod. 81.

In replevin the defendant in his avowry pleads, that the beasts taken belonged to a third person, and not to the plaintiff; therefore prays a return; to which the plaintiff demurs; for on the avowant's own showing he ought not to have return, having admitted the property of the beasts to be in another; but judgment was given for the defendant; for the prior possession was in him, and he hath a right against all others but the right owner, and the plaintiff by his demurrer hath admitted that he hath no property in them. Com. 477; See 6 Mod. 68. 139; 2 Mod. 242.

VII. The retorno habendo is a judicial writ, which lies for him who has avowed the distress, and proved the same to be lawfully taken; or where, on removal of the plaint into the courts above, the plaintiff, whose cattle were replevied, makes default, or does not declare or prosecute his action, and thereby becomes nonsuited, &c.; and by this writ the sheriff is commanded to make a return of the cattle to the defendant in the replevin. 35 Hen. 6. 40; Dyer, 280; Co. Litt. 145. See ante, I.

A bailiff who makes conusance may have judgment of a return, and consequently a writ of retorno habendo grounded on such judgment. Co. Ent. 59.

If a defendant hath a return awarded him, and he sueth a writ of retorno habendo, and the sheriff return on the pluries, quod averia elongata sunt, &c. he shall have a scire facias against the pledges, &c. according to the statute of West. 2; and if they have nothing, then they shall have a withernam against the plaintiff of the plaintiff's own cattle. F. N. B. 172.

Since the 17 Car. 2. c. 7. (see ante, I.) it has been the custom, as it was before, to enter judgment for a retorno habendo: but, notwithstanding, the defendant may enter a suggestion on that statute, and a writ of second deliverance will be no superseas to such writ. The whole fact is to be proved, and may be litigated in the writ of inquiry, directed by that statute. Bull. N. P. 58. And if the jury, empanelled to try a cause in replevin, omit to inquire the value of the rent arrear, or of the distress, according to the directions of the said statute, it cannot be supplied by a writ of inquiry, because the statute confines the inquiry to the jury empanelled in the cause. Therefore, in such case, the defendant must take judgment of retorno habendo at common law: but it is not the same upon 21 Hen. 8. c. 19; (see ante, IV. 2.) nor upon 43 Eliz. c. 2. if the defendant avow as overseer for a distress for a poor's rate; because, if the jury had inquired, it had been as an inquest, on which no attain would have lain, and the statute does not tie it up to the same jury. And if the plaintiff, being nonsuited, bring a writ of second deliverance, though it will be a superseas to the writ of retorno habendo, yet it will be none to the writ of inquiry. Bull. N. P. 58.

By the 17 Car. 2. c. 7. the writ of second deliverance is in effect taken away, because the avowant may have judgment for his arrears and costs without any return; but if he takes judgment for a return, then the writ of second deliverance lies. Bac. Ab. Replevin E. 7th ed.

A judgment in replevin, "that the defendants have a return of the cattle, and recover their damages and costs assessed by the jury," &c. is good either as a judgment at common law, though the return be not judged irreplevisable, or as a judgment under 21 Hen. 8. c. 19. which entitles the defendant to damages and costs. 4 T. R. 509. See ante, IV. 2.

Return irreplevisable is a judicial writ, directed to the sheriff, for the final restitution or return of cattle unjustly taken by another, and so found by verdict, or after a nonsuit in a second deliverance. 2 Roll. Abr. 434.

If the plea be to the writ, or any other plea be tried by verdict, or judged on demurrer, return irreplevisable shall be awarded, and no new replevin shall be granted, nor any second deliverance by the stat. West. 2. but only on nonsuit. 2 Inst. 340; Dyer, 280. See I. V.

If, on issue joined in replevin, the plaintiff does not appear on the trial, being called for that purpose, yet return irreplevisable shall not be awarded, as in case of a verdict's being given, but the party may have a writ of second deliverance, as well as if it had been a nonsuit before declaration, or appearance. 3 Leon. 49. See ante, VI.

If a man has a return irreplevisable, and a beast die in the pound, he may distrain anew; so, if the beast die before judgment. Hob. 61.

If return irreplevisable be awarded, the owner of the cattle may offer the arrears; and if the defendant refuses to deliver the distress, the plaintiff may have his action of detinue, because the distress is only in nature of a pledge. 1 Ld. Raym. 720.

By the statute of Westm. 1. 3 E. 1. c. 17. if the party who distrains, conveys the distress into any house, park, castle, or other place of strength, and refuses to suffer them to be replevied, the sheriff may take the posse comitatus, and on request and refusal, break open such house, castle, &c. and make deliverance; and this was a necessary law so soon after the irregular time of Henry III. 2 Inst. 193; 5 Co. 93; Dalt. Sh. 373.

If the sheriff returns, that the beasts are inclosed in a park among savages, or inclosed in a castle, &c. he shall be amerced, and another writ of replevin shall be awarded for he ought to have taken the posse com. for this was a denial. F. N. B. 257.

If the sheriff return, quod mandavi ballivo libertatis, &c. qui nullum dedit mihi responsum, or that the bailiff will not make deliverance of the cattle, these are not good returns; for by statute of West. 1. the sheriff, on such return made to him by the bailiff, ought presently to enter into the franchise, and make deliverance of the cattle taken. F. N. B. 157.

If a man sue a replevin in the county-court without writ, and the bailiff return to the sheriff, that he cannot have view of the cattle to deliver them, the sheriff, by inquest of office, ought to inquire into the truth thereof; and if it be found by a jury that the cattle are eloigned, &c. the sheriff in the county-court may award a withernam to take the defendant's cattle, and if the sheriff will not award a withernam, then the plaintiff may have a writ out of chancery, directed to the sheriff, rehearsing the whole matter, commanding him to award a withernam, &c.; and he may have an alias, and after a pluries, and an attachment against the sheriff, if he will not execute the king's command. F. N. B. 158.

If the sheriff return, quod averia elongata ad locum incognitum, this is a good return, and the party must pursue his writ of withernam; but if the sheriff return averia elongata ad locum incognitum infra comitatum meum, he shall be amerced, for the law intends that he may have notice in his county. Bro. Retur. de Br. pl. 100.

If in replevin the sheriff return, quod averia mortua sunt, that is a good return. Bro. Retur. de Br. pl. 125.

If the sheriff be shown a stranger's goods, and he takes them, an action of trespass lies against him, for otherwise he could have no remedy; for being a stranger he cannot have the writ of proprietary proband; and were he not entitled to this remedy, it would be in the power of the sheriff to strip a man's house of all his goods; but Keilway seems to hold, that the action lies more properly against the person who shows the goods. 2 Roll. Abr. 552; Com. 596.

The sheriff comes to make replevin of beasts impounded in another man's soil; if the place be inclosed, and has a gate open to the inclosure, he cannot break the inclosure, and enter thereby, when he may enter by the open gate; but if the owner hinders him so that he cannot go by the open gate for fear of death, he may break the inclosure, and enter there. 20 Hen. 6. 28; 2 Roll. Abr. 532.

The sheriff is to return, that the cattle are eloigned, or that no person came to show, &c. or a delivery; but he cannot return, that the defendant non cepit the cattle, because it is supposed in the writ, and is the ground of it, which the sheriff cannot falsify. Ld. Raym. 613; 1 Lutw. 581.

For further information on this subject, see Vin. Abr. Replevin; and Silbert on Replevin.

REPLEVISH. To let one to mainprise on surety. 9 Edw. 1. c. 11.

REPLICATION, replicatio.] An exception or answer made by a plaintiff to a defendant's plea. And it is also that which the complainant replies to the defendant's answer in Chancery, &c. West. Symb. par. 2. See further Ph. Angl. I. 2.; and as to replications in criminal cases, see Plead. 25, II.

REPORT, from Lat. reportare.] A public relation, or bringing again to memory, of cases judicially adjudged in courts of justice, with the reasons as delivered by the judges. Co. Litt. 293. See Law Books.

There are likewise reports, when the Court of Chancery, or other court, refer the stating some case, settling some account, &c. to a master of chancery, or other referee, his certificate therein is called a report. This report may be excepted to, disproved, or over-ruled; or otherwise it is confirmed and made absolute by order of the court. See 3 Comm. 453.

A master in chancery, having an order of reference, is to issue his summons for the parties to attend him at a certain time and place; when and where they may come with their counsel, clerk, or solicitor, to defend themselves, and maintain, or object against, his report or certificate, &c. And masters are to draw their reports briefly, and as succinctly as may be, preserving the matter clearly for the judgment of the court; without recital of the several points of the order of reference, or the debates of counsel before them; unless in cases doubtful, when they may shortly represent the reasons which induce them to what they do.

None shall take any money for report of an order, or cause, referred to them by any judges, on pain of 100*l.* &c. so as not to prohibit the clerk from taking 12*d.* for the first, and 2*d.* for every other sheet. 1 Jac. 1. c. 10. But by 13 Car. 2. st. 1. c. 12. masters in chancery may take for every report, or certificate, made on an order on hearing of a cause, 20*s.* And for any other report, &c. made on petition or motion, 10*s.* And their clerks shall have 5*s.* for writing every report. See Reference.

A report by a master in chancery is as a judgment of the court. 1 P. Wms. 653.

It is not usual to confirm reports of receivers' accounts by the Master of the Rolls. 2 P. Wms. 661.

There are also reports from committees of both or either Houses of Parliament. See Parliament.

As to printed reports of cases determined in the several courts of justice, see Law Books.

REPOSITION OF THE FOREST, repositio forestæ, i. e. a repositing to.] A statute, whereby certain forest-grounds, being made purlicu, on view, were, by a second view, put to the forest again. Magn. par. 1.

REPOSITION, or Retraction, the returning back of a right assigned from the assignee, to the person granting the right. Scotch Dict.

REPOSITORYUM, Lat.] A storehouse or place wherein things are kept; a warehouse. Cro. Car. 555.

REPRESENTATION, representatio.] The personating another: there is an heir by representation, where a father dies in the lifetime of the grandfather, leaving a son, who shall inherit his grandfather's estate, before the father's brother, &c. Bro. Abr. 303. Also, executors represent the person of the testator, to receive money and assets. Co. Litt. 209. See Executor, Heir, Parliament.

The term representation is also used to express the written pleading presented to a lord ordinary of the court of session in Scotland when his judgment is brought under review.

REPRIEVE, from the Fr. repris.] The taking back or suspending a prisoner from the execution and proceeding of law for that time. Terms de Ley. See Execution of Criminals.

REPRISAL, reprisale, reprisalia.] The taking one thing in satisfaction for another, derived from the Fr. reprise; and is all one in the common and civil law.

Reprisals are ordinary and extraordinary; ordinary reprisals are to arrest and take the goods of merchant-strangers within the realm; and the other is for satisfaction out of the realm, and is under the great seal, &c. Lex Mercat. 120.

If any person be killed, wounded, spoiled, or any ways damaged in a hostile manner, in the territories of any potentate, to whom letters of request are transmitted, and no satisfaction be made, there is no necessity to resort to the ordinary prosecution, but letters of reprisal issue forth; and the justice against whom the same are issued is obliged to make satisfaction out of the estates of the persons committing the injuries; and in case of a deficiency there, it will then be adjudged a common debt on his country. But where misfortunes happen to persons or their goods residing in a foreign country in time of war, reprisals are not to be granted. In this case they must be contented to sit down under the loss, for they are at their liberty to relinquish the place on the approach of the enemy, when they foresee the country is subject to spoil; and if they continue, they must partake of the common calamity. Lex Mercat.

Reprisals may be granted on illegal prosecutions abroad, where wrong judgment is given in matters not doubtful, which might have been redressed either by the ordinary or extraordinary power of the country or place, and which was apparently denied, &c. See further, tit. Letters of Marque: and as to Reprisal of Goods, see Recaption.

REPRISES, Fr. resumptiones, taking back.] Is used for deductions and payments out of a manor or lands, as rent-charges, annuities, &c. Therefore, when we speak of the clear yearly value of a manor, or estate, or land, we say it is so much per annum, ultra reprises, besides all reprises.

REPROBATOR, action of. An action intended to convict a witness of perjury in Scotland, to which action the witness must be made a party. Bell's Scotch Dict.

REPUBLICATION OF WILLS. See Will.

REPUGNANT, repugnans.] What is contrary to any thing said before: repugnancy in deeds, grants, indictments, verdicts, &c. make them void. 3 Nels. 135. See Deeds, &c.

The common law abhors repugnances and all incongruities; but the former part of a deed, &c. shall stand, where the latter part is repugnant to it. Jenk. Cent. 251, 256.

Where contrarieties are in several parts of deeds or fines, the first part shall stand; in wills the last, if the several clauses are not reconcilable. Jenk. 96. pl. 86.

In contracts, gifts, verdicts, evidences, &c. where direct contrarieties are for the same thing at the same time, all is void. Jenk. 96. pl. 86.

A proviso good in the commencement may, by consequence, become repugnant, as grant of rent by deed for life, provided that it shall not charge his person; the proviso is good, but if the rent be arrear, and the grantee die, his executors shall charge the person of the grantor in debt; for otherwise they be remediless; and so it is now repugnant, by consequence void. 6 Rep. 41 b. See further, tit. Condition, Proviso.

REPUTATION, reputatio.] Is defined by Coke to be vulgaris opinio ubi non est veritas. 4 Rep. 104. That is not reputation which this or that man says; but that which generally hath been, and many men have said or thought. 1 Leon. 15.

A little time is sufficient for gaining reputation, which needs not a very ancient pedigree to establish it; for general acceptance will produce a reputation. Cro. Jac. 308. But it has been held that common reputation cannot be intended of an opinion which is conceived of four or five years' standing, but of long time. And some special matter must be averred to induce a reputation. 2 Litt. Abr. 464.

Land may be reputed parcel of a manor, though not really so. 1 Vent. 51; 2 Mod. 69; 3 Nels. Abr. 137. And there is a parish and office in reputation, &c.

With respect to the cases in which evidence of reputation is admissible, see Evidence, II. 3.

REPUTATION OR FAME. Is under the protection of the law, as all persons have an interest in their good name; and scandal and defamation are injurious to it, though defamatory words are not actionable, otherwise than as they are a damage to the estate of the person injured. Wood's Inst. 37. See Libel.

The security of reputation or good name from the arts of detraction and slander, are rights to which every man is entitled by reason and natural justice; since without these it is impossible to have the perfect enjoyment of any other advantage or right. 1 Comm. 134. See Liberty.

REQUEST, of things to be done. Where one is to do a collateral thing, agreed on making a contract, there ought to be a request to do it. 2 Litt. Abr. 464. If a duty is due, it is payable without request: on promise to pay a duty precedent on request, there needs no actual request; but on a promise for a penalty, or a collateral sum, there should be an actual request before the action is brought. Cro. Eliz. 74; 1 Saund. 33; 1 Lev. 289.

If a debt is before a promise, a request is not necessary, for then a request is not any cause of the action; though upon a promise generally to pay on request, the action arises on request, and not before. Cro. Jac. 201; 1 Lev. 48. See post.

Action of debt for money due on a bond may be brought without alleging a special request. Cro. Eliz. 229, 523.

But if the money by the condition is payable only on demand, a demand must be shown, or the bond is not forfeited. 3 Camp. 459.

A man promises to re-deliver, on request, such goods as were delivered to him; if an action of detinue is brought, the plaintiff need not allege a special request, because the action is for the thing itself; but if an action on the case is had for these goods, then the request must be specially alleged; as it is not brought for the thing itself, but for damages. Sid. 66; 3 Salk. 309.

If a promise is made to pay money to the plaintiff on request, no special request is required; but where there are mutual promises between two persons to pay each other money on request, if they do not perform such an award, the request is to be specially alleged. And if there is a promise to pay money to a man on request, and he dies before any request made, it shall be paid to his executors, but not till request made. 3 Salk. 309; 3 Bulst. 259.

Where a person promises to pay a precedent duty, the general allegation is sufficient, because there was a duty without a promise; as, for instance, if one buys or borrows a horse, and promises to pay so much on request: but where the promise is collateral, as to pay the debt of a stranger on request, &c. the request is part of the agreement, and traversable, there being no duty before the promise made; and for that reason the request must be specially alleged, for bringing the action will not be a sufficient request. Latch. 93; 3 Leon. 200; 3 Salk. 308.

Where the thing is a duty before any request made, a request is only alleged to aggravate damages, and such request is not traversable; but if the request makes the duty, as in assumpsit to do such a thing on request, there the day, &c. of the request ought to be alleged, because it is traversable. Palm. 389.

If a request is to be specially made, the day and year when made should be specially alleged. 1 Lutw. 231; 2 Litt. Abr. 466; Cro. Car. 280. But where a person is not restrained to make the request by a time limited, if made at any time during his life, it has been held to be good. Cro. Eliz. 136. And a request at any other time than named may be given in evidence. Sid. 268.

If a debt or duty does not accrue on a promise until request made, the statute of limitations runs from the time of the request only, and not from the time of the precedent promise. Cro. Car. 98. See further, Limitation of Actions.

Unreasonable requests are not regarded in law; and there is no difference where a thing is to be done on request and reasonable request. Dyer, 218; Cro. Car. 176; 3 Nels. Abr. 140, 142.

In general, when a debt exists payable immediately, the law does not require any demand or request to pay it before the commencement of an action; 1 Saund. 33; Cro. Eliz. 548; and it is the legal duty of the debtor to find out and pay the creditor; and this doctrine extends even to a negotiable bill of exchange, though the acceptor may not know who is the holder, and consequently an action may be commenced against him without even tendering the bill for payment. Idem, ib.; 1 Str. 222, sed quære. But when by the express terms of the contract a previous demand is necessary, it must be made; and, at all events, unless the debtor be about to abscond, the courts would censure the commencement of an action without previous request. 1 Chitty's Gen. Pract. 498.

Interest is now recoverable upon many debts where a demand in writing of payment is made, accompanied with a notice that interest will be claimed from the time of such demand. See Interest.

Also see Action, Declaration, Pleading, Rent, &c.

REQUISITION. In Scotch law a notarial demand of a debt made by a creditor, in consequence of a clause in the securities for debt previous to the Reformation, when a personal obligation was deemed illegal. Bell's Scotch Dict.

RESCUIT, or RESCEIT, receptio. An admission or receiving of a third person to plead his right in a cause formerly commenced between two other persons; as where an action is brought against tenant for life or years, or any other particular tenant, and he makes default, in such case he in the reversion may move that he may be received to defend his right, and to plead with demandant.

Resceit is likewise applied to the admittance of a plea, where the controversy is between the same two persons. Broke, 205; Co. Litt. 192; 3 Nels. Abr. 146.

He in reversion may come into court and pray to be received in a suit against his particular tenant; and after such resceit the business shall be hastened, as much as may be by law, without any delay of either side. 13 Rich. 2. c. 17. But resceit is admitted only for those who have estates depending on particular estates for life, tenants by the curtesy, or after possibility, &c. and not for him in remainder after an estate-tail, which is perdurable. 1 And. 133.

Husband and wife were tenants for life, remainder to another in fee: a formedon was brought against the husband, who made default; after default and thereupon the wife prayed that she might be received to defend her right; but it was denied by the court, because if defendant should recover against her husband, it would not bar her right if she survived him, therefore it would be to no purpose. Then he in remainder prayed to be received, which at first the court doubted, by reason if the husband should recover, he might falsify such recovery; and because his estate did not depend on the estate of the husband alone, but on the estate of the husband and wife; but at last he was received. 1 Leon. 86.

The Statute of Gloucester, 6 Edm. 1. c. 11. enacts, that a termor may be received to falsify, if he hath a deed, and comes before judgment; this is where he in reversion causeth himself to be impleaded by collusion to make the termor lose his term, &c. And by 20 Edm. 1. st. 3. if any stranger come in by a collateral title before he is received, he shall take surety to satisfy the demandant the value of the lands, if he recovers from that time till final judgment; and demandant recovering, he shall be grievously amerced, &c.

RESCUIT OF HOMAGE, receptio homagii. The lord's receiving homage of his tenant at his admission to the land. Kitch. 148. See Homage.

RESCISSORY ACTION. An action to rescind a contract; one of the principal divisions of actions in the law of Scotland, and includes all those by which deeds, &c. are declared void.

RESCOUS, or RESCUE.

See 4 Comm. 131, n. and tit. ESCAPE.

RESCUSSUS, from the Fr. rescousse, i. e. liberatio.] A resistance against lawful authority.

I. Of the different kinds of Rescues, &c.

II. Of the Offence of making Rescue; and how the Offenders are to be proceeded against and punished.

And see tit. Escape.

III. Of the Form of the Proceedings on a Rescue.

IV. In what cases the Sheriff may return a Rescue; of the Form of a Return, and for what Defects it may be quashed.

I. In the case of a distress, the goods being, from the first taking, considered as in the custody of the law, and not merely in that of the distrainer, the taking them back by force is looked upon as an atrocious injury, and denominated a rescous; for which the distrainer has a remedy in damages, either by writ of rescous, in case they were going to the pound, or by writ de parco fracto, or pound-breach, in case they were actually impounded. F. N. B. 100, 101. He may also, at his option, bring an action on the case for this injury, and shall therein, if the distress were taken for rent, recover treble damages. 2 W. & M. c. 5; see post, II.; and tit. Distress, Pound-breach, Rent, Replevin.

The term rescous is likewise applied to the forcible delivery of a defendant, when arrested, from the officer who is carrying him to prison. In which circumstances the plaintiff has a similar remedy by action on the case, or of rescous; or if the sheriff makes a return of such rescous to the court out of which the process issued, the rescuer will be punished by attachment. 6 Mod. 211; Cro. Jac. 419; Salk. 586. See 3 Comm. c. 9; and post, II. III. IV.

If a bailiff or other officer on a writ arrest a man, and others by violence take him away, or procure his escape, this is a rescous in fact. So if one distrain beasts damage-tenant in his ground, as he drives them in the highway towards the pound, they enter into the owner's house, and he withholds them there, and will not deliver them on demand, this detainer is a rescous in law. Co. Litt. lib. 2. c. 12, 161. Cassanæus, in his book De Consuetud. Burg. f. 204, hath the same words coupled with resistentia.

In other terms, rescue is the taking away and setting at liberty, against law, any distress taken for rent, or services, or damage-tenant; but the more general notion of rescous is the forcible freeing another from an arrest, or some legal commitment, which, being an high offence, subjects the offender not only to an action at the suit of the party injured, but likewise to fine and imprisonment at the suit of the king. Co. Litt. 160; F. N. B. 226. See post, II.

But there can be no rescous but where the party has had the actual possession of the cattle, or other things whereof the rescous is supposed to be made; for if a man come to arrest another, or to distrain, and is disturbed, regularly his remedy is by action on the case. Co. Litt. 161 a; Litt. Rep. 296; 11. R. 145; and see 5 Bing. 490.

If the lord distrain for rent when none is due, the tenant may lawfully make rescous; so may a stranger, if his beasts be distrained when no rent is due. So if the tenant tender the rent when the lord comes to distrain, and yet he does distrain; or if he distrain any thing not distrainable, as beasts of the plough, when other sufficient distress may be taken, the tenant may make rescous; so if the lord distrain in the highway, or out of his fee. Co. Litt. 47, 160 b, 161 a.

But though there must be reason for the distress, and that otherwise the rescue cannot be unlawful, yet it hath been held, in a parco fracto, that a defendant cannot justify breaking the pound and taking out the cattle, though the distress was without cause, because they are now in the actual custody of the law. Salk. 247.

If on fi. fa. the sheriff seizes goods, which are taken away by a stranger, this is not properly a rescue; for by seizure of the goods, by virtue of the fi. facias, the sheriff has a property in them, and may maintain trespass or trover for them;

also the party injured may have an action on the case against the wrong-doer. Hell. 145; Litt. Rep. 296.

There is a difference between a man's being arrested by a warrant on record, and by a general authority in law; for if a captias be awarded to the sheriff to arrest a man for felony, though he be innocent, he cannot make rescue; but if the sheriff will, by the general authority committed to him by law, arrest any man for felony, if he be innocent he may rescue himself. Co. Litt. 161. See 5 Co. 68; 6 Co. 54; Cro. Jac. 486.

In an action on the case for a rescous on mesne process, the evidence was, the bailiff stood at the street door, and sent his follower up three pair of stairs in disguise, with the warrant, who laid hands on the party, and told him that he arrested him; but he, with the help of some woman, got from the follower, and ran down stairs, and the defendant, hearing a noise, ran up, and put the party into a room, locked the door, and would not suffer the bailiff to enter: Holt doubted whether this was a lawful arrest, being by the bailiff's servant, and not in his presence; but said that the plaintiff must prove his cause of action against the party; that he must prove the writ and warrant by producing sworn copies of them; he must prove the manner of arrest, that it may appear to the court to be legal; and, in point of damage, he must prove the loss of his debt, viz. that the party became insolvent, and could not be retaken. 6 Mod. 211.

II. RESCUE is classed by Blackstone amongst offences against public justice; and is defined to be the forcibly and knowingly freeing another from an arrest or imprisonment: and it is generally the same offence in the stranger so rescuing as it would have been in a gaoler to have voluntarily permitted an escape. A rescue, therefore, of one apprehended for felony, is felony; for treason, treason; and for a misdemeanor, a misdemeanor also. But here, likewise, as upon voluntary escapes, the principal must be first attainted, or receive judgment, before the rescuer can be punished; and for the same reason, because perhaps, in fact, it may turn out that there has been no offence committed. 4 Comm. c. 10. p. 131; 1 Hal. P. C. 607; Fost. 344. See Escape.

There are also various statutory enactments relating to the rescue of persons charged with criminal offences.

By the 25 Geo. 3. c. 37. § 9. rescuing, or attempting to rescue, or set at liberty any person out of prison, committed for or found guilty of murder, or any person convicted of murder going to execution, or during execution, is a capital felony.

And § 10. to rescue, or attempt to rescue, the body of a felon executed for murder, is single felony, punishable by transportation for seven years; and a like punishment is inflicted by 11 Geo. 2. c. 26. and 24 Geo. 2. c. 40. § 28. against persons assembling, to the number of five, or more, to rescue any unlawful retailers of spirituous liquors, or to assault the informers against them.

By 1 & 2 Geo. 4. c. 88. § 1. if any person shall rescue, or aid and assist in rescuing, from the lawful custody of any constable, officer, headborough, or other person, any person charged with, or suspected of, or committed for, felony, or on suspicion thereof; then, if the person so offending shall be convicted of felony, and be entitled to clergy, and be liable to be imprisoned not exceeding one year, the court may order such person to be transported for seven years, or imprisoned no less than one nor exceeding three years.

By the 5 Geo. 4. c. 34. if any person shall rescue any offender, sentenced to transportation, from the gaoler, or other person removing and conveying such offender, such offence shall be punishable in the same manner as if the offender had been confined in gaol.

As to the punishment of aiding prisoners to escape from prison, see further Gaol. III.

It seems agreed, that the rescuing a person imprisoned for felony, is also felony by the common law. 1 Hal. P. C. 606.

Also it is agreed that a stranger who rescues a person committed for, and guilty of, high treason, knowing him to be so, is in all cases guilty of high treason. Staufd. P. C. 11; 1 Jon. 455. Whether he knew that the prisoners were so committed or not. Cro. Car. 583.

To make a rescue felony, it is necessary that the felon be in custody, or under arrest for felony; therefore if A. hinder an arrest, whereby the felon escapes, the township shall be amerced for the escape, and A. shall be fined for the hinderance of his taking: but it is not felony in A. because the felon was not taken. 1 Hal. P. C. 606; 3 Edw. 3. Coron. 333; Staufd. 31.

So, to make a rescue felony, the party rescued must be under custody for felony, or suspicion of felony; and it is all one whether he be in custody for that account by a private person, or by an officer, or warrant of a justice; for where the arrest of a felon is lawful, the rescue of him is felony; but it seems necessary that he should have knowledge that the person is under arrest for felony, if he be in the custody of a private person. 1 Hal. P. C. 606.

Wherever the imprisonment is so far groundless or irregular, or the breaking of a prison is occasioned by such a necessity, &c. that the party himself, breaking prison, is either by the common law, or by the statute de frangentibus prisonam, saved from the penalty of a capital offender, a stranger who rescues him from such imprisonment is, in like manner, also excused; et sic è converso. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 21. § 6. See Gaol, III.

But if he be in the custody of an officer, there at his peril, he is to take notice of it; so if there be felons in a prison, and A. not knowing it, breaks the prison, and lets out the prisoners, though he knew not that there were felons there, it is felony. 1 Hal. P. C. 606; Cro. Car. 383.

A person committed for high treason, who breaks the prison, and escapes, is guilty of felony only; unless he lets others also escape, whom he knows to be committed for high treason; in which case he is guilty of high treason, not in respect of his own breaking of prison, but of the rescous of the other. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 21. § 7.

If the person rescued were indicted or attainted of several felonies, yet the escape or rescue of such a person makes but one felony. 1 Hal. P. C. 599.

The rescuer of a prisoner for felony, though not within clergy, yet should have his clergy; 1 Hal. P. C. 607; unless where it was otherwise declared by statute. See now Felony.

The return of a rescue of a felon, by the sheriff against A., is not sufficient to put him to answer for it as a felony, without indictment or presentment, by the statute 25 Edw. 3. st. 5. c. 4. 1 Hal. P. C. 606.

In cases where the obstruction of process by the rescue of a party arrested is accompanied with circumstances of violence and assault upon the officer, the offence may be made the subject of proceeding by indictment; and the rescue, or attempt to rescue, a party arrested on a criminal charge is generally punished by that mode of proceeding. And the offence of rescuing a person arrested (in civil cases) on mesne process, or in execution after judgment, subjects the offender to a writ of rescous or a general action of trespass vi et armis, or an action on the case, in all which damages are recoverable. 6 Bac. Abr. Rescous, C.; 6 Com. Dig. Rescous, D. And it has also been the frequent practice of the court to grant an attachment against such wrong doers, it being the highest violence and contempt that can be offered to the process of the court. But, in order to ground an attachment for a rescue, it seems there must be a return of it by the sheriff. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 22. § 34; 4 Burr. 2129; 1 Ld. Raym. 35, 589.

He who rescues a prisoner from any of the courts of Westminster Hall, without striking a blow, shall forfeit his goods and profits of his lands, and suffer imprisonment during life:

but not lose his hand, because he did not strike. 22 Edw. 3. 13; 3 Inst. 141; 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 21. § 5. See Assault, Striking.

In the case of Lord Thanet and others, B. R. Trin. 39 Geo. 3. the first three counts of the information set forth a special commission for the trial of A. O'Connor (and others) for high treason; and that after his acquittal, and before any order for his discharge, the defendants in open court, pending the sessions, made a great riot, and riotously attempted to rescue him out of the custody of the sheriff: and, the better to effect such rescue and escape, did, in the presence of the justices at such sessions, riotously make an assault on one J. R.; and did then and there "beat, bruise, wound," and ill treat the said J. R., and thereby impede and obstruct the said justices. There were two other counts in the information: the one for riotously interrupting and obstructing the justices in holding the session, and the other for a common riot. Two of the defendants having been found guilty generally, considerable doubt was intimated by the chief justice (Kenyon) whether the court were not bound to pass the judgment of amputation of the hand, forfeiture, and imprisonment, for the offence as laid in the first three counts. The matter stood over for consideration; and, before bringing up the defendants to receive judgment, the attorney-general informed the court that he had received the royal command and warrant to enter a noli prosequi as to those parts of the information on which the doubt had arisen, which was done accordingly, and the judgment of the court prayed on such charges as left the sentence in their discretion; on which the court gave judgment against the defendants of fine, imprisonment, and sureties. 1 East, P. C. c. 8. § 3. See Striking.

It is clearly agreed, that for a rescous on mesne process, the party injured may have either an action of trespass vi et armis, or an action on the case, in which he shall recover his debt and damages against the wrong doer; and the rather, because on mesne process he can have no remedy against the sheriff. Cro. Jac. 486; Hob. 180. See post, IV.

Also it hath been adjudged, that for rescous of a person in execution on a ca. sa. or ca. utlag. an action will lie against the rescuer, though the party injured hath his remedy against the sheriff, and the sheriff hath his remedy against the wrong doer; for perhaps the sheriff may be dead or insolvent: but herein it hath been held, that if he bring his action against the party who made the rescue, he may plead it in bar to an action brought by the sheriff; so, if against the sheriff, or his bail, they may plead that he had satisfaction from the party, so that if he recovers against one, the other is discharged. Heil. 23. Cro. Car. 109; Hut. 33; Hob. 180.

By 2 Wm. & M. st. 1. c. 5. § 5. on pound-breach, or rescous of goods distrained for rent, the person grieved shall, in a special action on the case, recover treble damages and costs against the offenders, or against the owner of the goods, if they come to his use.

In an action on the case for a rescous, on this statute, it hath been held, that the plaintiff shall recover treble costs as well as treble damages: for the damages are not given by the statute, but increased; an action on the case lying for a rescous at common law. 1 Salk. 205.

An attachment will be granted not only against a common person, but even against a peer of the realm, for rescuing a person arrested by due course of law: so that if the sheriff in any case return to the court, that a person arrested, or goods seized, or possession of lands delivered by him, by virtue of the king's writ, were rescued or violently taken from him, &c. they will award an attachment against the rescuers. Dyer, 212; 2 Jon. 39; Salk. 322.

But it seems to be the practice not to grant an attachment in any case for a rescous, unless the officer will return it, for it hath been found by experience, that officers will take on them to swear a rescous where they will not venture to return one. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 22. § 34.

A distinction was taken where an attachment is prayed for a rescous in the first instance, and where a rule to show cause is only asked; in this affidavits of the fact are sufficient; in the other case, the sheriff's return is requisite. Trin. 5 Geo. 2. in B. R. Young v. Payne.

Where on the return of a rescue, an attachment is granted, and the party examined on interrogatories, upon answering them he shall be discharged; but if the rescous is returned to the filacer, and process of outlawry issues, and the rescuer is brought into court, he shall not be discharged on affidavits. Salk. 586.

III. As in case of an escape, so in case of a rescue, if the party rescued be imprisoned for felony, and rescued before indictment, the indictment must surmise a felony done, as well as an imprisonment for felony, or suspicion thereof; but if the party be indicted, and taken by a capias, and rescued, then there needs only a recital that he was indicted prout, and taken and rescued. 1 Hal. P. C. 607.

Though the rescuer may be indicted before the principal is convicted and attainted, yet he shall not be arraigned or tried before the principal be attainted; but if the person rescued were imprisoned for high treason, the rescuer may immediately be arraigned, for in high treason all are principals: sed quere. But it seems that he may be immediately proceeded against for a misprision only, if the king please. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 21. § 8.

An indictment of a rescous ought to set forth the special circumstances of the fact, with such certainty as to enable defendant to make a proper defence. Dyer, 164. No defect can be aided by the verdict. 1 Roll. Abr. 781.

Therefore, if an indictment lay the offence on an uncertain or impossible day, as where it lays it on a future day, or lays one and the same offence at different days, or lays it on such a day which makes the indictment repugnant to itself, it is void. Moor, 555; Rast. Ent. 269.

It has been adjudged, on exceptions taken to an indictment for a rescous, that it was not necessary to allege the place where the rescue was made, and that it should be intended that where the arrest was, there also was the rescue. Cro. Jac. 345; 2 Bulst. 208.

An exception was taken to an indictment of rescous, that it wanted the words vi et armis, or manu forti; but over-ruled, it being held by the court, that the word rescussit implies it to be done by force. Cro. Jac. 345. The same exception taken in Cro. Jac. 473. over-ruled, and there held, that though it were error at common law, yet it is made good by the 37 Hen. 8. c. 8.

It is said, that an indictment of rescous is not within the statute of additions, and that naming the person indicted of such a parish, without giving him any title, is sufficient. 2 Inst. 665; 2 Show. 84.

Note: on an indictment of rescous, if it were on an arrest upon mesne process, and the party has appeared, the court will be easily induced to quash it; so if it be on process out of an inferior court, though the party has not appeared, for no aid is given to inferior jurisdictions.

In an action for a rescue, the plaintiff must allege in his declaration all the material circumstances; as that such a writ issued, that he was arrested and in custody, and that he was rescued, &c. Godb. 125; 1 Lutw. 130.

The forcibly rescuing goods distrained, and the rescuing cattle by the breach of the pound in which they have been placed, have been considered as offences at common law, and made the subject of indictment. The civil remedy, however, given by 2 W. & M. st. 1. c. 5 in cases of a pound breach, or goods distrained for rent, will be found the most desirable remedy where the offenders are responsible persons. See ante, II.

FORM OF THE WRIT OF RESCOUS.

GEORGE the Third, &c. To the Sheriff of M. greeting:

VOL. II.

RESCUE, IV.

If A. B. shall make you secure, &c. then put C. D. &c. to show, wherefore, whereas the said A. B. at, &c. certain beasts of the said C. D. had taken and distrained for rent, &c. And those, there, according to the law and custom of our kingdom of England, would have impounded, the said C. D. the beasts aforesaid, with force and arms, rescued, and other enormities there did, to the contempt of us, and grievous damage of the said A. B. and against our peace, &c. Or thus:

Put E. F. and G. H. to answer, &c. wherefore, whereas the said A. B. according to the duty of his office, C. D. whom by our Sheriff of the county aforesaid, by writ to him directed, we commanded to be taken at L., by virtue of our said writ had taken, and him to our prison of, &c. there to abide, would have conveyed, the said E. F. and G. H. him the said C. D. at L. aforesaid, with force of arms, rescued, and other enormities, &c.

IV. THE distinction laid down in a variety of books and cases is, that on a rescue on mesne process the sheriff may return the rescue, and is subject to no action; for that on a mesne process he was not obliged to raise his posse comitatus, nor would it be convenient so to do on the execution of every mesne process. Cro. Eliz. 868; 1 March, 1; 1 Jon. 201; 3 Bulst. 198; 2 Roll. Rep. 389; Noy, 40; Moor, 852; 2 Lev. 144; 6 Mod. 141; Lutw. 130, 131. But the sheriff may, if he pleases, take his posse to arrest one on mesne process. Noy, 40.

But if the sheriff takes a man on an execution, as on a ca. sa., and he is rescued from him before he can bring him to prison, though he returns the rescue, yet this shall not excuse him; for when judgment is passed, and he and his bail do not surrender him, nor pay the condemnation money, and then a capias issues, to which there can be no bail, there it is presumed that it will not be forthcoming, because neither he nor his bail have satisfied the judgment; therefore the sheriff ought to take the posse comitatus; consequently it cannot be a good return, that he took the body, but that it was rescued; and the party may have an action of escape against the sheriff on this return; and this is provided by the stat. West. 2. 13 E. 1. st. 1. c. 30. which was made to prevent sheriffs from returning rescues to the king's writs. Cro. Jac. 419; 1 Roll. Rep. 388, 440; 3 Bulst. 198; Moor, 852. Or on a capias utlagatum after judgment. Cro. Jac. 419; 1 Roll. Rep. 389.

In an action on the case against the sheriff for an escape on mesne process, the defendant pleaded a rescue, which on demurrer was held a good plea, though he did not show that the rescue was returned. 3 Lev. 46.

But if one taken on mesne process be once in prison, the sheriff cannot return a rescous, for the law presumes that he hath a power to keep him there. 1 Roll. Rep. 441; 3 Bulst. 198; Cro. Jac. 419. Unless the prison is broken by the king's enemies, which shall excuse the sheriff. 4 Co. 84; 1 Vent. 239. But not if broken by rebels and traitors, for the sheriff or gaoler hath his remedy over against them. 4 Co. 84; Cro. Eliz. 815; 2 Mod. 28; 1 Vent. 239.

If a felon be attainted, and in carrying him to execution he is rescued from the sheriff, the sheriff is punishable notwithstanding the rescue; for there is judgment given, and the sheriff should have taken sufficient power with him; therefore in that case the township is not finable. 1 Hal. P. C. 602; and there said that a rescue is no excuse in felony.

It hath been adjudged that the return of a rescue by a sheriff must show the year and day on which it was made, such return being in lieu of an indictment. 3 H. 7. 11. pl. 3; Bro. Return de Brief, 97; Fitz. Cora. 45; Attach. 1.

But it hath been held that the sheriff's return of a rescue on a latitat, without mentioning the day of the caption, was sufficient, all the clerks in court affirming the precedents to have been so. Palm. 532.

The sheriff's return of a rescue, without mentioning the place where it was made, was held bad, and the party discharged. Moor, 422. pl. 585.

For if the prisoner escape through the negligence of the officer, this will not justify the return of a rescue. 1 Holt, 537.

It seems that a return that the defendant rescued himself is good without naming the rescuers, or stating them to be people of the county. R. v. Sheriff of Middlesex, 1 Barn. & A. 190.

But if the return do not state the arrest to have taken place in the county, it is bad, for if it were elsewhere the rescue was lawful. Ibid.

Where the sheriff returned virtute brevis mihi direct' feci warrant' A. & B. ballivis meis, qui virtute inde ceperunt the defendant et in custodia mea habuerunt quousque such and such rescusserunt him ex custodia ballivorum meorum; this return was on motion quashed; for per Holt, when bailiffs have arrested the party, he is in fact in their custody, but in law he is in custody of the sheriff; an answer either way is good, viz. that he was rescued out of the bailiff's custody, or that he was rescued out of the sheriff's custody; but to say that he was in the custody of the sheriff, and yet rescued out of the bailiff's, is repugnant. 2 Salk. 586.

It seems that anciently, when the sheriff returned a rescue, the party was admitted to plead to it as to an indictment; but the course of late has been not to admit any plea to it, but drive the party to his action against the sheriff in case the return were false; hence it is now settled that the return of a rescue is not traversable, but yet it hath been held that submission to the fine doth not conclude the party grieved from bringing his action for the false return, if it were so. Cro. Eliz. 781; Dyer, 212; 2 Jon. 29; 1 Vent. 224; 2 Vent. 175; Comb. 295.

If on a feri facias the sheriff returned that he had seized the goods, but that they were rescued by B. and C. &c. this is not a good return, but he shall be amerced; the party also at whose suit the execution issued may charge him by scire facias for the value of the goods. 1 Vent. 21; 2 Saund. 343; 1 Shon. 180.

The Court of K. B. set aside an attachment against a sheriff for not bringing in the body, with costs, upon an affidavit that the plaintiffs purposely prevented the defendant's being retaken after a rescue, and that the application was by the sheriff himself, but without negating the fact of his having an indemnity. 1 B. & A. 190.

RESCUOR. The party making a rescue.

RESSEISER, reseisire. The taking lands into the hands of the king, where a general livery or ouster le mainc was formerly misused. Staundf. Prærog.

RESERVATION, reservatio. A keeping aside, or providing; as when a man lets or parts with his land, but reserves or provides for himself a rent out of it for his own livelihood; sometimes it has the force of a saving or exception. Co. Litt. 148.

Exception is always of part of the thing granted, and of a thing in being; and a reservation is of a thing not in being, but is newly created out of the lands or tenements demised; though exception and reservation have been used promiscuously. Co. Litt. 47. The proper place for a reservation is next after the limitation of the estate; and reservation of rent may be every two, three, or more years; as well as yearly, half-yearly, quarterly, &c. Co. Litt. 47; 8 Rep. 71.

It must be out of a house or lands, and be made either by the words yielding and paying, &c. or the word covenant; which is of both lessor and lessee, therefore makes a reservation. Roll. Rep. 80.

The reservation of rent is good, although it is not reserved by apt and usual words, if the words are equivalent. Plowd. 120. But reservation of a rent secundum ratam, is a void reservation. 2 Vent. 272. See Deed, Reddendum, Rent, &c.

RESIANCE, resiantia. Residence; abode or continuance; whence comes the participle resiant, that is, continually dwelling or abiding in any place. Old Nat. Br. 85; Kitch. 33.

RESIANT ROLLS, i. e. rolls containing the resiants in a tithing, &c. which are to be called over by the steward on holding courts-leet. Comp. Court Keep.

RESIDENCE, residentia. Is peculiarly used both in the canon and common law, for the continuance of a parson or vicar on his benefice.

One of the great duties incumbent on clergymen is, that they be resident on their livings; and on the first erecting parochial churches, every clergyman was obliged to reside on his benefice, for reading of prayers, preaching, &c. by the laws and canons of the church; and by statute, the parson ought to abide on his rectory in the parsonage-house; for the statute is intended not only for serving the cure, and for hospitality, but to maintain the house in repair, and prevent dilapidations; though lawful imprisonment, sickness, &c. being things of necessity, are good cause of excuse for absence, and excepted out of the act by construction of law; and it is the same where a person is employed in some important business for the church or king; or is entertained in the king's service. 6 Rep. 21, Cro. Lihz. 580; Gibb. Cod. 887.

Residence was formerly regulated by 21 Hen. 8. c. 13. and afterwards in England by 43 Geo. 3. c. 84. and in Ireland by 48 Geo. 3. c. 66. the provisions of which acts were in this respect very similar.

Further amendments were made by 54 Geo. 3. c. 54 and 175. as to residence in England. These were temporary acts. At length by 57 Geo. 3. c. 99. "to consolidate and amend the laws relating to spiritual persons holding farms, and for enforcing the residence of spiritual persons on their benefices, and for the support of stipendiary curates in England," all former acts as to residence from 21 Hen. 8. c. 13 to 43 Geo. 3. c. 84. and also several acts as to curates, were repealed, and new regulations introduced of a very detailed and apparently complex nature; by this act bishops are empowered to grant licences for non-residence in cases of illness, &c.

Chaplains to his majesty, to peers of the realm and persons holding certain offices and dignities, are exempted from the penalties of non-residence. Archbishops and bishops are also exempted from such penalties.

Independent of the statutes, the bishop in his court may compel the residence of all the clergy who have the cure or care of souls within his diocese. 3 Burn's Eccl. Law, 281 Gibb. 887.

The article of residence in Ireland is now regulated by the 5 Geo. 4. c. 91.

Bishops are liable to ecclesiastical censures for non-residence on their bishopric; and the king may issue a mandatory writ to enforce their attendance, and compel them to it by seizing their temporalities; as King Henry III. did by the Bishop of Hereford. 2 Inst. 625.

See further Churches, Clergy, Parson.

RESIDUARY LEGATEE. Is he to whom the residuum of the estate is left by will. See Executor, Legacy.

RESIGNATION, resignatio. The yielding up a benefice into the hands of the ordinary, called by the canonists renunciation; and though it is all one in nature with the surrender, yet it is, by use, restrained to yielding up a spiritual living to the bishop; as surrender is the giving up of temporal land into the hands of the lord. And a resignation may now be made into the hands of the king as well as the diocesan, because he has supremam auctoritatem ecclesiasticam, as the pope had in ancient times; though it has been adjudged that a resignation ought to be made only to the bishop of the diocese, and not to the king, because the king is not bound to give notice of the resignation to the patron as the ordinary is; nor can the king make a collation himself without presenting to the bishop. Plomd. 498; Roll. Abr. 358.

Every parson who resigns a benefice must make the resignation to his superior; as an incumbent to the bishop, a bishop to the archbishop, and an archbishop to the king, as supreme ordinary; a donative is to be resigned to the patron, not the ordinary, for in that case the clerk received his living immediately from the patron. 1 Rep. 137.

A common benefice is to be resigned to the ordinary, by whose admission and institution the clerk first came into the church; and the resignation must be made to that ordinary who hath power of institution; in whose discretion it is either to accept or refuse the resignation; as the law hath declared him the proper person to whom it ought to be made, it hath likewise empowered him to judge thereof. Cro. Jac. 64, 138.

The instrument of resignation is to be directed to the bishop; and when the bishop hath accepted of it the resignation is good to make void the church and not before, unless it be where there is no cure, when it is good without the acceptance of the bishop. A resignation may be made before a public notary, but without the bishop's acceptance it doth not make the church void; the notary can only attest the resignation, in order to its being presented, &c. Cro. Jac. 64, 138.

Before acceptance of the resignation by the bishop, no presentation can be had to the church; but, as soon as the acceptance is made, the patron may present to the benefice resigned; and when the clerk is instituted, the church is full against all men in case of a common person; though, before induction, such incumbent may make the church void again by resignation. Count. Pars. Comp. 106.

It seems to be clear that the bishop may refuse to accept a resignation upon a sufficient cause for his refusal; but whether he can, merely at his will and pleasure, refuse to accept a resignation without any cause, and who shall finally judge of the sufficiency of the cause, and by what mode he may be compelled to accept, are questions undecided. In the case of the Bishop of London v. Elythe, the Court of K. B. held that the ordinary could not refuse to admit a clerk to a rectory to which he was presented, because he had given a general bond to resign upon the request of his patron. 1 East, 487. But this judgment was reversed in the House of Lords, and the judges in general declined in that case to answer whether a bishop was compellable to accept a resignation; one thought he was compellable by mandamus, if he did not show sufficient cause; and another observed, that if he could not be compelled, he might prevent any incumbent from accepting an Irish bishopric, as no one can accept such bishopric till he has resigned all his benefices in England. But Lord Thurlow seemed to be of opinion that he could not be compelled, particularly by mandamus, from which there is no appeal on writ of error. 1 Comm. c. 11. p. 393, in n. See Simony.

A parsonage is not to be granted over by the incumbent, but it may be resigned; and resignations are to be absolute, and not conditional; for it is against the nature of a resignation to be conditional, being a judicial act. 3 Nels. Abr. 157.

If any incumbent corruptly resign his benefice, or take any reward for resigning the same, he shall forfeit double the value of the sum, &c. given, and the party giving it be incapable to hold the living. 31 Eliz. c. 8. § 8. But a man may bind himself by bond to resign, and it is not unlawful, let him be on good and valuable reasons; as, where he is obliged to resign if he take a second benefice, or if he be non-resident by the space of so many months, or to resign on request, if the patron shall present his son or kinsman, when he shall be of age capable to take the living, &c. Cro. Jac. 249, 274. Though bonds for resignation of benefices have no encouragement in Chancery; for on such bonds, generally, the incumbent is relieved, and not obliged to resign. 1 Roll. Abr. 443. On a debt upon bond to resign a benefice, the court would not let the defendant's counsel argue the validity of the bond, these bonds having been so often established even in a court of equity. 1 Strange, 227. But such a bond will not be allowed, where money has been paid on it. Ibid. 534.

Now, by the 9 Geo. 4. c. 94. bonds or agreements to resign a benefice are under certain restrictions valid. See further, Simony.

The Court of K. B. determined that a bond given by a schoolmaster of an ancient public school, who had a freehold in his office, to resign at the request of his patron, was good at law: but equity will restrain any improper use of it by the patron. 1 East, 391. On error brought in this case in the exchequer chamber, that court thought it did not appear that it was a freehold office, and therefore affirmed the judgment without giving any opinion on the principal point. 3 Bos. & Pul. 231. See Simony.

A parson's refusal to pay his tenth, it is said, is a resignation, for which he may be deprived. Owen, 5. And where resignation is actually made de cunctis it extends to all the lands and possessions of the church. Cro. Jac. 63.

The usual words of a resignation are renuncio, cedo, dimitto, and resigno; and the word resigno is not a proper term alone. 2 Roll. 350.

As to resignation of fees in the Scotch law, see Procuratory of Resignation.

As to resignation of temporal offices.—Declaring, at an assembly of the corporation, that he would hold the place of alderman no longer, is a good resignation, especially since the corporation accepted it, and chose another in his place; but, till such election, he had power to waive his resignation, but not afterwards. 2 Salk. 433.

A burgess of a corporation, came to the mayor, and desired the mayor to remove and dismiss him from the place of burgess. On return of this, a mandamus was denied to restore him; for having resigned voluntarily, he is estopped to say, that the mayor had no power to remove him; and the case being sent to Hale, Ch. B., he agreed, and said, that a corporation, as such, have power to take such resignation. Sid. 14.

But giving consent to be removed, does not amount to a resignation. A man may resign an office by parol. Holl's Rep. 450.

Resignation by a common-council-man need not be by deed. Lutw. 405.

Where an alderman is a justice of peace for life, by force of the patent of the king, who created the corporation, he cannot resign his office of justice of the peace, because he cannot resign it but to a superior; per Coke, Ch. J.; Roll. Rep. 135, pl. 19.

So, if a man can have no title to the profits of an office, without the admission or confirmation of a superior, there the resignation of that office must be to him. 3 Nels. Abr. 158. See Corporation, Mandamus, Quo Warranto.

RESORT, resortum.] The authority or jurisdiction of a court. Spelm.

Dernier Resort, the last refuge. The House of Lords is the dernier resort in cases of appeal.

RESPECTU COMPUTI VICECOMITIS HABENDO, was a writ for respiting a sheriff's account, directed to the treasurer and barons of the Exchequer. Reg. Orig. 139. See Sheriff.

RESPIRE, respectus.] A delay, forbearance, or continuation of time. Glanvil, lib. 12. c. 9. See Execution of Criminals.

RESPIRE OF HOMAGE, respectus homagii.] The forbearance or delay of homage, which ought to be performed by tenants holding by homage, &c. It was most frequently in use for such as held by knight's-service, and in capite, who formerly paid into the Exchequer, every fifth term, some small sum of money to be respited their homage: but this charge being incident to and arising from knight's-service, it is taken away by 12 Car. 2. c. 24. See Homage, Tenures.

RESPIRE OR JUR. See Jury, Nisi Prius, Trial.

RESPONDEAS, or RESPONDEAT OUSTER, answer, or let him answer over.] If a demurrer is joined on a plea to the jurisdiction, person, or writ, &c. and it be adjudged against the defendant, judgment is given that he shall answer over. See further, Demurrer, Judgment.

RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR, let the superior answer.] If sheriffs of London are insufficient, the mayor and commonalty must answer for them: and per insufficiency del bailiff d'un liberty, respondeat dominus libertatis. 4 Inst. 114; 44 Edw. 3. cap. 13.

If a coroner of a county is insufficient, the county, as his superior, shall answer for him. Wood's Inst. 83.

A gaoler constitutes another under him, and he permits an escape, if he be not sufficient respondeat superior; and superior officers must answer for their deputies in civil actions, if they are insufficient to answer damages. Doct. & Stud. c. 24. See Deputy, Officer.

RESPONDE-BOOK, in Exchequer. A book kept by the directors of Chancery, in Scotland, in which are kept the accounts of all non-entry and relief duties, payable by heirs, who take precepts from Chancery. Bell's Scotch Dict.

RESPONDENTIA. See Bottomry, Insurance, IV.

RESPONSALIS, qui responsum defert.] He who appears and answers for another in court at a day assigned. Glan. lib. 12. c. 1. Fleta makes a difference between responsalem, attornatum, and essoniatorem; he says that responsalis was for the tenant, not only to excuse his absence, but to signify what trial he meant to undergo, the combat or the country. Fleta, lib. 6. c. 21.

This word is made use of in the canon law for a proctor.

RESTITUTION, restitutio.] The restoring any thing unjustly taken from another. It signifies also the putting him in possession of lands or tenements, who had been unlawfully disseised of them. Crompt. Just. 144. And restitution is a writ, which lies where judgment is reversed, to restore and make good to the defendant what he hath lost. The court which reverses the judgment gives, on reversal, a judgment for restitution; whereon a scire facias quare restitutionem habere non debet, reciting the reversal of the judgment, and the writ of execution, &c. must issue forth. But the law doth often restore the possession to one without a writ of restitution, i. e. by writ of habere facias possessionem, &c. in the common proceeding of justice on a trial at law. 2 Lill. Abr. 472, 3. See Execution.

There is a restitution of the possession of lands in cases of forcible entry; a restitution of lands to an heir, on his ancestor's being attainted of treason or felony; and restitution of stolen goods, &c.

A writ of restitution is not properly to be granted but where the party cannot be restored by the ordinary course of law; and the nature of it is to restore the party to the possession of a freehold, or other matter of profit, from which he is illegally removed; and it extends to restitution on mandamus to any public office. 2 Lill. 472, 473.

Where a judgment for land is reversed in B. R. by writ of error, the court may grant a writ of restitution, to the sheriff to put the party in possession of the lands recovered from him by the erroneous judgment; though there ought to be no restitution granted of the possession of lands, where it cannot be grounded on some matter of record appearing to the court. Hil. 22 Car. And persons who are to restore, are to be parties to the record; or they must be made so by special scire facias. Cro. Car. 328; 2 Salk. 587.

If a lease is taken in execution on a fi. fa. and sold by the sheriff, and afterwards the judgment is reversed; the restitution must be of the money for which it was sold, not the term. Cro. Jac. 246; Moor, 788. But where a sheriff extended goods and lands on an elegit, and returned that he took a lease for years, which he sold and delivered to the plaintiff, as bona et catalla of the defendant, for the debt, and afterwards the judgment was reversed for error; it was adjudged, that the party shall be restored to the lease, because the elegit gave the sheriff no authority to sell the term, therefore a writ of restitution was awarded. Yelv. 179. And there has been in this case a distinction made between compulsory and voluntary acts done in execution of justice; where the sheriff is commanded by the writ to sell the goods, and where he is not, when the goods are to be restored, &c. 8 Rep. 96.

If a plaintiff hath execution, and the money is levied and paid, and afterwards the judgment is reversed, there the party shall have restitution without a scire facias, for it appears on the record what the party hath lost and paid, but if the money was only levied, and not paid, then there must be a scire facias suggesting the sum levied, &c. And where the judgment is set aside after execution for an irregularity, there needs no scire facias for restitution, but an attachment of contempt, if, on the rule for restitution, the money is not restored. 2 Salk. 588.

In a scire facias quare restitutionem, &c. the defendant pleaded payment of the money mentioned in the scire facias, and it was held to be no plea. Cro. Car. 328. But now payment is a good plea to a scire facias by the 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16. § 12; 3 Lill. Abr. 479.

Upon a writ of vi laici remorendi a parson was put out of possession; and on a suggestion thereof, and affidavit made, restitution was ordered. Cro. Eliz. 465.

The justice of peace, before whom an indictment for forcible entry is found, must give the party restitution of his lands, &c. who was put out of possession by force. Hen. 6. c. 9. But where one is indicted for a forcible entry, and the party indicted traverses the indictment, there cannot be restitution before trial and a verdict, and judgment given for the party, though the indictment be erroneous; it being too late to move to quash the indictment after the traverse, which puts the matter on trial. 2 Lill. 473, 474. See Forcible Entry, II.

A person being attainted of treason, &c. he or his heirs may be restored to his lands, &c. by the king's charter of pardon; and the heir, by petition of right, may be restored if the ancestor is executed; but restitution of blood must be by act of parliament; and restitutions by parliament are some of blood only, some of blood, honour, inheritance, &c. The king may restore the party, or his heirs, to his lands, and the blood as to all issue begotten after the attainder. 3 Inst. 240; Co. Litt. 8, 391. See Attainder, Forfeiture, &c.

By the common law there was no restitution of goods upon an indictment, it being considered as at the suit of the king only; and therefore the party was enforced to bring an appeal of robbery, in order to have his goods again. 3 Inst. 242. But it being considered, that the party prosecuting the offender by indictment deserves to the full as much encouragement as he who prosecuted by appeal; the statute 21 Hen. 8. c. 11. gave restitution to a party robbed of his goods, or the value of them out of the offender's goods. This statute is now repealed, and by the 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 20. § 37. it is enacted, that if any person guilty of any felony or misdemeanor (mentioned in the previous part of the act), in stealing, taking, obtaining, or converting, or knowingly receiving any chattel, money, valuable security, or other property, shall be indicted for such offence by or on the behalf of the owner, or his executor or administrator, and convicted thereof, in such case the property shall be restored to the owner or his representative; and the court shall have power to award writs of restitution for the said property, or to order restitution thereof in a summary way. But if it shall appear, before any award or order made, that any valuable security shall have been bond fide paid, or discharged by some person or body corporate liable to the payment thereof, or (being a negotiable instrument) shall have been bond fide taken or received by transfer or delivery, for a just and valuable consideration, without any notice or reasonable cause to suspect that the same had, by any felony or misdemeanor, been stolen, taken, obtained, or converted as aforesaid, in such case the court shall not award or order the restitution of such security.

This exception was not contained in the 21 Hen. 8. c. 11; which moreover only extended to a felonious and not a fraudulent taking of goods. See 5 T. R. 175; where it was held under the old statute, that if the owner of goods lost them by a fraud, and not by a felony, and afterwards convicted the offender, he was not entitled to restitution; or to retain them, against a person (as a pawnbroker) who had fairly acquired a new right of property in them.

The necessity of prosecuting and convicting the felon, in order to have restitution, is only when the property is changed by some intermediate act. See Kel. 42; 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 28, s. 40.

As formerly upon appeals, so now upon indictments of larceny, the writ of restitution shall reach the goods so stolen, notwithstanding the property of them is endeavoured to be altered by sale in market overt. 1 Hal. P. C. 543. And though this may seem somewhat hard upon the buyer, yet the rule of law is, that spoliatus debet, ante omnia, restitui; especially when he has used all the diligence in his power to convict the felon. And, since the case is reduced to this hard necessity, that either the owner or the buyer must suffer, the law prefers the right of the owner, who has done a meritorious act by pursuing a felon to condign punishment, to the right of the buyer, whose merit is only negative, that he has been guilty of no unfair transaction. See 2 Inst. 714; 3 Inst. 242; 5 Rep. 109.

Restitution, however, can only be had from the person in possession of the goods at the time of or after the felon's conviction; therefore the owner of goods stolen, who has prosecuted the thief to conviction, cannot recover the value of his goods from a person who has purchased them, and sold them again, even with notice of the theft, before conviction. 2 T. R. 750. But the plaintiff has a right to the restitution of the goods in specie, and perhaps would be entitled to recover damages in trover against any person who is fixed with the goods after conviction, and refuses to deliver them, for then the goods are converted to the prejudice of the owner. Per Kenyon, C. J.

Previous to the 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 29, which allows the court to make a summary order, it was usual for the court, upon the conviction of a felon, to order (without any writ, no instance of the suing out of which has occurred for 300 years) immediate restitution of such goods as are brought into court, to be made to the several prosecutors.

Without any writ or order of restitution, the party may peaceably retake his goods, wherever he happens to find them, unless a new property be fairly acquired therein. Or, lastly, if the felon be convicted and pardoned, or (formerly were allowed his clergy), the party robbed may bring his action of trover against him for his goods, and recover a satisfaction in damages. But such action lies not before prosecution, for so felonies would be made up and healed. 1 Hal. P. C. 73. And also recaption is unlawful, if it be done with intention to smother or compound the larceny; it then becoming the heinous offence of Theftbote. See vide Comm. c. 27, p. 363.

Where a servant took gold from his master, and changed it into silver, the master had restitution of the silver by the 21 Hen. 8. c. 11; Cro. Eliz. 661, pl. 9.

A. stole cattle and sold them at Coventry, in an open market, and immediately he was apprehended by the sheriff of Coventry, and they seized the money; and afterward the thief was arraigned and hanged at the suit of the owner of the cattle: and, by the court, the party shall have restitution of the money, notwithstanding the words of the 21 Hen. 8. c. 11. the goods stolen, &c. Noy, 128.

A bank-note of 50*l.* was stolen from Golightly by one Ferguson. He was apprehended, and several articles of silver plate, a bank-note of 50*l.*, and ten guineas in gold, which were found upon him, were produced at the trial, and placed in the custody of Reynolds, clerk of the arraigns. Golightly gave evidence against Ferguson at the Old Bailey and he was convicted of stealing the 50*l.* note. The owner demanded restitution from Reynolds of the goods found upon Ferguson; but as they were not the identical goods which Golightly had lost, Reynolds refused to restore them. But on trover being brought in B. R. they were ordered to be restored, they being the produce of the 50*l.* bank-note. Laffr. 90.

See further, tit. Market; and the 1 Jac. 1. c. 21. there noticed, by which the sale of goods, wrongfully taken, to a pawnbroker within London or two miles thereof, shall not alter the property. See also 36 Geo. 3. c. 87. § 10, and tit. Pawnbrokers, as to goods illegally pawned. As to stolen horses, see tit. Horses; and 31 Eliz. c. 12. whereby the owner may, within six months, on paying the buyer what he actually paid, recover his horse without prosecution.

RESTITUTION takes place when there hath been a writ of restitution before granted: and restitution is generally matter of duty; but re-restitution is matter of grace. Raym. 35.

A writ of re-restitution may be granted on motion, if the court see cause to grant it. And on quashing an indictment of forcible entry, the court of B. R. may grant a writ of re-restitution, &c. 2 Lill. Abr. 474. See Forcible Entry, II.

RESTITUTIONE EXTRACTI AB ECCLESIA. A writ to restore a man to the church, which he had recovered for his sanctuary, being suspected of felony. Reg. Orig. 69.

RESTITUTIONE TEMPORALIU. A writ directed to the sheriff, to restore the temporalities of a bishopric to the bishop elected and confirmed. F. N. B. 169; 1 Roll. Abr. 880.

RESTITUTION OF MINORS. In the Scotch law, a restoring them to rights lost by deeds executed during their minority. See Quadrimum Utile.

RESULTING USE. Whenever the use limited by a deed expires, or cannot vest, it returns back to him who raised it, after such expiration, or during such impossibility, and is styled a resulting use. As, if a man makes a feoffment to the use of his intended wife for life, with remainder to the use of the first-born son in tail: here, till he marries, the use results back to himself; after marriage, it is executed in the wife for life; and if she dies without issue, the whole results back to him in fee. Bacon of Uses, 350; 1 Rep. 120. See Uses.

RESUMMONS, resummonitio.] A second summons or calling a man to answer an action, where the first summons is defeated by any occasion; and when, by death, &c. of the judges, they do not come on the day to which they were continued for trial of causes, such causes may be revived or recontinued by resummons. There was also a writ of resummons, which issued after parol demurrer. See Parol Demurrer, Re-attachment.

RESUMPTION, resumptio.] Is particularly used for taking again into the king's hands such lands or tenements, &c. as on false suggestion he had granted by letters-patent to any man. Broke, 298. It is said that the king cannot grant a prerogative of power so but that he may resume it; otherwise it is of a grant of an interest. Skinner's Rep. 236. Many acts have been heretofore passed for resuming improvident grants of the crown. See Grant of the King.

RETAINER, from the Latin retinere.] Signifies, in a legal sense, a servant, but not menial or familiar, that is, not continually dwelling in the house of his master, but only wearing his livery, and attending sometimes upon special occasions. This livery was wont to consist of hats, (or hoods,) badges, or other suits of one garment by the year; and was many times given by great men, on design of maintenance and quarrels; and was therefore justly forbidden by several statutes; as by the 1 Rich. 2. c. 7. on pain of imprisonment and forfeiture to the King; and again, by the 16 Rich. 2. c. 4; 20 Rich. 2. c. 1; 1 Hen. 4. c. 7. by which the offender should make ransom at the king's will; and any knight or esquire thereby duly attainted should lose his livery, and forfeit his fee for ever, &c.: which statutes were further confirmed and explained by the 2 Hen. 4. c. 21; 7 Hen. 4. c. 3; 8 Hen. 6. c. 4. Yet this offence was so deeply rooted, that Edward the Fourth was necessitated to confirm the former statutes, and further to extend their meaning; as appears by the 8 Edw. 4. c. 2. adding a special penalty of five pounds on every man who gave such livery, and as much on every one so retained, either by writing, oath, or promise, for every month.

These were by the feudists called affidati, sic enim dicuntur qui in alicujus fidem et tutelam recepti sunt. And as our retainers were thus forbidden, so were those affidats in other countries. But most of the above-mentioned statutes were repealed by 3 Car. 1. c. 1. Cowell. And the provisions of these obsolete and expired laws are rendered useless by the alteration of manners. See further, Maintenance.

RETAINER OF DEBTS. By an executor or administrator, see Executor, V. 6.

RETAINING FEE, merces retinens.] The first fee given to any serjeant or counsellor at law; whereby to make him sure that he shall not be on the contrary part.

RETALIATION. See Lex Talionis.

RETENEMENTUM. Is a word used for detaining, withholding, or keeping back. And sine ullo retenemento was an usual expression in old deeds and conveyances of lands. Cowell.

RETENTION. The right of withholding a debt, or retaining property until a debt due to the person claiming the right of retention shall be paid. See Lien.

RETINENTIA. A retinue, or persons retained to a prince or nobleman. Pat. 14 Rich. 2.

RETORNO HABENDO. See Retorno habendo, Replevin.

RETOUR, in Scotch law. This name is given to an extract from the chancery of the service of an heir to his ancestor. The brief of inquest, after the jury have pronounced their sentence, is retourable to the chancery whence it issued; and it is the duty of the judge to whom it is directed to return it; nor is the service complete till this is done. The extract or copy from chancery is what is termed the retour. Bell's Scotch Dict.

RETOURED DUTY. Is the valuation, both new and old, of lands, expressed in the retour to the chancery, when any is returned, or served heir. Scotch Dict.

RETRACTUS AQUÆ. The ebb or return of a tide. Plac. 30. Edw. 1.

RETRACTUS FEUDALIS, in Scotch law. A power anciently claimed by the superior of an estate to pay off a debt adjudged, and to take a conveyance of the estate. Bell's Scotch Dict.

RETRAXIT, he hath withdrawn.] Is when a plaintiff cometh in person in court where his action is brought, and saith he will not proceed in it; and this is a bar to that action for ever. It is so called, because it was the emphatical word in the Latin entry. See Tidd's Pract. and tit. Nonsuit, Nolle Prosequi.

A retraxit must be always in person; if it is by attorney, it is error. 8 Rep. 58; 3 Salk. 245.

A retraxit is a bar to any action of equal nature, brought for the same cause or duty; but a nonsuit is not. 1 Inst. 208. See Wils. 90.

If a plaintiff says he will not appear, this is not a retraxit, but a nonsuit; but if the plaintiff says he will not sue, it is a retraxit. Danv. Abr. 471. And retraxit is always on the part of the plaintiff or demandant; and it cannot be before a declaration, for before the declaration it is only a nonsuit. 3 Leon. 47; 2 Lill. Abr. 476.

If a plaintiff enter a retraxit against one joint-trespasser, it is a release to the other. Cro. Eliz. 762. Sed qu.? For if a retraxit were entered as to one appellee in appeal of murder, the suit might be continued against the rest; because the appellant was to have a several execution against every one of them. H. P. C. 190. In a prohibition by three, a retraxit of one shall not bar the other two plaintiffs. Moor, 469; Nels. Abr. 165. A retraxit in its operation is mostly similar to a Nolle prosequi, entered to the whole cause of action. See that title.

RETTE, Fr.] A charge or accusation. Stat. West. 1. c. 2. (repealed.) Co. Litt. 173 b. and n.

RETURN, returna, or retorna, from the Fr. retour, i. e. redditio, recursus.] Hath many applications in law; but is most commonly used for the return of writs, which is the certificate of the sheriff made to the court, of what he hath done touching the execution of any writ directed to him; and where a writ is executed, or the defendant cannot be found, &c. then this matter is indorsed on the back of the writ by the officer, and delivered into the court whence the writ issued, at the day of the return thereof, in order to be filed. Stat. West. 2. 13 Edw. 1. c. 39. 2 Lill. Abr. 476. See Sheriff, Writ.

The name of the sheriff must always be to return of writs; otherwise it doth not appear how they came into court: if a writ be returned by a person to whom it is not directed, the return is not good, it being the same as if there was no return on it. And after a return is filed, it cannot be amended; but before it may. Cro. Eliz. 310.

If the sheriff doth not make a return of a writ, the court will amerce him: so, if he makes an insufficient return; and if he makes a false return, the party grieved may have an action on the case against him. Wood's Inst. 71.

If a sheriff returned a vouchee summoned, where in truth he was dead, and there was no such person; or in a præcipe quod reddat that the tenant was dead, &c. there might be an averment against such returns, by the 14 Edw. 3. c. 18. Jenk. Cent. 121, 122.

Some returns are a kind of declaration of an accusation; as the return of a rescous, and the like; and these must be certain and perfect, or they will be ill. 11 Rep. 40; Plow. 63. 117; Keilw. 65.

Writs to do things in franchises are directed to and returned by the sheriff, to whom bailiffs make their returns, and an action will lie against a sheriff who takes the return of one who is no bailiff, and against him who makes it; and likewise against the bailiff of a franchise for negligence in execution, &c. 7 Edw. 4. 14; 12 Edw. 4. 15; Moor, c. 606.

There is also a return of juries by sheriffs; and returns of commissions by commissioners, &c. See the several appropriate titles.

RETURN-DAYS. Certain days in term for the return of writs. See Essoin Day of the Term, Terms.

RETORNO HABENDO. A writ which lies where cattle are distrained and replevied, and the person who took the distress justifies the taking, and proves it lawful; on which the cattle are to be returned to him.

This writ also lieth when the plaint in replevin is removed by recordari into the King's Bench or Common Pleas, and he whose cattle are distrained makes default, and doth not prosecute his suit. F. N. B. 74. See Replevin.

RETURNUM AVERIORUM. A judicial writ, the same with Retorno habendo. Reg. Judic. 4.

RETURNUM IRREPLEGIABILE. A writ judicial, directed to the sheriff for the final restitution or return of cattle to the owner when unjustly taken or distrained and so found by verdict; and it is granted after a nonsuit in a second deliverance. Reg. Judic. 27. See Replevin.

REVE, or Greeve, from the Saxon word græfa, præfectus. Lambard's explication of Saxon words, verb. Præfectus.] The bailiff of a franchise or manor, especially in the western part of England: hence shire-reve for sheriff. See Kitchen. 43.

An officer in parishes within forests who marks the commonable cattle.

REVELACH, rebellion, from revellare, to rebel. Gale. Domesday, tit. Cestrescire.

REVELAND, terra Regis. Hæc terra fuit tempore Edwardi Regis Thimland, sed postea concessa est in Reveland. Et item dicant legati Regis, quod ipsa terra et census qui inde exit, furtim auferuntur à Rege. Domesd. Herefordso.

The land here said to have been Thaneland, T. E. R. and after converted into Reveland, seems to have been such land as having reverted to the king after the death of his Thane, who had it for life, was not since granted out to any by the king, but rested in charge on the account of the reve or bailiff of the manor; who (as it seemeth) being in this lordship of Hereford, like the reeve in Chaucer, a false brother, concealed the land from the auditor, and kept the profit of it, till the surveyors, who are here called legati Regis, discovered this falsehood, and presented to the king that furtim auferuntur à Rege.

This passage from Domesday-book is imperfectly quoted by Sir Edward Coke, who from these words draws a false inference, that land holden by knight-service was called Thimland, and land holden by socage was called Reveland. Comell. See Spelman, of Fiefs, c. 24; 1 Inst. 80, a, and c.

Dutryph attempts to establish a distinction between bockland or thimland and reveland, also called folkland, and to show that the former was feudal, and the latter allodial. Dutryph, Leod, prop. 9. See Bockland, Cupphold, Folkland, Tenures.

RIVALS. Sports of dancing, masking, &c. formerly used in princes' courts, the inns of court, and noblemen's houses, commonly performed by night; there was an officer to order and supervise them, who was entitled Master of the Revels. Comell.

REVENUE, Fr] Properly the yearly rent which accrues to any man from his lands and possessions, and is generally used for the revenues or profits of the crown.

Whoever wishes to be informed of the fiscal prerogatives of the king, or such as regard his revenue, which the British constitution hath vested in the royal person, in order to support his dignity and maintain his power, will find them very curiously and learnedly treated of by Blackstone, in the 8th. chapter of the first volume of his Commentaries. And see titles King, Taxes.

REVERSAL OF JUDGMENT. Is the making it void for error; and when on the return of a writ of error it appears that the judgment is erroneous, then the court give judgment quod judicium revocetur, annulletur et penitus pro nullum habeatur. 2 Lill. Abr. 481.

The eldest judge of the court, or in his absence the next in seniority, always pronounces the reversal of an erroneous judgment openly in court, on the prayer of the party. Formerly it was the course to pronounce it in French, to this effect, par les errors avandit, et auter errors manifest en le record, soit le judgment reverse, &c. Trim. 22 Car. B. R. The judge now only says "Judgment affirmed" or "Judgment reversed," as the case happens.

Reversal of a judgment may be pronounced conditionally, i. e. that the judgment is reversed if the defendant in the writ of error doth not show good cause to the contrary at an appointed time; and this is called a revocetur nisi; and if no cause be then shown, it stands reversed without further motion. 2 Lill. Abr. 482.

By the statute of limitations, 21 Jac. 1. c. 16. § 4. where judgment is given for a plaintiff, and reversed by writ of error; or if judgment for a plaintiff be arrested, or if a defendant in an action by original be outlawed, and the outlawry reversed, the plaintiff may commence a new action within twelve months after such reversal or arrest of judgment, or reversal of outlawry, though it be beyond the time of limitation directed by the statutes. See Limitation of Actions.

See further, Attainder, Error, Judgment, III.

REVERSER. Scotch law. A reversioner. See Reversion.

REVERSION, reversio, from revertor.] A returning again. 1 Inst. 142.

A reversion hath two significations; the one is an estate left, which continues during a particular estate in being; and the other is the returning of the land after the particular estate is ended. It is said to be an interest in the land when the possession shall fall, and so it is commonly taken; or it is when the estate which was parted with for a time, ceaseth and is determined in the persons of the alienees or grantees, &c. and returns to the grantor or donor, or their heirs, from whence derived. Plowd. 160; Inst. 142.

But the usual definition of a reversion is, that it is the residue of an estate left in the grantor after a particular estate granted away, continuing in him who granted the particular estate; and where the particular estate is derived out of his estate. Also a reversion takes place after a remainder, where a person makes a disposition of a less estate than that whereof he was seised at the time of making thereof. 1 Inst. 22, 142; Wood's Inst. 151.

The difference between a reversion and a remainder is, that a remainder is general, and may be to any man, except to him who granteth the land, for term of life or otherwise; and a reversion is to himself from whom the conveyances of the land proceeded, and is commonly perpetual, &c. Remainder is an estate, appointed over at the same time; but the reversion is not always at the same time appointed over. See Remainder.

Blackstone, with his usual accuracy and perspicuity, shortly defines a reversion thus: "The residue of an estate left in the grantor, to commence in possession after the determination of some particular estate granted out by him." Coke describes a reversion to be the returning of land to the grantor or his heirs, after the grant is over; as if there be a gift in tail, the reversion of the fee is, without any special reservation, vested in the donor by act of law; and so also the reversion, after an estate for life, years, or at will, continues in the lessor; for the fee-simple of all lands must abide somewhere; and if he who was before possessed of the whole, carves out of it any smaller estate, and grants it away, whatever is not so granted remains in him.

A reversion is never, therefore, created by deed or writing, but arises from construction of law; a remainder can never be limited, unless by either deed or devise. But both are equally transferable, when actually vested, being both estates in presenti, though taking effect in futuro. 2 Comm. c. 11. cites 1 Inst. 22, 142.

The doctrine of reversions is plainly derived from the feudal constitution; for when a feud was granted to a man for life, or to him and his issue male, rendering either rent or other services, then on his death, or the failure of issue male, the feud was determined and resulted back to the lord or proprietor, to be again disposed of at his pleasure; and hence the usual incidents to reversions are said to be fealty and rent. When no rent is reserved on the particular estate, fealty, however, results of course, as an incident quite inseparable, and may be demanded as a badge of tenure or acknowledgment of superiority, being frequently the only evidence that the lands are holden at all. Where rent is reserved, it is also incident, though not inseparably so, to the reversion. 1 Inst. 143. The rent may be granted away, reserving the reversion; and the reversion may be granted away, reserving the rent by special words; but by a general grant of the reversion, the rent will pass with it as incident thereunto; though by the grant of the rent generally, the reversion will not pass. The incident passes by the grant of the principal, but not à converso. 1 Inst. 151, 152.

These incidental rights of the reversioner, and the respective modes of descent, in which remainders very frequently differ from reversions, have occasioned the law to be careful in distinguishing the one from the other, however inaccurately the parties themselves may describe them; for if one, seised of a paternal estate in fee, makes a lease for life, with remainder to himself and his heirs, this is properly a mere reversion, to which rent and fealty shall be incident, and which shall only descend to the heirs of his father's blood, and not to his heirs general, as a remainder limited to him by a third person would have done; for it is the old estate, which was originally in him, and never yet was out of him. But see now tit. Descent. And so likewise, if a man grants a lease for life to A., reserving rent, with reversion to B. and his heirs, B. hath a remainder descendible to his heirs general, and not a reversion to which the rent is incident; but the grantor shall be entitled to the rent during the continuance of A.'s estate. 2 Comm. c. 11. cites Cro. Eliz. 321; 3 Lev. 407; 1 And. 23.

When the particular estate determines, then the reversion comes into possession, and before it is separated from it; for he who hath the possession cannot have the reversion, because, by uniting them, the one is drowned in the other. 2 Lil. Abr. 484. See Merger.

The reversion of land when it falls, is the land itself; and the possession of the tenant preserves the reversion of the lands, with the rents, &c. in the donor or lessor. 1 Inst. 324.

A reversion of an estate of inheritance may be granted by bargain and sale inrolled, lease and release, &c. And by the grant of lands a reversion will pass; though by the grant of a reversion, land in possession will not pass. 6 Rep. 36; 5 Rep. 124; 10 Rep. 107.

If one have a reversion in fee, expectant on a lease for years, he may make a bargain and sale of his reversion for one year, and then make a release to the bargainee in fee, by which the reversion in fee will pass to the bargainee. 2 Lil. Abr. 483. And a reversioner may covenant to stand seised of a reversion to uses, &c. 11 Rep. 46.

Likewise a reversion may be devised by will; and a testator being seised in fee of lands which he had in possession, and of other lands in reversion, devised all his lands for payment of debts, adjudged that by the words "all his lands," the reversion as well as the possession passed. 2 And. 59; Cro. Eliz. 159.

A person devised a manor to A. B. for six years, and some other lands to C. D. and his heirs, and all the rest of his lands to his brother, and the heirs male of his body; and it was held that these words, "the rest of his lands," did not only extend to the lands which were not devised before, but to the reversion in fee of the manor, after the determination of the estate for years. Allen, 28. And by devise of all lands, tenements, and hereditaments, undisposed of before in a will, a reversion in fee will pass. 2 Vent. 285; 3 Nels. Abr. 166.

One seised of lands in fee devises part thereof to B. for life, and after, by the same will, gives to C. all his lands not before particularly disposed of; by this devise of "all lands," &c. the reversion of the part given for life passes to C. Pre. Chan. 202. See Will.

If tenant for life and he in reversion join in a lease for life, or gift in tail, rendering rent, it shall enure after the death of tenant for life, to him in reversion. 1 Inst. 214.

The particular estate for life or years, and the estate of him in reversion, are divers and distinct; therefore aid may be prayed of him in reversion, yet these estates have relation one to another. 3 Shep. Abr. 220.

Copyholder for life cannot by forfeiture or otherwise destroy the estate in reversion; and he who hath a reversion cannot be put out of it unless the tenant be ousted of his possession also. 39 Hen. 6; Plowd. 162; Yelo. 1.

Reversions expectant on an estate-tail are not assets, or of any account in law, because they may be cut off; but it is otherwise of a reversion on an estate for life or years. 1 Inst. 173; 6 Rep. 38. See Assets.

No lease, rent-charge, or estate, &c. made by tenant in tail in remainder, shall charge the possession of the reversioner. 2 Lil. 448. But as no statute hath made any provision for those who have remainders or reversions on any estate-tail, they were, until recently, barred by a recovery. 10 Rep. 32. See now, titles Recovery, Tail.

There were no reversions or remainders on estates in tail at common law; and by the common law, no grantee of a reversion could take advantage of any condition or covenant broken by the lessees of the same land; but by statute, grantees of reversions may take advantage of conditions and covenants against lessees of the same lands, as fully as the lessors and their heirs; and the lessees may have the like remedies against the grantees of reversions, &c. 1 Inst. 327. See 32 Hen. 8. c. 34; and further, titles Condition, Lease.

In order to assist such persons as have any estate in remainder, reversion, or expectancy after the death of others, against fraudulent concealments of their death, the 6 Ann. c. 18. provides that all persons on whose lives any lands are holden, shall (on application to the Court of Chancery, and order made thereon), once in every year, if required, be produced to the court, or its commissioners; or upon neglect or refusal, they shall be taken to be actually dead, and the person entitled to such expectant estate may enter upon and hold the lands and tenements till the party shall appear to be living. See Life Estate.

A reversioner may bring an action on the case for spoiling trees; so for any injury to his reversion, he may have this action, but he cannot have trespass, which is founded on the possession. 3 Lev. 209, 233; 3 Co. 55.

The reversioner must show in his declaration, and prove, an injury to the reversion, or judgment will be arrested. 1 M. & S. 234. An action on the case for an injury to the inheritance lies by the reversioner pending the term against the tenant, for inclosing and cultivating waste included in the demise, and for continuing the grievance. 14 East, 489.

A. being possessed of a term of years, demised his whole interest to B., subject to a right of re-entry on the breach of a condition; the Court of King's Bench held, that A. might enter for the condition broken, although he had no reversion. 2 B. & Ald. 170.

Formerly he in reversion should have a writ of entry ad communem legem, where tenant for life, &c. aliened the lands; and writ of intrusion after their deaths, &c. New Nat. Brev. 431. These writs are now abolished. See Limitation of Actions, II.

For the provisions for the recent statute of limitations, with respect to reversions, see Limitation of Actions, II.; and for those affecting reversions, contained in the act abolishing fines and recoveries, (3 & 4 W. 4. c. 74.) see Tail, IV.

REVERSIONS IN OFFICES. See Office.

REVIEW, BILL OF, IN CHANCERY. The object of this is to procure an examination and reversal of a decree, made upon a former bill, and signed by the person holding the great seal, and inrolled. It may be brought upon error of law appearing in the body of the decree itself, or upon discovery of new matter. In the first case the decree can only be reversed upon the ground of the apparent error; as if an absolute decree be made against a person, who, upon the face of it, appears at the time to have been an infant. A bill of this nature may be brought without leave of the court previously given. But if it is sought to reverse a decree signed and inrolled, upon discovery of some new matter, the leave of the court must be first obtained; and this will not be granted but upon allegation, upon oath, that the new matter could not be produced or used by the party claiming, at the time when the decree was made. If the court is satisfied that the new matter is relevant and material, and such as might probably have occasioned a different determination, it will permit a bill of review to be filed.

A bill of review, upon new matter discovered, has been permitted, even after an affirmance of the decree in parliament; but it may be doubted whether a bill of review, upon error in the decree itself, can be brought after such affirmance. If, upon a bill of review, a decree has been reversed, another bill of review may be brought upon the decree of reversal; but see 1 Fera, 417. But when twenty years have elapsed from the time of pronouncing a decree, which has been signed and enrolled, a bill of review cannot be brought; and after a demurrer to a bill of review has been allowed, a new bill of review on the same ground cannot be brought. It is a rule of the court, that the bringing a bill of review shall not prevent the execution of the decree impeached; and if money is directed to be paid, it ought regularly to be paid before the bill of review is filed, though it may afterwards be ordered to be refunded. Miff. Treat. on Chancery Pleadings, 79, 80. See Chancery, Decree.

In a bill of this nature it is necessary to state the former bill, and the proceedings thereon; the decree, and the point in which the party exhibiting the bill of review conceives himself aggrieved by it; and the ground of law, or new matter discovered, upon which he seeks to impeach it; and if the decree is impeached on the latter ground, it seems necessary to state in the bill the leave obtained to file it, and the fact of the discovery; though it may be doubted whether a bill may pray simply that the decree may be reviewed, and reversed in the point complained of, if it has not been carried into execution. If a bill of review is presented, the plaintiff may copy the order of the court upon the bill, and copy the complaint of the former decree into the situation in which he would have been if that decree had not been executed. If the bill is brought to review the reversal of a former decree, he may pray that the original decree may stand. The bill may also, if the original decree has become abated, be at the same time a bill of revivor. See Revivor. A supplemental bill may likewise be added, if any event has happened which requires it; and particularly if any person, not a party to the original suit, becomes interested in the subject, he must be made a party to the bill of review by way of supplement. Miff. Treat., 80, 81.

To render a bill of review necessary, the decree sought to be impeached must have been signed and enrolled. If, therefore, this has not been done, a decree may be examined and reversed upon a species of supplemental bill in nature of a bill of review, where any new matter has been discovered since the decree. As a decree not signed and enrolled may be altered upon a rehearing, without the assistance of a bill of review, if there is sufficient matter to reverse it appearing upon the former proceedings, the investigation of the decree must be brought on by a petition of rehearing, and the office of the supplemental bill, in nature of a bill of review, is to supply the defect which occasioned the decree upon the former bill. It is necessary to obtain the leave of the court to bring a supplemental bill of this nature; and the same affidavit is required for this purpose, as is necessary to obtain leave to bring a bill of review on discovery of new matter. The bill, in its frame, nearly resembles a bill of review; except that, instead of praying that the former decree may be reviewed and reversed, it prays that the cause may be heard and reversed upon the new matter, made the subject of the supplemental bill, at the same time that it is reheard upon the former bill; and that the plaintiff may have such relief as the nature of the case made by the supplemental bill requires. Miff. Treat., 81—83.

If a decree is made against a person who had no interest at all in the matter in dispute, or had not such an interest as was sufficient to render the decree against him binding upon some person claiming the same, or a similar interest, relief may be obtained against error in the decree by a bill in the nature of a bill of review. Thus, if a decree is made against a tenant for life only, a remainder-man in tail or in fee cannot defeat the proceedings against the tenant for life, but by a bill showing the error in the decree, the incompetency in the tenant for life to sustain the suit, and the accruer of his own interest; and thereupon praying that the proceedings in the original cause may be reviewed, and for that purpose, that the other party may appear to and answer this new bill, and that the rights of the parties may be properly ascertained. A bill of this nature, as it does not seek to alter a decree made against the plaintiff himself, or against any person under whom he claims, may be filed without leave of the court. Miff. Treat., 83.

REVIEW OF APPEAL OF DECISIONS. A commission granted by the king to certain commissioners, &c. See Appeal to Rem.

1. VILING CHURCH ORDINANCES. Is a positive law against religion that affects the established church; and the reviling the sacrament of the Lord's Supper is punished by the 1 Edw. 6. c. 1. and 1 Eliz. c. 1. with fine and imprisonment. And by the 1 Eliz. c. 2. if any minister shall speak any thing in derogation of the book of Common Prayer, he shall, if not beneficed, be imprisoned one year for the first offence, and for life for the second. And if he be beneficed, he shall for the first offence be imprisoned six months, and forfeit a year's value of his benefice; for the second offence he shall be deprived, and suffer one year's imprisonment; and for the third shall, in like manner, be deprived, and suffer imprisonment for life. And if any person whatsoever shall, in plays, songs, or other open words, speak any thing in derogation, defaming, or despising of the said book, or shall forcibly prevent the reading of it, or cause any other service to be used in its stead, he shall forfeit for the first offence one hundred marks; for the second, four hundred; and for the third shall forfeit all his goods and chattels, and suffer imprisonment for life. The policy and propriety of these punishments, even at this distance from the Reformation, are well stated by Blackstone. 4 Comm. c. 4. p. 51.

REVIVING. A word metaphorically applied to rents and actions, and signifies renewing them after they are extinguished. Of which see many examples in Broke, title Revivings of Rents, Actions, &c. 23. See also 19 Vin. Abr. 228—230.

REVIVOR, BILL OF. When a bill has been exhibited in Chancery against one who answers, and before the cause is heard, or if heard, and the decree is not enrolled, either party dies, or a female plaintiff marries; in these cases a bill of revivor must be brought.

A bill of revivor must state the original bill, and the several proceedings thereon, and the abatement. It must show a title to revive, and charge that the cause ought to be revived, and stand in the same condition with respect to the parties in the bill of revivor as it was in with respect to the parties in the original bill at the time the abatement happened; and it must pray that the suit may be revived accordingly. It may likewise be necessary to pray that the defendant may answer the bill of revivor, as in the case of a requisite admission of assets by the representative of a deceased party. In this case, if the defendant does admit assets, the cause may proceed against him on an order of revivor merely; but if he does not make that admission, the cause must be heard for the purpose of obtaining the necessary accounts of the estate of the deceased party, to answer the demands made against it by the suit; and the prayer of the bill, therefore, in such cases, usually is, not only that the suit may be revived, but also that in case the defendant shall not admit assets to answer the purposes of the suit, those accounts may be taken, and so far the bill is in the nature of an original bill. If a defendant to an original bill dies before putting in an answer, or after an answer to which exceptions have been taken, or after an amendment of the bill, to which no answer has been given, the bill of revivor, though requiring in itself no answer, must pray that the person against whom it seeks to revive the suit may answer the original bill, or so much of it as the exceptions taken to the answer of the former defendants extend to, or the amendments remaining unanswered. See Mif. Treat. on Pleadings in Chancery, 70, 71, and the authorities there referred to.

Upon a bill of revivor the defendant must answer in eight days after appearance, and submit that the suit shall be revived, or show cause to the contrary; and in default, unless the defendant has obtained an order for further time to answer, the suit may be revived without answer by an order made upon motion as a matter of course. The ground for this is an allegation that the time allowed the defendant to answer by the course of the court is expired, and that no answer is put in; it is therefore presumed that the defendant can show no cause against reviving the suit in the manner prayed by the bill. Mif. Treat. 71, 72.

An order to revive may also be obtained, in like manner, if the defendant puts in answer submitting to the revivor; or even without that submission if he shows no cause against the revivor. Though the suit is revived of course in default of the defendant's answer within eight days, he must yet put in an answer if the bill requires it; as if the bill seeks an admission of assets, or calls for an answer to the original bill; the end of the order of revivor being only to put the suit and proceedings in the situation in which they stood at the time of the abatement, and to enable the plaintiff to proceed accordingly. And notwithstanding an order for revivor has been thus obtained, yet if the defendant conceives that the plaintiff is not entitled to revive the suit against him, he may take those steps which are necessary to prevent the further proceeding on the bill; and though these steps should not be taken, yet if the plaintiff does not show a title to revive, he cannot finally have the benefit of the suit when the determination of the court is called for on the subject. Mif. Treat. 72, 73.

After a decree, a defendant may file a bill of revivor, if the plaintiffs, or those standing in their right, neglect to do it. For then the rights of the parties are ascertained, and plaintiffs and defendants are equally entitled to the benefit of the decree, and equally have a right to prosecute it. The bill of revivor, in this case therefore, merely substantiates the suit, and brings before the court the parties necessary to see to the execution of the decree, and to be the objects of its operation, rather than to litigate the claims made by the several parties in the original pleadings, except so far as they remain undecided. In the case of a bill by creditors, on behalf of themselves and other creditors, any creditor is entitled to revive. A suit, become entirely abated, may be revived as to part only of the matter in litigation; or as to part by one bill, and as to the other part by another. Thus, if the rights of a plaintiff in a suit, upon his death, become vested, part in his real and part in his personal representatives, the real representative may revive the suit so far as concerns his title, and the personal so far as his demand extends. Mif. Treat. 73, 74.

When the interest of a party dying is transmitted to another in such a manner that the transmission may be litigated in a court of equity, as in the case of a devise, the suit cannot be revived by or against the person to whom the interest is so transmitted; but such person, if he succeeds to the interest of a plaintiff, is entitled to the benefit of the former suit; and if he succeeds to the interest of a defendant, the plaintiff is entitled to the benefit of a former suit against him. This benefit is to be obtained by an original bill, in nature of a bill of revivor. A bill for this purpose must state the original bill, the proceedings upon it, the abatement, and the manner in which the interest of the party dead has been transmitted; and it must charge the validity of the transmission, and state the rights which have accrued by it. The bill is said to be original, merely for want of that privity of title between the party to the former and the party to the latter bill, though claiming the same interest, which would have permitted the continuance of the suit by bill of revivor. Therefore, when the validity of the alleged transmission of interest is established, the party to the new bill shall be equally bound by, or have advantage of, the proceedings on the original bill, as if such privity had actually existed. And the suit is considered as pending from the time of filing the original bill, so as to save the statute of limitations; to have the advantage of compelling the defendant to answer, before an answer can be compelled to a cross bill; and every other advantage which would have attended the institution of the suit by the original bill, if it could have been continued by bill of revivor merely. Mif. Treat. 88, 89.

If the interest of a plaintiff or defendant, suing or defending in his own right, wholly determines, and the same property becomes vested in another person not claiming under him, the suit cannot be continued by a bill of revivor; nor can its defect be supplied by a supplemental bill, but the benefit of the former proceedings must be obtained by an original bill in the nature of a supplemental bill. Mif. Treat. 89, 90.

REVOCATION, revocatio.] The calling back of a thing granted; or a destroying or making void of some deed that had existence until the act of revocation made it void. 2 Lil. Abr. 485. A revocation may be either general, of all acts and things done before; or special, to revoke a particular thing. And where any deed or thing is revoked, it is as if it never had been. 5 Rep. 90; Perk. § 105. In voluntary deeds and conveyances there are frequently provisions containing power of revocation, which being coupled with an use, and tending to pass by raising of uses, according to the 27 Hen. 8. c. 10, are allowed to be good, and not repugnant: as where one seised of an estate in fee, covenants to stand seised thereof to the use of himself for life, and after to the use of his son in tail, remainder over, &c., with proviso that he may revoke any of the said uses; now, if afterwards he revokes them, he is seised again in fee, without entry or claim. But in case of a feoffment or other conveyance, whereby the feoffee or grantee is in by the common law, such proviso would be merely repugnant and void. 1 Inst. 237. See Uses.

Voluntary estates made with power of revocation, as to purchasers, are held in equal degree with conveyances made by fraud and covin to defraud purchasers, under the 27 Eliz. c. 4. § 3 Rep. 82. See Fraud.

Where a power of revocation is reserved for a man to dispose of his own estate, it shall always have a favourable construction; but it shall be taken strictly when it is to charge the estate of another. 2 Vent. 250.

If power is reserved to a man to revoke a deed by writing, subscribed and sealed in the presence of two or more credible witnesses; if he makes his will in writing, without making any express revocation, it will be a good revocation, and he will have a good execution of the power. Hob. 312; Raym. 293. But see Power.

If a person make a feoffment in fee, or levy a fine, &c. of the lands before the deed of revocation is executed, these amount to a revocation in law, and extinguish the power of revocation. 1 Vent. 371; 1 Rep. 111. Power of revocation may be released; and where a man has an entire power of revocation, and he suspends or extinguishes it as to part, he may revoke as to the residue, if the conveyance was by way of use, but not where a condition is annexed to the land. 1 Rep. 174; Moor. 615.

Under a power of appointment, the donee may either appoint absolutely, or may reserve a power of revocation, although not expressly authorized to do so by the deed creating the power. Comp. 651. And such a power may be reserved toties quoties. 3 Keb. 7. And the new power need not be attended with the same solemnities as the first power. See 2 Keb. 270, and 3 Keb. 7. See Power.

A will is revocable; and a last will revokes the former. And a new publication of the first will, if made in due form, will revoke the last. Perk. 479; 2 Sid. 2; 3 Mod. 207. See Wills.

Letters of attorney and other authorities (where not coupled with an interest) may be revoked by the persons giving the powers; and as they are revocable in their nature, it has been adjudged that they may be revoked though they are made irrevocable. 8 Rep. 82; Wood's Inst. 286.

These revocations of all powers regularly must be made after the same manner they are given; and there ought to be notice to the party, &c. But if once the power be executed, a revocation after will come too late. Dyer, 210.

As to the revocation of letters of administration, and presentation to benefices, see those titles.

REVOCATION' PARLIAMENTI. An ancient writ for recalling a parliament; anno 5 Edw. 3, the parliament being summoned, was recalled by such writ before it met. Fry's Animad. on 4 Inst. § 11. See Parliament.

REWARDS. In order to encourage the apprehending of certain felons, rewards and immunities were heretofore bestowed on such as brought them to justice by several statutes, most of which have been repealed.

By the 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 89, § 8, persons discovering, or apprehending any offender concealing or embezzling king's stores, or being guilty of any offence against that act, or the 9 & 10 Wm. 3, c. 41, not prosecuted in a summary way, shall, on conviction, receive a reward of 20*l.* over the share of penalty if not more than that sum.

The 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, § 28, enables the courts to order the sheriff of the county, in which certain enumerated offences have been committed, to pay to the person active in or towards the apprehension of persons charged with murder, felonies, shooting, or attempting to shoot, stabbing, cutting, or poisoning, or administering any thing to procure miscarriage, or with rape, burglary, felonious house-breaking, bullock stealing, or sheep stealing, or with being accessory before the fact to any of such offences, or to receiving (knowingly) any stolen property, such sum as to the court shall seem reasonable and sufficient to compensate such person for their expense, exertion, and loss of time. By § 29, such orders are directed to be paid by the sheriff, who shall be forthwith reimbursed by the Treasury. By § 30, if a man be killed in attempting to take such offenders, the court may order compensation to his wife or relatives.

By the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 20, § 58, persons corruptly taking money or reward to help any person to any chattel, money, &c. stolen or unlawfully obtained, or converted (unless they bring the offender to justice), are guilty of felony, and may be transported for seven years or imprisoned, &c.

By § 59, advertising a reward for the restoration of stolen or lost goods, and using words purporting that no questions will be asked, &c., or printing or publishing such advertisement, incurs a penalty of 50*l.*, recoverable by action.

REWEY. A term among clothiers, signifying cloth unevenly wrought, or full of rewees. See 13 Lit. c. 10.

RHANDIR. A part in the division of Wales before the Conquest: every township comprehended four gavels, and every gavel had four rhandirs, and four houses or tenements constituted every rhandir. Taylor's Hist. Gae. p. 69.
